"A Citizen" addresses the following open letter to the city officials: "It is remarked by the citizens, that the Tea Water, with which this city is supplied, grows worse every day, so that the common pump water, used only to scrub houses, etc. with, is now prefered in cooking to our Tea Water. The reason is very obvious,—let any one view the pond, which is the spring and source of that pump, and you will find it to be a very sink and common sewer. It's like a fair every day with whites, and blacks, washing their cloths blankets and things too nauseous to mention; all their sudds and filth are emptied into this pond, besides dead dogs, cats, etc. thrown in daily, and no doubt, many buckets from that quarter of the town. The pond being so very near the pump has no distance to filter through the earth, and, it is more than probable, runs through a considerable canal under ground directly to the pump. Two watchmen would be sufficient, with proper laws and penalties to prevent any person from washing or throwing any filth in this pond. A very trifle of a tax would pay them, and in 6 or 9 months our water would be as good as it was before the war."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 25, 1785. 25

John Francis advertises that "he has taken the house No. 3, in Great Dock-street, near the Exchange, nearly opposite to the War-Office, where he has again opened a Boarding House, at the sign of the True American."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 25, 1785. He moved from here into the well-known Fraunces Tavern, in 1789 (q. v., My 27). "

Congress passes a resolution of appreciation for the "early, unsolicited, and continued labours of Mr. Thomas Paine, in explaining and enforcing the principles of the late revolution by ingenious and timely publications upon the nature of liberty and civil government." On Oct. 3, congress ordered payment to him of $3,000 for these services.—Acts Passed at the First Cong. (Phila., Francis Childs, 1795), 430. See also Ja 9, 1776. 26

A section of the city called "Canvass Town" (see Ag 17, 1784) comes into unpleasant notoriety, as the resort of disreputable people and a centre of crime. For instances of this character, see N. Y. Gazetteer, Ag 26, 1785; N. Y. Jour., S 21, 1786; Daily Adv., O 14, 1791. Its location was near the exchange at the foot of Broad St.—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ag 16, 1786. It is thus described: "Canvas Town.—The place so called was made after the great fire in 1776. It lay toward East river, and from Broad street to Whitehall street. It was so called from the temporary construction of the houses, and their being generally covered with canvas instead of roofs. Very lewd and dissolute persons were generally their tenants, and gave them their notoriety and fame."—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 470, citing Watson's Annals, 172. See also S 21, 1776; Jl 3, 1797. "

John Fitch solicits the attention of congress to a model of his steamboat. His letter is accompanied by favourable recommendations from several prominent men. His application was referred to a committee, which never reported upon it.—Westcott, Life of John Fitch, 126–29. See Jl 27, 1786. 29

An account of the general condition of the city's expenditures and receipts, covering the period of one year and eight months from Dec. 26, 1783, shows total expenditures of £25,184, the largest items being £7,937 for repairs to public buildings, etc. and other contingent charges, £5,027 for the maintenance of the poorhouse, £4,500 for the watch and lamps departments, £3,470 for finishing and supporting the prisons of the bridewell, and £1,844 for interest on bonds due before the war. The total receipts are £24,435, of which £9,341 have been received from a tax of £10,000. Quit rents and ground rents, including arrears during the war, have yielded £7,376. Lots at the North River and Peck Slip have been sold for £3,517. The excise has brought in £2,008; the docks and slips, £868; ferries, £915, and house rent, £410. For these and other particulars, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 511–12. Sept. 1

Vandewater's Tavern (see Mr 14, 1759), opposite the Brick Meeting, in Nassau St., was frequently noticed in the news after the Revolution.—See N. Y. Packet, S 11, 1785; N 6, 1786; S 7, 1787; Jl 4, 1788. In 1789, it became known as Aorson's Tavern.—See Daily Adv., Ap 27, My 12, 1789; N. Y. Packet, O 6, 1789; Ja 19, and Ap 22, 1790; Ja 6, 1791. See also Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 120–21. 11

Henry Remsen, being interested in the undivided real estate of his father, Hendrick Remsen, deceased, which is situated in the Dock Ward "between the Long Bridge and the Albany Pier," and part of which "was occupied by the Enemy as a Coal Yard" during 16

1785 Sept. 16 the war, petitions the common council for a rebate of quit rent paid to the city. He states that he has been informed that the common council has passed "an Act to exempt all the Citizens who have been in exile during the war, from the payment of quit rents upon such part or proportion of their real property," from which neither they nor their agents have received rents, profits, or income during that period.—From the original petition in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room.

17 The common council grants permission "to the Neighborhood of the Corporation Dock at the North River to erect at their own Expence a Bulkhead on the South side of and projecting into the Slip opposite Vesey Street Ten feet; to begin opposite the North West Corner of the Market & from thence to run out in an exact Line, as far as the first Bridge of the said Dock or thereabouts."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 168.

20 "The Citizen" is performed at the John Street Theatre.—N. Y. Packet, S 19, 1785. This was the first performance of a "regular drama" in New York after the Revolution.—Ireland, Recs. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 66; Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 8; Stevens, Progress of N. Y. in a Century (1876), 22. For the opening of the regular theatrical season, see N 21.

" The name of The New-York Daily Advertiser (see Mr 1) is changed to The Daily Advertiser, Political, Commercial, and Historical.—Early Newspapers, II: 417. See O 27.

" Notice is published of a new line of stages, "to start the 7th instant, from the Morning Star on Staten-Island, opposite Bergen-Point, every morning at four o'clock, (Sundays excepted) . . ." The route is from Paulus Hook to Philadelphia. "The Staten-Island Ferry Boats attend every day at the White-Hall Dock, to convey those passengers to the Morning Star, who prefer going by water. . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, S 20, 1785 (in N. J. H. S.).

Oct. 5 "The project of erecting a [Roman Catholic] church at New York [see Ap 30] was advancing by the energy of St. John de Crêvecoeur and the patronage of Don Diego de Gardoqui. Father Whelan and the trustees of the congregation undertook the erection of the edifice with courage, adopting a plan beyond their actual means, but hopefully looking forward to future progress. It was to be a handsome brick structure, with a square tower, forty-eight feet front by eighty-one in depth. They addressed petitions for aid to the Kings of France and Spain, the latter forwarded through Don Diego de Gardoqui, who furthermore consented to lay the corner-stone. This ceremony took place on the 5th of October, 1785. . . . The Spanish minister . . . in conformity with the desire of the congregation named the church St. Peter's. They were not, however, able to proceed with the work at once, but continued collecting funds for the purpose in New York and Europe." Meanwhile, as has already been noted (see Ap 30), a carpenter's shop which stood on the leasehold property which they had acquired on Barclay St. was fitted up as a temporary chapel.—Shea, Life and Times of the Most Rev. John Carroll (1888), 280; N. Y. Packet, O 10, 1785; Eccles. Rec., VII: 1451; L. M. R. K., III: 936. See, further, My 26, 1786.

" Thomas Pool, in a petition to the common council, states that "he proposes for a few weeks to exhibit feats of horsemanship," and, as he cannot procure "any place convenient for the purpose but the bowling green," he asks for the use of it. He adds "that he has been in his Country's service during the war, and suffered several years imprisonment in the provoost in this City, where he was confined in irons in a dungeon 235 days without bed or firing, and daily tortured by the Provoost marshal—the consequence of which was that he was deprived of the use of his limbs Sixteen months."—From the original petition, in file No. 8, city clerk's record-room. The petition was rejected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 173. Pool was probably the first American to give public performances of this character, having first exhibited in Philadelphia on Aug. 20, 1785, for fuller account of which see Greenwood's The Circus (1909), 66 et seq. See also S 27, 1786.

" Several proprietors of lands on Mulberry St. and in that vicinity state in a petition to the common council that improvements in their property have been retarded because the street has not been properly regulated; that "this Street is situate at the Foot of a very high Hill (the summit of which overlooks the Houses on the North East Side of the Street) and will . . . require to be raised several Feet before any considerable Improvements can be reasonably expected in that Part of the City." They propose that the street be so regulated "as to give the Water a gradual Descent from the House of Mr Thomas Arden, so as to carry it by Roosevelt Street into the East River." They add that they understand that their wishes have been under consideration by the board, who plan to fill up Mulberry Street by digging down Mott Street, which is just above and parallel to it. Among the signers of this petition are Margaret Livingston, William Mooney, Abraham Brevoort, and Peter Schermerhorn.—From the original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read 15th March 1786." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 206. Oct. 5

" Samuel Kip, in a bill of this date, charges the city £7:3 for "Landing & Carting" through his farm 57,711 brick, 2,500 pantile (curved tile for roofing), and 100 loads of stone.—From the original bill (in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "fil'd 15 June 1786." The certificate of the auditors, which is attached to this bill, shows that these building materials were landed at Kips Bay "for the use of the New powder house." John Stagg, in a bill of May 13, 1786 (in the same file), charges the city £11:8:1½ for labour, lime, etc. at both the old and new powder-houses.

6 The common council offers a reward of £125 to discover the person or persons who last night attempted to assassinate Brockholst Livingston of New York, provided the governor will issue a proclamation to that effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 175; N. Y. Packet, O 10, 1785.

" The city treasurer is ordered to pay Thomas White and other constables the sum of £20:12 "for apprehendg & conveyg 103 Vagrants to Bridewell @ 4/ each."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 176. On Nov. 6, 1786 (q. v.), the price paid for each vagrant was lowered.

7 Trinity Vestry passes a resolution "that the Committee of Repairs be directed to have large Iron Stoves erected in each of the Churches and that they procure a painter to paint the Arms of the United States to be put up in St Pauls Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Ap 3, 1787.

10 James Parker announces that the "New-York and Philadelphia Stages" will hereafter pass through Bordentown to Perth Amboy instead of South Amboy, the route from Bordentown, including Trenton, Princeton, Kingston (one wagon going by way of "Cranbury"), and New Brunswick. At Perth Amboy, passengers and goods will be taken from Parker's wharf and store-house "on board a commodious boat."—N. Y. Packet, O 13, 1785.

14 A company of players, who had opened the playhouse without obtaining a license, present £40 to one of the commissioners of the almshouse for the use of the poor. The common council orders that the money be returned, as their playing without license "is a thing unprecedented and offensive." They further resolve "that while so great a part of this City still lies in Ruins and many of the citizens continue to be pressed with the Distress brought on them in consequence of the late war there is a loud Call to Industry and Economy, and it would in a peculiar manner be unjustifiable in this Corporation to countenance enticing and expensive Amusements; That among these a Play House (Theatre) however regulated must be numbered, while under no restraint it may prove a fruitful source of Dissipation, Immorality and Vice."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 178–79. See N 21, D 26.

" John Stagg is paid £100 "towards the Powder Magazine erecting at Inchlambergh."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 179. On Oct. 19, James Blackwell was paid £20 for stone used there.—Ibid., I: 181. See Ap 20.

17 In a petition to the common council, Gozen Ryerss, Thomas Quigley, and others, state that they pay the city "a large sum of Money, for the benefit of The Ferys; from Wite Hall, To Staten Island; and from Moores Corner, To Elizabeth Town," expecting them to be kept in repair; but that the "Docks, and Ferry Stairs, are so much Injurd; by the late storms, that Horses, Cant be taken off from Wite Hall, only at high, or near highwater." They contend that they themselves are obliged "to keep good boats, and give good attention," and ask the same consideration from the city. They further represent "That the (late) slauterhouse, at Moores Corner is a great Obstruction, to the Ferry," and they ask that it be removed as a "nucence," by next spring.—From the original petition (in metal file No. 8, in city clerk's record-room), endorsed "Aldn Wool & Mr Van Dyck to repair Stairs at Moores Dock;" and see M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 183.

19 The clerk of the common council produces to the board "a Release executed by Isaac Sears Esqr & Sarah his Wife to this Corporation of a Part of the Ground whereon the Bridewell is 1785 Oct. 19 erected," which, being approved, is ordered to be recorded. He also produces "a Bond under the Seal of this Corporation to Mr Sears for the consideration Money in the said Release mentioned & agreable to the Order of this Board of the 20th June last being £167:16 with Interest @ 5 PCt."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 182. See also F 3, 1770; Ja 6 and Je 20, 1785. Miss Mary L. Booth, in her Hist. of the City of N. Y. (1859), 581, stated that payment was never made, "and the grounds to the northwest of the City Hall still belong to the heirs of the New York Liberty Boys;" see, however, Je 10, 1789.

26 A city ordinance is passed and ordered published "for guarding against the Mischief which may arise from distempered or mad Dogs in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 183.

Nov. 4 This being the anniversary of St. Carlos ("the name of [the patron saint of] his Catholic Majesty and the Prince of Asturias"), it is celebrated by Don Diego de Gardoqui, the Spanish minister, at his house. Divine service was performed there in the morning, after which he entertained with "an elegant dinner" all the members of congress, including the president and secretary; Gov. Clinton; the ministers of foreign affairs, war, and finance; the foreign ministers, consuls, etc. Friendship between Spain and the United States was the key-note of the occasion.—N. Y. Packet, N 7, 1785.

" "Resolved that the Committee on Bogardus Claim consisting of Mr [James] Duane, Mr [John] Jay, Mr [William] Duer, Mr [James] Farquhar and Mr [John] Rutherfurd have full power and Authority to treat with the Claimants under Annake [Jans] Bogardus and to compromise compound or decide the difference in such manner as they may think proper and that Corporation will ratify and confirm whatever they may do respecting the same."—Trin. Min. (MS.). No further action in regard to the case appears in the minutes up to 1790.

14 The commissioners of the almshouse report the number of its inmates as follows: 63 men, 133 women, 50 boys, 49 girls, 2 black men, and 4 black women,—total, 301.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 185.

" The common council agrees that the commissioners shall partition off as many rooms (not exceeding five) in the attic of the bridewell as they may conceive "Necessary for the Confinement of lunatic & mad Persons."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 185.

" The common council appoints a committee "to report a proper Place for a Burial Ground for the Alms House & Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 185. Their report, dated Nov. 23, states "that in Consequence of there being no vacant Ground adjoining the aforesaid Institution[s] and none in the Neighbourhood except a Piece of Ground now vacant adjoining the New Goal which in the Opinion of this Committee is too Valuable for the purpose aforesaid, are therefore of Oppinion that the Building of two Large Vaults in the Back part of the Alms House Garden would not only be a great Convenience, but also a Considerable saving to the public.—From the original report, in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room.

17 The first meeting of the "General Committee of Mechanics" is held at the public house of Walter Heyer. A constitution is adopted and an organization effected. "The several trades sent delegates which composed the general committee. Each trade had a separate organization, which was considered a branch of the committee."—Annals of the Gen. Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen of the City of N. Y. (1882), 9. This event marks the date of the founding of the General Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen, which still survives.—See Centennial Celebration, Gen. Soc. of Mec. and Tradesmen, 6, 12; Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 554. Heyer's tavern was still kept by him in King St. in 1788.—See N. Y. Packet, Ap 1, 1788. For the incorporation of the General Soc., see Mr 14, 1792.

19 John Cape, proprietor of the City Tavern, announces the opening on this day of his "Porter Room," where "Gentlemen may be supplied with Beef Steaks, Oysters, &c. on the shortest notice."—N. Y. Packet, N 17, 1785. Cape sold the contents of the City Tavern on Feb. 22 and 23, 1786.—Daily Adv., F 23, 1786. See, further, Mr 9, 1786.

21 The John Street Theatre is opened "by the Old American Company of Comedians."—Penn. Jour., N 26, 1785. "The play was the Gamester, written by the late Mr. Edward Moore, author of Fables for the Female Sex. . . . The farce was Love a-la-Mode, a production of Mr. Charles Macklin, an excellent Comedian. . . . All the parts were acted with great ability, by our old acquaintances the long approved, and very respectable American Company, who received unremitted plaudits from every part of the house, which, at a vast expense, is now perfectly repaired, beautified, and illuminated in a stile to vie with European splendor.—After the farce, Mr. Henry, one of the Manager's, . . . addressed his generous patrons as follows. . . .

Nov. 21 "'Eighteen years past, your bounty erected this Theatre [see D 7, 1767]—Happy in your approbation and support, we continued the exercise of our profession in it, until the black cloud that threatened the liberty of America, rendered it necessary for the sons of freedom, at their joint meeting, to prohibit, during that awful period, all public amusements; among many others, the Theatre was particularized [see O 20, 1774] This was conveyed to us not only by the resolves of Congress, but in a letter from their amiable President, his Excellency the late Peyton Randolph, and also from the Committee then sitting in this city. . . . We went to the island of Jamaica. . . . Ten years we languished in absence from this our wished for, our desirable home, and though often solicited to return . . . we constantly refused, supposing it incompatible with our duty to the United States. . . .

"'Many of us have passed the spring and summer of our days in your service, and we are now returned, trusting we shall be allowed to wind up peacably the evening of them, under the happy auspices of your protection. . . .'

"The approbation of the foregoing, by every auditor, was expressive of a sincere welcome of the company to New-York, the real Athens of America."—Ibid., N 30; N. Y. Packet, N 24, 1785. See D 26.

23 John Temple, the consul general from Great Britain, with his family and suite, arrives in New York.—N. Y. Packet, D 5, 1785.

" A petition of Christopher Colles, bearing this date, thanks the common council for "their kindness in advancing him part of the money due to him on account of the water-works," and he states that he has applied part of the money in erecting "a horse mill & other works for the purpose of carrying on in this City the Manufacture of Fig blue, which manufacture he proposes to have carried on by his eldest son, in case he [the petitioner] shall be engaged in the prosecution of the Navigation of the Mohawk river." He explains that "he has already made & disposed of to the grocers & other retailers in this City a quantity of the said commodity, which upon trial is proved to be fully equal in quality to any imported, altho' he can afford to sell it at a less price." He asks the board to advance him the further sum of £50 to establish the manufacture on a proper footing.—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read 23 Nov. 1785." The petition was granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 187. Colles petitioned on Aug. 14, 1786 (q. v.) for the balance due him.

30 Adams demands that the British surrender the frontier posts of the U. S., which the British held while seeking payment of debts due her.—Winsor, VII: 234.

Dec 1 In a letter written at New York on this day, David Ramsay, after giving a general account of conditions in the colonies, says: "I have made some enquiry into the State of the College here & I hear a very good account of it. . . . The teachers are able & attentive & the College is under the government of the Gentlemen of the city whose sons are pupils & who will for their own sake take good care of the institution."—From MS. in Coll. of autograph letters, etc., 1674 to 1872, in Columbia Univ. Library.

6 David Franks advertises that "The New-York Directory" will be "put to press in a few Days," and gives a list of its contents. The price will be "about Six Shillings," four to be paid on subscribing and the balance on delivery.—N. Y. Gazetteer, D 6, 1785, and Ja 3,

1785 1786. The advertisement continued until Feb. 10, 1786. This was
D 6 the first directory of New York City. See, further, F 14, 1786.

" Peter Lacour advertises "a School of Drawing, for Architecture, Portraits, Ornaments, Landscapes, . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, D 6, 1785. Cf. O 11, 1791. Lacour's drawing of Federal Hall, showing Washington's inauguration, which was engraved and printed by Amos Doolittle, is reproduced as Frontispiece I, Vol. III.

21 "Mr Goercke one of the City Surveyors presented to the Board a Plan of the Ground belonging to this Corporation at Inchlam Bergh in which the same is subdivided into Lots." It is ordered that the plan be referred to a committee for examination and that they give their opinion of the manner in which the lots may be disposed of for the best advantage of the corporation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 191. They reported on Feb. 15, 1786, "That the centre Road shall be 100 feet wide instead of 66 feet as the same is laid down," and "That a part of the Lots laid out on the new Map be sold in fee simple if a reasonable Price can be obtained." It was decided to procure a law for this purpose.—Ibid., I: 199.

" The common council orders "that the Keeper of the public Magazine do immediately remove all the Gun Powder (except 50 Casks) from the old into the New Magazine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 191. This appears to mark the completion of the new building.—See Ap 20.

26 A news item reads: "A correspondent observes, that the infatuation which possesses many of the people of this state, for Theatrical Exhibitions, is truly alarming.—Some were led to imagine that the friends of the drama, were principally confined to this City; but alas! the delirium appears to have spread far and wide. And, strange to tell! the honest, sober Dutchmen of Albany, who were once distinguished by industry and a laudable parsimony, are now plunging into that very species of luxury and folly, which stamps upon the metropolis, an indelible stigma.

"But, it is still more observable, and wonderful to relate, that even the Fathers of that ancient city, have sanctioned the establishment of a Public Theatre, by granting their permission to the Players.—It would be doing injustice to our Magistrates, not to mention here, that though it was not in their power to prohibit, yet they have never extended their authority so far, as publicly to license the opening of the Theatre; and if common fame can be credited none of them have countenanced the Comedian, by attending their exhibitions—An example worthy the imitation of all ranks.

"When we find this darling vice encouraged in the first, and patronized in the second city of the state; and rearing its ensigns in each corner thereof, is it not High Time for the considerate inhabitants, to step forth and oppose the increasing evil, with firmness and resolution, 'ere it be too late."—N. Y. Packet, D 26, 1785. In 1786 (q. v.), some of the New York citizens protested to the legislature against the theatrical performances.

27 The festival of St. John the Evangelist is celebrated by the members of the Mason's Society "at the house of Brother Cape" (City Tavern, 115 Broadway).—N. Y. Packet, D 26, 1785.

28 A payment of £200 is made "for Building a pier or Bason at the North River" (see Ap 30); and £110:9:6 "for stone and wood for the Dock at the North River."—M. C. C. (MS.), VIII: 376.

— In this year, a census was taken under a provision of the "Articles of Confederation," which had reference to an equalization of the expenses of the late war, "in proportion to the whole number of whites and other free citizens and inhabitants of every age, sex and condition, including those bound to servitude for a term of years, and three-fifths of all other persons not comprehended in the foregoing description, except Indians not paying taxes." This census was to have been taken triennially, but was suspended by the decennial census of the federal government, which began in 1790 under the provisions of the Constitution of 1789. This census of 1786 shows a population for the city of 23,614.—Statistics of Population of the City and Co. of N. Y., Doc. No. 13, Bd. of Supervisors, 1866, pp. 14–15. The number of houses in the city in this year was 3,340.—Am. Mag., Mr, 1788. See also Ap 30.

— Although the following description refers to New York as it was after 1790 (as appears by the mention of the "town hall where formerly the Congress met"), it is placed here because many of the facts mentioned (with the notable exception of the error in population, "about 25,000") are applicable to this earlier year.

1786 "New York, the capital of the State, enjoys one of the most — beautiful locations in the world. . . . The town is irregularly built: nevertheless there are beautiful streets and sidewalks. The promenade at the quay offers the double advantage of a brilliant perspective and a place for fresh air. There is a town hall, where formerly the Congress met; it is not a remarkable building. The houses are built of brick. There are three Dutch Reformed churches, four Presbyterian, three Episcopal, one Lutheran, a Calvinist church, a Roman church, an assembly of Quakers, two Anabaptists, and one synagogue. . . .

"A sojourn in New York is good for the health: the climate is made temperate in all seasons by the breezes from the sea. There is luxury among the women; they are amiable, and well educated; they are good housewives, which makes their society interesting in more than one respect: however public education is not very advanced. Newyork still carries the traces of its origin. The Dutch, in transmitting to the inhabitants of this city their mania for cleanliness, which English customs have modified a little, have left them also little apptitude for the sciences. One must admit, nevertheless that, since the Revolution, Newyork has outgrown its ancient boundaries, and will soon equal the most progressive cities in science and in litterature. Her commercial situation, which puts her above all the towns in the United States, must necessarily accelerate her progress towards general education and instruction, which always owe, in a great part, their progres to a large population and the competition of foreigners.

"The East and North Rivers make New York the leader of commerce in the most populated part of the United States; and her port which is not exposed to the inconveniences of the frost like the cities of the central states, commands foreign commerce better than any other state. The English packet-boats arrive at New York. It was also the port of the French packets before they were intercepted. All these advantages will give to this city, little by little, the whole extent of the island on which she is situated, in spite of one of the greatest defects possible for a large population, that is, the want of good drinking water. To-day one is obliged to supply one's self from a source which is a mile from the town. New York contains about 25,000 inhabitants."—Translated from Etats-Unis de l'Amérique à la fin du XVIII^e Siècle, by J. E. Bonnett (Paris, 1802), II: 367–69.

— Sometime during this year, a memorial signed by most of the leading citizens of New York was addressed to the legislature protesting against the "Evils which threaten our City and State." The "Theatre, lately opened in this City," was condemned as an evil "that has an unfriendly aspect on the Virtue of our Citizens;—especially on that Frugallity and Oeconomy which are so essential to the Prosperity and Honor of our Country if not to the existance of our . . . hard earned Priviledges . . . while it is . . . considered by many worthy Persons of all religious Denominations, as highly injurious to the interests of true Piety wherever it is countenanced." The large number of taverns is also condemned.—Emmett Coll., item 11167. See Ja 16 and 21. The legislature seems to have taken no action unfavourable to the theatre, for performances continued to be given.

— In this year, in Massachusetts, the machinations of demagogues and malcontents, who argued that all property which joint resistance had protected in the Revolution was equally the subject of division, found a leader in Daniel Shays, who headed a rebellion in the Connecticut Valley.—Winsor, VII: 229–30. See F 24, 1787.

— "Before the revolution, and even sometime afterwards, William street was the great mart for dry goods sales, and chiefly from Maiden lane up to Pearl street."—Watson's Annals, 184.

2 night "in his Dancing-School, the City Assembly Room, in the Broadway."—N. Y. Packet, Ja 2, 1786.

3 The Chamber of Commerce receives a memorial asking its aid for a project to open "an intercourse with the interior parts of the United States, by an artificial inland navigation, along the Mohawk River and Wood Creek to the great Lakes," and answers that its members entertain the "highest ideas of the Utility of the scheme, wishing it may meet with every possible success, but in their incorporated capacity, owing to the lowness of their funds, 'tis out of their power to lend him [the memorialist, probably Christopher Colles.—See N 23, 1785] any aid." This appears to be the first suggestion for the Erie Canal.—Bishop, A Chron. of 150 Years. The Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., 1768–1918, 42.

1786 Jan. 3 "Those persons who have Goats, that keep about the fort garden, are desired to take notice, that unless they are taken care of, and prevented from destroying the fruit trees, disagreeable consequences will attend them."—Daily Adv., Ja 3, 1786.

4 G. Furman offers "Genteel Boarding and Lodging" at the "Sign of the Free-American," No. 111, at the head of Queen St.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 5, 1786.

6 The vestry of Trinity Church passes a resolution to grant "a good lot of ground to each of the Presbyterian Congregations in this City for the use of their respective senior pastors for the time being." This is for erecting their dwelling-houses.—Trin. Min. (MS.). On Oct. 2, Trinity granted to "the Corporation of the Scotch Presbyterians in the City of New York," a lot and a half on the old "Church Farm," situated on the north side of Robinson St., near Broadway, for the use of the ministers.—From a copy of the deed (6pp. folio) filed with the Richard Varick papers (in bundle in box U-V) in N. Y. H. S. This land, now Nos. 3 and 5 Park Place, was never put to this use, but the income from the property was applied toward the payment of Dr. Rodgers' salary.—Knapp, Hist. of the Brick Church, 80.

" "Resolved that the Treasurer be directed to pay the Sum of £20 into the hands of Messrs John and Thomas Stagg to be by them laid out in improving that part of the Church Estate near the Bear Market."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

16 Both houses of the legislature convene at the "Exchange," and are addressed in joint session by Gov. Clinton, who has summoned them by proclamation.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 19, 1786.

" A card appearing in a newspaper reads: "The Citizens are cautioned against signing a petition for the suppression of Public Virtue and Morality [see 1786], as a counter one will be offered them, in which they may be assured the fallacy of every argument in favour of the Theatre will be refuted, and the impropriety of the Drama clearly evinced."—N. Y. Packet, Ja 16, 1786. See Ja 21.

At this period, the theatre was the subject of much controversy, some defending it, others bitterly denouncing it as an evil. "Nothing is more destructive of good morals," one writer asserts, "than idling away time at Plays; for then, through pleasure vice more easily gains possession of the mind." He reminds his readers that "even in Great-Britain, where the Stage is patronized, unlicensed play-actors are considered as rogues and vagabonds."—N. Y. Packet, Ja 23, 1786.

21 John Henry publishes the following announcement: "A Report having prevailed, that the Subscriber is author of several pieces which have lately appeared in favor of the Theatre, he begs leave thus publicly to disavow not only being so, but also every knowledge of the writers. . . .

"Yet still he flatters himself, the chastity and morality of the entertainments presented there; the truly respectable audiences that nightly give sanction to them; the promises made the American Company when they left the city in February 1775; their known attachment and affection for their gracious patrons; the number of years they have passed in their service; with the painful idea of depriving seventy-two innocent persons, employed about the Theatre, of their daily bread, will at length remove the veil of prejudice, and the Drama appear amply capable of its proper, its original designation."—N. Y. Packet, Ja 26, 1786.

25 Geo. Lindsay, desiring to erect a house in Crown (Liberty) St., and being "at a loss to know which way he is to place the Front of his House," because the common council has not determined "the Plan of the Streets in that Quarter," petitions that the board "speedily determine the Plan of the Streets on the North River."—From the original petition in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room. The petition came before the board on Jan. 30, and was referred to the committee on Greenwich St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 194–95.

28 "Mr. Lamont, the Proprietor of the Intelligence-Office," advertises that his office, at "No. 22 Water-street, opposite the Coffee-house," will be also used as a "Land-Office, for the Sale of Estates." He believes "that an office for the general reception and sale of estates, would greatly add to the convenience of those who may want to dispose of their property, either by barter or sale."—Daily Adv., Ja 28, 1786. This seems to mark the first appearance in New York of the real-estate broker.

30 A letter from Chancellor Robert R. Livingston "containing proposals to contract w^th^ this Board for conveying fresh Water into this City" is read in common council and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 194. At the same meeting, a claim of Josiah Hornblower against the corporation for £12, "for coming at the request of the [common council] to survey & give his Opinion on the Reservoir & Engine of the Water Works erecting by M^r Colles previous to the Revolution," is presented and referred to the auditors of accounts.—Ibid., I: 175. A report on Livingston's proposal was submitted on Feb. 6, 1786 (q. v.). Although Hornblower had been paid £12 on May 24, 1775, for examining and reporting on the works, his claim was recognized by the common council and he received another £12 on June 12, 1788 (q. v.). Jan. 30

A deed or indenture conveys to Nicholas Fish that portion of the James deLancey estate on which the mansion stands, comprising the block bounded by the Bowery Lane, Rivington, Christie, and Delancey Sts. It was acknowledged Oct. 2, 1794, by the commissioners of forfeiture, Isaac Stoutenburgh and Philip van Cortlandt; and, signed by Mayor Varick, was recorded April 9, 1796. It is now in the author's collection.—See descrip. of Pl. 36-a, I: 277; also Ap 27, 1791. Feb. 3

Reports upon the proposals of Samuel Ogden (see Mr 24, 1785) and Chancellor Livingston (see Ja 30, 1786) to supply the city with water are read in common council, but consideration is deferred.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 197. See F 15. 6

Jacob de la Montagnie, whose address is No. 8 Great George St., cor. of Robinson St., advertises that the "well known and beautifully situated House and Gardens, No. 317, Great George-street, formerly kept by the Widow de la Montagnie, but at present in the occupation of Mr Henry Kennedy" (see Je 9, 1785), is for rent.—N. Y. Packet, F 6, 1786. See history of this tavern under Ap 5, 1754.

Peter Stuyvesant offers for rent the country-seat called "Petersfield," two miles from New York, on East River, lately occupied by "Baron de Polinitz," and now in possession of Robert B. Winthrop.—Daily Adv., F 13, 1786; L. M. R. K., III: 952. Again, on Feb. 16, he advertised to lease a country-seat on East River, "lately occupied by Col. Lewis Morris."—N. Y. Packet, F 16, 1786. Baron Polnitz later occupied Andrew Elliot's "Minto."—See My 20, 1789. 13

"The New-York Directory" is "Just Published," and is "to be sold by Shepard Kollock, At his Book-Store, opposite the Coffee-house," and by "Mr. David Franks (The Compiler,) No. 66, Broadway." This newspaper announcement also contains the same note of thanks to the public for encouragement received as appears in the directory itself. In it Franks refers to this directory as "the first of the kind ever attempted in this city," and states that "he shall have the honour of annually presenting them."—N. Y. Gazetteer, F 14, 1786. See also Vol. I, p. 373; where, however, the erroneous statement is made that the N. Y. Historical Soc. owns the only known copy of the 1788 edition of the directory. It should read the 1787 edition. No copy of the 1788 directory is known to exist. 14

Besides the alphabetical list of the inhabitants, the directory contains a monthly almanac; a table of coins and their value in sterling and in N. Y. currency; a list of the members of congress; the names and addresses of government department heads; the commissioners of claims against the U. S.; the members of the state senate and assembly; the chancery officers, judges, justices of the peace; officers of the city and county of N. Y.; commissioners of forfeiture; lawyers, and notaries; officers of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the state; officers and directors of the Bank of N. Y., and rules of the bank; the bank discounts on gold coin; the names of Columbia College professors, days of examination, etc.; officers of the Soc. for promoting the manumission of slaves; members of the Gold and Silversmiths' Soc.; of the Soc. of the Cincinnati of N. Y. State; officers and members of the St. Andrew's Soc.; of the Gen. Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen; of the Soc. of Peruke-makers, etc.; the arrivals and departures of mails at the N. Y. post-office; names omitted from the directory; Mr. Franks' address to the public, and his page advertisement as conveyancer and accountant.

In the list of gold- and silversmiths, the name of Myer Myers appears as "Chairman." See also the reference to him under 1746; where, however, the date 1776 is an error for 1786, as the date when he was president of this society.

Several cheap reproductions have been published of the original directory, which is now excessively scarce.

Chancellor Livingston and his associate, John Lawrence, appear before the common council to discuss their plan for supplying the 15

1786 city with water (see F 6). The board resolves to advertise for pro-
Feb. posals to be delivered at the clerk's office on or before April 20.—
15 M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 198, 199–200.

An advertisement, signed by Robert Benson, city clerk, which appeared in the papers is dated Feb. 15, and read as follows:

"Whereas the Corporation of the city, have long had it in contemplation, to supply the inhabitants with water, by means of pipes or acqueducts: and an attempt was made for that purpose, which was rendered unsuccessful: And whereas proposals have been lately offered for carrying on the said design by private companies, and the funds of the corporation not enabling them to erect the necessary works on the public account, and being impressed by a desire to forward such supply of Water, which they consider not only as a great convenience to the citizens, but as a security to the public, in case of fires; Notice is therefore hereby given, that the privilege of supplying the city with water will be granted to such person or companies as will engage in the undertaking on the most reasonable terms; and all persons have now an opportunity of leaving their proposals, sealed, at the office of the clerk of this city, in Maiden-lane on or before the 15th day of April next, to be then taken into consideration."—N. Y. Jour., F 23, 1786. The sealed proposals were presented to the board on April 19 (q.v.) by the clerk.

" A committee of the common council is appointed to report "what Alterations are necessary to the Law for regulating Streets in the burnt parts of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 199. They reported on March 22 the draft of a memorial to the legislature and of a bill for the purpose, and these were approved by the board for presentation.—Ibid., I: 207.

" The committee which was appointed to report the best means for disposing of the Common Lands in the Out Ward, report the following opinion: "1st. That the center Road shall be 100 feet wide instead of 66 feet as the same is laid down. 2d That a part of the Lots laid out on the new Map be sold in fee simple if a reasonable price can be obtained. 3d That an Advertizement of such intended Sale be published. . . . 4th That the Claims of Individuals on the Common Lands of the Corporation be amicably adjusted. . . ." The common council agrees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 199.

" The list of firemen appointed on this day by the common council shows the names of 279 men. They consist of five engineers, two hook-and-ladder companies, and engine men attached to fifteen engines.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 200–3.

22 A commissioner of excise is appointed by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 204.

23 "Whereas many persons in this city, who have been greatly hurt in their circumstances, and families reduced to distress, by getting into the hands of persons, who have made a practice for some time past, to lend out their money at extravagant usury, have been already redressed; and whereas there is reason to believe, that many other persons are still labouring under similar circumstances, notice is hereby given, that any person or persons who may be so situated, may be redressed by applying at No. 35 King-street."—Daily Adv., F 23, 1786.

24 Morgan Lewis (see Ag 2, 1785) advertises for sale "Mount Pitt, the place on which the subscriber now lives, situate near Corlaer's Hook, at the distance of one mile from the city-hall, of the city of New-York; an handsome and convenient dwelling house, an out kitchen, containing several rooms; adjacent is a large stable, a new carriage house and a complete ice-house, which compose the principal buildings. There are about eleven acres of land, a collection of between three and four hundred bearing fruit trees, and an handsome garden well fenced in. The place being well known requires no further description."—Daily Adv., F 24, 1786. The place was not sold until Feb. 3, 1792 (q.v.).

25 In a long letter to the press, "Roscius" proposes the abolition of taverns, which now number more than 800 in the city and suburbs.—Daily Adv., F 25, 1786.

9 Cape's, in Broadway.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 16, 1786. Corre was succeeded in May, 1788, by Edward Bardin.—Ibid., Mr 31, 1788; Daily Adv., Ap 22, 1788; N. Y. Packet, Je 10, 1788.

14 Gov. Clinton submits to the legislature a petition of Samuel Francis (Fraunces), accompanying his message, and recommends "his peculiar case" to their attention, on being "convinced of the truth of many of the most material facts therein stated."—Jour. of the Senate (1786), 44. The text of this petition is not recorded; but, on May 5, an act was passed (Laws of 1786, chap. 66) appropriating Mar.
£200 "to Samuel Francis for the support of New York prisoners 14 and for sundry services during the late war."—Messages from the Governors, II: 259. See also Ap 4, 1785.

Peter Maverick, "ever willing to serve the public, respect- 16 fully informs them, that he carries on the engraving, seal sinking and copper plate printing, at No. 3, Crown-street, where ladies may have their tea-table plate engraved, in the most elegant manner and in the newest fashion, resembling the flat chasing, as neat as in Europe."—N. Y. Packet, Mr 16, 1786. Stauffer says this advertisement refers to Peter Rushton Maverick, a native New Yorker, and thinks the notice "plainly indicates that, like other early American engravers, the engraving of silver-plate and book plates formed the major part of his business." Most of Maverick's copperplates are "poor in execution," although his book plates are fairly good.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 177. A list of his engravings may be found in ibid., II: 371–72. In 1788, Peter R. Maverick represented the engravers of New York City in the Federal Procession.—Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 28. He lived in the city continuously until his death in 1811.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 187.

The house formerly occupied by Mrs. Wright for the exhibition 17 of her famous wax-works (see Je 3 and Ag 5, 1771), at 100 Queen St., is still used for similar exhibitions.—Daily Adv., Mr 17, 1786. Among the figures shown, "as large as life," is a "portrait" of Gen. Washington.—Ibid., My 16, 1788. Possibly this was the bas-relief by Mrs. Wright, reproduced, for the first time, in the N. Y. Times, F 22, 1925. See Ap 7. Cf. Ag 26, 1789.

Hook" a free port, that it may charge import duties even on goods brought from New York.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 23, 1786.

The alderman and assistant of the South Ward are required to 22 report to the common council what repairs are necessary to "the Fire Engine House near the Fort."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 208.

In a petition to the common council, bearing this date, the in- 28
habitants of the East Ward ask for an improvement in the street at the coffee house. They state "That the Coffee House at present kept by Mr Cornelius Bradford is the usual place of resort for your Memorialists and the Merchants of this City in general to meet at daily and transact Business." The street, for want of proper regulation, has become filthy, and they ask relief "by sending the Water over the Street instead of leading it into the Common shore and to remove the Platform in a line with the East front of the said Coffee House and run on towards the water."—From original petition (in metal file No. 10, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read March 29th 1786 & referred;" and see M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 209. The petition carries 136 signatures including the names of Alexander Hamilton and many other distinguished citizens of the time. The desired action was taken by the common council on June 28 (q.v.).

A payment of £26:1:8 is made "for Ironmongory to repair & 29 alter the Court Room."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 210.

The legislature passes "An Act to regulate the Militia." The Apr.
city of New York is to raise one regiment of artillery.—Laws of 4
N. Y. (1786), chap. 25. The first brigade, first division, was formed in New York as a "Brigade of Artillery," composed of the first and second Regiments and a battalion.—From "Military History of the Eighth Regiment," by Capt. J. O. Johnston, in Grand Opening of the New Armory (1890), 10. For the names of the successive commanders for the next decade, see ibid., 10.

". . . New York bids fair to out vie the sister States in be- 7 coming the seat of Arts. Today we are informed of the arrival of Mr. [Joseph] Wright [Jr.] from Philadelphia, a gentleman of abilities in Painting, and Son to the celebrated modellor and patriotess Mrs. Wright of London, from this place [see Je 3 and Ag 5, 1771]—as he means to follow his profession as a Limner here, we are tempted to believe, every encouragement will be given to his Genius."—Daily Adv., Ap. 7, 1786. The proprietors of the "Albany Stage Waggons" advertise to 10 make the run from New York to Albany in two days, starting at Corre's Tavern (City Tavern) on lower Broadway. The same charge is made for carrying 150 lbs. of baggage as a passenger. They are not permitted, under their contract with the postmaster-general, to carry letters independent of the mail.—N. Y. Packet, Ap 10, 1786.

1786 Apr. 11 The first commencement of Columbia College is held in St. Paul's Chapel, and is attended by the national congress and the state legislature as well as by the educational authorities. De Witt Clinton is among the eight graduates who receive the B. A. degree. —N. Y. Packet, Ap 13, 1786.

18 The legislature passes "An Act for emitting the Sum of Two Hundred Thousand Pounds in Bills of Credit, for the Purposes therein mentioned." This is occasioned "by the late calamitous war," the inhabitants of the state labouring under great difficulties "for want of a sufficient circulating medium." These bills of credit are to be delivered by the state treasurer to the loan officers of the several counties in specified sums. New York County is to receive £32,000. The loan officers are to loan the bills on the security of mortgages on real estate, at 5%, for 14 years, after the third Tuesday in June, 1786, in sums not exceeding £300, nor less than £20 to any one person.—Laws of N. Y. (1786), chap. 40. On Oct. 4, 1791, loan officers' books of mortgages, minutes, accounts, etc. were examined and approved by the common council of N. Y. City.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 674.

19 The clerk of the common council reports that he has received "three sealed Packets said to contain Proposals for erecting Works to supply this City with Water" (see F 15). The aldermen and assistants state that they have conferred with the inhabitants in their respective wards, and "that it appeared to be the Sense of a Majority of the Persons they had conferred with that the Corporation ought not to grant the Privilege of supplying the City with Water to Individuals; but that the same ought if possible to be undertaken by the Corporation." The board therefore resolves "that the said Proposals remain unopened with the Clerk until . . . further order . . . or that they be returned, at the option of the Persons who presented the same." Meanwhile, the aldermen and assistants are requested "to set on foot in their respective Wards, Representations to this Board in Writing and subscribed by the Citzens in order more fully to ascertain their Sense. Whether the Corporation ought to grant to Individuals the Privilege of supplying the City with Water Or whether the same ought to be undertaken by the Corporation and that the Monies necessary for the Purpose should be raised by a Tax on the Citizens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 213–14. We find no other reference to these proposals, so the project appears to have been dropped at this time. It was revived by the citizens in 1788 (q. v., Ja 29).

" Steps are taken to transform the Bowling Green into a small park. For its earlier history, see L. M. R. K., III: 968; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 633–38; ibid. (1862), 526–27. In earlier times the land was called "the Plain" (ibid., 1856, p. 474), and later "the Parade" (Pls. 26, 27, 27A, Vol. I); see also My 4, 1660; Ja 29, 1677; S 8, 1684.

On April 3, 1786, Chancellor Livingston wrote to "The Worshipful James Duane, Esq^{r}, Mayor" as follows: "Mr. Stevens who had the charge of the bowling green having left town is disposed to deliver it over to me but as I would not wish to take it upon me without the direction of your worshipful board, I beg the favor of you to signify to them that it would give me pleasure to keep it in repair as it is very ornamental to this part of the town & might be rendered more so by planting trees around on the outside & shrubs within, if the corporation will do the first I will take the last upon myself. The fence is now broke so that the hogs are daily destroying it but as the iron lies about the place it might be repaired without much expence one of the lamps is also wanting. I would submit whether it would not be expedient to take down the pedistal which is far from being ornamental & contracts the appearance of the green."—From the original letter in city clerk's record-room. It is endorsed: "read & filed 19 April, 1786, & granted." The action taken by the common council, as recorded in the minutes on April 19, was to grant Livingston "the Direction and Use of the Bowling Green" for two years, he to pay the expense of sowing grass seed and having it "well laid down as a Green."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 212–13.

The board had under consideration at the same time a petition from Daniel Ludlow who stated "That the Green, or Elipses at the South End of the Broadway, is so much decayed during the late war, that instead of Being an ornament to the City without some timely aid will soon become a Nusance to the Neighbourhood." He was willing "at his own expence to Manure the Ground & sow the same with proper Grass Seed and have it well laid down as a Green," and asked the board's permission to take it under his management, and, as compensation, have the use of it for two years. —From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read & fil'd 19 April 1786." It was granted to Chancellor Livingston "on the Terms offered by M^{r} Ludlow."—M. C. C., op. cit. See also L. M. R. K., III: 968; and "Chancellor Robert R. Livingston of New York and His Family," by Jos. Livingston Delafield, in the 16th Ann. Rep. of the Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 311–56. Apr. 19

The keeper of the bridewell having been forbidden "to draw his Seine for the taking Fish at Paulus Hook on the Jersey Shore," and the inhabitants of the bridewell and almshouse being "likely to be deprived of the Advantage of being fed with Fish during the Season at a very cheap Rate," a committee of the common council is appointed "to confer with M^{r} Smith the Tenant in possession at Paulus Hook on the Subject."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 212. "

The common council resolves that the "Magistrates" (that is, the aldermen) shall "in Rotation have the Charge of the City Watch."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 213. "

Firemen are appointed by the common council for an additional engine, No. 16, and it is ordered "that the Engineer direct a House to be built at the New Dutch Church for the reception of the s^{d} Engine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 214. "

Mr. "Ansell" (Anstey) arrives by a British packet. He has been "appointed by that government to enquire into the value of the estates of those loyalists which have been already confiscated and sold."—N. Y. Packet, Ap 20, 1786. See also My 12. 20

The legislature passes "An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Fires in the City of New-York." It is designed to remove the dangers arising from storing pitch, tar, etc. in houses, and from discharging guns, fire-works, etc.—Laws of N. Y. (1786), chap. 43 (Greenleaf, I: 271). 22

John Ryckman, a brickmaker, who "lives at Inclingborough adjoining to the commonable Lands," states in a petition to the common council that he "hath heretofore been indulged with liberty of diging Clay and making Bricks on such Lands . . . upon the principal of your petitioner's rendering them cheaper and better in quality, than such as were imported, to this City." He represents that "if he could now be indulged with the taking Clay from such commonable Lands, contiguous to his place of residence, he would erect a Brick-yard in his own Lott, fill up every spot he may be indulged to dig Clay from, and carry on his business, as heretofore done, for the mutual advantage of himself and the City at large."—From original petition in city clerk's record-room. The same petition appeared in the minutes of June 9, 1784.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 46. 25

The legislature passes "An Act to promote Literature." Authors are given the sole right for 14 years of printing and publishing their books and pamphlets, with an additional 14 years if still living.—Laws of N. Y. (1786), chap. 54. 29

Residents in and adjacent to Barclay, Murray, and Chappel Sts., in a petition to the common council, state that these streets, "for want of proper regulation have become utterly impassable for Carts or Carriages," and that they are ready to remedy this situation as soon as the Board gives directions.—From the original petition in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room. May —

Stone St. and Petticoat Lane, "heretofore the abode of dirt and diseases," are to be widened and thrown into one. The destruction of part of the city has thus opened the door to improvement. It is "determined to leave Broadway as it is with one side some yards higher than the other, and a pavement less inviting than a tavern sign, promising no entertainment to man or horse."—Daily Adv., My 2, 1786. 2

Alexander Macomb purchases two vacant lots at Nos. 39 and 41 Broadway—Liber Deeds, XLVI: 6. Here he erected a large and handsome residence, which was completed by Oct. 10, 1787.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 327. This house was the residence of Pres. Washington early in 1790 (see F 22, 1790), and until he left the city on the removal of the seat of government to Philadelphia.—Diary of Washington (ed. by Lossing), 86–87; Mag. of Am. Hist., XXI: 107. This large double building was opened as a hotel in 1821 by C. Bunker, who called it Bunker's Mansion House.—Haswell, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 121. See L. M. R. K., III: 977; Pl. 174, Vol. III. The house is shown on Pl. 56, Vol. I and Pl. 98, Vol. III. 8

The common council orders that a committee be appointed "to 10

1786 examine the Bridge near Mr Lispenards, represented to be much out
My 10 of order."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 216. See S 13.

11 Bradford's Coffee House (see Mr 11, 1784) is the appointed meeting-place of the corporation of the N. Y. Hospital.—N. Y. Packet, My 11, 1786. For an account of the various societies, etc., which met here at different times, see Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 320 et seq., and 403. On Feb. 23, 1793, the Merchants' Coffee House, with the house adjoining, occupied by Mrs. Bradford (see O 27, 1783), was advertised for sale.—Daily Adv., F 28, 1793. Mrs. Bradford, the widow of Cornelius, who died on Nov. 9, 1786 (N. Y. Packet, N 10, 1786), kept this tavern from the time of his death until this time.—Bayles, 322, 402–30. It changed hands before 1800, as we find an ad. of Edward Bardin on June 12, 1798, stating that he opened "the Old Coffee House" (formerly occupied by John Byrne) on that day.—Daily Adv., Je 12, 1798; Bayles, Old Taverns, 403. See, further, D 18, 1804.

" Nicholas Hoffman & Sons, 12 Little Dock St., advertise "black and white wampum, pipes and shells" for sale.—N. Y. Packet, My 11, 1786.

12 The British commissioner, John Anstey (see Ap 20), publishes the purpose of his mission. He was named under "an act for appointing commissioners further to enquire into the losses and services of all such persons who have suffered in their rights, properties and possessions, during the late unhappy dissensions in America, in consequence of their loyalty to his Majesty, and attachment to the British government." The "Office of Claims," in Broad St., "is open for the sole purpose of liquidating the amount in value of the losses sustained in this state, . . . that the bounty of the British government may be upheld in all cases, and confined to its proper objects, and compensation adequately and impartially administered to the several claimants in just proportions according to their pretensions, as the proofs thereof shall be found to require." The cases to be given first attention in the inquiry are those of Brig.-Gen. Oliver Delancey, Isaac Low, Hugh Wallace, Alexander Wallace, Col. Beverly Robinson, Col. Roger Morris, Robert Bayard, and Col. James Delancey.—Daily Adv., My 12, 1786.

18 "The Office of Richard Varick, Esq. Recorder of this City, and Attorney and Counsellor at Law, Is removed from No. 46, Great-Dock-Street, to No. 52, Wall-Street, nearly opposite to Pitt's Statue."—N. Y. Jour., My 18, 1786.

23 An act of the legislature having been passed on April 4, to enable the common council of the city to raise money by taxation for the support of the poor, etc., it is ordered that £6,000 be so raised for various objects by a tax on the estates of all the freeholders and inhabitants of the city; also that £4,000 be raised by an additional tax on estates of freeholders and inhabitants south of a line across the island just north of the property of Leonard Lispenard, of Nicholas Bayard, of the late Thomas Jones, and of Abraham Cannon.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 216–17.

26 An advertisement states that St. Peter's (Roman Catholic) Church is to be built by contract. "Any Master Carpenter or Mason, willing to undertake the building of said Church, may see the proposals and plan by applying to Lynch and Stoughton, No. 9 Princess street."—Daily Adv., My 26, 1786. The church was consecrated on Nov. 4 (q. v.).

31 Jacob Watson, Robt Murray, Comfort Sands, William Beekman, and others, complain in a petition to the common council of the "want of a Market House in the Out Ward of this City; Peck's Slip Market being illy supplied—and the Fly Market too distant to depend on for a daily supply." They ask permission "to erect a Market House, upon the Bulk Head, at Catharine Slip," at their own expense.—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read May 31th 1786," and referred to a committee "to regulate Catharine Street & fix on the situation for the Market;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 220. The committee to whom the petition was referred reported on June 15 that they had directed that the market be built in a certain place at Catherine Slip.—Ibid., I: 223. See Je 28.

" Inhabitants at Whitehall Slip petition that part of this slip may be filled up "similar to the old & other Slips;" also, inhabitants of Vesey St. petition that the slip fronting that street may be filled up. These petitions are referred to the alderman and assistants of the respective wards where the slips are situated, to determine the expediency and expense of the measure.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 220–21. On July 12, on the committee's recommendation, it was decided to build a bulkhead across the Vesey St. Slip, 70 feet in front of Greenwich St.—Ibid., I: 230. May 31

" John Battin announces that he has opened "a Porter-House and Tavern, at the sign of the Blue Bell, in Slote-Lane."—Ind. Jour. or Gen. Adv., My 31, 1786.

Hon. Alexander McDougall, a major-general in the U. S. army during the Revolution, and lately one of the senators for the Southern District of this state, dies at his home on Nassau St. His funeral was a notable one; minute guns were fired during the procession.—N. Y. Jour., Je 15, 1786. June 9

15 Inhabitants at Burlings Slip petition that the east side of this slip may be wharfed out equal to the west side, and the street paved. The petition is referred to the committee which is considering the petitions for and against filling up a part of the slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 223.

28 The market-house at Catharine Slip (see My 31) is erected and ready for the accommodation of butchers and country folk. It is ordered by the common council that it be established as a public market-place, subject to the rules and regulations of the other market-places.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 225–26; L. M. R. K., III: 958. See Ag 19, 1799.

" The alderman and assistant of the West Ward are made a committee to regulate the unregulated streets in the vicinity of the college.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 226.

" The common council orders that Wall and Water Streets be regulated in the vicinity of the Coffee House; also that a sewer be built to the river; that a new "Coffee House Bridge" be placed "in the middle of that part of the Street between Water Street and the East River, fronting the Coffee House," and that "the present Coffee House Bridge" be removed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 226–28, 245–46. Regarding this bridge, see L. M. R. K., III: 988.

" The common council adopts a plan for celebrating the tenth anniversary of the Fourth of July.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 228.

July 4 The full programme for the celebration of the day, as ordered by the common council on June 28 (q. v.), is published.—N. Y. Gazetteer, Jl 4; see also ibid., Jl 7, 1786 (in N. J. H. S.). In addition to the usual features of the celebration, there is a "well designed and pleasing representation of transparent paintings, adapted to the occasion, in front of the theatre in John-street."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 6, 1786. This exhibition is referred to by Seilhamer as the first "theatrical" celebration of the day in the history of the U. S.—Hist. Am. Theatre, II: 189–90. He evidently means the first celebration of it by a theatre. For the first professional performance of a play written by an American, see Ap 16, 1787.

John Corre's account for entertainment furnished to "The Honble the Corporation of the City of New York" on the Fourth of July, 1786, amounting to £138:4:6, contains charges of £75 for 150 gallons of punch; £32:10 for 130 bottles of wine; £20 for cheese and crackers, and £10 for "wine glasses, tumblers, decanters, Bowls, plates, Windows, Bottles and pewter mugs Broke and missing."—From the original bill in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room. The bill was paid.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 244.

7 A balloon is to be raised at No. 50 Bowery Lane.—De Voe's Newspaper Index (MS.), at N. Y. H. S., citing the N. Y. Gazetteer or Daily Eve. Post, Jl 7, 1786 (in N. J. Hist. Soc.).

12 On account of there being a sunken hulk of a vessel in Beekman's Slip which cannot be removed, William Malcolm, who has petitioned the common council for permission to add to his wharf, is allowed "to extend the street to the width of twenty feet at his own expense," and is given power to obtain the city's grant of a strip of land 4 ft. 3 in. wide to make his lot the same width as the lot on the north side of Water St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 231.

25 A committee of the common council, which had been appointed to regulate the streets in the West Ward, reports that it has procured plans of the city surveyors for the regulation of Greenwich, Barclay, and Murray Sts. A description of this plan or survey, annexed to the report, is entered in full in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 235–36. Regarding Barclay St., see, further, My 25, 1789.

27 The trial trip of John Fitch's steamboat occurs on the Delaware River.—Bullock, "The Miracle of the First Steamboat," in Jour. Am. Hist., I: 36. Fitch thus described the boat: "It is, in several parts, similar to the late improved steam-engines in Europe, though there are some alterations—our cylinder is to be horizontal, and the steam to work with equal force at each end. . . . It is expected, that the engine, which is a 12 inch cylinder, will move with a clear 1786 July 27 force of 11 or 12 cwt. after the frictions are deducted; this force is to act against a wheel of 18 inches diameter. The piston is to move about three feet, and each vibration of the piston gives the axis about 40 evolutions. Each evolution of the axis moves 12 oars or paddles 5½ feet, (which work perpendicularly, and are represented by the stroke of the paddle of a canoe.) As 6 of the paddles are raised from the water, 6 more are entered, and the two sets of paddles make their strokes of about 11 feet in each evolution. The cranks of the axis act upon the paddles about ⅓ of their length from the lower end, on which part of the oar the whole force of the axis is applied. Our engine is placed in the boat about ⅓ from the stern, and both the action and re-action turn the wheel the same way."—Columbian Mag. (Dec., 1786), 174, which also contains view. This was "the first boat successfully propelled by steam in America."—Preble, Chron. Hist. of the Origin and Development of Steam Navigation, 23. See, further, Mr 19, 1787.

31 Peter Maverick, in a bill of this date, charges the city £3:10 for engraving the "State Arms" on each one of a set of measures,—a gallon, a half-gallon, a quart, a pint, a half-pint, and a gill measure.—From the original bill (in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read and fil[d] the 5 Sep[t] 1786;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 247.

Aug. 1 In a petition to the common council, asking that the charge for repairing a public drain at the foot of Wall St. may be borne by the public, the property owners of the neighbourhood state "That for many Years past there has been a Drain erected & maintained at the Public-Expence, for the purpose of conveying the Water from Wall Street and the adjoining parts of Queen Street, through what was formerly called the Meal Market & latterly the Coffee House Bridge."—From the original petition in city clerk's record-room. It was introduced on Aug. 14, and referred to the committee "for directing the Improvements in the Street at the Coffee House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 240. See Je 28.

3 A fencing-school has been opened by a Mr. Bridge from Paris at the house of Mr. Weissenfels on the Corporation Dock.—N. Y. Packet, Ag 3, 1786.

4 A gentlemen recently arrived in New York expresses astonishment at the magnificence in dress of both men and women. This seems to belie the reported "scarcity of money, stagnation of trade," etc.—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ag 4, 1786.

8 On a report by "the board of treasury," congress passes an ordinance prescribing the U. S. standard of value for coinage, the money unit (as decided by congress, July 6, 1785, q. v.) being the dollar. It is ordered also that this board report the draft of an ordinance for the establishment of a mint.—Jour. of Congress. This board, composed of Samuel Osgood and Arthur Lee, produced, on Sept. 20, "An ordinance for the establishment of the mint of the United States of America; and for regulating the value and alloy of coin."—See broadside, in N. Y. P. L.

14 "A Petition of Christopher Colles [see N 23, 1785] praying payment of the ballance by him claimed for the Water Works previous to the late War" is read in common council and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 239. Colles petitioned again on Dec. 5, 1787 (q. v.). For other claims on account of the pre-Revolutionary water works, see S 5, 1786, and Ja 17, 1787.

" The semi-weekly heretofore published as The New-York Gazetteer, and the Country Journal (see Mr 8, 1785), is changed to a daily with the title, New-York Gazetteer; or Daily Evening Post.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 432. See D 18.

23 The common council approves a report for the regulation of Mulberry St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 242–43. This street is shown laid out and named as far as the "Bend" on Pl. 41, Vol. I (1767), being called Ryndert St. from the Bend northward to the present Broome St. The entire length of the street was designated Mulberry St. by ordinance in 1797.—Ibid., II: 372. It was continued to Art St. (Astor Place) in 1805 (ibid., IV: 113); and opened to Great Jones St. in 1809 (ibid., V: 570). It was finally opened to Bleecker St., its present termination, in 1825 (ibid., XIV: 464–65). See also 1789, 1810, 1825.

" The common council agrees to a plan for regulating Broadway opposite the houses of John Jay and others; also Verlating Bergh and New Streets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 221, 243.

" The estate of Abraham Mesier is paid £69:2:6 for materials supplied to Christopher Colles in 1774 and 1775, for the waterworks.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 244; see also the original bill in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room.

Aug. 28 "We are informed . . . that Mr. Peale, the portrait Painter, from Philadelphia, will be in this city in a few days, to take the likeness of his Excellency the President of Congress, and some other public characters, in order to add to his gallery of pictures."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 28, 1786.

30 The population of the county of New York, as attested by Lewis A. Scott, secretary of state, on this date, was 4,360 males under sixteen; 5,742 males above sixteen and under sixty; 399 males above sixty; 4,260 females under sixteen; 6,746 females above sixteen; 896 male negro slaves; 1207 female negro slaves, and four Indians who paid taxes—a total of 23,614. The population of the state was 238,897. The number of white males in the state was greater than white females; but in New York County, the white females were slightly in excess of the white males.—From MS. census schedule, attested copy, in N. Y. H. S.; Ind. Jour., D 30, 1786.

Sept. — In this month, the first issue of The Columbian Magazine was published in Philadelphia. Evans says of it (item No. 19565): "This was the most ambitious project in magazine publication yet attempted in this country. It was modelled upon the Gentlemen's Magazine, and London Magazine, and was established by Mathew Carey, Thomas Sheddon, William Spotteswood, Charles Cist, and James Trenchard. Carey withdrew from the conduct of the magazine in December, 1786. . . ." Its subsequent history, to Dec., 1792, when publication ceased, is described.—Am. Bibliog., VII: 15. It comprised 9 vols.—Ford, Check-List of 18th Cent. Am. Magazines, 8. Among the engraved portraits, maps, and other plates which it contains is the portrait of Washington by Trenchard (Hart 839).

5 Isaac Roosevelt petitions the common council for "an additional Grant of the Soil under water 200 feet into the East River in front of a Water Lot at Hunters Key." The grant is ordered to be made.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 246. This is one of many such grants made after the Revolution, leading to the filling in and extension of the shore of the lower part of Manhattan Island.

" "An Acc[t] of Sharpe & Curtenius for certain Iron Work furnished M[r] Colles for the Water Works previous to the late War" (see F 10, 1775) is presented to the common council and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 247. They petitioned again on June 20, 1787 (q. v.).

" Col. William Smith Livingston engages in a duel with pistols with Gen. Samuel B. Webb, formerly Washington's aide-de-camp, who during the war had been Livingston's commanding officer. The affair takes place at "Paules Hook," without casualties.—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb (ed. by Ford), III: 64–65.

11 There is advertised for sale "That well known valuable Freehold Estate, called Horn's Hook, situated only seven miles from this city." It is stated that "For many years past the Old Mansion has been used as a Tavern. . . . The salubrity of the air, the extensive and pleasing prospects, commanding a view of Harlem, the East river and Hell-gate, forcibly recommend Horn's Hook to the lovers of contemplation and retirement. . . . The lot comprises about 30 acres. . . . On the estate a ferry has long been established to Hallet's Cove, Long Island."—N. Y. Packet, S 11, 1786. This was the site of the Gracie residence.—See views in Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 484; Mag. of Am. Hist., N, 1879, p. 690–91. SeeA.

13 The common council finds that the health and convenience of the inhabitants require that a bulkhead be built across Whitehall Slip 80 feet farther into the river than where the old one stood, and that the street be raised high enough to carry the water over the proposed new bulkhead.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 248.

" The common council orders "that the Ald[n] & Assistant of the Out Ward direct the Bridge at M[r] Lispenards to be rebuilt (if necessary) of Stone."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 249. This bridge ran across the drain which relieved Lispenard's swampy meadows of their surplus waters, and was built after April 6, 1733 (q. v.). See also L. M. R. K., III: 926; Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 442.

" Isaac Meade is compensated for injury done to his lot "by the late Regulation of Greenwich Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 249, 251–52.

14 The commissioners from Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York make a report to the legislatures of those states concerning the Annapolis Convention, which was called to enlarge the powers of congress over trade.—From original in Emmet Coll., No. 9402. "From the Annapolis Convention of 1786 came the Philadelphia Convention of May, 1787, and from 1786 Sept. 14 the Philadelphia Convention of 1787 came the Constitution under which we live."—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., I: 277.

20 The common council orders that all hogs, goats, and pigs found running at large shall be confiscated by the city for the use of the poor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 250–51.

27 Thomas Pool (see O 5, 1785), the "first American who ever Exhibited the following Feats of Horsemanship, On the continent . . .," advertises a performance for "This Afternoon, on the Hill, near the Jews Burial Ground."—Daily Adv., S 27, 1786. See also Ag 13, 1788. On Oct. 21, Pool introduced "a specimen of the Coross and Jostlar at New Market." Greenwood explains this by the following quotation from an announcement, during the previous summer, of the "Maidenhead Races" at the course in the Bowery Lane: "No crossing, jostling, nor any kind of foul Play, will be countenanced; which detected, the Rider will be pronounced distanced."—The Circus (1909), 75.

Oct. 2 Trinity corporation conveys two lots of land on the north side of Robinson St., near Broadway, to the Scots Presbyterian Church. A copy of the original deed is in the N. Y. H. S.

7 John Stagg, in a bill bearing this date, charges the city £6:16:9 for "building an Arched Bridge at Bestevaas Kelletye [see L. M. R. K., III: 966, under "Minetta Stream"] from October 7th to Nov. 14 inclusive." The items are for labour and carting.—From the original bill (in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room). He was paid Dec. 13.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 267.

18 A warrant for £47:7 is issued to pay Marinus Willett "for numbering the Inhabitants in the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 259.

" Payment is made for building a "Brestwork a Cross the Whitehall Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 259.

26 A company of light infantry, under the command of Capt. John Stagg, Jr., has been enrolled, and is to meet at Marrinner's Tavern, corner of John and Nassau Sts.—N. Y. Packet, O 26, 1786. This was the first company in the state to appear "as a body in consequence of the militia law, enacted at the last meeting of our Legislature."—Ibid., N 7, 1786. See Ap 4.

29 The Rev. Samuel Provoost, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, preaches a farewell sermon prior to going to England to be consecrated the first Bishop of the Episcopal Church in New York State. —N. Y. Packet, N 2, 1786. The report of his expected consecration was published in The Daily Adv., F 6, and N. Y. Jour., F 8, 1787. He was consecrated at Lambeth Palace on Feb. 9, 1787.—Ind. Jour., Ap 11, 1787.

Nov. — Garret Abeel, an elder of the North Dutch Church, completes, by order of the consistory, a report on the "State of the Revenues Income and Estate belonging to the Corporation of the Dutch Reformed Protestant Church in the City of New York at different Periods." It covers expenses since the War (1784 to Nov., 1786) for repairing the North Church, school-house, parsonage-house, burying ground, etc.; and a list of the real estate owned by this corporation in 1786, with valuations.—See the original in box of MSS. relating to churches in New York City, in N. Y. H. S.

1 Inhabitants of the Out Ward petition the common council for a grant of a piece of ground between the Post and Bloomingdale Roads, near the 3-mile stone, on which to erect a school-house. Referred to committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 260. The need of a school-house in this locality had previously led Trinity corporation to seek a similar grant, but without results. See Jl 22 and D 12, 1771; Ja 31 and Je 26, 1772. See, further, Mr 12, 1788.

4 ". . . the Catholic Church [St. Peter's], situated between St. Paul's and the College, will be consecrated this day, and . . . the service will begin at 11 o'clock."—Ind. Jour. or the Gen. Adv., N 4, 1786. The consecration, however, is postponed until further progress is made in the building. Instead, as this is the anniversary of St. Carlos (the name of the king and of the heir apparent to the Spanish throne), a solemn mass is held there by Rev. Mr. Nugent, rector of the Roman Catholic congregation. The Spanish minister, with his son and suite, and others of distinction, are present.—Ibid., N 8, 1786. The following account of the event is given by Shea:

St. Peter's Church "was so far advanced that, in compliment to Charles IV. of Spain, his feast-day, November 4th, dedicated to St. Charles Borromeo, was selected for the celebration of the first mass. Don Diego de Gardoqui and his suite, as well as all Spanish residents of the city, were invited to attend, a place of honor being assigned to them. A high mass was celebrated by the chaplains of the French and Spanish legations, the blessing of the church having been previously performed in private by the rector. . . ."—Life and Times of the Most Rev. John Carroll, 284. Nov. 4

This edifice was demolished in 1836, the present St. Peter's Church being commenced in that year on the same site.—See O 26, 1836.

This being the anniversary of St. Carlos ("the name of his Catholic Majesty and the Prince of Asturias"), it is also celebrated by the Spanish minister, Don Diego de Gardoqui, at his house, by an "elegant dinner" which he gives to the president, secretary, and members of congress, the ministers of foreign affairs, of war, and of finance, and to the foreign ministers, consuls, etc. Thirteen toasts are drunk.—Daily Adv., N 6, 1786.

It is ordered "that the allowance in future for conveying Vagrants to Bridewell be 2/6 p^{r} Head."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 263. For the earlier rate, see O 6, 1785. 6

The Society for Promoting the Manumission of Slaves agrees to a plan for establishing a school for instructing the children of free negroes.—N. Y. Jour., N 23, 1786. "The Court of Appeals have met agreeable to the Resolve of Congress, and are now sitting in this city, in the Room over the Exchange."—Daily Adv., N 13, 1786. 13

Samuel Zellers and others, cookey bakers, in a petition to the common council, state that until lately they have had the privilege of vending "Biscuit, Rusk, Gingerbread and Cakes" in the streets, and that these articles have been "chiefly purchased by Country people, Boatmen, and other transient persons;" but that "in consequence of the disorderly behavior of Boys and others . . . employed in selling those articles about the Streets and at the public Markets, the petitioners are deprived of the privilege." They ask that it be restored on condition that they will be responsible for the conduct of their agents.—From original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "cannot be granted." 15

Trinity vestry passes a unanimous resolution "That measures be forthwith taken for the rebuilding Trinity Church . . .;" "that three Commissioners be appointed to manage and superintend the work and that they prepare a plan of the building . . .;" also "that Subscriptions be Solicited from the Members of the Congregation for the above purpose."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Dec. 9

Elias Burger is paid £152:12 for "Sinking a wharf at Pecks Slip" and "Building a Dock at Beekmans Slip." Daniel Phoenix is paid £386:9:10 for disbursements at these slips.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 267. Various contractors and dealers were paid on subsequent dates for materials and labour there.—Ibid., I: 270, 271, etc. 13

The following advertisement appears: "Hearn's Hackney Coach. On Tuesday next the 26 instant the subscriber proposes to place a neat coach with able horses and a very sober careful driver, at M^{r} Bradford's Coffee House. This carriage will be distinguished by the letters I. H. in a cypher, and No. 1, on the door. It shall attend in the street from 9 o'clock in the morning till 9 o'clock at night, or earlier and later as occasion may require. James Hearn."—Ind. Jour., D 20, 1786. De Voe states in his manuscript index to newspapers that this was the first hackney-coach, and it is so referred to in the present work, I: 373. This is an error. An earlier mention of a hackney-coach in New York was that of John Clapp, which made its appearance in 1696 (q. v.). 20

The "Bridge at Bloomingdale" is repaired, with other parts of the highway in that section.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 270. 27

— In this year, the Associate Presbyterian congregation, formed in 1785 (q.v.), erected a plain frame building, 50 by 24 feet, on the east side of Nassau St., between Fulton and John Sts. In 1824, they sold this building to the South Baptist Church, and moved to a new church on the corner of Grand and Mercer Sts. In 1854, they moved to Grand and Crosby Sts., and in 1867 occupied the Fourth Presbyterian Church at the north-east corner of 34th St. and Sixth Ave.—Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 155–56; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches (1846), 212–13; L. M. R. K., III: 930.

— In this year, the Holland Lodge of Free Masons was formed in New York, using the Dutch tongue in its proceedings.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 148.

— The following description, published in 1835, presents various features of Manhattan, from Corlaer's Hook to the Battery, as they existed during and after the Revolution:

". . . Corlear's Hook, at low-water mark, had a hard pebbly shore; at high-water mark, a sandy Beach. From the Hook westwardly, at a distance of about 250 yards, a reef of rocks extended from the shore into the river, named by the Dutch 'Het Quade Puntie,' or the bad point. Between this point and Rutger's point of rocks, and nearly opposite to the Buddle Rock, Evert Byvanck had built a stone dock against the river, opposite to his dwelling house. Between Rutger's Point and Cheeseman's ship-yard and dock, there was a cove, connected with a low piece of marshy ground, which lay in front of the house of the late Col. Rutgers. From Cheeseman's Dock to Beekman's Dock, (on the west side of the present Market-slip,) the shore was sandy. Between these docks the British established their ship and navy-yard in 1777, where the same remained until 1783. Between Beekman's Dock and the Dock of Blaze Moore, on the west side of the present Catherine Market, the shore also lay unimproved.

"From Catherine-street eastwardly towards Harlaem, there were very few enclosures of land during the war: nearly all the land on the Island lay in common. The house of Hendrick Rutgers (the father of the Colonel) was occupied as a Hessian Hospital during the war, and hundreds of their dead were buried on his farm.

"Between Pearl-street and Cherry-street, the Fresh Water Pond was situated, which covered between two and three acres. This place was filled up after the war.

"We resume the river boundary by remarking, that the southerly side of Cherry-street, from the Dock of Beekman before mentioned to James slip, was at low-water mark; and that from Moore's Dock, on the west side of Catherine Market, to James-slip, there were no improvements on the south side of Cherry-street worthy of notice. From the west side of James-slip to Peck-slip, along Water-street, on the north side of the street, there were many buildings. Hamilton's distillery yard joined the street. Peck-slip extended to the south side of Water-street. Peck-slip Market stood between Pearl and Water streets. Between Peck-slip and Beekman-slip, the north side of Water-street was built up; and between the latter slips Crane-wharf was situated, having a large crane over the river. Beekman-slip extended to the south side of Water-street. From Beekman-slip to Burling-slip, the north side of Water-street was also built up, and there were a few stores on the south side. Burling-slip also extended to the south side of Water-street. From Burling-slip to Fly Market-slip, the north side of Front-street was built up. Between Burling-slip and Fletcher-street the British kept their provision yard and stores during the war. Fly Market-slip also extended to the south side of Water-street, and a small Fish Market was erected over the north part of the slip against Water-street, and the Meat or Butchers' Market extended from Water to Pearl-street. The Fly Market ferry stairs joined Front-street on the east side of the slip. The market boats occupied the slip between the stairs and the fish market. Theodorus Defreest occupied the corner of Front-street, near the slip.

"We have seen a British ship of the line winter in Fly Market-slip, against Leffert's wharf. This place was frequently occupied by ships of war in winter.

"From Fly Market-slip to Murray's wharf at the Coffee-House-slip, Front-street was built up on the northerly side. Coffee-House slip extended to the south side of Front-street, having a bridge over a sewer to Water-street. This bridge lay near the old Coffee-House and Rivington's Printing-Office. The place was frequented every day by merchants, officers and news-mongers. . . .

1787 "Old-slip, Coenties-slip, Exchange-slip and Whitehall-slip, severally extended to the south side of Water-street. The buildings — from Coffee-House-slip to Coenties-slip, along Front-street, were generally bad; along the docks and street, the place was very filthy; hence, it obtained the name of Rotten Row.

"A large Basin, named the Albany Basin, was situated on the south side of Front-street, between Coenties-slip and Exchange-slip. The Royal Exchange stood at the lower end of Broad-street, between Pearl and Water-streets. There was a ferry stairs on the east side of Whitehall-slip, for the accommodation of the Staten Island ferry boats and for small craft. The old Battery extended from a reef of stone on the west side of Whitehall-slip to the foot or lower part of Broadway. The front of the Battery, from low-water mark to the land level, was faced with red cut-stone.

"In the summer of the year 1780 the British constructed a strong Facine Breast work, above the Stone Work, with embrazures in the same, wherein cannon were mounted for the defence of the city: during the same summer a line of works were erected from Bunker' hill to Corlear's Hook. In 1781 Brooklyn was also Fortified. . . . The Middle Dutch Church after the year 1777, was converted into a Dragoon Riding School. . . .

"After the fire, many temporary shantees and apartments were enclosed in the neighbourhood of Broad-street, which were mostly covered with canvas—hence, this place obtained the name of Canvas Town . . .

"About the year 1774 a Ferry was established between New-York and Brooklyn, from a public landing at the river at the foot of a street now named Jerrollaman-street, to Coenties-slip, in New-York; all the buildings and fixtures necessary for a ferry were erected in Brooklyn at the landing; this ferry was discontinued after the British took Long Island in 1776. The ferry houses, with a large distillery, which was near the ferry, were burnt during the war; the brick walls and ruins remained on the ground many years after the war . . .

"After the peace, in the year 1786, a Race Course was established on the farm of Col. Rutgers, and in the year 1787 a Race Course was established on Governor's Island, which at that time was held under a lease from the State by Dr. Price.

—N. Y. Gaz., Mr 28, 1835.

— In 1787, there was a fishing and bathing place along the present line of Greenwich St., between Beaver Lane and the Battery. "A large rock [shown on the Lyne Survey, Pl. 27, Vol. I] stood out in the middle of present Greenwich street, then in the water, on which was a kind of rude summer house."—Watson's Annals (1846), 179, citing recollections in 1828 of Daniel J. Ebbets.

Speaking of the fort, Ebbets adds: "first the green bank, which was sloping, was about fourteen feet high, on which was erected a wall of about twenty feet additional height. An old linden and two apple trees on the city side, were as high as the walls. Some barracks lay along the line of State street."—Ibid.

— About 1787, Casimir Th. Goerck, a city surveyor, made a survey and prepared a list of the proprietors, with the measurement of their lots, on the east side of Mill St., from Duke St., and on the west side of Mill St., from Broad to Duke St.—From the original list (MS.) in the city clerk's record-room. This is the same surveyor who collaborated in the preparation of the Goerck-Mangin plan issued in 1803 (Pl. 70, Vol. I).

— In this year, Isaac Varian bought of John De Witt a tract of land containing about 15 acres, on the west side of Broadway, bet. 26th and 31st Sts., for £1,280. His homestead here remained until after the middle of the nineteenth century.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 653; L. M. R. K., III: 953.

— In this year, the Bank of New York removed from the Walton house in St. George's Square to No. 11 Hanover Square.—Domett, A Hist. of the Bank of N. Y., 28.

— In this year, "Boullon & Watt" furnished or proposed to furnish "a steam engine for milling purposes in the city of New York. . . ."—From a letter written by Horatio Allen to Frederic De Peyster in 1858, pub'd in Hist. Mag., 1st ser., II: 266.

— From this time until about 1794, Joseph Wright, portrait painter and etcher, had a studio in Pearl Street. "His etching of Washington, though quite well executed, is the only plate by Joseph Wright on record."—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 297–98; II: 563; Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 370–74. Cf. Ap 4, 1786.

THE Committees of both Houſes of Congreſs, appointed to take order for conducting the ceremonial of the formal reception, &c. of the Preſident of the United States, on Thurſday next, have agreed to the following order thereon, viz.

That General Webb, Colonel Smith, Lieutenant-Colonel Fiſh, Lieut. Col. Franks, Major L'Enfant, Major Bleecker, and Mr. John R. Livingſton, be requeſted to ſerve as Aſſiſtants on the occaſion.

That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the Preſident of the United States. That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the Vice-Preſident, to the right of the Preſident's chair; and that the Senators take their ſeats on that ſide of the chamber on which the Vice-Preſident's chair ſhall be placed. That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentatives, to the left of the Preſident's chair—and that the Repreſentatives take their ſeats on that ſide of the chamber on which the Speaker's chair ſhall be placed.

That ſeats be provided in the Senate-Chamber, ſufficient to accommodate the late Preſident of Congreſs, the Governor of the Weſtern territory, the five perſons being the heads of the three great departments, the Miniſter Plenipotentiary of France, the Encargado de negocios of Spain, the Chaplains of Congreſs, the perſons in the ſuite of the Preſident; and alſo to accommodate the following Public Officers of the State, viz. The Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor, the Chancellor, the Chief Juſtice, and other Judges of the Supreme Court, and the Mayor of the city. That one of the Aſſiſtants wait on theſe gentlemen, and inform them that ſeats are provided for their accommodation, and alſo to ſignify to them that no precedence of ſeats is intended, and that no ſalutation is expected from them on their entrance into, or their departure from the Senate-Chamber.

That the members of both Houſes aſſemble in their reſpective Chambers preciſely at twelve o'clock, and that the Repreſentatives preceded by the Speaker, and attended by their Clerk, and other Officers, proceed to the Senate-Chamber, there to be received by the Vice-Preſident and Senators riſing.

That the Committees attend the Preſident from his reſidence to the Senate-Chamber, and that he be there received by the Vice-Preſident, the Senators and Repreſentatives riſing, and be by the Vice-Preſident conducted to his chair.

That after the Preſident ſhall be ſeated in his Chair, and the Vice-Preſident, Senators and Repreſentatives ſhall be again ſeated, the Vice-Preſident ſhall announce to the Preſident, that the members of both Houſes will attend him to be preſent at his taking the Oath of Office required by the Conſtitution. To the end that the Oath of Office may be adminiſtered to the Preſident in the moſt public manner, and that the greateſt number of the people of the United States, and without diſtinction, may be witneſſes to the ſolemnity, that therefore the Oath be adminiſtered in the outer Gallery adjoining to the Senate Chamber.

That when the Preſident ſhall proceed to the gallery to take the Oath, he be attended by the Vice-Preſident, and be followed by the Chancellor of the State, and paſs through the middle door, that the Senators paſs through the door on the right, and the Repreſentatives, preceded by the Speaker, paſs through the door on the left, and ſuch of the perſons who ſhall have been admitted into the Senate-Chamber, and may be deſirous to go into the gallery, are then alſo to paſs through the door on the right. That when the Preſident ſhall have taken the Oath, and returned into the Senate-Chamber, attended by the Vice-Preſident, and ſhall be ſeated in his chair, that the Senators and the Repreſentatives alſo return into the Senate-Chamber, and that the Vice-Preſident and they reſume their reſpective ſeats.

Both Houſes having reſolved to accompany the Preſident after he ſhall have taken the Oath, to St. Paul's Chapel, to hear divine ſervice, to be performed by the Chaplain of Congreſs, that the following order of proceſſion be obſerved, viz. The door-keeper and meſſenger of the Houſe of Repreſentatives. The Clerk of the Houſe. The Repreſentatives. The Speaker. The Preſident, with the Vice-Preſident at his left hand. The Senators. The Secretary of the Senate. The door-keeper, and meſſenger of the Senate.

That a Pew be reſerved for the Preſident—Vice-Preſident—Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentatives, and the Committees; and that pews be alſo reſerved ſufficient for the reception of the Senators and Repreſentatives.

That after divine ſervice ſhall be performed, the Preſident be received at the door of the Church, by the Committees, and by them attended in carriages to his reſidence.

That it be intruſted to the Aſſiſtants to take proper precautions for keeping the avenues to the Hall open, and that for that purpoſe, they wait on his Excellency the Governor of this State, and in the name of the Committees requeſt his aid, by an order or recommendation to the Civil Officers, or militia of the city, to attend and ſerve on the occaſion, as he ſhall judge moſt proper.

1787 Jan. — Matthew Carey, Phila., appears. It ran for 12 volumes, ending Dec., 1792.—Ford, Check-List of 18th Cent. Am. Magazines, 8, citing Sabin's Dict. of Books relating to Am., I: 145; and Carey's Autobiography.

17 Persons residing at the Fresh Water Pond having encroached upon it, and having thrown filth and dirt into it (see Ag 25, 1785), a committee of the common council is appointed to investigate.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 273.

" Isaac Meade is paid £25:0:2 "for Sleds for transporting the fire Engines in the Snow."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 274.

18 With this issue, The New-York Journal, or the Weekly Register (see Je 23, 1785) changes its title to The New-York Journal, and Weekly Register.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448. See N 19.

26 The legislature passes "An Act concerning the Rights of the Citizens of this State." This is a bill of rights, more properly part of the constitution. It provides, among other things: No authority shall be exercised unless derived from the people. No citizen may be imprisoned but upon indictment or by process of law. Justice shall not be sold, denied, or delayed. Fines shall be reasonable. Excessive bail, and cruel and unusual punishments, ought not to be imposed. Freedom of speech in the legislature shall not be questioned.—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 1.

" The Society for the Relief of Distressed Debtors is formed. Its object is "To administer to the comfort of prisoners, by providing food, fuel, clothing, and other necessaries of life; and "To procure the liberation of such as were confined for small sums, and were of meritorious conduct, by discharging their debts." See A Sketch of the Origin and Progress of the Humane Society of the City of New-York. Together with the Act of Incorporation and By-Laws (pub. by order of the society, 1814), preserved with MSS. relating to the society in N. Y. P. L. In accordance with a memorial from this society (see D 12, 1788), the legislature passed an act in 1788 by which debtors imprisoned for debts less than $25.00, were to be liberated after 30 days. In 1791, the society secured the passage of a law forbidding the introduction of liquor into jail. In 1801, the society appointed a counsellor to represent prisoners. About 1802, on the society's application, the city gave it $600 and a lot on Tryon St., where it erected a soup-house, the scope of the society's work having been extended to furnishing soup at a reduced price to the poor of the city. In 1803, the name of the society was changed to the "Humane Society of the City of New-York." In 1814, it was incorporated. One of its principal objects was to discourage street begging.—Am. Med. and Phil. Register (April, 1814), IV: 632–37.

30 The legislature passes an act vesting in the aldermen of the city of New York the power of justices of the peace.—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 8.

Feb. 1 Mayor Duane, as clerk of the markets, exhibits to the common council a sworn account of the net proceeds received by him in this capacity during the past year, amounting to £583:4:8.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 277; De Voe, Market Book, 319.

9 The city treasurer reports to the mayor that when the American forces took possession of the city, the upper barracks "were found in a very ruinous Condition, and as there were a number of poor families daily Coming in without Houses or places to Shelter them, It was agreed to Let out those Rooms at a Small rent to those who would agree to put them in repair." In consequence of this order, he states, he has "given permission to a number of persons who have produced Recommendations from the different Magistrates to Occupy Rooms Reserving in Some a Rent of 40/ and others 60/, and with the Condition to put them in repair." He finds, however, that few tenants have complied with the conditions, and he proposes that the rooms be rented at auction to some person with the condition of putting them in good repair.—From original "Report," in the city clerk's record-room, endorsed "read Feby 14, 1787." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 278–79.

14 Mangel Minthorn and others petition the common council that the Bowery Road be regulated. The petition is referred to the alderman and assistant of the Out Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 279.

" Since the first of March last, 364 tavern licenses have been issued, and the fees, at thirty shillings each, amount to £546.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 279–80.

21 Congress approves the idea of a Constitutional Convention.—Winsor, VII: 227. The convention met on May 14 (q. v.).

" John Jay writes to John Adams: ". . . This State in their present session has greatly moderated their severities to the tories, a law having been passed to restore a very great majority of those resident here to the rights of citizens. I hope all discriminations inconsistent with the treaty of peace will gradually be abolished, as resentment gives place to reason and good faith. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, III: 234. Feb. 21

24 Gov. Clinton issues at New York a proclamation, printed by Loudon, offering rewards for the capture of Daniel Shays and the other principals in Shays' rebellion in Massachusetts (see 1786).—See broadside, in N. Y. P. L.

28 The common council orders that the vagrants in the bridewell who are able to work out of doors be employed to collect dirt from the streets and "spread it on the Commons in front of the Alms House to manure the Ground & prepare it for sowing Grass Seed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 281.

" Samuel "Lowdon" (Loudon) is paid by the city £78 for printing.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 282. His services covered by this payment, are from 1783 to 1786.—See his original bill in city clerk's record-room.

Mar. 3 A committee of the assembly makes a report on the subject of copper coinage. It describes the various sorts of such coin in circulation in this state.—Assemb. Jour. (1787), 78.

19 The legislature passes "An Act for granting and securing to John Fitch the sole Right and Advantage of making and employing, for a limited Time, the Steam-Boat by him lately invented."—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 57. Fitch received similar privileges from Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Virginia.—Bullock, "The Miracle of the First Steamboat," in Jour. Am. Hist., I: 36 et seq. See also Westcott, Life of John Fitch. This act was repealed on Mr 27, 1798 (q. v.).

" An act is passed "for the better extinguishing of Fires in the City of New York." It concerns the appointment of not more than 300 firemen, their exemption from certain other civic duties, the regulations governing them, etc.; also the duties of the sheriff and his deputies in looking after the safety of goods at fires, the recovery of fire-buckets, etc.—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 58 (Greenleaf, I: 412). On Feb. 18, 1792 (q. v.), the maximum number was increased to 450.

21 The legislature passes "An Act for the better regulating the public Roads in the City and County of New-York." The common council is empowered as a board of commissioners to carry the law into effect. Among the provisions of this law is the following: "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the said commissioners, to cause to be made, built and erected, such and so many causeways and bridges, and at such places as they shall think necessary, and to cause ditches from such public roads or highways to be made and cut through any person's land, where they shall judge proper, for conveying the water from, and keeping the same roads and highways dry and in good order. . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 61.

" The legislature enacts "that the mayor, recorder and aldermen . . . of the city of New York, or the major part of them, of whom the mayor or recorder always to be one, shall be . . . the supervisors of the city and county of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 62. Such officers throughout the state had the work of auditing accounts, fixing the amount of money to be raised in the county each year, and levying the same equitably.—Ibid. (1788), chap. 65.

" A majority of the proprietors of lots in Wall St. petition the common council that the street may be regulated and paved at their expense, similar to Water St. west of the Coffee-House, and "that Pitts Statue, which greatly obstructs the Street may be removed." The aldermen and assistants of the East, Dock, and North Wards are made a committee to regulate the street, and to report their opinion regarding the removal of the statue, and also the measures proper to take regarding "a Statue of Gen[l] Montgomery said to be in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 285. This reference is presumably to the Montgomery monument, see N 26, 1784 and Ap 3, 1787.

" It is suggested to the common council that a bill be brought into the assembly for the sale of the lands at the fort and Battery. A committee is appointed to inquire into the rights of the city regarding these lands.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 285. On March 28, the draft of a petition to the legislature was approved.—Ibid., I: 287. The text of this petition is not entered in the minutes, but see Mr 28.

28 The common council, in a petition to the legislature (see Mr 21), recites: "That your Petitioners are informed that a bill for 1787 Mar. 28 the Purpose of selling the Fort & Battery in this City is now before the honourable the House of Assembly, to be passed into a Law.

"That your Petitioners beg leave to suggest to the Legislature, that the Charter of Governor Dongan to the then Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York gives and grants to them and their Successors all the Waste, Vacant, unpatented and un-appropriated Lands lying and being within the City of New York, extending and reaching in, by and thro' all Parts of the said City.

"That altho' in the said Charter of Governor Dongan, there is a Reservation among other things of the Fort, called therein 'Fort James' and of 'all the Liberties, Boundaries, Extents and Privileges thereof;' and in the Charter of George the Second, to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, there is also a Reservation of the Fort, called therein 'Fort George' and of 'the Ground, full Boundaries and Extent thereof, or thereto belonging,'—Yet your Petitioners conceive that they are intituled (by virtue of the said Charter of Governor Dongan) to a considerable Part of the Ground on which the said Battery is built and circumjacent the Fort, and which is not comprehended within the said Reservations. . . .

"That your Petitioners, anxious for the Ornament of this City, the Convenience, the Health and the Quiet of the Inhabitants, persuade themselves that the Legislature will not pass the aforesaid Bill into a Law, believing that in case a sale should be made of any part of the said Fort or Battery, that the same will not be built upon or improved in a manner suitable to a Situation so elegant and proper for publick Purposes, but become a great Nuisance to the Inhabitants of this City." They close the petition by asking to be heard in case the Legislature is inclined "to carry the Bill into effect."—From the original in the city clerk's record-room. It is endorsed: "Read & approved the 28th March 1787." Another petition to the same effect is filed with it, endorsed "read & approved the 16th of April 1787." See Ap 16, regarding the action taken by the legislature.

" A large number of cartmen, in a petition of this date to the common council, state that an ordinance was passed "some time since" (see F 24 and Je 2, 1784), requiring "that the wheels of the Carts used in said City should not be bound with Iron, as the pavements of the Streets received injury therefrom;" and that they have since then provided "wheels of a certain breadth without being shod." They find "a great expense accruing by reason of their being obliged to have new ones very often;" and that the streets are just as much injured by them. They ask that a law be passed "to allow the Cartmen to have the Wheels of their carts bound with Iron; that the width be three and an half Inches, and the nails sunk even to the tire."—From the original petition in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room. The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 288. It was not granted.—Ibid., I: 295.

Apr. 3 The mayor lays before the common council a concurrent resolution of the senate and assembly, dated Nov. 26, 1784 (q.v.), providing "That the Monument by the United States in Congress Assembled ordered to be erected to the Memory of Major General Montgomerie be erected in the City of New York at such particular Place as the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of the said City . . . shall appoint." The board selects "the front of St Paul's Church . . . to be the most proper place," and a committee is appointed to consult the wardens and vestrymen, and, with their approval, to direct that the monument be erected there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 289–90. There is a rare, contemporary engraving of the monument in the author's collection. See, further, My 16 and 23, Je 18, and N 22. For text of the inscription, see Jl 8, 1818.

8 Bishops White and Provoost return to New York from England, on this Easter Day, having been consecrated in Lambeth Chapel on Feb. 9. The Protestant Episcopal Church in New York is now duly organized as a separate establishment, apart from the Church of England, and the Right Rev. Samuel Provoost, D. D., becomes its first bishop. He officiates in St. Paul's Chapel, where he was formerly rector.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 626; Dix, A Hist. of the Parish of Trinity Church, II: 112, 114; N. Y. Packet, Ap 10; *Ind. 12 A "Paper Hanging Manufactory" is advertised: "A large and elegant assortment of Paper Hangings, with Festoon Borders is now finished for sale, at Gerardus Duyckinck's, jun. Store, No. 30, Little-Dock-street, or at John Colles's at the Manufactory in the Lower Barracks . . ."—Daily Adv., Ap 12, 1787. Apr. 12

The legislature passes "An Act to institute an University within this State, and for other purposes therein mentioned." This consolidates into one law the acts of May 1 and Nov. 26, 1784 (q. v.), and certain amendments and alterations which have been requested. Twenty-two citizens are named as "Regents of the University of the State of New-York," and they are authorized to visit, inspect, and report upon, all the colleges, academies, and schools in the state, to appoint presidents of colleges and academies wherever vacancies exist for more than one year, to confer degrees above Master of Arts, and to incorporate academies. The charter granted to King's College on Oct. 31, 1754 (q.v.), is confirmed in all essential respects except that the name of the institution is changed to Columbia College, and it is made non-sectarian. Its government is transferred from the Regents to 24 trustees.—Laws of N. Y., 10th sess., chap. 82. See also Pine, King's College (1917). 13

The legislature passes "An Act for regulating the Buildings, Streets, Wharfs and Slips, in the City of New York." The aim of this act is to establish uniformity, "for the accommodation of habitations, shipping and transportation." It provides, among other things, that the common council may prevent the erection of buildings that may narrow or encroach upon any street; and may make regulations for building sewers, etc., and for paving, altering, mending, and cleaning the streets.—Laws of N. Y. (1787), chap. 88. 16

The assembly resolves: "That the Attorney-General be directed to inquire into the nature of the claim of the Corporation of the city of New-York, to Fort George, and the lands adjoining thereto [see Mr 21, 28], and that he make a report of the facts to the Legislature at the next meeting; and that the Commissioners of the Land-Office be also directed, . . . to cause a survey of the said premises to be made, laying out the lands which upon such enquiry shall appear to be the property of this State, into such lots and in such manner as, in their opinion, will best promote the interest of the State in the sale thereof; and that they lay such survey before the Legislature at its said next meeting, and report their opinion of the most proper and beneficial disposition of the said premises." —Assembly Jour., 10th session, 165. The senate concurred in this resolution on April 18.—Jour. of the Senate. The attorney-general's report was read in the assembly on March 12, 1788 (q.v.). A newspaper advertisement reads: "Theatre. This Evening. (Never [before] Performed) (Being the 16th of April) Will be Performed, A Comedy of 5 Acts, written by a Citizen of the United States, Called The Contrast, To which will be added the English Burletta, called Midas."—Daily Adv., Ap 16, 1787. "The Contrast" was written by Royal Tyler, a native of Massachusetts who was later the Chief Justice of Vermont.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1833), I: 135, 137–40; Ireland, Recs. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 76. Seilhamer says of it: "Royall Tyler's comedy, the 'Contrast,' although it was not the first American play actually produced, as has generally been claimed for it, was the first to meet with a favorable reception. After its initial performance at the John Street Theatre, New York, in 1787, it was presented five times in rapid succession . . . This was unusual at that time, only the most popular pieces warranting as many repetitions in a season . . . According to the prologue . . . which was not from Major Tyler's pen, but was ascribed to a young gentleman of New York, the dramatist's theme was the fashions or follies of the gay circles of that city. This shows the usefulness of prologues. for in the play itself there is no proof of the distinctively New York character of the comedy." For a detailed account of the play and its author, see Seilhamer's Hist. of the Am. Theatre, II: 215, 225–39, and for an eye-witness's criticism of the first performance, see Daily Adv., Ap 18, 1787. See also N. Y. Times Book Rev., Jl 3, 1921. "

M. Wattles, the proprietor of a line of stages, announces that "An Elegant Coach, And four excellent Horses" will run daily "from Hall's, No. 49, Cortlandt-street," to Kingsbridge.—N. Y. Jour., Ap 26, 1787. 26

The following notice appears in one of the daily papers: "The members of St. Tammany's Society in the City of New York are requested to meet at their wigwam, held at Mr. Talmage Hall's, No. 49 Cortlandt Street, on Tuesday, the first day of May next 30

1787 [q. v.], at sunset, to celebrate the annual meeting."—Daily Adv., Ap
Apr. 30, 1787. This is the earliest record we have found of the existence
30 of a Tammany Society in New York City. Edwin P. Kilroe, in his monograph on Saint Tammany, pp. 121–22, declares that, from the fact that there is no record of a celebration in 1786, "it may be inferred that the Society was organized later than May first [of that year], while the unmistakable evidence of an organization perfected to a degree as early as April, 1787, would inevitably lead to the conclusion that the Society had its origin at least late in 1786."

This view is substantiated by "A Brother of 1776 and one of the surviving Founders," who wrote in 1817 of the origin of the society: "Shortly after the Evacuation of this City in 1783, it became glaringly visible that the very ingrates which our lenient Laws permitted to return among us,—with hordes of foreign adventurers swelling with Pride, Insolence, and National vanity & prejudice; began to assume the native rights and priviledges of American freemen; and presumptuously organized foreign National Societies; to wit. S^{t} Andrews, S^{t} Georges, S^{t} Patricks, &c &c, with views, deep and dark as the holy Inquisition.—The unsuspecting souls of our virtuous Citizens could not harbor an Idea of the deep designs of these apostate Americans, and foreign sattellites of Despotism; no,—they suffered them untill the year 1786 to supplant them in every species of business . . . the Whigs not aware of thier machinations and naturally unsuspicious; at length, tho' late, began to discover the powerfull combinations of these panders of the British Government, and the more base Refugees & Tories. . . . at length a few, a very few, assembled together, and determined to counteract the growing evil of the day, by forming a National Society.—After three years incessent toil, and almost insurmountable dificulties, they completed the foundation of the first Great Temple of Liberty in our Country. We adopted the immortal, the virtuous aborigine Tammany as our first Patron, and honor'd the Institution with his name and added to it Independent Order of Liberty; this beautifull and pleasing adjunct, after much deliberation was agreed to be dispensed with, in order to substitute in its place one, not more truly applicable generally, but more appropriate, considering the nature of the Institution, that of Columbian Order; in honor of the Immortal Navigator, and first discoverer of our Country the magnanimous the persecuted Christopher Columbus.—In 1789, we put on a more imposing countenance; having formed a Constitution [see Ag 10, 1789] we very soon became respectable in numbers and in characters,—those who lately contemned us, now became our admirers and apparent friends,—those foreign Institutions vanished in our presence or became harmless, and we were the Paramount Society in America."—From bound photostats (made from originals in Tammany Hall) in MSS. Div., N. Y. P. L. See also Jl 15, 1805.

The Tammany organization in New York was not the first in the U. S. The Philadelphia society, which was organized on May 1, 1772, was the parent stem of the Tammany societies in America. For an account of the origin of the name and of the early organizations, see Kilroe, op. cit., 15–110. Mr. Kilroe has made a further and more thorough study of the history of the society since he issued his Saint Tammany, but his later findings have not yet been published.

May 1 An estimate by Daniel Phoenix, city treasurer, of the expenses of the city and county of New York for the year ending on this day shows total payments of £10,308:4. The wages of the city watch, consisting of a captain and 28 men, at £32:4 per week, amount to £1,674:8. They are supplied with wood and candles for £50. The only other items in the estimate are expenses for the poorhouse (£4,800, the largest item), the department of street lamps (£1,333:16), the bridewell, wells and pumps, roads, new jail (supporting prisoners), and the general election.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 597.

" "St. Tammany's Day (the Tutelar St. of America)" is celebrated by the Tammany Society (see Ap 30) at Talmage Hall's tavern (49 Cortlandt St.). Thirteen patriotic toasts are drunk. One of the newspapers reports that "A correspondent observes, that the establishing the St. Tammany Society, does honor to the promoters, and makes not the least doubt but it will be the most respectable Society in the city, in the course of a little time."—N. Y. Packet, My 1 and 4, 1787. The first of May, Old Style, was the reputed anniversary of Tammany's birth. There is no record of a Tammany celebration in New York in 1788. The society, however, was revived and reorganized in 1789 (q. v., Mr 9).

Samuel Loudon advertises the publication of "Des Barris' drafts" of certain "mercator charts," which are for sale at his office. Among these are charts of the "Harbour of New-York," and of "New-York and Long-Island Sound." These, he states, are "the most accurate and elegant charts which was ever published in any country."—N. Y. Packet, My 1, 1787. See also Pls. 44 and 45a, Vol. I, and their descriptions, I: 346–53. May 1

The "Empress of China," of which John Green is captain, arrives in port after a passage of four months and eighteen days from Canton.—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, III: 77–78. 4

There are at this time in the bridewell 33 men and 20 women. "It is considered by the Board that no Person committed to the Bridewell by a Justice ought to be discharged, but by order of a Board of Justices. And that if at any time the Commissioners should conceive the Commitment of a Person improper the Commissioners should suggest the Matter to the Justice in order that what is right may be done."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 291. 7

The common council appoints two commissioners, Nathaniel Hazard and Theodore Casimir Goerck, "for the Direction & management of the Real Property belonging to this Corporation," and appoints a committee to prepare instructions for their guidance. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 293. 9

The Constitutional Convention meets at Philadelphia.—Records of the Federal Convention (Farrand ed.), I: 14; Winsor, VII: 237. The committee on details began work on July 24, and made its report on Aug. 6.—Records, op. cit., II: 129, 176; Winsor, VII: 241. The Constitution was signed in the convention on Sept. 17 (q. v.). —Ibid., VII: 245. It was published in Philadelphia on Sept. 19.—Ibid., VII: 246, 256. 14

The common council orders "that Ald^{n} Bayard direct the Road Master to put Rails along the Road on the side Hill [McGowan's Pass] above Harlem to prevent accidents to Horses & Carriages And also that M^{r} Ald^{n} direct the sides of the Arch in the middle Road [Broadway] to be raised on a level with the said Road."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 295. This is the first reference in the city records to the stone arch or bridge across Broadway at the present Canal St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 926. As suggested by Valentine, it was probably built during the Revolution as a military work.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 604. The fact that it was altered in 1787 probably indicates that it had been built some time before. For a discussion of the subject, see descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 558–59. See also Ap 16, 1772; N 23, 1775. For execution of the order, showing conclusively that this is the bridge referred to, see My 24, Je 8, 1787; Je 11, 1793. 16

James Watson is paid £5:2 for the storage of the monument to Gen. Montgomery (see Ap 3), "out of the Money allowed by the Legislature for erecting the Monument."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 296. See, further, My 23. "

William Samuel Johnson is unanimously elected president of Columbia College. He was the son of the first president of King's College.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 70. 21

Mr. Duane, one of the Trinity church wardens, reports to the vestry "that at the request of the Corporation of the City [see Ap 3] the Committee had given permission for the Monument of Gen^{l} Montgomery to be erected under the Portico of St Pauls Chapel in front of the great Window."—Trin. Min. (MS.). This entry, and that of Ap 3, q. v., seem to prove that the monument was not designed for this location, to which, however, it is admirably suited. See, further, Je 18. 23

The vestry also resolves "That the Committee of Repairs examine the ruins of the Rectors house and Charity School house and that they give such orders respecting them as they may deem necessary."—Ibid.

A bulletin is printed by McLean exhibiting a list of the several lots belonging to Trinity corporation which, by a resolution of the vestry on May 22, are to be sold at auction on June 28, "at the Coffee-House." One of these bulletins is preserved, in the collection of broadsides, in the N. Y. P. L. See also Ind. Jour., My 30, 1787. "

A bill of this date is presented to the common council, beginning: "The Corporation of New York D^{r} to And^{r} thompson Juner For Mason Wirk Dun by order of Alderman Byard at the New Bridge on the New Road [see My 16] and at the Dreene in Mulberry Street." A statement of Thompson's charges in detail for work and materials at each place is given, the amount at the bridge being £8:5:7. The account is verified by Nicholas Bayard, who writes 24

1787 May 24 below: "I certify the above work done by Order of the Board."—From original bill in metal file No. 9 in city clerk's record-room. On Feb. 13, 1788, the common council ordered payment made, amounting to £12:7, at which time the original bill, as shown by endorsements, was audited and filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 352. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 558. See, further, Je 8.

June 8 A petition from bakers of the city complains that they have been paid lately for bread "in Coppers and Jersey Money," which they are unable to use in buying flour.—From original petition in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room. No action on this petition appears in the minutes. See, further, Jl 21, 1789.

" The common council orders "that Mr Recorder issue his Warrt on the Treasurer . . . to pay Van Gelder & Dally (out of the Road Fund) the sum of £2:17:—for Lime, And to Aric Smith the Sum of £10:—:— for Stone at the Bridge across Great George Street [Broadway] near Aldn Bayards."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 297.

The original bill of Van Gelder & Dally, filed in the city clerk's record-room, shows purchases of lime on May 22 and 23 by "Mr Thompson." It is attested by Abr. Van Gelder, who certifies that "the Above Articells wass Deliverd To Mr Tomson for the Corporation." It was audited on June 8.

Smith's original bill, also preserved among the city clerk's filed papers, is dated "New York 20 May 1787," and reads: "This Is to Certify that Captn Ory Smith Has deliverd forty Lodes of Bualden [building] Stone For the Corporation at the Bridge Near Nickles Biards Esqr at 5/ pr Lode With the Carten [carting] . . . £10–0–0

15 A number of citizens form the Mutual Assurance Co., to insure houses in New York against loss by fire. John Pintard is secretary, with office at No. 57 King (Pine) St.—N. Y. Packet, Je 22, 1787. Previous unsuccessful attempts or proposals to found fire insurance companies were made in 1770 (q. v., Ap 3), 1784, and 1785.—Progress of N. Y. in a Century, by Stevens (1876), 42–43. The constitutions and by-laws of the company and an interesting cut of an engine in action were published in a small octavo handbook in 1787, having the title The Deed of Settlement of the Mutual Assurance Company, for insuring Houses from loss by Fire in New York, a copy of which is in the author's collection. The company was incorporated Mr 23, 1798.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 46. The "Act to Incorporate" was published as a handbook the same year; a copy of this is in the N. Y. P. L. The charter was altered in 1809.—See N. Y. Eve. Post, D 12, 1815. The name then became the Mutual Insurance Co. of the City of New York, which in 1845 was changed to the Knickerbocker Fire Insurance Co.—Smith, The City of N. Y. in 1789, 112; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 661.

18 At a meeting of Trinity vestry, Mr. Duane produces "a design made by Col Le Enfont [sic] to ornament that part of the great Window of St Pauls Chapel which will be obscured by the Monument of General Montgomery [see My 23] which the board highly approve of and request the favour of Col Le Enfant [sic] to superin[ten]d the execution of it and the putting of it up."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, N 22, 1787, and O 27, 1788.

At this meeting of the vestry, Mr. Cramer, of the committee of repairs, reports that he has sold the bricks which were part of the ruins of the charity school for £10, the purchaser to pull down the walls and remove the bricks.—Ibid.

The vestry also passes the following resolutions: "Resolved That the Committee of repairs be directed to order the repairs of the Steeple of St. Georges Chapel and that they cause a neat and cheap fence to be put around the Chapel."—Ibid. June 18

"Resolved That the Committee of repairs be authorised to sell the Stones of the Rectors house either at public Auction or at Private Sale as they may think proper."—Ibid.

20 John Alsop, Thomas Ellison, Alexander Macomb, William Denning, Dom. Lynch, and Walter Livingston present a petition to the common council, stating that they "are proprietors of several water lots in the West Ward of the City of New-York Lying between the Battery & Rossevelts Slip, who have began to Wharf & Make the Street at high water mark which is known by the name of first or greenwich street; which said wharfs will be useless, unless the whole of the Street be made." They ask the board to give directions "that the whole of the Street from the Battery to Rosevelts Slip at high water mark be made." They also state that they are informed that the board designs "to widen Greenwich or first Street to 60 feet," while their grants provide that it is to be 40 ft. broad. They ask that, as the board widens the street, their grants may be extended "as much farther into the River."—From the original petition in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room.

The record in the minutes on this date shows that the petitioners are "proprietors of Lots in the Broad Way & bounded on the River," and that they ask "that Measures may be taken for compelling Augustus Van Cortlandt to wharf out in front of his Lots to the end that Greenwich Street may be continued on & continued to the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 298. The committee to whom the subject was referred reported on Aug. 1 that the petition ought to be granted.—Ibid., I: 310. The lots on Broadway belonging to Alexander Macomb were acquired by him on May 8, 1787.—Liber Deeds, XLV: 6. See also O 10.

21 The office of the Boston and Albany stage line has moved "to Hall's, No. 49 Cortlandt-street, leading from Oswago Market to Powles-Hook ferry, being the first brick house on the left hand from Broad-Way." Stages start for those cities on Mondays and Thursdays. "A Hackney will always be ready to convey Ladies and Gentlemen to any part of the town they may please to direct."—N. Y. Jour., Je 21, 1787.

30 "Frederick Gantz informs the public that he has erected A New Tea Water Pump, In Magazine-street near the Fresh Water Pump; has it now completely finished, and delivering water. He would wish the citizens to give this water a fair trial, and flatters himself they will find it equal to any water on this island."—Daily Adv., Je 30, 1787. See Ag 15, 1788.

July 2 The keeper of the bridewell is given £20 by the common council in recognition of "his Assiduity & good management in employing the Vagrants, . . . during the fishing Season in taking such Quantities of Shad for the Use of the Bridewell & Alms Hs as to create a great saving . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 302.

" An engraved certificate was given to the appointed firemen of the city at this time. Under the motto "Voluntary aid" is the scene of a burning house, with fire-engines in operation. See facsimile of one of these in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), opp. p. 120.

4 The arrangements planned by the common council for celebrating Independence Day include the display of colours on the city hall; the ringing of bells at certain hours; congratulations by the common council, at noon, to the governor and the "President of the United States" (i. e., of congress) at their residences, and on the return of the common council, a collation in which they are to participate at "Mr Heyer's Tavern near the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 301. The programme was carried out with the addition of several interesting features. The day was ushered in by the beating of drums and ringing of bells. At sunrise, the artillery, grenadiers, and light infantry, of Gen. Malcom's brigade, under command of Maj. Christie, marched to the race ground, where they were reviewed. At 12 o'clock a federal salute was fired upon the Battery and in the Fields by the brigade, amid the inces-

1787 July 4 sant ringing of bells. At four o'clock the officers of the brigade sat down to "a handsome dinner" at Corre's, where thirteen toasts were drunk, and "the day closed with festivity and humour." The Society of the Cincinnati met at the city hall at noon and listened to an oration by Chancellor Robert R. Livingston, and an address by Lieut. Col. Morgan Lewis. This society then moved in procession to the fort, "where tents were erected, under which they partook of a cold collation and drank thirteen toasts in honor of the day." The Chamber of Commerce celebrated the anniversary at the Merchants Coffee House.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 6, 1787.

5 Lansing and Yates, two of the delegates from New York State, leave the Constitutional Convention because they are dissatisfied with the proceedings. As there is only one New York delegate (Alexander Hamilton) left, the state was not considered present after this date, and its vote was not taken.—Winsor, VII: 246.

7 Rev. Manassah Cutler dines with Gen. Knox. In his journal he records a striking description of Mrs. Knox in which he says, in part: "Her hair, in front, is craped at least a foot high, much in the form of a churn, bottom upwards, and topped off with a wire skeleton, in the same form, covered with black gauze, which hangs in streamers down to her back. Her hair, behind, is in a large braid turned up and confined with a monstrous, crooked comb."

The next day, Sunday, he attended the Brick Presbyterian Church. He describes the congregation, church, and morning service. He also describes the white sashes worn by the minister and bearers at a funeral. At the evening service he heard the Rev. John Witherspoon, D. D., whom he describes.—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., II: 26, 28.

On the 9th, Cutler recorded in his diary the following description of the interior of the "Congress Chamber" in the city hall: ". . . Congress Chamber is up the eastern stairs; it is nearly square. On the southern side, the floor is raised several feet, which is ascended by steps and enclosed by banisters. In the centre, is a large chair, raised still higher, lined with red damask silk; and over it a curious canopy, fringed with silk, and two large flowing damask curtains descending from the sides of the canopy to the floor, partly furled with silk cords. This is the seat of the President of Congress. And the appearance at the other end of the Chamber is superb. On the floor of the Chamber, at the right and left, from the President's chair, are two rows of chairs extended to the opposite side of the room, with a small bureau-table before each chair. The chairs and tables are mahogany, richly carved, the arms and bottoms covered with red morocco leather. On each side of the President's chair, within the banisters, are chairs and tables, similar to those of the members, for the use of the Secretary and his clerks. In the midst of the floor, is a vacant space, in form of a broad aisle. The curtains of the windows are red damask, richly ornamented with fringes. At the East end is a portrait of General Washington, at full length, well executed. At the opposite end are some of the portraits of General Officers that fell in the late war. On the side opposite the President, are the portraits of the King and Queen of France, as large as life. These were drawn by the King's own portrait-painter, and presented by His Majesty to Congress. The drapery of the pictures infinitely exceeds anything of the kind I ever saw before. They are dressed in their robes; and life and animation are imitated to perfection. When the damask curtains which cover them were drawn, their eyes were fixed upon us with a vivacity that bespoke life itself; and their majestic countenances seemed to chastise our insolence in approaching them with so little reverence."—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., II: 83. Cf. Mr, 1788.

12 John McComb, Evert Bancker, and Casimir T. "Gorick" (Goerck) are appointed surveyors of the city, pursuant to "An Act for regulating the Buildings, Streets, Wharfs and Slips in the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 306.

13 Congress passes an ordinance for the government of the territory north-west of the Ohio River, and prohibits slavery therein.—Winsor, VII: 537–38.

15 Richard C. Moore and Joseph G. J. Bend are ordained deacons of the Episcopal Church in St. George's Chapel. The ceremony of Episcopal ordination is new in America. The Protestant Episcopal Church is now completely organized in the United States as a self-perpetuating body.—Daily Adv., Jl 17, 1787.

18 Commodore John Paul Jones who is making a short, and, as it proved, his final, visit to America, is in New York, and addresses an official letter to John Jay, secretary of state (then termed secretary of foreign affairs), taking up the question of prize-money due him, and explaining the reason for his coming to the United States July 18 at this time. He writes that it is his intention to return at once to Denmark by the way of Paris, and adds: "It would be highly flattering to me if I could carry a letter with me from Congress to his most christian majesty [King Louis of France], thanking him for the squadron he did us the honour to support under our flag." He also calls attention to the letter of recommendation that he had from the court of France in May, 1780, and the golden-hilted sword presented to him by the King of France, "an honour which his majesty never conferred on any other foreign officer."—Sherburne, Life and Character of the Chevalier John Paul Jones (Washington, 1825), 281–82.

" As the New York law prescribes "that every wood-boat and shallop from N. Jersey, of more than 12 tons, shall be regularly entered and cleared out at the custom-house, in the same manner as if they had arrived from any other foreign port," the assembly of New Jersey, to counteract this law, has laid a tax of £30 a month on the light-house at Sandy Hook, in New Jersey, which is owned by "the corporation of New York."—Daily Adv., Jl 24, 1787.

" John Brenon, from Dublin, gives a performance at Corre's City Tavern (115 Broadway), which consists of "the curious and ingenious Art of Dancing on the Slack Wire." He is assisted by Mrs. Brenon, a singer. Brenon concludes his performance "with various Feats of the Dexterity of Hand." Brenon not only offers diversion and entertainment, but announces to the public that he can cure the toothache "without drawing.—No Cure no Pay," and "For the Poor Gratis."—N. Y. Adv., Jl 18, 1787. On April 1, 1788, "celebrated Italian Balance Masters" were advertised to perform. —Daily Adv., Ap 1, 1788.

20 The fire-engine house in Hanover Sq., referred to as a "Pile of Buildings Situated in the Centre of that Spot," limits the view and interrupts the free circulation of air. The inhabitants of the locality petition the common council that it be removed, and a new one erected on an unoccupied piece of city property fronting Old Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 307. The original petition is filed in the city clerk's record-room. The proposal was reported upon unfavourably, but it was determined that the house ought to be repaired.—Ibid., I: 308–9. Being found unrepairable, the common council ordered, on Sept. 12, that a new house be built.—Ibid., I: 317. On Dec. 5, a warrant for £25, to pay for this, was issued.—Ibid., I: 342.

27 New York is described in letters of this date, in part as follows: The buildings "are grand, from four to six stories high, and the sides of the street within the posts are laid principally with free-stone, sufficiently wide for three persons to walk abreast. The buildings in Hanover Square, and part of Dock Street exceed any part of the city for grandeur. The streets are kept in fine order, pavements entire and even, no teams drawn with more than one horse, or with iron-shod wheels, are allowed to pass the streets. The pavements gradually descend from the houses to the center of the streets, where the gutters are for carrying off the water. . . . In this street (Broadway) the gentry ride every morning and afternoon in their carriages, which are generally very grand, and are principally coaches, chariots, and phaetons. The common people ride in open chairs. I did not see more than two or three chaises in the city. . . The common is considerably large, in a triangular form, and surrounded with buildings. On the northern side of the Square are three very elegant large public buildings, which make a fine appearance at a distance, all built of free-stone, with a handsome fence inclosing a cortyard in front. But, when you come near them, you can not fail of being extremely disgusted at the wretched taste and impropriety of erecting buildings for the purposes to which these are appropriated in the most airy and pleasant part of the city, and by which a vast concourse of people are constantly passing. The first is the Prison, four stories high, and a beautiful cupola on top. Near by it is what I at first took to be a beautiful summer-house, raised from the ground. It is in a square form, the sides ornamented with checker-worked banisters, and the roof in the Chinese taste; the whole very handsomely painted. I was surprised to see so elegant a summer-house so near this building, which I found by the iron-grates to be a prison, but, on inspection, found it was a Gallows, accommodated for turning off six criminals at a time. . . . The next Public Building is the Alms-house, and the third, which is very long and high, is Bridewell. The buildings themselves would be very ornamental to this common, were it not for their odious contents. . . . At the southern end of the city

1787 July 27 on the point of the Island, where North and East Rivers meet, is an old fort, now much out of repair, and which is soon to be removed, for the purpose of erecting houses in a part of the city so convenient for doing business. This fort is built on a prodigious mound of earth raised for that purpose, which makes the walls next the harbor near forty feet high, and seems to be well situated for commanding the entrance into both rivers; but forts where there is a passage by them are now found to be of very little use. Around this part is the Mall, where a vast concourse of gentlemen and ladies are constantly walking a little before sunset and in the evening. On the part of the Mall next the water, which is of considerable extent, is a broad and most beautiful glacis (built-up with free-stone from the water), on which they walk. This is a cool and most delightful walk in an evening, having the sea open as far as Statan Island and Redhook, but in the day-time it greatly wants the shade of trees.

". . . On the northern part of the city is a large hospital, built with free-stone, with two extended wings. . . . The markets in this city are kept in the finest order. . . . The principal is the Fly market, in Water Street; the next is Oswago market, in Broadway. Bakers' market and Merchants' Hall market are also large.

"There is perhaps no city or town of any considerable magnatude where such perfect order is preserved as in New York. . . . This is the center of mercantile trade. . . . The shipping in this harbor is exceedingly numerous, and there is constantly here a French and British packet. There is a play-house, but the actors do not perform in the summer, but there are constant exhibitions from rope-dancers, mountebanks, jugglers, and show-men."—Life, Journals and Corresp. of Rev. Manasseh Cutler, LL.D. (Cincinnati, 1888), I: 306–9.

Aug. 1 Students-at-law are granted the use of the court-room once a week.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 308.

6 The common council appoints a committee to determine whether the barracks in the rear of the almshouse cannot be appropriated for the sick of the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 311–12. The committee finds "that five Tenements thereof ought to be appropriated & put in Repair for that Use;" but this report is rejected. Instead, four rooms only are appropriated for the purpose.—Ibid., I: 314. The work was completed and paid for by Dec. 12.—See O 31; and L. M. R. K., III: 924.

8 The vestry of Trinity Church resolves that the fence of St. George's Chapel be completed.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" At a meeting of Trinity vestry, a petition from Mrs. Edye Williams is read, in which she asks Trinity corporation to take over the "Vauxhall" property (see L. M. R. K., III: 981), which formerly was leased by Samuel Francis, "under whom she claims;" and also that this corporation will "remit her the ground rent due thereon and to grant her an Annuity during the remainder of her life."—Trin. Min. (MS.). A committee of the vestry having been required, on Aug. 8, to see Mrs. Williams, reported on Oct. 29 that they had "informed her of the Intentions of the Corporation to re-enter the Vauxhall Estate and to allow her an Annuity of forty Pounds," and that she had informed them that, "to the best of her Knowledge," the estate was "clear of Incumbrances and that the Lease was burnt at Peaks Kill in the Year 1777. . . ."—Ibid. See, further, Ap 21, 1790.

" The common council passes ordinances to "alter & amend" Queen St. from the Fly Market to Kings St.; Water St. from the Fly Market to Wall St.; First or Front St. from the Old Slip to the Fly Market, and Wall St. from the city hall to Queen St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 316.

Aug. 22 Christopher Colles, "engineer," in a petition to the common council, states that he "proposes to open an Evening Academy this winter for the purpose of instructing young Gentlemen in Gunnery, Drawing, & many other mathematic branches;" he requests the board "to admit him to hold said Academy in the Exchange."—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Aug^{t} 22^{d} 1787 & granted." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 25, 314; and Daily Adv., S 27, 1787. Regarding his electrical experiments, see ibid., Ja 20, 1789.

30 "The city has but one walk, where the women can enjoy air and exercise, which is the Battery." This, however, is deserted because of the spectacle of naked swimmers who frequent the place.—N. Y. Jour., Ag 30, 1787.

Sept. 4 This day being appointed for the parade and review of all the uniformed corps of militia in New York (see N. Y. Gaz., Ag 30), about 600 men, under command of Lieut. Col. Bauman, parade at "the burnt church [Trinity]," and march down Wall St., and up Queen St. to the "race-ground [in Bowery Lane—see S 27, 1786]" where they perform "a variety of evolutions." The corps is reviewed by the governor. In the evening there was a display of fireworks "fronting the fort."—N. Y. Jour., S 6, 1787.

9 Commodore John Paul Jones writes to George Washington in Philadelphia that he is still delayed in New York by congress, and so is unable to embark in the packet for France, "that is to sail tomorrow." He takes the opportunity to write to Washington on a personal matter, saying: "Your determination to 'place my Bust with your own' confers on me a greater Honor than I ever before received—An Honor which I shall ever be ambitious to merit. . . . I shall leave you, Sir, to imagine my extreme sensibility on this occasion for, I feel, it would be impossible for me to communicate it in words."—De Koven, Life of Paul Jones, II: 268–69. The bust here referred to, by Houdon, is probably the one now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the gift of John L. Cadwalader.

12 The common council passes "A Law to prevent the erecting or suspending of Signs to project into the Streets of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 318.

17 The federal convention at Philadelphia completes the work of drafting the Constitution. On the following day, Washington, who was the deputy from Virginia, and the president of the convention, wrote to the president of congress, which was sitting at New York, a letter reviewing the principles which actuated the framers, and submitting a copy of the Constitution "to the consideration of the United States, in Congress assembled." The letter and Constitution were published in the Penn. Packet (Phila.), S 19, and the N. Y. Jour., S 27, 1787. See also The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, ed. by Max Farrand (1911); Winsor, VII: 245, 246, 256. For the celebration held in New York on its ratification by enough states to make it operative, see Jl 23, 1788.

22 The committee of the common council to whom was referred a petition of Daniel Niven (or Nevin) and others, regarding alleged encroachments on Cortlandt St., makes report that "no such Encroachments as yet have been made on the Property of the Publick." Among the facts presented to support this opinion, it is stated that the subject of the complaint is "some Buildings [which] are now erecting at the lower end of Cortlandt Street . . . by which the Street or Passage along the South Side of the Slip there, is greatly contracted and rendered very Inconvenient to Passengers in Crossing the North River, and that the said obstructions are on Publick property." The committee's report discusses the title to the property, including a grant in 1701 of a piece of land along the strand to Peter Jansen Mesier, and a grant in 1760 of a water lot to Abraham Mesier. They find "that the said Cortlandt Street was originally forty feet in Breadth, but that the Owners of the Ground there have given up five feet on the North and South Sides thereof to make the said Street fifty feet." The house complained of is being built by Abraham Bussing on the ground conveyed to Peter Mesier, and not on that conveyed to Abraham Mesier. Bussing has an indisputable right to erect his house in the manner he has done, under the directions of John McComb, city surveyor, "on a Parrallel line with the other Houses on the South side of the said Street." The report adds that the committee thinks Cortlandt St. "is sufficiently wide to answer all the Purposes of a Publick Street, taking even into Consideration its connection with a publick Ferry."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 319–20. This report elicited an open letter from a citizen, addressed to the committee, giving 1787 descriptive data, surveys, and title records to prove that the conS 22 clusions of the committee were wrong.—Daily Adv., O 22, 1787.

24 The following announcement is published in New York: "A Mezzotint Print of His Excellency General Washington, done by Charles Wilston Peale of Philadelphia, from a portrait which he has painted since the sitting of the Convention, is now compleated: the likeness is esteemed the best that has been executed in a print. —This is one of an intended series of prints, to be taken from Mr. Peale's collection of portraits of illustrious persons, distinguished in the late revolution. Those of His Excellency Doctor Franklin and the honourable the Marquis de la Fayette, have been already published.

"The price of these prints, in a neat oval frame (the inner frame gilt) is two dollars each, or one dollar for the print only: and a large allowance will be made to those who purchase to sell again—Apply to Charles W. Peale, at the corner of Third and Lombard Street, Philadelphia.

"The printers in the several states, who are desirous of encouraging the fine arts in America, are requested to publish this as an article of intelligence; which will oblige the numerous friends of the General."—Daily Adv., S 24, 1787. This print is now very rare.

25 At about 11 o'clock at night, a duel was fought "on the ground near Bayard's-Hill," in which "the noted Chevalier Longchamps" was shot and killed. His antagonist, one Capt. Verdier, a Frenchman who had served as an officer in Count Pulaski's American legion, "had thought himself much injured by some assertions made by the Chevalier, and meeting him in William-street, on Tuesday afternoon, an affray took place, which, in the evening, terminated in the melancholy catastrophe above mentioned." Verdier sailed immediately for the West Indies.—Daily Adv., S 27; Ind. Jour., S 29, 1787.

Oct. A committee of the common council is appointed "to direct the 2 decayed Brick work of the City Hall to be repaired, & the street in the rear to be paved & to devise and direct measures for making the Roof tight."—M. C C. (1784–1831), I: 327.

7 On this Sunday, the company of grenadiers and light infantry of Col. Varick's regiment "paraded at the Burnt Church in the Broadway" (Trinity), then marched to the Baptist Church to hear a sermon by Rev. Mr. Gano.—Daily Adv., O 9, 1787.

10 A committee of the common council is appointed "to direct the Breadth of the Area in front of the new Buildings of Messrs [Alexander] Macombe & others in the Broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 327. They reported on Oct. 11 that they had "directed the Area in front of the new Houses in the Broadway should extend six feet in the clear, that the extent of the Railing be six & an half feet from the front of the Houses and that the Street when paved should have a Walk on each side for foot Passengers of fifteen feet."—Ibid., I: 328. Pres. Washington occupied this residence in 1790 (q. v., F 22).

16 The continental congress, sitting in New York, resolves: "that a medal of gold be struck and presented to the chevalier John Paul Jones in commemoration of the valour and brilliant services of that officer, in command of a squadron of French and American ships, under the flag and commission of the United States, off the coast of Great Britain in the late war." At the same time it was voted that the king of France should be informed by letter that "the United States in Congress assembled have bestowed upon the chevalier John Paul Jones this medal as well in consideration of the distinguished marks of approbation which his majesty has been pleased to confer upon that officer as from a sense of his merit." This letter was duly prepared on the same day by the secretary of foreign affairs (John Jay), and in accord with the orders of congress was delivered to Jones to convey to the king of France.—Sherburne, Life of Paul Jones, 284–85; Jour. of the Am. Congress from 1774 to 1788 (Washington, 1823), IV: 799–800. See N 11.

24 The common council passes "A Law to compleat the filling up and making of Greenwich Street from Cortandt Street to the Battery." It states that the commissioners for regulating the burnt part of the city have laid out Greenwich St. "to be continued from Cortlandt Street to the Battery of the Width of 66 feet," but that Oct. some of the proprietors there have failed to fill up the street in 24 front of their lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 333.

The first number of "The Federalist" is published in New York, 27 in the Independent Journal. The subsequent numbers were published in all the newspapers of the city. Hamilton, Madison, and Jay were the authors, writing over the nom-de-plume "Publius." These political essays were issued in book form in 1788 by J. and A. McLean, the publishers of the Independent Journal. "The Committee of Repairs is instructed to have a Charnel House built in Trinity Church Yard."—Ibid.

A contract is made "for altering & repairing a part of the 31 Barracks for an Hospital for the sick of the Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 335. Payment was made for this work on N 12 and 14.—Ibid., I: 338, 343.

Commodore John Paul Jones, having completed the business Nov. that called him to the United States, leaves New York for France 11 by the way of England. He has delayed his departure for several weeks, so as to go on an American instead of a French ship, because, as he wrote to Mr. Jefferson in Paris, of "an account having arrived here that the English fleet is out and was seen steering to the westward, and that a British squadron is cruising in the North Sea." It appears that for some unknown reason he feared lest he might fall into the hands of the English.—Sherburne, Life of Paul Jones, 287–88.

Christopher Beekman, having taken the tavern at 49 Cortlandt 13 St., formerly kept by Talmage Hall (see My 1), advertises that he "has agreed with the proprietors of the Albany and Boston stages, to make his house the public Stage-house." He "keeps a house of entertainment, and accommodates gentlemen with boarding and lodging." He also has here "a large convenient Assembly Room, which he proposes to let during the winter season, or longer if required."

An additional notice states that the "Northern and Eastern Line of Stages" start from this house, which is "near the Oswego-market," and also from Mr. Lewis's Tavern in Albany, on Mondays and Thursdays, "precisely at four o'clock in the morning." During the autumn and winter, three days will be allowed for the run either way. The fare will be four pence a mile.—Daily Adv., N 13, 1787. See Ja 6, 1789.

The common council orders that the recorder institute suits 14 against persons who have made encroachments on the Fresh Water Pond.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 337.

Henry Kipp and Gen. Malcom appear before the common " council to request that a committee meet the proprietors of the ground adjoining the barracks, "to ascertain the Line between the Corporation & their Property And also to lay out a Street between them." The aldermen and assistants of the West and North Wards are appointed for the purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 337–38. The proposed street became Chambers St. For the location of the barracks, see Pl. 42, Vol. I.

Robert Crommelin petitions the common council for permis- " sion "to carry a Pier 100 feet into the East River in front of his Wharf commonly called the Crane Wharf." The subject is referred to the alderman and assistant of Montgomerie Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 338. The petition was granted.—Ibid., I: 341–42.

Thomas Greenleaf changes his paper (see Ja 18) from a weekly 19

1787 Nov. 19 to a daily, and calls it The New-York Journal, and Daily Patriotic Register. The Thursday paper, however, which was intended for country subscribers, was called The New-York Journal, and Weekly Register, although continuing to bear the same volume numbering as the daily.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448–49. See Jl 26, 1788.

22 The monument erected to the memory of Gen. Montgomery (on the Broadway side of St. Paul's Chapel—see My 23 and Je 18) "has received the following elegant ornamental additions, designed by Major L'Enfant, the gentleman to whom we are indebted for superintending its original erection:—'Hymen, extinguishing his torch, mourns over his tomb. From behind the pyramid rises a Sun with thirteen rays, which enlightens the quarter of a terrestial globe, emblematical of America. Above the whole is the American Eagle flying from East to West, carrying in his talons a starry curtain, in which the globe appears to have been wrapped.'" —Daily Adv., N 22, 1787. On Nov. 23, "A Traveller" severely criticised the additions to the monument:—"Those absurd, bizarre and ginger-bread addendas are a disgrace to taste; and would even discredit the mind of [sic] d'un Enfant. These tawdry ornaments might decorate the stern of a French packet, but have not that majestic simplicity or greatness, or that perennius ære, which becomes the Monument of a Hero. If I had the honour of being related to so great a man, I would, with an indignant hand, pull the Sun from its sphere, over-turn the Globe, and kindle a bonfire with the Clouds."—Ibid., N 23, 1787. See O 27, 1788.

26 Evacuation Day falling on Sunday, it is celebrated on Monday. The annual review of Gen. Malcom's brigade of militia occurs. The regiments having "mustered at their several regimental parades," march into Queen St. and form the brigade, then march "to a field assigned for their reception." The troops are reviewed by "his Excellency the Commander in Chief." The legion composed of the uniformed troops of the respective regiments, and Col. Bauman's corps of artillery, perform "a variety of firings and evolutions," under command of Lieut. Col. Lewis.—Ind. Jour., N 28, 1787.

30 Evert Bancker, Jr., one of the city surveyors, surveys and lays out, at the request of Peter Stuyvesant, on his farm in the Out Ward, a piece of ground intended for a street. It was then and afterwards known as Stuyvesant St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 398. On Apr. 15, 1807 (q.v.), the corporation counsel gave his opinion that it was not a street because never made so by the city.—Ibid., IV: 397–401.

3 "A Memorial from John Rodgers and others, being a Committee of 'the Society for promoting the Manumission of Slaves and protecting such of them as have been or may be liberated,' praying the Grant of a Piece of Land to build a School House on for educating the Children of free Negroes," is presented to Trinity vestry and referred to the committee of leases.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

5 "A Petition of Christopher Colles relative to his Claim of a Ballance due to him on Acc^{t} of the Works, commenced previous to the late War, for supplying the City with Water," is referred by the common council to a committee "to enquire into the nature of the Claim & to report all the facts they can collect on the Subject." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 340–41. Colles had previously petitioned for this balance (see Ag 14, 1786). The committee reported on his case on Jan. 12, 1788 (q.v.).

" Archibald Kerley and some of his neighbours in Cherry St. present the city with a fire engine and a piece of ground for an engine house, and offer to erect a house if the city will provide the firemen. The common council accepts, and orders the engineer to appoint ten men as firemen for this engine. It also orders that in future only eight firemen shall be assigned to a small engine.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 341.

11 The trial trip of James Rumsey's steamboat is made on the Potomac River at Shepherdstown, Va. The boat moves at the rate of four miles an hour.—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., I: 435–36, citing Va. Gaz., D 16, 1787; cf. Preble, Chron. Hist. of the Origin and Development of Steam Nav., 26. Rumsey had been experimenting for several years. In 1788, he and Fitch engaged in a pamphlet war over the question of priority of steamboat invention.—See A Short Treatise on the Application of Steam, etc., by Rumsey (Phila., 1788); The Original Steam-Boat supported; or, A Reply to Mr. James Rumsey's Pamphlet Shewing the true priority of John Fitch, and the false datings, &c. of James Rumsey (Phila., 1788); Remarks on John Fitch's Reply to Mr. James Rumsey's pamphlet, by Joseph Barnes, formerly assistant and now attorney in fact to James Rumsey (Phila., 1788). 24 From June 16, 1784, to this date, the commissioners of forfeiture executed 339 conveyances of the property of 26 loyalists in the city and county of New York. The amount realized was nearly £200,000. James De Lancey's property alone, consisting of farms, and houses and lots, brought to the state about £120,000. This was the largest sum realized from a single individual in the district.—Flick, Loyalism in N. Y. during the Am. Rev. (1901), 153–54, and authorities there cited.

— In this year, the Rev. William Gordon, of Massachusetts, published, in London, in 4 vols., The History of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America. It was reprinted in New York in 1789, in 3 vols.; and again in 1794. "Gordon was the earliest to work in an historical spirit among the original records [of the Revolution] that had not been made public during the progress of the war."—Winsor, VIII: 471. He began in 1777 (see 1761) his collections of data from American documentary sources, and, having secured in 1784 the consent of congress, began then to examine public manuscript records, including Washington's papers at Mt. Vernon.—Ibid., VIII: 470.

— In this year, the first edition of The Federalist, in book form, appeared, from the press of J. and A. McLean, New York. It bore the title The Federalist: A Collection of Essays, written in Favour of the New Constitution, as agreed upon by the Federal Convention, September 17, 1787.—Ford, Bibliotheca Hamiltoniana, 13. See O 27, 1787.

— There was published in this year, from the press of Sam. and John Loudon, "Printers to the State," a pamphlet entitled An Address to the People of the State of New-York, On the Subject of the Constitution, Agreed upon at Philadelphia, The 17th of September, 1787. The anonymous author, who signed the pamphlet "A Citizen of New-York," was John Jay.—Evans, 21175. Of the three authors of The Federalist—Hamilton, Jay, and Madison—Jay was the only one to issue a separate pamphlet on the subject. It was highly praised by Washington.

— The consistory of the Dutch Church adopts measures "to repair and place in complete order the Middle Dutch Church." This was accomplished "at a considerably large expense."—De Witt's Discourse, 42. It was reopened on July 4, 1790 (q.v.).

— The second Reformed Dutch Church at Harlem, between 124th and 125th Sts., west of First Ave., "having been ruined during the war, another was begun in 1788, and in 1791 the Rev. John F. Jackson was called as pastor."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 459n. See descrip. of Pls. 39, 60, 79, Vol. I; and Pl. 86, Vol. III.

— "If there is a town on the American continent where the English luxury displays its follies, it is New York. You will find here the English fashions. In the dress of the women you will see the most brilliant silks, gauzes, hats, and borrowed hair. Equipages are rare; but they are elegant. The men have more simplicity in their dress; they disdain gewgaws, but they take their revenge in the luxury of the table . . .

". . . Whilst everywhere in Europe the villages and towns are falling to ruin, rather than augmenting, new edifices are here rising on all sides. New York was in great part consumed by fire in the time of the war. The vestiges of this terrible conflagration disappear; the activity which reigns everywhere, announces a rising prosperity; they enlarge in every quarter, and extend their streets. Elegant buildings, in the English style, take place of those sharp-roofed sloping houses of the Dutch. You find some still standing in the Dutch style; they afford some pleasure to the European observer; they trace to him the origin of this colony, and the manner of those who inhabit it, whilst they call to his mind the ancient Belgic State.

"I walk out by the side of the North River; what a rapid change in the space of six weeks! The river is forced back 200 feet, and, by a simple mechanism, they have constructed a kind of encasement, composed of large trunks of trees crossing each other at convenient distances, and fastened together by strong beams. They conduct this floating dyke to the place where it is to be fixed, and where there is often forty feet of water. Arrived at its destination, it is sunk with an enormous weight of stones. On all sides

1788 houses are rising, and streets extending: I see nothing but busy
— workmen building and repairing.

"At the same time they are erecting a building for Congress. They are likewise repairing the hospital: this building is in a bad condition; not a sick person could be lodged in it at the end of the war; it was a building almost abandoned: they have restored the administration of it to the Quakers, from whom it had been taken away during the war; they have ordered it to be repaired, and the reparations are executing with the greatest vigour. This building is vast; it is of brick, and perfectly well situated on the bank of the North River. It enjoys every advantage; air the most salubrious, that may be renewed at pleasure; water in abundance; pleasant and extensive walks for the sick; magnificent and agreeable prospects; out of the town, yet sufficiently near it."—New Travels in the U. S. A. performed in 1788, By J. P. Brissot de Warville (London, 1794, 2d ed.), 128–33.

Jan. 1 The legislature meets at Poughkeepsie (see Ja 6, 1784) to begin its eleventh session. On March 22, it adjourned to convene in "the Court-House in the city of Albany," at its next session.—Assemb. Jour. (1788), 3, 144; Senate Jour., 3, 178. The Albany session opened on D 8 (q.v.).

4 An open letter bearing this date to "the Worshipful the Mayor" gives advice regarding building plans for the city's development. The writer ("A Citizen") describes the conditions of the period, particularly with reference to extending the city "into the water." He believes "that the Island of New-York contains a sufficient quantity of ground for a much larger city than will ever be built upon it;" there is therefore no necessity for extending it upon made ground. He argues as follows: "That houses placed upon the natural soil may be built of firmer materials, and will be more durable than those built on made ground. That houses standing on wharves have no advantage over those on the bank, which the latter would not have enjoyed, if no houses had been placed in front of them. That if no houses had been erected on made ground, the town must have extended farther along the East River than it now does, and of course that more lots would have enjoyed the benefit arising from a front on the water, . . . That wells cannot be dug on wharves: that those who live on them must therefore be very ill supplied with fresh water. . . . That houses on wharves, for want of proper foundations, can seldom be built of brick or stone, and covered with tile. That even when these materials are used, the houses are slight, and without party walls. That houses on wharves, therefore, are more subject to fire. . . . That the Small lots and narrow Streets on the wharves spread this calamity. That every street laid out upon the water, puts another Street farther from it. That every new grant of a water lot is therefore an injury done to the property of those who live in the interior part of the town. That had the water lots been granted upon express conditions to erect no buildings on them, the whole town would have been surrounded on three sides by a key, extending so far into the water as to answer the purposes of commerce. . . . That these wharves being much less extensive than those which are now erected, the harbor would, in a great measure, have retained its natural size, which would have prevented that encrease in the rapidity of the tide which these encroachments have occasioned. . .

"This city occupies about three hundred and fifty acres of ground. One hundred of which consist of lots taken from the water. The wharves erected for this purpose, with the repairs expended upon them, would be cheaply estimated at £600,000, one third of which sum would have been sufficient for all the purposes of commerce, and so that one million of dollars . . . has, from the imprudence of the Corporation, in granting water lots without annexing any restriction thereto, been absolutely thrown away, or what is much worse, expended to the most ruinous purposes—a sum that will appear infinitely larger, if we consider that the greatest part of it has been drawn from a commercial stock, and add to our calculations the profits that would have resulted from it to the community, had it been suffered to run in its usual channel. . .

". . . The North river is still for the most part in its native state; it is essential to the health, strength & beauty of this city that it should remain so. . . . There is a considerable space between the houses that front the Broad-way and the river, and this space will be still more enlarged by the wharves which the proprietors of those houses will build for their own convenience. This will afford room for the erection of batteries in times of danger—the height of the houses on the bank, and the breadth of the streets, will render them little liable to danger from the fire of an enemy. Jan.
. . . All these advantages will be lost by extending the houses 4 into the river. . . .

"Put a stop, then, to your improvements, (as they are absurdly called) upon the North River. . . . Lay out no new streets, and let Greenwich-street terminate at Trinity Church. The lots to the south of this are in the hands of opulent Citizens. Let them extend their gardens across that street. . . . Few among them are so tasteless, as to permit the sight of wretched houses, smokey chimnies, and dirty streets, to shut out a view of one of the finest rivers in the world, and the beautiful shores that limit its western extent."—Daily Adv., Ja 9, 1788.

A committee of Trinity vestry is appointed "to solicit Sub- 7 scriptions for rebuilding Trinity Church," with the assistance of "the Right Reverend Rector and the Clergy of the Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"The Committee on the Case of Christopher Colles [see D 5, 12
1787] reported verbally the Information which they had been able to obtain on the Subject of his Claim on the Corporation for Monies due him for his Services in superintending the erection of the Works for supplying this City with Water previous to the late War.

"Whereupon the Board agreed in Opinion that some ballance probably was due to Mr Colles on account of the above Service. But that as the Books of the late Treasurer in which those Accounts were entered were at present out of the Power of this Board; the Sum actually due remained uncertain until further Information on the Subject could be obtained.

"Ordered that the same Committee with the addition of Aldn Gilbert report from the best Information they can procure, the Sum which in their Opinion this Board ought reasonably to allow Mr Colles in full discharge of all his Demands against this Corporation on Account of the said Water Works."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 344–45. See Ja 16.

Application is to be made to the legislature for £191:7 to pay 16 the outstanding accounts for erecting the monument to Gen. Montgomery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 348.

The committee on the case of Christopher Colles (see Ja 12) " recommends that he be paid £150. Colles having expressed his willingness to accept this sum, the common council orders the treasurer to make payment "on Condition that he [Colles] execute to this Board a Release against all Demands which he may have against this Corporation for or on account of his Services in Superintending & managing the erection of the Works began previous to the late War for supplyg this City with Water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 348. A revival of the project to supply the city with water was being agitated on Jan. 29 (q. v.).

Daniel Phoenix, city treasurer, prepares a budget for the city 17 and county of New York, for the year 1788, amounting to £11,270: 2. As in the previous year (see May 1, 1787), the largest item is for the support and repair of the poorhouse, £4,500, a reduction, however, for this object of £300. The watch consists now of one captain and 30 men, and it is proposed to add 15 men to the force, thus raising the expense of this department to £2855:2. The other items of expense are the same as in the previous year. A tax of £10,000 is reduced to £9,350, by insolvents and the cost of collecting.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 597.

A petition to the common council is being circulated in the 29 city for signatures. This states: "That as the present mode of furnishing this City and shipping with water, is in many respects subject to many inconveniences, we do hereby declare our approbation of a design for supplying the same by means of water-works and conduit pipes, and will (as soon as the same shall be compleated) be satisfied to pay our respective proportion of a tax for the purpose, provided the same does not exceed twenty-six shillings for each home per annum, at an average. May it therefore please your honors to take the premises into consideration, and to adopt such measures for effecting the same as you shall judge most expedient, for the advantage, convenience and safety of the City.

" "Belvue" is offered for sale, or to let. It is described as a "beautiful Country Seat . . . situated on the banks of the East-River, about three miles from the city." Terms are obtainable of John Murray in Queen St.—Daily Adv., Ja 29, 1788. It was again so advertised in ibid, F 12, and Ap 25, 1789.

30 The Society for the Relief of Distressed Debtors, which was organized a year ago (see Ja 26), has been enabled, "by the charitable contributions of sundry persons," to afford relief to 123 debtors.—Daily Adv., Ja 30, 1788.

6 Isaac Clason and others "Occupying Stores on the Albany Peir for which they are Paying high Rents, for the Convenience of having the Privilige of Vessels Discharging their Cargoes at their Doors," complain in a petition to the common council that lumber and shingle boats occupy the wharves in front of their stores for weeks at a time, thereby compelling them to pay cartage (evidently on goods arriving on boats which have to discharge their cargoes at a distance), and also exposing their stores to the danger of fire, because the shingle boats "have no other Convenienc for their fires and Coocking then amidst their Shingles on the Decks of their Vessells," within a few yards of the stores. They ask that a law be passed "that no Lumber or Shingle Boats shall be admitted to come farther into the Slip then the Ell from the Peir."—From the original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Feb^{y} 13th 1788 & referred to the Al^{dn} of the Dock & the Ald^{n} & Assist. of the East W^{d}." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 351. Accompanying the original petition is the report of the committee, dated F 20, in which they state that "it is Dangerous for Shingle Boats to Lie in Coentjes Slip above the Ell, or in any other part of this City amongst the Buildings," and they recommend "that a Law be past to prevent the Like danger in future." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 353. A proposed ordinance intended to remedy the evil failed to pass.—Ibid., I: 362–63.

19 The proprietors of a new line of stages advertise the fare between Powles-Hook and Philadelphia to be "three Spanish milled dollars, and all way passengers four pence per. mile, 150 lb. of baggage to be the same as a passenger; Printers papers and letters will be conveyed gratis. . . . The Stages leave Powles-Hook at 3 o'clock P. M. every day for Philadelphia, except Saturday."—N. Y. Packet, F 22, 1788.

20 The vestry of Trinity Church orders "that the Seal of the Corporation be affixed to a Petition to the Legislature for changing the Name of the Corporation to that of 'The Rector and Inhabitants of the City of New York in Communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York.'"—Trin. Min. (MS.). The former title was "The Rector and Inhabitants of the City of New-York, in Communion of the Church of England, as by Law Established." The petition explains that, as the Protestant Episcopal Church has now become completely organized, it is improper to retain a name expressive of a connection and dependence which no longer exist. The petition is granted.—Assemb. Jour. (11th sess.), 89. A law to the desired effect was passed Mar. 10 (q. v.).

" In order to leave "sufficient Harbour" and a "free Passage" for the ferry boats at the ferry stairs, during the continuance of the lease of the ferry to Elizabeth Mesier (that is, the "Powlas Hook ferry at Cortland Slip"), the common council orders that not more than three river sloops be permitted to lie on the north side of the ferry stairs and two sloops on the south side.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 353.

21 The legislature passes "An Act for punishing Treasons and Felonies, and for the better regulating the Proceedings in Cases of Felony." The privilege called "benefit of clergy," heretofore allowed in criminal cases, is abolished. Numerous crimes are made punishable with death.—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 37.

22 The legislature passes "An Act concerning Slaves." Among its provisions are the following: Slaves shall continue to be slaves unless manumitted. Any person selling a slave brought into this state after June 1, 1785, shall forfeit £100, and the slave shall be free. The children of women slaves shall follow the condition of the mother.—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 40.

23 The legislature passes an act to suppress immorality. Certain conduct is prohibited on Sundays. Profane persons are to be put in the stocks if fine is not paid. Drunkenness is prohibited.—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 42.

This law appears to have been inadequate. There is preserved in the Emmet Coll., in the N. Y. Pub. Library, a manuscript petition, signed by 102 names, asking for the law's revision. Its date appears to be 1798. This asks that it be made "the duty of Civil Officers, not only when in the immediate execution of their Office, but at all times to see the Law duly respected and enforced;" it asks for an increased penalty for violations; also "the better regulating of Taverns, tipling Houses, and the suppression of Brothels, all which have been encreased to a number truly alarming, and are fruitful sources of Idleness and Vice;" the petitioners are persuaded "that the Evil will continue more or less to exist, while the emolument arising from the granting of Licenses is a perquisite annexed to the Office, which is a powerful incentive to grant more than may be good for Society, or the benefit of individuals;" they therefore ask the legislature to consider "whether in all Cases, the revenue, which might arise from that quarter, had not better be paid into the Public Treasury; and the Officer have a salary equivalent, independent of any perquisite being annexed to it."—Emmet Coll., 11640. Feb. 23

"A Petition of a great number of Inhabitants of this City suggesting the inconveniences which arise from the present Mode of supplying this City with Water & praying this Board to adopt such Measures for supplying it with Water by means of Pipes agreable to a Plan or proposal set on foot by Christopher Colles or such other Plan as to the Board shall appear most expedient" (see Ja 29) is read in common council and referred to a committee "to consider of the Subject & to report such Measures as they conceive most proper to be pursued on the Occasion by the Corporation for the Advantage Convenience & Safety of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 354–55. This matter was again dropped, as it had been in 1786 (q. v., Ap 19). See Ja 8, 1789. 27

The common council orders that the engineer erect an engine-house on the ground adjoining the North Dutch Church.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 356. This house was paid for (£11) on July 2.—Ibid., I: 383. "

Payment is made to Andrew Thompson, Jr., "for paving in front of several Lots on Golden Hill on a new Regulation of that Street [John St.] in 1785."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 356. "

Mar. — The following extracts are taken from a contemporary description of New York: "The City-hall is a brick building, more strong than elegant. It is three stories in height, with wings at each end, and fronts Broad-street, which affords an extensive prospect. The first floor is an open walk, except two small apartments for the door-keeper and city watch. In the second story of the Eastern wing, is the Assembly chamber, now occupied by Congress, and adorned with the following paintings: The portrait of the Great Columbus, belonging to the Assembly of this State; a painting valuable only for its antiquity and the character of the man—The likeness of the King and Queen of France, as large as the life, executed in a masterly manner, and presented to Congress by his most Christian Majesty: equally valuable for the richness of the paintings, the dignity of the personages whom they represent, and as pledges of royal friendship—The likeness of General Washington, presented by a gentleman in England: a likeness dear to every American, and destined to grace the walls of every Council chamber in the new world.

"The Western wing contains a room for the Council or Senate, now occupied by the Secretary of Congress, and another for the Mayor's Court. In the body of the house is a spacious hall for the Supreme Judicial Court. . . .

"This city is esteemed the most eligible situation for commerce in the United States. It almost necessarily commands the trade of one half New-Jersey, most of that of Connecticut and part of that of Massachusetts; besides the whole fertile interior country, which is penetrated by one of the largest rivers in America, navigable 170 miles. This city imports most of the goods consumed between a line 30 miles East of Connecticut river, and 20 miles West of the Hudson, which is 130 miles, and between the ocean and the confines of Canada, about 250 miles; a considerable portion of which is the best peopled of any part of the United States, and the whole territory contains at least half a million people, or one-sixth of the inhabitants of the Union. Besides, some of the other States are partially supplied with goods from New-York. But in the staple commodity flour, Pennsylvania and Maryland have rivalled it—the superfine flour of those States commanding a higher price than New-York.

1788 Mar. — "In the manufacture likewise of iron, paper, cabinet works, &c. Pennsylvania exceeds not only New-York, but all her sister States. In times of peace, however, New York will command more commercial business than any town in the United States. In time of war, it will be insecure, without a marine force; but a small number of ships will be able to defend it from the most formidable attacks by sea. . . .

"The change of inhabitants effected by the revolution was considerable, and had some effect upon the general character of the citizens. Notwithstanding, in point of sociability and hospitality, New-York is hardly exceeded by any town in the United States. The principal families, by associating in their public amusements, with the middling class of well bred citizens, render their rank subservient to the happiness of society, and prevent that party spirit, which an affectation of superiority in certain families in Philadelphia, has produced in that city—a spirit which disturbs or destroys their public amusements, and which has given the citizens, too generally, perhaps, the reputation of inhospitable.

"Several causes however, have operated to diminish the sociability of the citizens of New-York—particularly the change of inhabitants, and the loss of property, during the ravages of war—and the unfavorable state of business since the establishment of peace. These causes have had their influence in all parts of America; and perhaps as little influence in New-York as in any other town.

"The charge of neglecting reading and the improvements of the mind, might be just in Smith's time [1757], but if just, it did not lie solely against the inhabitants of this city. That the Americans were formerly and may be still behind the citizens of London in their attention to literature and the arts, will be acknowledged—nor is it surprising. Yet no person acquainted with the well bred American ladies, can charge them generally with ignorance: and there are great numbers in New-York, whose minds are highly improved, and whose conversation is as inviting as their personal charms.

"Nor are the schools in this city in such a deplorable situation, as they were formerly. There are many which are kept by reputable and able men; and Columbia College affords a very favorable prospect.

"It must not, however be concealed, that Smith's description of the state of education is now but too just, with respect to the country at large. There are several good academies in the country, but many parts are either unfurnished with schools, or the schools which they have are kept by low ignorant men, and are consequently worse than none. This remark may be extended to a large proportion of the United States.

"An enquirer, who would wish to acquaint himself with the true state of the people of New-York, their manners, and government, would naturally ask the citizens for their societies for the encouragement of sciences, arts, manufacturers, &c.? For the patrons of literature? Their well regulated Academies? For their Female Academy for instructing young ladies in geography, history, belles lettres, &c.? Such enquiries might be made with propriety.

"The practice of physic, it is presumed, is on a better footing than when Smith wrote his history. That it is capable of many improvements, in all parts of America, will hardly be denied by the faculty themselves. There are however many very eminent physicians and surgeons in New-York; and it is only to be regretted that there arises a necessity of going abroad for knowledge which ought to be obtained at home.

"All free governments abound with lawyers. Where men have the privilege of thinking and acting for themselves, they will involve themselves in debt, and quarrel with their neighbors. In proportion to the debts and disputes of the people, lawyers will multiply. Of these America furnishes a plentiful growth, and New-York has its share. In this State, the practice of law is conformed to the English mode, and is perhaps better regulated than in the other States. The several degrees in the profession—the number of critical examinations that candidates are obliged to pass thro, before they can be admitted as Counsellors in the higher courts; together with the time of study required by the rules of admission, render an access to the first honors of the bar so difficult as to preclude ignorant pretenders to the important science of law. New-York can boast of many men, eminent in a very liberal profession, and which has hitherto furnished America with some of her most able legislators. It is however to be feared that a too rigid adherence to the forms of legal process in England, Mar. — has sometimes perplexed the road to justice, and prevented valuable improvements in the practice, not only of this, but of most of the States.

"On a general view of this city, as described thirty years ago, and in its present state, the comparison is flattering to the present age; particularly the improvements in taste, elegance of manners and that easy unaffected civility and politeness which form the happiness of social intercourse. . . .

"The following account of the number of dwelling-houses in the principal towns of the United States is given mostly from the Editor's own enumeration in the years 1785 and 1786. The round number nearest the actual number is given, merely to assist the memory. . . . [The cities mentioned below are selected.]

Boston, 2200
New York, 3340
Philadelphia and suburbs, 4500
Baltimore, 1950
Charleston, 1540"

The legislature passes an act for the better regulating of inns 1 and taverns in the city of New York, stipulating that no permits shall be granted to retail strong or spirituous liquors for the purpose of keeping an inn or tavern, unless it shall appear "that an inn or tavern at the place, at which such permit is applied for is necessary for the accommodation of travellers . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 48.

The treasurer of the city is ordered to pay, out of the excise " duties, the sum of £800 annually for four years to the society of the hospital.—Laws of N. Y., chap. 48 (Webster). At the expiration of this law, the legislature again came to the aid of the society (see Ap 11, 1792).

The legislature passes the following act: "Whereas the levelling 7 and altering of Wall-Street in the City of New York renders it inconvenient that the remains of the Statue [see N 30, 1777] of the late Earl of Chatham, . . . which now Stands in the Said Street, Should continue there. Therefore, . . . it is hereby enacted . . . that it Shall be lawful for the Corporation of the City of New York, to cause the Said Statue to be removed to Some convenient place, where the Same may be preserved, until the further order of the legislature."—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 57. See Jl 16.

The legislature passes "An Act for the better Settlement and "
Relief of the Poor." It provides, among other things, that the common council shall nominate and appoint twelve or more freeholders and inhabitants to be overseers of the poor, and to be known as "The commissioners of the alms-house and bridewell of the City of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 62.

The legislature passes "An Act for dividing the State into "
Counties." The boundaries of the county of New York are defined as follows: "to contain the islands, called Manhattans island, Great Barn island, Little Barn island, Mannings island, Nutten island; Bedlows island, Bucking island, and the Oyster islands, and all the land under the water within the following bounds; beginning at Spuyten Duyvel Creek where the same empties itself into Hudson's river, on the West Chester side thereof, at low water mark wherever the same now is or hereafter may be, and so running along the said creek at low water mark as aforesaid, on the West Chester side thereof, unto the East river or Sound, and from thence to cross over to Nassau island, to low water mark there as aforesaid, including Great Barn island, Little Barn island, and Mannings island, and from thence along Nassau island shore, at low water mark as aforesaid, unto the south side of Red Hook, and from thence across the North river, so as to include Nutten island, Bedlows island, Bucking island, and the Oyster islands, to low water mark on the west side of Hudson's river, or so far as the bounds of this State extend there, and so up along the west side of Hudson's river, at low water mark, or along the limits of this State, until it comes directly opposite the first mentioned Creek, and thence to the place where the said boundaries first began."—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 63.

the legislature authorises the desired change in this corporation's name.—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 66.

1788 Mar. 12 The report of Egbert Benson, the attorney-general, dated Feb. 25, regarding the claim of the city of New York to Fort George and adjacent lands (see Ap 16, 1787), is read in the assembly. It is a review of the whole question of title, beginning with the Dongan Charter of April 27, 1686, and the Montgomerie Charter of Jan. 15, 1730. Both charters gave to the city all the waste, vacant, unpatented and unappropriated lands on Manhattan Island, extending to low-water mark, excepting the Fort and the "liberties" thereof, and these were reserved to the king. The legislature of the colony confirmed these charters. On Nov. 21, 1734, the common council expressed no objection to a clause in a bill before the legislature for erecting a battery on "Capsee" Rocks, "saving to this Corporation the undoubted right they have to the soil from high-water mark to low-water mark, from White-Hall to Elds Corner." This bill became a law on Nov. 28, 1734. The attorney-general further pointed out that there was no evidence of any claim or possession on the part of the city of the soil below low-water mark or above high-water mark between those places. Such lands the state now claims,—that is, Fort George and the adjoining lands,—it being understood that a jury can legally determine where the lines of high- and low-water marks are.

It is therefore resolved by the assembly: "That the Surveyor-General do make a survey of the grounds reserved to the crown in the charter to the Corporation of the city of New-York, as Fort George in the said city, and the ground, full boundaries and extent thereof, and also of the streets and lanes immediately adjacent thereto, and also of the soil heretofore under the water, and whereon the battery now is, and between White-Hall Slip and the place heretofore called Elds corner, and lay before this House at the next meeting of the Legislature, a map of such survey to be formed on a scale of twenty feet to an inch: That the Attorney-General and Surveyor-General do endeavour from such proofs as they shall be enabled to discover, to ascertain as nearly as may be, the lines of high and low water mark between the said places, at the time when the last Charter was granted to the said city, and that such lines be also delineated on such map;" also "That the Commissioners of the Land-Office, shall direct the Surveyor-General to survey the Island commonly called Nutten-Island or Governor's-Island, and to lay out the same into lots not exceeding two acres each, with such lanes or streets as the Commissioners shall think proper; and shall direct the Surveyor-General to sell the said lots in such manner as he is required to sell unappropriated lands, by the act for the speedy sale of unappropriated lands, passed the fifth day of May, in the year 1786, and that on such sales no public securities, other than such as are signed by the Treasurer or Auditor of this State, shall be received in payment: Provided that it shall be in the discretion of the Commissioners, to direct such parts of the said island as they shall deem proper to be reserved for fortifications, to remain unsold."—Assemb. Jour., 11th sess., 125–27. See also Mr 20, and Col. Bauman's report of Je 10, 1788.

" The common council grants to Trinity corporation a triangular piece of ground in the Bowery in the Out Ward, at the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads, for a school-house, church, parsonage-house, and burial-ground, agreeable to the intention of the board on Dec. 12, 1771 (see Jl 22, 1771); and a committee is appointed to consider and report the terms on which the grant ought to be made.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 357–58. See, further, Ag 20.

13 "To be sold or let, That very pleasant seat, late the property of Roger Morris, Esq. situated on Haerlem-Heights, containing upwards of 130 acres of meadow and arable land; the mansion house and out buildings are perhaps not exceeded in this State, for elegance and spaciousness, and the prospect from the house is the most commanding on the island; the garden contains a large collection of the best fruit trees. For terms apply to Michael Joy, Hanover-square, or Cornelius I. Bogart, No. 42, Beekman-street." —N. Y. Packet, Mr 18, 1788. The house was advertised again the next year.—Daily Adv., Mr 17, 1789. See also Mr 12, 1790.

14 The body of Maria Farmer is interred in Trinity Church, her funeral being conducted, in accordance with her will, after the ancient Dutch custom. "The followers, after being liberally supplied with spiced wine, pipes, and tobacco, moved in Procession . . ."—Daily Adv., Mr 17. Mrs. Farmer was the grand-daughter of Jacob Leisler.—See Mr 12, 1784.

18 Again it is announced that Trinity corporation is to sell numerous lots at auction.—Daily Adv., Mr 18, 1788. These lots were situated in Chambers and Read Sts., and other places, within the "Dominies Hook Patent," in the West Ward. The heirs of Anneke Bogardus, and those holding rights under them, published a notice, the day before the sale, of their intention to support their claim to the lands.—Ibid., Mr 31, 1788. 20 The legislature passes an act "to extend the Powers of the Commissioners of the Land-Office to the Cases therein mentioned." It provides, in part (see Mr 12), "That the commissioners of the land-office shall direct the surveyor-general to survey the island commonly called Nutten-Island, or Governor's-Island, and to lay out the same into lots not exceeding two acres each, with such lanes or streets as the commissioners shall deem proper, and shall direct the surveyor-general to sell the said lots in such manner as he is required to sell unappropriated lands, . . ." (under an act of May 1, 1786). It shall be in the discretion of the commissioners to direct that such parts of the island as they deem proper shall be reserved for fortifications, and remain unsold.—Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 89 (Greenleaf, II: 199). It is not known that any portion of it was so disposed of. See Mr 31, 1790.

21 The legislature passes "An Act relating to the forfeited Estates." It provides that the office of commissioner of forfeitures shall cease on Sept. 1 next, and that the real estate forfeited to the people of the state shall thereafter be disposed of by the surveyor general. —Laws of N. Y. (1788), chap. 90.

28 The vestry of Trinity Church passes a resolution "that this Corporation will join with the Trustees of Columbia College, and the Corporation of the Dutch Church in the City of New York, in the Appointment of Morgan Lewis and Brockholst Livingston Esquires to solicit and transact the Business of this Corporation & the said other Corporations respecting their Lands in the District of Country called Vermont; . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.). For a history of the lands here referred to, see F 6 and 26, 1767; Mr 30, 1770; Ap 4, 1774.

Apr. 4 The common council authorises the treasurer to lease Bedloe's Island "for three years on the most advantageous Terms in his power, reserving the Use of the pest House & the privilege of Fishing for the Alms House & Bridewell on the shore of the Island."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 359. On April 30, the treasurer reported that he had rented it at £10 a year.—Ibid., I: 365.

" The lease of the house occupied by "the Widow Baker," opposite the fish market, is offered for sale by Jonathan Lawrence. The house is described as "one of the principal stands in this city."—N. Y. Packet, Ap 4, 1788.

5 "The Mansion-House, Garden and Farm, at Ranalegh, in the Out Ward . . ., belonging to the estate of Anthony A. Rutgers, deceased," are offered for sale.—Daily Adv., Ap 5, 1788. See L. M. R. K., III: 952; also Mr 5, 1794.

9 Petitions are under consideration by the common council for filling up part of Dye, Cortlandt, and Crown Slips; also for filling at Burling's and Beekman's Slips and "continuing Front Street" across Burling Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 362. See S 17.

13 The so-called "Doctors' Riot" occurs.—N. Y. Packet, Ap 15, 18, 1788. The following appears to be an accurate account of the event from a contemporary source: ". . . During the last winter, some students of physic, and other persons, had dug up from several of the cemeteries in this city, a number of dead bodies for dissection. This practice had been conducted in so indecent a manner, that it raised a considerable clamor among the people. The interments not only of strangers, and the blacks, had been disturbed; but the corps of some respectable persons were removed. These circumstances most sensibly agitated the feelings of the friends of the deceased, and brought up the passions of the populace to a ferment.

"On Sunday the 13th inst. a number of boys, we are informed, who were playing in the rear of the Hospital, perceived a limb which was imprudently hung out of a window to dry; they immediately informed some persons—a multitude soon collected—entered the Hospital; and, in their fury destroyed a number of anatomical preparations; some of which, we are told, were imported from foreign countries—one or two fresh subjects were also found—all of which were interred the same evening. Several young doctors narrowly escaped the fury of the people; and would inevitably have suffered very seriously, had not his Honor the Mayor, the Sheriff, and some other persons interfered, & rescued them, by lodging them in goal.

1788 Apr. 13 "On Monday morning a number of people collected, and were determined to search the houses of the suspected physicians. His Excellency the governor, His Honor the Chancellor, and His Worship the Mayor, finding that the passions of the people were irritated, went among them, and endeavoured to dissuade them from committing unnecessary depredations. They addressed the people pathetically and promised them every satisfaction, which the laws of the country can give. This had considerable effect upon many; who, after examining the houses of the suspected doctors, retired to their homes.—But in the afternoon the affair assumed a different aspect. A mob . . . went to the goal, and demanded the doctors who were there imprisoned. The Magistrates finding that the mild language of persuasion was of no avail were obliged to order out the militia, to suppress the riot, to maintain the dignity of government, and protect the goal. A small party of about 18 armed men assembled at 3 o'clock, and marched thither—the mob permitted them to pass through, with no other insult than a few volleys of stones, dirt, &c.—Another party of about 12 men, about an hour afterwards, made a similar attempt, but having no orders to resist, the mob surrounded them, seized and destroyed their arms. . . . they then endeavored to force the goal, but were repulsed. . . . They then destroyed the windows of that building with stones, and tore down part of the fence.—At dusk another party of armed citizens marched to the relief of the goal; and as they approached it, the mob huzzaing, began a heavy fire with stones, brick-bats, &c. Several of this party were much hurt, and in their own defence were obliged to fire; upon which three or four persons were killed, and a number wounded. The mob shortly after dispersed.

"On Tuesday morning the militia of General Malcom's brigade, and Col. Bauman's regiment of artillery were ordered out. . . . But happily the mob did not again collect, and the peace of the city is once more restored."—Ibid., Ap 25, 1788.

14 Wm. A. Duer, an eye-witness of the "Doctors' riot," later said that Baron von Steuben accompanied Gov. George Clinton, Mayor James Duane, Recorder Richard Varick, and other officials to the scene of the doctors' riot. While passing along Chatham Row on their way to the jail, "the Governor declared his determination to resort to the most vigorous and decisive measures for quelling the riot. The Baron, in the benevolence of his heart, remonstrated with the Governor against ordering the militia to fire; when in the midst of his harangue he was struck in the forehead by a brick-bat, which, according to the Governor's account, not only knocked the good Baron down, but overset his humanity and brought his compassion, with his body, to the ground; which he no sooner touched than he cried out lustily, 'fire! Governor, fire!' I saw the poor Baron brought bleeding into my father's house, and after he had retired to have his wound dressed, I heard the Governor relate the story."—Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker, by William A. Duer (pub. by W. L. Andrews, N. Y., 1867), 34, citing ibid. in The Am. Mail, Jl 3, 1847.

16 The common council orders that the injuries done to the jail in the doctors' riot be repaired, and that a military guard of one officer and 15 men be stationed there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 363–64.

22 Col. John May, while in New York, visits "the Congress Chamber." Of this he observes: "The greatest curiosity I saw was pictures of their majesties the King and Queen of France [see 1785], —their appearance truly elegant and noble. No painting can excel these. The frames that contain the pictures are magnificent—twelve feet high by about six wide,—superbly grand. But the hall is not high enough to receive their crowns (perhaps a presage of their doom). From thence I went to St. Paul's Church. . . . From thence went to see a pile of new buildings, nearly completed, belonging to a Mr. McComb [Macomb], by far the finest buildings my eyes ever beheld, and I believe they excel any on the continent [sic]. In one of the entries I traveled up five flights of stairs—the rail continuous from bottom to top. I still left one flight unexplored. . . ."—Jour. and Letters of Col. John May, of Boston (1873), 20–21. The Macomb residence, on Broadway, became, in 1790 (q. v., F 3), the residence of President Washington.

30 By reason of the increase in the number of houses near the old powder magazine, "it is become dangerous to the safety of the City." The storekeeper is therefore required by the common council "to remove all the Gun Powder from the old to the new Magazine & that no Gun powder be deposited in the old Magazine in future." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 365. It is also ordered that the new magazine (at Inclenberg) be leased at auction for the term of three years.—Ibid., I: 366. On May 26, the city treasurer advertised that the "new Powder Magazine, near Inclanbergh" was to be "sold at Public Auction" on June 3.—N. Y. Daily Adv., My 26, 1788. Apr. 30

James Hardie, "(who is at present employed by a number of very respectable Citizens to instruct their Children in the Greek and Latin languages,)" states in a petition to the common council that, "in order to excite a laudable emulation amongst the young Gentlemen committed to his care, & to satisfy Parents & Guardians with respect to the progress made in his school, [he] would wish to examine his scholars in public." He explains that a room to which he is "about to remove" is neither central nor commodious for the purpose; he therefore asks "the use of the City Hall on Monday next, or on such other day as the Common Council should judge would not interfere with public business."—From the original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room); endorsed "read April 30th 1788—Mr Hardie has permission to use the Exchange for the purpose within mentioned;" *M. Complaint being made that "the pitching of the Arch of the Street called the Broad Way lately regulated & now paving" is unsatisfactory to the neighbourhood, the common council orders "the three City Surveyors" examine it and see that the work is done "in manner most agreeable to the Neighborhood & the public Convenience."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 372. Two of the surveyors reported on May 23 that they found the "round or arch" of the street too high by at least half a foot, and that they had regulated it to be "only eighteen Inches higher in the middle of the Street than at the Kennel towards the Houses on each side." It is to be paved accordingly.—Ibid., I: 374. 21

Gerard Bancker, treasurer, publishes a notice, under the provisions of the act of May 12, 1784 (q. v.), "for the speedy sale of the confiscated and forfeited estates within this state," that all demands against the forfeited estates of William Axtell, Robert Bayard, William Bayard, and others (about 50 loyalists), must be made within the next four months.—*N. An original bill of this date, filed in the city clerk's record-room, shows that the common council ordered ten "Centinel Boxes" or "Watchmen's Boxes" made for £55. These were placed "at the following Stands:" the "Fly Market, the Governours, King Street, the Mayors, Cherry Street, Mury Street, the jail, powder House, teawater pump, Hester Street." See O 6, 1789.

" Daniel Ludlow being willing "to hire the Bowling Green & ornament it with Trees & keep it in good Fence," the common council orders that the treasurer inquire on what conditions it can be leased, and ask him "to make an Offer to the present Occupant," and if he declines to accept these terms the treasurer is to lease the Green to Mr. Ludlow.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 376.

"New York, June 10th, 1788.

"Sir,

"In compliance with the commissioners of the land office and your request, I lay before you my observations and sentiments respecting such ground which may be necessary to have reserved for fortifications, and may be found requisite to have erected upon Governor's or Nutten Island for the protection of the harbour of New-York, . . . therefore it ought to be well considered by the public who seem inclined to sell that Island, together with Fort George and the town battery. A part of the ground upon which Fort George stands may be sold in order to improve the rest, and in my opinion, the surplus would amount to more account to the state than the sale of the Island. The sale of the Island would injure the state; the sale of the Fort would not only benefit it, but would add beauty, health and strength to the city if rightly attended to. . . .: kind nature in the formation of this post has (in my humble opinion) formed Governors Island, the South West point on New-York Island, together with the fresh water pond, for some grand and future good; all these seem subordinant to one another and cooperate to form that project under consideration, and to which I may add a fourth, but the public have already parted with it, I mean Corlears Hook; here I cannot help observing a piece of negligence, that there has not been reserved for this growing city, a public common at least half a mile square and a public wood of the same dimension, within the vicinity of it. . . . posterity will feel the remissness of it and be obliged to purchase these conveniences at a dear rate, together with Governors Island, should we now sport it away for a trifling consideration. . . . A regular fortification on that Island I think will sooner or later become necessary, and which should be so constructed to command both the bay and the harbour, and large enough to contain five hundred men, conveniently lodged in casements at a time of an invasion, besides two water batteries, one to be covered by a redoubt, the other with a raveline and covered way, communicating with the main fort, and this is all the fortification I think necessary upon the Island. Now if we go upon the true principle of fortification, it will appear upon approved maxims, that no building of any kind whatever is admitted within musket shot of a fortress, this being the case, little or none of the Island can be spared for sale, besides respect must be had that [in] a fortress which contains a garrison, there must be ground reserved sufficent for a hospital, burying ground, for a garden to supply the garrison, and a place to manœuvre and exercise the troops upon; however, should the legislature think it necessary that a part of the Island should be sold, I would then recommend that part to be sold which lies east of the line I have drawn across the Island in my map. But if I am allowed to extend my idea, this state of the United States will have to purchase the same ground again for the marine department, because from the nature and situation of this post, New-York must and will become the ground source of a navy should ever a fabric of that kind take place in the United States." . . .—Daily Adv., Ap 2, 1794.

1788 July 2 The common council directs that the treasurer dispose at auction of "the Ferries across the North River to Hoboock & other places to the Northward," the boats to have "the Right in Common with each other of landing at any part of the Corporation Wharfs or Slips north of Cortlandt Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 382. See, further, Jl 9.

" An ordinance is passed "to alter & amend Queen Street from Kings Street to Wall Street" (M. C. C., 1784–1831, I: 383); and it is resolved that an ordinance be prepared to regulate and pave William Street (ibid., I: 383).

8 The commissioners for rebuilding Trinity Church advertise for proposals for digging a trench for a new foundation, taking up the old foundation from the surface of the ground downward, cleaning the stones, laying a new foundation, and carrying up the walls as high as the sills of the windows. The ground plan can be seen at Mr. Cruger's, No. 5, Stone St.—Daily Adv., Jl 8, 1788. See Je 18.

" The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church inquire into the expense of enclosing "the New Church Yard" (of the Brick Church) with "a Substantial paled Fence."—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. On Nov. 11, the committee of repairs reported that the fence had been completed.—Ibid.

9 As a result of the order of June 26, prohibiting the digging and carrying away of clay from the Common Lands, John Campbell, a potter, complains to the common council that, unless he is permitted "to procure Clay there his Manufacturing of Pantiles must cease." A committee is appointed to make inquiries and report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 384.

" John Simmons, tavern-keeper, is paid £19:18:5 by the city for the use of his house and rooms.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 384. The tavern stood at the n. w. cor. of Nassau and Wall Sts.

" The treasurer has "disposed of the Several Ferries across the North River," on leases, at specified terms, the ferries being "Hoboock," "Weehaack," "Bulls Ferry," and "Fort Lee."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 385. See also "Hoboken Ferry" in L. M. R. K., III: 942.

14 An open letter, addressed to the "Mayor and Corporation" of the city, and signed "Civis," protests against the proposal to have streets paved at the expense of the proprietors of houses. Some of the streets need paving; but, on the other hand, "most of the proprietors of houses in this city are Whigs," who "were refugees in the country, during the war," and who "came back very poor," many being obliged "to borrow money to repair their houses." To them the proposed improvement would be a great hardship.—N. Y. Jour., Jl 14, 1788.

15 H. Ivers advertises cables for sale "at Ivers' Rope-walk at the head of Mulberry Street, the first lefthand turn above the Tea Water Pump."—The N. Y. Jour. and Daily Patriotic Reg., Jl 15. This rope walk is shown on Pl. 64, Vol. I.

16 "In pursuance of the Law of this State entitled 'An Act authorizing the Corporation of the City of New York to remove the Statue therein mentioned'" (see Mr 7), the common council appoints a committee "to remove the remains of Pitts Statue from Wall Street" and "deposit the same in some safe place [see Ag 3, 1811] until the further Order of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 386. Payment of £5:7:3 for this was made to George Gosman on Nov. 19.—Ibid., I: 418. Stevens, in his Progress of N. Y. in a Century, 14–15, erroneously gives 1787 as the date of removal.

" The common council orders that Mr. Bancker and Mr. Goerck "be directed to make an exact survey of the Water Lots from Corlaers Hook to White Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 386.

17 The federal ship "Hamilton" is launched "amidst the acclamations of a large concourse of citizens."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 18. "A gentleman, who was present at the fall of the federal ship, when she was launched, in which fall she bilged, and the right arm of Col. Hamilton (the head of the ship) holding the constitution, broken off, exclaimed, . . . 'gentlemen, there is certainly room for amendments.'"—N. Y. Jour., Jl 24, 1788. This refers to the debates in the convention at Poughkeepsie regarding necessary amendments to the Federal Constitution.—See Jl 22, 23 and 25.

22 The order of procession for the parade which is to take place on July 23 in honour of the Constitution of the United States is published in the newspapers. At eight o'clock in the morning, ten guns will be fired, and the procession will form in the Park and march "Down Broad-way to Great Dock-street, thence through Hanover-square, Queen, Chatham, Division and Arundel-streets; and from thence through Bullock-street to Bayard's house." All trades and professions are to be represented in the parade, with a band of music near the head of the line. Forresters in frocks, carrying axes, "Columbus in his ancient dress, on horseback," and the Federal ship "Hamilton," are among the leading features announced. Richard Pratt is chairman of the committee of arrangements, and is to wear "a blue coat, red sash, and white feather tipped with black." His 13 assistants "will each be clad in a uniform white coat with blue cape and sash, wear a white feather tipped with blue, and carry a speaking trumpet." The question of ratifying the Federal Constitution is still under debate at Poughkeepsie.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 22, 1788. Numbers of "The Federalist" (see O 27, 1787) are appearing regularly in the Packet. July 22

23 The parade is held in honour of the Constitution of the United States. It is an expression of "the animated joy of the citizens of New York upon finding the Federal Constitution of Government ratified by a sufficient number of states to make it operative,"—to demonstrate that the pleasure "had pervaded all ranks and degrees of the community." The object of exultation was not the ratifying by any one particular state, but "the already present existence of an æra in the history of man, great, glorious and unparalleled, which opens a variety of new sources of happiness, and unbounded prospects of national prosperity." The costumes and implements of many mechanical trades were featured. Banners elaborately painted bore symbols and mottoes appropriate to the several trades and the celebration. During the procession, the cabinet-makers, on a platform drawn by horses, constructed a cradle and table. The blacksmiths, likewise, forged an anchor; and the sailmakers made sails. A printing-press complete, with cases and other typographical implements, and with compositors and pressmen at work, struck off hundreds of copies of a song and an ode, which were distributed among the multitude by Mr. A. M'Lean. These were published in the N. Y. Packet, Jl 25, and Ag 5, 1788. There is a copy of this broadside in the N. Y. H. S. It is entitled Ode for the Federal Procession Upon the Adoption of the New Government. Composed by Mr. L , and is printed within an ornamental border having the arms of the state of New York at the top. Regarding the butchers' display, see De Voe's Market Book, 316–17. The painted banner carried by the Society of Pewterers is now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. July 23

The "Federal Ship Hamilton," moving near the centre of the procession, was "A Frigate of thirty-two guns, twenty-seven feet keel, and ten feet beam, with galleries and everything complete and in proportion, both in hull and rigging; manned with upwards of thirty seamen and marines, in their different uniforms; Commanded by Commodore Nicholson, and drawn by ten horses." The interesting evolutions and salutes of this vessel, at the Fields, along Broadway, opposite the fort (where the president and members of congress reviewed the parade), and at other points in the line of march, were graphically described in the newspaper reports of the event.—Ibid., Ag 5, 1788. "The ship made a fine appearance, sailing with flowing sheets, and full sails, down Broadway, the canvas waves dashing against her sides, the wheels of the carriage concealed."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 24, 1788.

The procession followed the line of march already announced (see Jl 22), "to the parade des fêtes champêtre, where two bullocks and a mutton had been roasted whole, for their regale, together with hams, &c. &c. These were served upon ten extensive tables, which were prepared for the purpose, and which projected, in direct angles, from one common centre, where was situated, a little elevated, the seat of Congress and civil and legislative magistrates, strangers of distinction, &c. who had a complete view of the ten seats; the seats were all canopied with canvas, which, in some measure, screened the guests from the rain, which, unluckily fell at different periods of the day."—Ibid. For view of this table, as sketched by David Grim at "Bunker Hill," see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), opp. p. 570.

"In the evening a very ingenious transparent piece of painting, representing general Washington, to the life, was exhibited by Mr. Wright, in Maiden Lane, which attracted the attention and admiration of many citizens, particularly the fair.

"There was also exhibited, at the corner of Wall-street, enclosed in a circle of about two feet in diameter, thirteen stars, ten of which were brilliant [that being the number of states which had ratified the Constitution]; one (designed for New-York) half illuminated; and two almost obscure, with the initials of North-Carolina and Rhode-Island."—Ibid.

1788 July 23 In the evening also, the printers, book-sellers and book-binders of this city, who had attended the procession, "assembled at the house of Mr. W. [Cornelius ?] Bradford, and spent the Evening . . ., with . . . good humor, harmony and social glee." Toasts were drunk to "The Day;" to Congress; to "His Excellency Benjamin Franklin, the venerable Printer;" to Washington, Hamilton, Knox; to the liberty of the press; and to "a speedy adoption of the new Constitution."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 25, 1788.

William A. Duer stated in 1849: "all similar celebrations since attempted have proved but feeble imitations" of it. He described the procession in detail, mentioning many citizens who participated. —N. Y. As It Was During the Latter Part of the Last Century (1849), 22–27.

John Randolph, writing to his father on July 30 about the celebration held on this day, said: "You have doubtless . . . received Accounts of the Adoption of the new Constitution by the State of New York the Majority consisting of five only [see Jl 25]. On Wednesday 26th [error for 23d] Inst (4 days previous to our hearing of the ratification of this State) there was a very grand Procession in this city (on account of its being received by ten States) which proceeded from the plain before Bridewell down Broadway thro' Wall Street and by the way of Great Queen Street proceeded to the Federal Green before Bunkers Hill where there were tables set for more that [than] five Thousand poeple to Dine— two Oxen were roasted whole and several cows and Sheep. I'll assure my dear Sir it put me in mind of the great Preparations which were made, in Don Quixote, for the wedding of Camache the rich and the fair Quiteria—there were ten tables set out to represent the ten States which had acceeded to the Constitution, all which were concentered together at one end like the sticks of a Fan; where they joined, were seated all the Congress with the president in the middle. The Procession was very beautiful and well conducted. Every trade and profession had a Colour emblematical of it. the cheif of the Bakers were drawn on a stage on which they were seen mixing their bread; the apprentices all in white followed with ready baked Cakes. The Coopers followed making barrels and the apprentices follow with a keg under the arm of each. next came the Brewers bringing hogsheads of beer along with a little Backus astride a Cask holding a large Goblet in his hand— It would require to much time for me to tell you of all the different occupations but to the honor of New York be it spoken that among 8000 poeple who were said to have dined together on the green there was not a single Drunken Man or fight to be seen."—From original letter in Emmet Coll., No. 9582.

25 The convention of the state of New York, at Poughkeepsie, votes unanimously in favour of adopting the report of the committee-of-the-whole, ratifying the federal constitution, but proposing various amendments. On July 26, the engrossed declaration of rights, on which the ratification was based, passed again, by a divided vote, and it was ordered that it be signed and attested. The Journal of the Convention was published by Nicholas Power, at Poughkeepsie, "a few rods East from the Court-house."— See copy in the N. Y. P. L. The resolution in its final form appeared in the N. Y. Packet, Ag 1, 1788. See also Winsor, VII: 250, 259.

26 At about 9 o'clock in the evening there arrived "the joyful tidings of the adoption of the New Constitution, at Poughkeepsie, on Friday, July 25. . . . The bells in the City were immediately set a ringing, and from the Fort and the Federal Ship Hamilton, were fired several salutes. The Merchants at the Coffee House testified their joy by repeated huzzas; and a large body of citizens, headed by a number of the first characters, went to the houses of the members of the Convention, and gave three cheers, as a testimony of their approbation of the glorious Event brought about by their united, unremitted, and toilsome exertions.—In short, a general joy ran through the whole city. . . ."—Supplement extraordinary to the Independent Journal, July 28, 1788 (broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library); N. Y. Packet, Jl 29, Ag 1, 1788.

Samuel B. Webb, writing on July 27 to Miss Hogeboom, said: ". . . The Mail brought us the pleaseing intelligence of our Convention at Poughkeepsie haveing agreed to adopt the New Constitution.—It was received with unusual marks of Joy; every class of Citizens turned out, Bells rang—Cannon fired, fireworks were displayed and the federal Ship (which is now posted in the Broad-Way near Bowling Green) was handsomely illuminated, the whole night was spent in loud acclamations of Joy, and continued untill past 8 o'clock this morning—indeed I was afraid that Sunday would not bring them to their usual steadiness. The whole however passed over without anything improper takeing place, untill about two in the morning. Mr. Greenleaf, the Printer, has insulted the City at large by several impertinent publications,—and during the time of their moveing round in a body, they stop'd at the house where he keeps his printing press—they broke into the house & I am told destroyed his Types; he fled,—This is the only instance in which the least unjustifiable act has been committed & I trust we shall hear no more of it. . . ."—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, III: 112–13. July 26

In a letter from New York on July 30, John Randolph wrote to his father: "On Saturday the 27th [error for 26th] Inst. news arrived of the Constitution's being adopted [by New York State.] a party of Federalists as they call themselves went to the house of Mr Greenleaf printer of the patriotic register and after having broken his windows and thrown away his Types much to their discredit went to the Governor's where they gave three hisses [and] beat the rogue's march around the house they proceeded to the houses of the Federals (as they call them) and gave three cheers."—From original in Emmet Coll., No. 9582.

The last issue of The N. Y. Journal and Daily Patriotic Register (see N 19, 1787) appears as a daily. Greenleaf's weekly paper is continued under the title The N. Y. Journal and Patriotic Register. —Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 449. See also issue of July 31. On Aug. 7, the editor, Thomas Greenleaf, gave the reasons for the change. Certain paragraphs were printed in the Register of the 24th of July, to which objection was taken by some of the public; a handbill, burlesquing the citizens, was circulated, and it was falsely stated that it came from Greenleaf's shop. These induced a mob, late on the evening of the 26th, to break into his house and shop, plunder a quantity of types, and leave the office in a ruinous condition.—Ibid., Ag 7, 1788. See My 4, 1790. "

It is ordered by the common council that the treasurer and the commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell be authorised to negotiate a loan at the bank "of as much Money as may from time to time be required to defray the Expences of the Alms House & Bridewell until the collection of the Tax to be raised for their support shall render it unnecessary, not to exceed the whole Sum of £700."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 387. 31

The commissioners appointed to appraise that part of Wall Street between city hall and Queen Street prepare a list, bearing this date, showing each proprietor's name, the width of his lot, and the levy proposed for paving in front of his property. The owners and lot widths are as follows: Aug. 2

Civil Liberty the Glory of Man.

Original Address

Sons of Liberty.

The vicissitudes which occur in Political as well as in Civil life, are indelibly recorded in the Annals of Human affairs, and confirmed by the all seeing Eye of the Great Spirit; by whose Providence we exist, and have become a Great & Free People.

Be it therefore remembered, that in consequence of encroachments on our inherent rights, by adventurers from Foreign lands, it has become indubitably apparent that our Independence, so recently and so dearly obtained by our Fathers and our Brethers, in the Glorious but cruel sanguinary War of the Revolution, is in danger of being temporarily disturbed. . . . In order therefore to counteract the machinations of those Slaves, and Agents of foreign Principals: . . . a Great National Institution, founded on the basis of American Liberty as the rallying point of Freemen is indispensibly necessary to be established, for the preservation and perpetuity of those blessings which through Divine Providence we now enjoy, and have pledged ourselves to transmit unimpaired down to our latest posterity.

minor causes, being seriously and deeply reflected on, by a few genuine Sons of Liberty, whose Patriotic Virtue, Fortitude and Perseverence; eventually after years of opposition surmounted all dificulties; Resolved to establish the contemplated Institution, and to call it Tammany Society or Columbian Order.

The total assessment is £367:4:9¾.—From original report in city clerk's record-room. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 389.

4 The common council passes an ordinance for paving "front or first Street" from Old Slip to Fly Market Slip; Water St. from Wall St. to the Fly Market, and King St. "from the Cellar Door of Henry Waddingtons Store to the East River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 389.

7 The commissioners for rebuilding Trinity Church advertise for proposals for carpenters' work and materials; for "bringing under cover, inclosing and finishing the outside of Trinity Church, compleat, including the porch, in front, the columns and arch within the Church;" also, for "building the Steeple, on a base of twenty-four feet square;" and for "cutting the stone that may be wanting for the above building." A plan of the church may be seen at Mr. Rogers', No. 35 Queen St.—Daily Adv., Ag 7, 13, 1788.

8 In a petition of this date to the common council, the freeholders and leaseholders of estates in and near King George Street state that "upwards of two years ago" this street "was surveyed in order that the same might be levelled and paved;" that part of it has been dug out, and other parts "remain totally neglected," so that the street is "impassable with a Carriage." They ask that the street be dug out and finished without delay; so that they will have "a convenient passage from the head of Queen Street directly through William Street, a place of considerable trade."—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Aug^{t} 20th 1788." It is referred to the alderman and assistant of Montgomerie Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 391. For location of King George St., see Pl. 34, Vol. I. It was the northern extension of William St., north of Frankfort St.

9 John Harrison and Stephen Purdy, Jr. shorten the title of their paper (see My 17) to The Impartial Gazetteer.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440; Early Newspapers, II: 420. The title was changed again on Sept. 20 (q. v.).

13 A work entitled Mercantile Laws of the State of New York is advertised as published on this day; price, three shillings.—Daily Adv., Ag 13, 1788.

" Mr. Pool, the equestrian performer, advertises that he will exhibit on this day his feats of horsemanship "On the hill just above the Ship Yards," where he has "erected a Menage, at a very considerable expence, with seats convenient for . . . Ladies and Gentlemen." His full programme is published. Tickets are sold for "the Box" and "the Pitt." A "Band of Musick" will "entertain the spectators between the feats."—Ind. Jour., Ag 13, 1788. See also O 5, 1785; S 27, 1786. Pool's appearance in New York in 1788 was unknown to Greenwood, author of The Circus (1909), 79.

14 Casimer Goerck and Evert Bancker make a plan of the Bowery Rd. from Division St. to Stuyvesant Rd. This is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 136.

15 James Smith advertises that, on Aug. 21, there will be sold at auction at the Coffee House "All that very valuable Building, called the New Tea Water Pump [see Je 30, 1787], with the whole Pump and every necessary apparatus thereto belonging, together with the Lot of Ground whereon the same now stands, containing in front, 50 feet 8 inches, in rear, 43 feet, 6 inches, and in length on the North side, 128 feet, and on the South side, 126 feet.

"The goodness of this water, its inexhaustable supply, and contiguity to this city, are probable presages of resulting advantages to a purchaser."—Daily Adv., Ag 15, 1788.

16 The name of The Impartial Gazetteer (see Ag 9) is enlarged to The Impartial Gazetteer, and Saturday Evening Post. The last issue with this title was that of Sept. 13.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440; Early Newspapers, II: 420. Aug. 16

The vestry of Trinity Church requests "D^{r} Johnston" (Hon. Wm. Samuel Johnson, LL.D., president of Columbia College) "to prepare an Inscription for a Corner Stone to be placed by the Bishop in the foundation of Trinity Church." The commissioners appointed to build the church are directed to arrange for the ceremony of laying the corner-stone, giving £10 "as a Compliment to the Masons."—Trin. Min. (MS.). 18

A gale from the south-east, "attended by a sudden swell of the sea," drives the water over the wharves and into the streets and cellars. Parts of the facing of the Battery are torn away, "a considerable extent of solid stone work, seven feet in thickness," being totally demolished.—Daily Adv., Ag 20, 1788. 19

The common council orders an advertisement published for proposals for removing the leaky copper roof of the city hall, and covering the building with cedar shingles.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 391–92, 117, 122–23; and see Ag 27; Daily Adv., S 3, 1788. 20

" The common council appoints a committee to treat with a committee of Trinity corporation "on the Subject of the Triangular piece of Ground at the junction of the Post & Blooming Dale Roads" (see Mr 12).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 392. See, further, Je 24, 1789.

" Payment of £35 on account is made "towards filling up the White Hall Slip;" £65 "for erecting Bulkheads across Cortlandt & Ellis's Slips;" and £39 "for filling up Vesey Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 393.

21 The foundation stone of the new Trinity Church is laid by the Right Rev. Samuel Provoost, D. D., bishop of the Episcopal Church of the state of New York. The stone bears the following inscription: "To the Honor of Almighty God, and the Advancement of the Christian Religion. The first Stone of this Building was laid (On the site of the old Church destroyed by fire in 1776) On the 21st day of August, A. D. 1788. In the 13th year of the Independence of the United States of America. The Right Reverend Samuel Provoost, D. D. Bishop of New York being Rector, The Hon. James Duane, Esq. The Hon. John Jay, Church Wardens."—Daily Adv., Ag 23; N. Y. Packet, Ag 26, 1788. The new edifice was nearing completion in January, 1790, and was dedicated March 25, 1790 (q. v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 54-a, I: 414-15; Pl. 105, III: 607, and Pl. 122, III: 629.

27 A committee of the common council is appointed to attend to "new Roofing the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 394. The lowest bid, £35, for the labour was that of James Robinson, and was accepted.—Ibid., I: 397. See Ag 20.

The common council advances to Van Zandt & Janeway £100 "towards purchasing Materials for repairing the City Hall."—Ibid., I: 397.

Sept. 4 A meeting of the Society for the Relief of Distressed Debtors is held at the tavern of John Simmons, and adopts resolutions to earnestly request the clergy of the city to preach charity sermons for promoting the work of the society, whose funds are "totally exhausted." They represent that there are several debtors in prison who have "no other Subsistence" than that derived from the society, and that a quantity of fire wood will be necessary during the ensuing winter for the prisoners, which "might be purchased at present, at a very low Rate."—N. Y. Jour., Ja 1, 1789.

13 After repeated discussion regarding the place where congress should meet under the Constitution (Philadelphia, Lancaster, Baltimore, Wilmington, and Annapolis having been considered at various times since July 28), the following resolution is finally agreed to: "That the first Wednesday in January next be the day for appointing electors in the several states, which, before the said day, shall have ratified the said Constitution; that the first Wednesday in February next be the day for the electors to assemble in their respective states, and vote for a president; and that the first Wednesday in March next be the time, and the present seat of Congress [New York City] the place for commencing the proceedings under the said Constitution."—Jour. of Cong. (ed. of 1823), IV: 867; Winsor, VII: 267. See also broadside in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet 9592). Congress had been sitting in New York since 1785 (q. v.).

17 The mayor lays before the common council the act of congress (see S 13) appointing New York the city for the meeting of the general government of the United States under the new Constitu-

1788 Sept. 17 tion. It is thereupon resolved "that the whole of the City Hall . . . be appropriated for the accommodating of the General Government . . . and that this Board will provide Means for defraying the Expences of putting the same in proper order & Repair." A committee is appointed "to consult the Delegates of this State in Congress" and others, and report "what Alterations & Repairs are necessary." The same committee is also directed "to examine the Exchange & report what Repairs it will require to render it convenient for the accommodation of the Courts of Justice & Meetings of the Corporation of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 398–99. For the report of this committee, see S 30 and O 7

" A petition of John Byvanck and others that Burling's Slip "may be filled up & Front Street continued across it" is referred to a committee of the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 399.

" The common council refers to a committee a petition of Ann McAdam, in which she complains of the manner of regulating and paving Broadway, in relation to her house and lot. At the same time, the aldermen and assistants of the West and South Wards are made a committee "to view and direct the Surveys with respect to some Difficulties which have arisen in the paving of the Broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 399. The committee on the McAdam petition reported on Oct. 25, "and thereupon Mr John Stagg together with Evert Bancker Junr & Casimir T Gœrick City Surveyors were appointed to survey that part of the Broadway which hath lately been regulated & paved & to report to the Board such Plan . . . for the better regulation of the said Street as they may conceive most effectual for removing the Difficulties complained of."—Ibid., I: 412–13. See, further, O 27.

20 The name of The Impartial Gazetteer and Saturday Evening Post (see Ag 16) is changed to The New-York Weekly Museum.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 507; Early Newspapers, II: 420. See My 7, 1791.

22 The ship "America," intended for the India trade, is launched at the ship-yards. The builder is Ebenezer Young.—N. Y. Packet, S 23, 1788.

24 Elias Burger, Jr., is paid £100 on account "towards building the Wharf in Fly Market Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 403.

29 The meeting of the common council at the city hall on this day is the last held there, owing doubtless to the alterations in the building for the accommodation of congress.—See M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 403, 404 et seq. The place of meeting was changed, evidently, to Simmons' tavern, pending the necessary repairs at the exchange. Simmons was paid, on Dec. 31, £17:2:4 "for the Use of his Room fire, Candles &c &c."—Ibid., I: 424.

30 The brigade commanded by Gen. Malcom is inspected by the adjutant-general. It then marched to the vacant grounds of Ald. Bayard, and was reviewed by Maj.-Gen. Baron de Steuben, who was so well pleased with its military appearance and behaviour, and particularly with the evolutions and manoeuvres, which were performed "with great promptitude and exactness by the legionary troops under the command of Colonel Lewis," that, after the review, he addressed the commanding officers of the different corps, saying (in part): ". . . Whilst the militia of New-York continue to be animated by the patriotic sentiments which have led you to these exertions, they will prove a perpetual nursery of good soldiers and virtuous citizens."—Daily Adv., O 1, 1788.

" The committee appointed Sept. 17 in connection with alterations to the city hall for the accommodation of the general government reports that it has procured a plan, executed by Major L'Enfant, for the necessary additions, alterations, and repairs, which they recommend to the common council. A number of citizens having "by voluntary Subscriptions engaged to advance the Monies necessary for the said Buildings & Repairs in expectation of being reimbursed by a Grant from the Legislature or a Tax on the Citizens," and they having nominated five commissioners—Robert Watts, Alexander McComb (Macomb), Major L'Enfant, James Nicholson, and William Maxwell—"to purchase the Materials & superintend the said Business," the common council approves of the proceedings, "So that no Charge be made on this Corporation for any part of the Expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 404. See also descrip. of Frontispiece I, III: 538.

Oct. 6 The alterations at the city hall are begun.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 6, 1789.

7 The committee of the common council which was appointed on Sept. 17 to determine what repairs and alterations were needed in the city hall for the accommodation of congress, and in the exchange "for the accommodation of the Courts of Justice & Meeting of the Corporation of this City," now makes its report regarding the exchange (the details of which are not entered in the Minutes), and the board orders that the committee "direct the repairs necessary to be made in the most economical & expeditious manner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 407. On Oct. 14, £100 was paid, on account, for these repairs, and on Nov. 19, another £100 was advanced.—Ibid., I: 418. For description of the finished "Federal Edifice," see Je, 1789. Oct. 7

" The common council orders that the hay scales at the end of the Bear Market, which have been obstructing the street, be removed into the passage leading behind the market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 408; De Voe, Market Book, 320–21. The Bear Market is shown on a Bancker plan in N. Y. P. L. (box R-W, folders V & W).

It is also ordered that a room be provided "in the Vicinity of the City Hall for the accommodation of the City Watch until the Repairs making to the City Hall are completed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 408.

10 The programme of military review for the day comprehends an inspection of Col. Bauman's regiment of artillery in the fort by the adjutant-general; and a review by the governor in the Fields of the troop of light horse under command of Capt. Stake, a brigade company of artillery under Capt. Van Dyke, and two companies of light infantry under Capts. Stagg and Swartwout. The regiment of artillery will display fireworks at the fort in the evening.—Daily Adv., O 9, 1788.

14 A petition from various citizens is read in the common council, showing "That being informed that the Courts of Justice for this Country, and other meetings, were about to remove to the Exchange in the South Ward," they "are anxious to accommodate them as far as lies in their power. That pursuant to this Intention, and apprehensive that the Market, now held under that Building, may at certain Seasons of the Year, be offensive to those Honorable Bodies," they "are anxious this evil should be obviated. That for this purpose they respectfully propose that a Market place should be built on the Long Bridge in the same Ward. That its dimensions should be one hundred and thirty three feet in length, and twenty feet in breadth." They are willing to build it at their own expense. They observe "that the place designated by them is much superior for such a Market to any in the City.—That it is necessary for the Albany and other Trade.—That the tide from the situation of the place, is at all times most favorable for the Bergens, Staten Island, and other places near those situations.—That its vicinity to different ferries render it exceedingly commodious to passengers, necessary to travellers, and convenient to all. . . . That to erect a Market in any of the Streets now unoccupied will darken, obstruct and injure the City: But that the Long Bridge which is already taken up by Oyster Men and others only tends to increase the Dirt, without benefitting any but Individuals." They therefore ask that they may be allowed to build the market at the Long Bridge.—From the original petition, in record-room, city clerk's office, with endorsement showing that the committee to whom it was referred reported favourably. On Oct. 17, the common council agreed to permit the petitioners to erect, at their own expense, a market-house in the street leading from the exchange to the river.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 409, 410; L. M. R. K., III: 958. This was the fourth and last public market-place established in Broad St.—De Voe, Market Book, 370.

17 The public whipper, Joseph Shelvey, receives £25 a year, payable quarterly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 411, 424.

20 A number of the officers of "the late American army," and several gentlemen of distinction, dine together at the Coffee-House, "in commemoration of the two great events that took place in the late war—the surrender of Saratoga, the 17th October, 1777, and that at York-Town, on the 19th October, 1781."—Daily Adv., O 22, 1788. Those who expected to attend the dinner had previously been requested "to give in their names at the Coffee-House Bar."—Ibid., O 16, 1788.

22 A committee is appointed "to direct the Bridewell to be more effectually secured so as to prevent escapes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 412.

23 It is said "that the alterations and additions now making to the city hall will, when completed, render it the most elegant and commodious building for a legislative body in the United States. . . . The readiness with which the citizens entered into a

1788 subscription for defraying the expence" shows that they "are
Oct. sensible of the honor" conferred on them by congress; and "the 23 expedition with which the work is carried on, is a sufficient proof of our public spirit and ardent attachment to the federal cause."—N. Y. Jour., O 23, 1788.

24 The First Regiment of militia, commanded by Maj. Henry Rutgers, receives a new standard, on which the arms of the state are painted, and is reviewed by Maj.-Gen. Malcom.—N. Y. Packet, O 28, 1788.

27 Trinity vestry passes a resolution requesting the bishop to present the thanks of the corporation "to Mr L'Enfant [see Je 18, 1787] for his great Attention & Services respecting the Monument of General Montgomery which has been erected at St Paul's Church under his Direction, in a Manner that reflects Honor upon his Taste, and has given universal Satisfaction."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" The commissioners appointed to survey that part of Broadway which has lately been regulated and paved (between Rector St. and "Verlettinberg" Hill) report a profile of the existing surface of the roadway. The common council passes a resolution making specified amendments in the grade; and orders that John Stagg be employed "to take up and Repave the Broadway and Verlettinbergh Hill. . . ." See S 17.

The recorder then moves, according to notice given, "that John McComb [Sr.] be removed from his Office [as city surveyor].

"First. Because it is improper for any Man actually exercising the Trade of a Mason, employed in Building Houses for Individuals should be longer employed in regulating the Public Streets and

"Secondly. That in divers Instances he has discovered a want of Capacity to execute that office."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 413–14. On Nov. 19, it was ordered that McComb be furnished with a copy of the charges and notice of hearing, in reply to his petition that he might be heard.—Ibid., I: 415.

Nov. The last entries on the records of the congress of the Confedera-
1 tion are of this date.—Winsor, VII: 267.

25 In commemoration of the fifth anniversary of the evacuation of New York by the British, "the Artillery, Light Horse, Grenadiers and Infantry of Gen. Malcom's brigade under command of Major Christie" parade at noon, and exhibit "many beautiful and soldierly manœuvers."—Daily Adv., N 26, 1788. After the parade by a detachment of the Legion, and the discharge of a salute from the fort, some of the officers and citizens repaired to the City Tavern where they spent the day, drinking many "patriotic and sentimental toasts." Other officers and citizens celebrate the day at W. C. Bradford's, and there are "several other entertainments at different houses, in the city, in honor of the day."—N. Y. Packet, N 28, 1788.

Dec. The common council passes a resolution "that the Commis-
3 sioners provide the necessary Tools & erect two Forges for the manufacturing of Nails by the Vagrant & other Prisoners from time to time confined in Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 419. For a later employment of the bridewell inmates, see My 18, 1812.

" A standing committee of the common council is appointed to report "where more Lamps are necessary & wherever it can be done, that instead of Posts the Lamps be fixed to the Houses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 419. See, further, Mr 29, 1791.

" The common council decides to borrow on the city's credit £1,000 from the Bank of New York "to be applied towards the Repairs & additions making to the City Hall for the Accommodation of Congress;" and it is ordered that a promissory note for that sum be made out, payable in twelve months, and that it be sealed with the city seal, and signed by the recorder.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 420. See, further, Ja 7, 1789.

" A balance of £104:16 is paid to Elias Burger, Jr., "on Contract for buildg Wharf at the Fly Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 420.

8 The twelfth session of the state legislature begins at Albany (see Ja 1). The senate and assembly met there until July 16, 1789, when they chose New York City as their next meeting place.—Assemb. Jour. (1788–89), 3; ibid. (1789), 3, 27; Senate Jour. (1788–89), 3; ibid. (1789). They met in New York on Jan. 11, 1790 (q.v.).

10 An estimate, amounting to £10,435:8, of the money required to defray the city expenses for the coming year is approved by the common council, and a petition to the legislature for permission to Dec.
raise the money by tax is adopted. The board also requests that 10 the time of collection of taxes be altered from the winter to the summer.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 421. See Ja 15, 1790.

" The inhabitants of "Lumber Street" petition the common council for a well and pump and some lamps in that street. The petition is referred to the standing committee on lamps.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 421. The original of this petition (preserved in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room) shows the street designated as "Lombard Street." The petition argues that in its "obscure position" the street is rendered extremely dark and dangerous by the lack of lamps, and the entire city is endangered by the lack of a well, "since, should a fire happen in their Quarter (which consists of wooden Buildings), it might . . . easily extend itself." The committee writes a favourable endorsement on the petition.

On Dec. 31, firemen complained to the common council "that most of the public lamps at the time of the late fire at the House of Mr Burling in Beekmans Street about 1 O'Clock at Night were gone out;" and an inquiry was ordered. At the same time, the inhabitants of Herman St. asked that their street might be provided "with some of the public Lamps."—Ibid., I: 422.

12 Members of the association "for the relief of distressed Debtors confined in the Goal" (see Ja 26, 1787) address a memorial to the legislature, in which they say that from Jan. 2, 1787, to Dec. 3, 1788, there have been 1,162 commitments to the goal for debt, 716 of which have been for amounts less than 20 shillings. These debtors are "deprived of the comfort of their families, prevented from the opportunity of obtaining the means of subsistence by their own industry, subjected to the danger arising from putrid and contagious disorders . . ., and liable to become useless if not pernicious members of society from . . . acquiring habits of intemperance . . ." The memorialists contend that society is greatly injured by confining debtors who owe small sums, because their labour is worth so much more than their debts; and they ask for a remedy through legislation.—From the memorial, in Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 862–63.

17 The vestry of Trinity Church orders "that the Commissioners appointed to rebuild Trinity Church be directed to proceed towards completing the same until the Funds they are now possessed of, be exhausted . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See F 12, 1789.

21 A meeting of the N. Y. Society Library members is held at the Coffee House, and trustees elected. Later, new conditions for membership were published.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Ja, 1792 (in Antiquarian Soc. library, Worcester).

24 The sum already subscribed "for the building intended for the accommodation of Congress" amounts to £9,000. The room for the senate is nearly completed. The whole building will cost nearly £15,000, and will be 165 feet long.—Mass. Centinel (Boston), D 24, 1788.

29 John and Archibald M'Lean establish The New-York Daily Gazette as a successor to The Independent Journal.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 404.

31 The common council limits the size of a butcher's stall in the Fly Market to eight feet in length and three feet, six inches in width. The entire market floor is laid out by measure, with the exact location of passages, stalls, and cutting-blocks.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 423.

" The value of articles produced by the State of New York for 1788 is estimated to be £770,000, the exports being valued at about $1,000,000 (N. Y. currency). The value of the exports from the city, for 1788, exclusive of articles of foreign manufacture, and other articles in the coastwise trade, is:

Wheat,	322,000 bushels at 8/		£128,800
Indian corn,	183,000 " " 3/6		32,025
Rye,	10,000 " " 2/6		2,250

etc.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 10, 1789.

There is also published a comparative statement of the value of goods exported from the port of New York between July 5, 1765, and July 5, 1766, amounting to £277,146; those shipped from Philadelphia from April 5, 1765, to April 5, 1766, amounting to £492,616; and those exported from New York, from Jan. 1, 1788, to Jan. 1, 1789, amounting to £638,101.—Ibid., Mr 13, 1789.

" During the year 1788, 952 sea-going vessels arrived at New York, compared with 893 at Philadelphia.—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, III: 341.

— A directory of the members of congress, compiled from the city directories of 1789 and 1790, and arranged by states, was published by Valentine, in the Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 551 et seq.

— In this year, the jewelry firm of William and John Mott, of 240 Water St., issued a business "token" resembling a coin, the first to be issued by the merchants of New York.—Bushnell, An Historical Account of the First Three Business Tokens issued in the city of New York (1859), 8; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 596–98, with illustration on p. 597. Similar tokens were issued by other firms in 1794, 1795, and later years.—Ibid.

— Cornelius Tiebout, a New Yorker by birth, has the distinction of being "the first American-born professional engraver to produce really meritorious work." He was engraving maps and subject plates for New York publishers in 1789–90, and fairly good line portraits by 1793. Tiebout had been apprenticed to John Burger, a silversmith of New York, and it was in that business that he first learned to engrave upon metal. In 1793, he went to London to seek instruction among abler masters than he could find in his native country, but he returned to New York in 1796, and continued his profession here. His name disappears from the New York directories in 1799.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 271–72; cf. Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 155. The long list of Tiebout's plates includes two plans of New York, the Bowling Green Washington (Pl. 52, Vol. I), a view of Columbia College (Pl. 53-a, Vol. I), an east view of Trinity Church (Pl. 54-a, Vol. I), a view of Richmond Hill (Pl. 55-a, Vol. I), and a view of the City Hall from Wall St. (Pl. 57, Vol. I). For complete list, see Stauffer, op. cit., II: 520–33. More of his engravings, mostly of biblical subjects, are listed in Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 271–84.

— In this year, William Rollinson, an Englishman living in New York, was employed to chase the arms of the United States upon a set of gilt buttons for the coat which was worn by Washington on the day of his inauguration. Rollinson worked for silversmiths until 1791, when he made his first attempt at copperplate engraving. This essay was a small profile portrait of Washington done in the stippling manner. In 1812, he invented a machine to rule waved lines for engraving margins to bank notes. His name appears in the New York directories as an engraver from 1791 to 1842.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 225–26; Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 187–89. Among Rollinson's engravings are a view of the New York custom-house (Pl. 63, Vol. I), a view of New York from Long Island (Pl. 74, Vol. I), and a three-quarter length portrait of Alexander Hamilton, painted by Archibald Robertson. There is a complete list of his plates in Stauffer, op. cit., II: 447–51.

— In this year, John Dixey arrived in America. He was one of the first sculptors to work in the United States. For many years, between this date and 1820, he lived and practised his profession in New York. The original figure of Justice on the New York City hall, and the one on the old state house at Albany, were of his design and execution.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 390–91.

— In this year, Christopher Colles published A Survey of the Roads of the United States of America (Pl. 51-b, Vol. V), showing, among other things, Broadway and the Bowery Road to Kingsbridge and New Rochelle, as well as the location of the mile-stones, principal public buildings, residences, etc., on the route. It consists of title-page and 83 plates, engraved by Cornelius Tiebout. Each plate shows 12 miles of the roads between New York and Stratford, Poughkeepsie, Albany, Newborough, Kingston, Cranberry, Frankford, Allentown, Philadelphia, Mount Holly, Annapolis, etc. A perfect (?) copy was sold with the William Loring Andrews collection at The Anderson Galleries, April 18–19, 1921, including plates 45*, 46* and 47*; no copies being known of plates 34–39, the conclusion is they were never published.—See descrip. in catalogue of the sale (item No. 94). Regarding the mile-stones, see descrip. of Pl. 79, I: 473.

— In this year, Evert Bancker, Jr., and John McComb, city surveyors, made a plan of the lots and streets just south of Rector St., including Greenwich, Lumber, and Oyster Pasty Sts., west of Broadway.—From original in Bancker Coll., N. Y. P. L. (box B—F, folder "Broadway").

— Plans of lots on Golden Hill, at John and William Sts., bearing dates of 1773, 1775, 1781, and 1789, are preserved in the Bancker Coll., in the N. Y. P. L.

1789 — At this time, on the south side of Crown Street (the present Liberty Street), stood Livingston's sugar-house, adjoining the Middle Dutch Church, east of Nassau Street. "Built of stone, with five stories and a loft, pierced with three small windows on each floor on front, and five on the side, this structure remained for many years a monument to the sufferings of the American prisoners who had been inhumanely packed within its walls by the British."—Smith, The City of N. Y. in the Year of Washington's Inauguration, 1789 (N. Y., 1889), 36–37. The Rhinelander sugar-house, which had been erected by Bernart Cuyler in 1763, at the corner of the present Rose and Duane Streets, resembled it.—Ibid., 37; see also Mem. Hist., II: 454, 457.

The race-course, where the parades of the military companies were held, was "in the vicinity of the present junction of Division and Hester Streets."—Ibid., 66.

The principal wharves in the city were Albany Pier, on the east side of Coenties Slip; Exchange Slip, at the foot of Broad Street; Coenties Slip, Old Slip, Burling Slip; Beekman Slip, near the present end of Fulton St.; Peck Slip; New Slip, now called James Slip; Oliver Slip, and Catherine Slip.—Ibid., 105.

The ferries across the Hudson were: Paulus Hook (Jersey City) ferry, from the foot of Cortlandt St.; Hobuck ferry, from the foot of Vesey St.; Weehawken, Bull's, and Fort Lee ferries. Another ran from the foot of Whitehall St. to Elizabethtown. Those to Brooklyn were from the foot of the Fly Market stairs, and from Peck Slip.—Ibid., 106.

The important taverns were: The City Tavern, kept by Edward Bardin; one at 49 Cortlandt St., kept by the wife of Samuel Fraunces, who was Washington's steward; the True American, at No. 3 Great Dock (Pearl) St., opened by John Francis, Aug. 1785, whence he moved in May, 1789, to the building on the south-east corner of Broad and Pearl Streets; John Simmons' Tavern, on the north-west corner of Wall and Nassau Streets (not the south-west corner, as stated by Smith); the tavern of Aaron Aorson, at the corner of Nassau and Spruce Streets; the tavern of Jonathan Pearsee, at 28 Nassau St., corner of Ann St.; John Battin's tavern, at the corner of Nassau and John Streets; George Rawson's Tavern, at 82 Water St.; the tavern kept by the Widow Bradford, at the south-east corner of Wall and Water Streets; and Bull's Head Tavern, on Bowery Lane, kept by Richard Varian.—Ibid., 121.

There were 22 churches in the city representing the following 13 denominations: Reformed Dutch, Protestant Episcopal, French Huguenot, Quaker, Lutheran, Jewish, Presbyterian, Baptist, Moravian, German Reformed, Methodist, Roman Catholic, and Independent Congregational.—Ibid., 125. This year the Methodists erected a second church, of stone, on Second (Forsyth) Street near the corner of Division St.—Ibid., 163. The new meeting-house of the Independent Congregational Church stood at the upper end of Great George St., on the west side, a little below Leonard St.—Ibid., 164; Goerck-Mangin map of 1803, Pl. 70, Vol. I. About 1789, the Presbyterian congregation bought a lot on Nassau St., opposite the Middle Dutch Church, and erected a two-storey brick schoolhouse, measuring 25 by 40 feet.—Knapp's Hist. of the Brick Church, 90, 203.

— The desk, pure Sheraton in style, and some other American furniture used by Washington in 1789–1790 are now preserved in the city hall.—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1901), 171.

— For a view of the bridewell, in the Park, in 1789 (drawn by J. Anderson), see Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 486.

For view of federal hall and the Verplanck mansion, Wall St., 1789 (drawn by David Grim), see ibid. (1856), 37.

Jan. — Isaiah Thomas issues the first number of The Massachusetts Magazine in Boston. It ran through eight volumes.—Ford, Check-List of Am. Magazines, 9.

5 — A meeting of the "Society for the Encouragement of American Manufactures" is called for this evening at Rawson's Tavern (No. 82 Water St.), for the election of officers, etc.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 1, 1789. Later, they agreed to raise a fund by subscription for establishing manufactures in this city.—Ibid., F 4, 6, 16, 20, 26, 1789. It was decided on March 18 to publish the constitution proposed for the society, which was to be known as the "New York Manufacturing Society."—Ibid., Mr 20, 1789.

6 — The Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen (see N 17, 1785), according to a notice dated Dec. 25, 1788 (see N. Y. Daily Gaz., D 30, 1788; Daily Adv., etc.), holds a business meeting and dinner at "the House of Mr. Samuel Frauncis, Corner of John and Nassau Streets"

1789 (see My 8, 1788). The toasts were patriotic. One of them was:
Jan. "A cobweb pair of breeches, a porcupine saddle, and a hard trotting-
6 horse to all the enemies of freedom!"—Annals of the Gen. Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen (1882), 14–15. Bayles is in error in placing this meeting at 49 Cortlandt St—See his Old Taverns of N. Y., 341–43. A news report of the event refers to it as an "elegant entertainment." The remnants of the feast were sent to the new jail. This brought the following note: "The prisoners confined in goal for small debts return their most grateful thanks to the Society of Mechanics, for their donations of bread, beef and cheese. Their benevolence gave a temporary relief to many persons now in want and poverty who formerly were in easy and comfortable circumstances. . . ."—N. Y. Jour., Ja 15, 1789.

7 Inhabitants of New York, including John Jay, who "have lent their Credit for drawing Monies out of the Bank of New York to be applied towards the additions & Alterations to the City Hall for the accommodation of Congress," for which they have given promissory notes to the amount of their respective subscriptions, petition the common council that the city apply to the legislature for their "Indemnification." The draft of this petition is agreed to, it proposes not only to obtain a law to reimburse them, but also provides "for raising Monies to the amount of £13000 for discharging the said Notes & for compleating the said Building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 424.

At the same time, the common council votes £1,000 more on the city's credit "towards the Repairs and Additions."—Ibid., I: 425.

Later advances were as follows: Jan. 30, £2,000 (ibid., I: 427); Feb. 25, £1,000 (p. 431); March 11, £2,000 (p. 434); April 1, £2,600: 3:10 (p. 438); April 13, £2,000 (p. 443). On April 27, the board decided that they could not extend the city's credit further for this purpose.—Ibid., I: 448. See later references on Je 10 and 18.

" The common council has "no objection to the appropriation of the uppermost Room in the South East part of the City Hall to the use of the Society Library provided the same shall not be necessary for the accommodation of the Gen[l] Gov[t] of the United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831) I: 425.

" James Culbertson is paid £2:12 "for the use of his Cellar to store the old Copper from the Roof of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 425.

It is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 425. The committee reported on April 15 that "in their Opinion the said Map is correct & well executed." It was approved by the board, and ordered filed in the clerk's office.—Ibid., I: 444.

8 Benjamin Wynkoop, Levi Hollingsworth, and G. Turner, corresponding committee of the Rumsian Society of Philadelphia, write to the common council of New York City that Mr. Rumsey has invented "an Engine far superior to any other for supplying Towns with Water," that he has applied to the legislature for a patent, and that "whenever the Legislature shall grant his Request the Rumsian Society would come forward with proposals for supplying this City with Water by Contract." They suggest to the corporation "the propriety of making the necessary Arrangements for forwarding or even compleating the Object of such Contract in the course of the ensuing Summer." This letter was read in common council on Jan. 30, and it was resolved that "M[r] Rumsey's invention ought to meet with every due encouragem[t] & that it is the Wish of this Board to enter into a Contract for supplying this City with Water But that the State of the Finances of this Corporation will not admit of their entering in such Contract in the course of next Summer They however will be happy to receive Proposals to the end that they may be enabled to take the same into consideration & make the necessary Arrangem[ts] for such a Measure as soon as possible."—*M. A number of merchants have called a meeting of citizens, for " this evening at the Merchants' Coffee House, to nominate a merchant to represent the New York City district in congress. It is stated that "it is not probable that any gentleman of that class will be returned from any of the other districts."—N. Y. Jour., F 26, 1789.

The legislature passes an act amending and repealing parts of 28 the provincial ferry act of 1732. New ferry rates are established. The inhabitants of Brooklyn are permitted "to transport their own Goods, in their own Boats, from the Island of Nassau to the City of New-York, and from the City of New-York to the Island of Nassau, without paying any Ferriage for the same." This act in no way disturbs New York City's monopoly of the ferry privilege originally acquired.—Laws of N. Y. (1789), chap. 37 (Gaine ed., 1789, II: 450). Cf. N 2, 1717; O 14, 1732.

Alexander Hamilton, in a letter dated simply "Tuesday," but Mar.
evidently written on Tuesday, March 3, 1789, urges the mayor to 3 convene the common council on this day, "to pass an act for appropriating the City Hall to the use of Congress," to publish such act in the papers, etc.—See Pl. 52a, Vol. V, reproduced from the original in the collection of J. Pierpont Morgan, Esq., formerly in the collection of the late John D. Crimmins.

Such action is taken, the common council passing the following resolution: "Whereas this Board did on the 17[th] Day of September last [q. v.] Resolve that the whole of the City Hall of this City be appropriated for the accommodation of the General Government of the United States And whereas the said Building hath been improved & repaired for the purpose Resolved that M[r] Recorder be requested on behalf of this Board to communicate to the Congress of the United States the Substance of the said Resolution of the 17[th] September last in such manner as he shall deem most respectful & proper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 432.

The following notice was published in the Daily Adv., March 4, and the N. Y. Jour., March 5: "The Corporation of this city having appropriated the City Hall for the accommodation of the Congress of the United States, and the same having been elegantly improved and repaired for that purpose, the Common Council have resolved that the Recorder communicate the same to the Congress of the United States accordingly." The Federal Constitution becomes effective.—Winsor, VII: 267. 4
This is "the First Wednesday in March," appointed by congress on Sept. 13 last for establishing the new regime. At daybreak, at noon, and at six in the evening, the guns of the battery were again fired, and the bells of the city were rung, to usher in the new era,—"the Fourth of March, 1789, on which the operations of the new general government were to commence."—*N. Both houses of congress meet at the federal hall, the alterations in the building, begun on Oct. 6th last, being almost completed.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 6, 1789. As only eight senators are present, however, congress adjourns until a quorum arrives.—Annals of Cong. (Gales ed., 1834), I: column 16.

The proceedings of congress, beginning with the first session

1789 Mar. 4 (under the Constitution) on this day, were published as separate journals for the two branches of congress, one entitled the Journal of the First Session of the Senate, and pub'd by Greenleaf, N. Y., in 1789; the other entitled the Journal of the House of Representatives, printed by Francis Childs and John Swaine, N. Y. (1789?). The daily proceedings of the congress of the Confederation appeared in the Journal of the United States in Congress Assembled, printed by John Dunlap (Phila.).

9 The following address, signed by Wm. Mooney, chairman, is drawn up at a meeting of some of the founders of the Tammany Society: "The vicissitudes which occur in Political as well as in Civil life, are indelibly recorded in the Annals of Human affairs, and confirmed by the all seeing Eye of the Great Spirit; by whose Providence we exist, and have become a Great & Free People.

"Be it therefore remembered, that in consequence of encroachments on our inherent rights, by adventurers from Foreign lands, it has become imminently apparent that our Independence, so recently and so dearly obtained by our Fathers and our Brothers, in the Glorious but cruel sanguinary War of the Revolution, is in danger of being temporarily disturbed.—In order therefore to counteract the machinations of those Slaves, and Agents of foreign Despots;—A Great National Institution, founded on the basis of American Liberty as the rallying point of Freemen, is indispensably necessary to be established, for the preservation and perpetuity of those blessings which through Divine Providence we now enjoy, and have pledged ourselves to transmit unimpaired down to our latest posterity. the precedeing brief outlines exclusive of a series of minor causes, being seriously and deeply reflected on, by a few genuine Sons of Liberty, whose Patriotic Virtue, Fortitude and Perseverence; eventually, after years of opposition surmounted all deficulties; Resolved to establish the contemplated Institution, and to call it Tammany Society or Columbian Order."—From bound photostats (made from originals in Tammany Hall) in MSS. Div., N. Y. P. L.

There had been a Tammany Society in New York in 1787 (q.v., Ap 30 and My 1), but the organization makes its reckonings from 1789 as the year of its establishment. The birthday of its patron was celebrated on May 12 (q.v.), and its constitution was adopted on Aug. 10 (q.v.), of this year.

10 Gov. Clinton writes to Washington, inviting him to reside with him after his arrival in New York.—Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 224. To this Washington replied on March 25: "I shall make it a point to take hired lodgings or rooms in a tavern until some house can be provided. Because it would be wrong, in my real judgment, to impose such a burden on any private family, as must unavoidably be occasioned by my company; and because I think it would be generally expected, that, being supported by the public at large, I should not be burdensome to individuals." He adds that his reception in New York will be most congenial to his feelings if it is "a quiet entry devoid of ceremony, be the manner of it what it may."—The Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), XI: 375. See also Mr 30.

11 As a quorum is not yet present for the congress to transact business, it is agreed that a circular be written to the absent members, requesting their immediate attendance.—Annals of Congress (Gales ed.), I: column 16.

" The committee, appointed on Dec. 10, 1788 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, I: 421), to ascertain how the Brooklyn ferry can be disposed of so as best to promote public convenience and the city's revenue, makes its report to the common council. It is decided to rent the ferry-house and other buildings at Brooklyn independently.—Ibid., I: 434. At the next meeting, March 18, it was further resolved to license six persons to operate a large and a small boat each, the large one to carry heavy freight and passengers and the small one to carry light freight and passengers. Four of the large and four of the small boats were to "ply to & from the Fly Market Slip in this City and the Corporation Ferry Stairs at Brooklyn," and two of the large and two of the small boats were to "ply to & from the Stairs at Pecks Slip & the Corporation Ferry Stairs at Brooklyn." The boats, masts, and sails, were to be "of such Form & Dimensions as the Wardens of the Port of New York shall approve," and each boat was to be "constantly worked and managed by two sober & discreet able bodied & experienced Water Men." Each boat was to be furnished with "four good Oars & two Boat Hooks." The boats were "all numbered," and "the Name of the Owner and the number of each Boat" were to be "painted on the inside of the Stern of the Boat easily to be seen." Ferry rates were already established. Horned cattle were not to be "taken off or landed by any of the said Boats at any Place in this City to the West Ward of Catharine Slip in the Out Ward." Each person licensed to keep the ferry-boats plying to and from the Fly Market Slip was to pay to the city treasurer £7 per month; and each one licensed to ply to and from Pecks Slip £3:10 per month. Anyone in default ten days after the time appointed, or contravening any of the laws or ordinances relating to ferries, was to forfeit his license.—Ibid., I: 435. See also the Daily Adv., Mr 24, 1789. See, further, Ap 1, 1789. Mar. 11

"When no additional members appearing, it was agreed that another circular should be written to eight of the nearest absent members, particularly desiring their attendance, in order to form a quorum."—Annals of Congress (Gales ed.), I: column 16. 18

The recent enlargement of the Fly Market proving insufficient, the common council appoints a committee to report a plan for a suitable addition, and directs the ways and means committee to carry it into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 436. 19

The common council directs the clerk to advertise for proposals for "keeping the Ferries from this City to Powlus Hook & Hoboock" for the term of three years from May 1.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 436–37. On April 15, John Holdron's offer of £50 per annum for the former, and John Stevens' offer of £10 per annum for the latter, being the highest bids, the board appointed a committee to confer with them to find out if they would offer more if the term were lengthened.—Ibid., I: 444. On April 27, Holdron offered £80 for six years; but the first proposal of £50 for three years was finally accepted.—Ibid., I: 448. "

The common council appoints a committee "to treat with Mr Verplanck on the purchase of his Lot adjoining the City Hall to enlarge the space on that side thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 437. See Pl. 57, Vol. I. On Sept. 24, the board ordered that the treasurer pay "the ballce due to Mr Verplanck for the Lot between his House & the City Hall lately purchased of him . . ."—Ibid., I: 486. Cf. Sept. 16. "

Samuel Webb writes from New York to K. K. Van Rensselaer: "it gives me great pleasure to find the good people of Columbia, are in opinion with us, respecting a change in the Administration, and I have 't a doubt if the Northern Counties exert themselves we shall have the pleasure of hearing Judge Yates announced our Governor,— . . . you well know the art and cunning of Clinton and his party, and that they are useing every possible exertion for his reelection—we must work double tides to defeat them, in this quarter we have nothing to fear, he is most heartily despised, except by a few Sycophants, whom he has put in Office and their dependents,—'whose price of Office has been Obedience to their Chief'—there is a series of letters now publishing in Childs' daily paper, which are worthy your attention, they have taken up his line of conduct from a period, previous to the commencement of the late War, and will be brot down to the present time, & as those letters will contain incontrovertable facts, they will have a just influence, wherever they are read. 22

"Congress have not yet made a quorum, to open the Votes for President and Vice president, but 'tis daily expected they will be able to proceed on that necessary & important business.—The City is gay and lively, a vast number of strangers with us, and next week or the week after the Theatre will open."—From original in Emmet Coll., No. 9272. For the election, see Ap 6.

In anticipation of Washington's being elected president of the United States, and because he "may be expected in a few weeks," brigade orders are issued for the brigade to prepare to receive him "with every possible demonstration of military respect and honor."—N. Y. Packet, Ap 3, 1789. "

In a report to the common council, the "Commissioners appointed to superintend the Building for the accommodation of Congress" state that "their funds are again exhausted and the Building unfinished." They ask that the board "will lodge with the Bank Security for the further Sum of Two thousand pounds in order to enable them to proceed." The report is signed by Alex. Macomb, P. C. L'Enfant, and James Nicholson.—From the original MS. with "Petitions, 1700–1795," city clerk's record-room. The report is not entered in the M. C. C. See, however, Je 18. 24

Federal hall is thus described: "The southern front, towards Broad street, is composed of a plain arched basement, which likewise bounds the east and west sides of the building, and forms a flagged walk for the recreation and convenience of the citizens. 26

"Over the basement are Tuscan columns, supporting Doric

1789 Mar. 26 pillers, which form a grand balcony with a handsome entablature of stars, &c.

"The attic story is composed of ornamented figures, festoons and trophies, crowned with a pediment, on which is a large eagle, surrounded with a glory, appears bursting from a cloud, and carrying thirteen arrows, and the arms of the United States. A small, though elegant, spire, finishes this division of the edifice.

"After entering the building through any part of the arched walk, we come into the first hall, flagged with marble, judiciously laid out, and communicating with several rooms, which we suppose are intended for offices. Passing through the first, we come to a second spacious hall or aera [sic], which runs up through to the roof, and is roofed by a glass cupola, throwing a strong light down on the lobby, which is on the first floor, running quite round this centre aera, and communicating with the senate chamber, salloon, audience, and anti-chambers.

"The senate-chamber is about 40 feet square and 15 in height, with convenient fire-places, and is neatly wainscotted; the cieling [sic] plain, except a sun and thirteen stars in the center. The salloon, audience chamber, &c. are all equally well contrived, as are the stairs, which lead to them and to the two galleries, erected in the representatives' apartment, for spectators.

"The representatives' apartment, which is the master piece of the whole, and most entiled [sic] to the name of federal hall, is an oblong room, the ends somewhat octagonal, all 70 by 50 feet. This room comprehends two stories, a basement, and a principal; the basement contains four fire places with oval windows placed between each. The principal has 6 large windows, 3 to the east and 3 to the west, with semicircular pediments. Several Ionic columns and pilasters, fluted and otherwise decorated, are properly arranged throughout this room. On the south side, the two galleries, one over the other, for spectators, have a fine effect, and at the north end is the President's chair, with a very large table, projecting into the center of the room, around which are the seats for the 59 representatives. On the wainscot of the north end are several trophies, and other emblematical fancy figures, together with the arms of the United States; but as they are not yet completed, it is not in our power to give an adequate description of them.

"The whole composition is most admirably contrived for the purpose for which it is intended. It is an object which indicates, that something more considerable would have been executed, had not the artist been confined to such narrow limits. The style is bold, simple and regular; the parts few, large and distinct; the transitions sudden, and strongly marked; and we think the whole has an air of grandeur."—N. Y. Jour., Mr 26, citing the Daily Gazette. Cf. description in Mass. Mag., Je, 1789 (q. v.). For the landmark history of this edifice, see "City Hall (second)," in L. M. R. K., III: 973. See also Pls. 32-b and 57, Vol. I.

" Complaint is made of the neglected condition of "the street which leads from Powles-Hook ferry into Broad Way" (Cortlandt St.), which is called "the key to the city." It contains filth and rubbish, and pigs going at large are a nuisance. Some people "advocate the cause of the pigs, by saying that they keep the streets clean." The opinion of the majority is that, as the pigs only serve to scatter the dirt already collected in heaps, the law should be strictly executed."—N. Y. Jour., Mr 26, 1789. See also L. M. R. K. III: 942.

30 Washington writes from Mount Vernon to James Madison: "I have been favored with your Letter of the 19th; by which it appears that a quorum of Congress was hardly to be expected until the beginning of the past week—As this delay must be very irksome to the attending Members, and every days continuance of it (before the Government is in operation) will be more sensibly felt; —I am resolved, no interruption shall proceed from me that can well be avoided (after notice of the Election is announced); and therefore take the liberty of requesting the favor of you to engage Lodgings for me previous to my arrival.—Col° Humphreys, I presume, will be of my party; and Mr Lear who has already lived three years with me as a private Secretary, will accompany, or preceed me in the stage.

"On the subject of lodgings I will frankly declare, I mean to go into none but hired ones.—If these cannot be had tolerably convenient (I am not very nice) I would take rooms in the most decent Tavern, till a house can be provided for the more permanent reception of the President.—I have already declined a very polite & pressing offer from the Governor [Clinton—see Mr 10], to lodge at his house till a place could be prepared for me; after which should any other of a similar nature be made, there would be no propriety in the acceptance. Mar. 30

"But as you are fully acquainted with my sentiments on this subject, I shall only add, that as I mean to avoid private families on the one hand, so on another, I am not desirous of being placed early in a situation for entertaining. Therefore hired (private) lodgings would not only be more agreeable to my own wishes, but, possibly, more consistent with the dictates of sound policy.—For, as it is my wish & intention to conform to the public desire and expectation, with respect to the style proper for the Chief Magistrate to live in, it might be well to know (as far as the nature of the case will admit) what these are before he enters upon it.

"After all, something may perhaps have been decided upon with respect to the accommodations of the President, before this letter wd have reached you that may render this application nugatory.—If otherwise, I will sum up all my wishes in one word,—and that is to be placed in an independent situation, with the prospect I have alluded to, before me."—From original in possession of V. H. Paltsits, a photostat of which is in N. Y. P. L. Cf. The Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), II: 374. (It should be observed that this letter was written a week prior to Washington's election to the Presidency and two weeks prior to his notification. He had been advised by Hamilton and others of his expected selection, and had very reluctantly decided to make the personal sacrifice necessary to accept the nomination for the good of the Union. See Ap 6.)

"The matter, however, was settled by the request of Congress to Mr. Osgood to fit up for the President's use the house, No. 3 Cherry Street, which had been used by former Presidents of Congress. This house had been built in 1770 [q. v.] by Walter Franklin, an old merchant in the city, and upon his death had passed into the possession of Mr. Samuel Osgood, who was appointed Post-master General in September, 1789. It stood on the north side of Cherry Street several doors east of the present Franklin Square which received its name in March, 1817 [q. v.] in honor of Benjamin Franklin, its former appellation having been St. George's Square. The house was square, five windows wide, and three stories high, but was neither very spacious nor conveniently situated. . . . The Franklin house was in after years used as a music store and by the Franklin Bank, and was demolished in the summer of 1856, at which time the chair now used by the President of the New York Historical Society was constructed from its materials."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789 (1889), 224–25. See also L. M. R. K., III: 949. At No. 1 Cherry St. was the house of Ephriam Brasher, silversmith.—City Directory, 1789.

The common council, on examining the applications for "keeping Ferry Boats across the East River" (see Mr 11), decides to license Henry Dawson, Gilbert van Master, John Hicks, and Jacob Wilkins, Jr., to keep two boats each, to ply between the Fly Market and Brooklyn. No one having applied to keep the ferry from Peck's Slip, the board orders that the advertisement for applicants be continued in the newspapers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 439. 1

Y. Daily Gaz.*, Ap 6, 1789. 2

The common council agrees to the proposal of the committee appointed on Jan. 30 (q. v.) "to report a Plan for disposing of the 3

1789 Apr. 3 Common Lands," which expressed the opinion "that such part of the Common Lands as are unappropriated and laid out into lots by Mr Goerick, . . . from the southermost part thereof to lots No° 66 & 67 should be sold at public Vendue . . . at the Coffee House on . . . the 20th—of April," according to specified terms.—*M. " The common council makes payment of £14:8 for watchmen's hats.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 442. On June 5, it paid £1:16 for painting them.—Ibid., I: 457. These hats (or "Caps") were made of stiff leather.—Ibid., II: 423.

6 Additional members of the senate having arrived on March 19, 21, 28, and April 6, a quorum is now present, and is called to order. Their credentials having been read and filed, John Langdon is chosen by ballot "President pro tem.," for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes of the electors for president and vice-president of the United States. Twelve senators and fifty-seven members of the house of representatives participated in this voting. Washington received the unanimous vote of the electors for president. The vote was scattered among eleven candidates for vice-president, John Adams receiving the largest number, which was thirty-four, and John Jay the next highest number, which was nine. Adams was therefore declared elected. A letter was received from James Duane, enclosing resolutions of the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New York," tendering to congress the use of the city hall.—Annals of Congress (Gales ed.), I: columns 16–17; Daily Adv., Ap 7; Winsor, VII: 267. Charles Thompson was appointed to inform the president of his election, and Mr. Bowen the vice-president. These messengers were to start on April 7.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 7, 1789. Richard Henry Lee writes to Washington: ". . . On this day we went to business & to my great satisfaction I heard a unanimous vote of the electing states in favor of calling you to the honorable office of Prest of the U. S. Before this period I judged it might not be acceptable to speak my sentiments to you on this subject; but now I hope I may be permitted to express my ardent hope that your inclinations may correspond with the United wish of America, that you should preside over these councils which you have so greatly contributed to render independent. Indeed I am sure that the public happiness which I know you have so much at heart will be very insecure without your acceptance . . ."—Letters of Richard Henry Lee, II: 482–83.

15 John Fenno begins the publication of a semi-weekly called the Gazette of the United States.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431; Early Newspapers, II: 420. For last N. Y. issue, see O 13, 1790.

Apr. 15 Mr. Benson, of the house of representatives, who was appointed to confer with a committee of the senate "upon the subject of arrangements for the reception of the President, and Vice-president," makes the following report:

"That Mr. Osgood, the proprietor of the house lately occupied by the President of Congress, be requested to put the same, and the furniture therein, in proper condition for the residence and use of the President of the United States, and otherwise, at the expence of the United States, to provide for his temporary accommodation.

"That it will be most eligible in the first instance, that a committee of three Members from the Senate, and five from the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Houses respectively, attend to receive the President, at such place as he shall embark at from New-Jersey for this city, and conduct him without form, to the house lately occupied by the President of Congress, and that at such time thereafter, as the President shall signify, it shall be most convenient for him, he be formally received by both houses.

"That a Committee of two members from the Senate, and three members from the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Houses respectively, wait on the Vice-President of the United States, as soon as he shall come to this city, and in the name of the Congress of the United States, congratulate him on his arrival."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ap 18, 1789.

" The common council orders that the clerk prepare an ordinance "to amend the Law 'for regulating the paving & keeping in Repair the public Streets' so as that no Stoop platform or Step extend beyond Six feet, or Bow Window beyond twenty Inches into any Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 445. Published on April 20, this ordinance contained the following provisions:

". . . That all streets within this city, of twenty-two feet wide and upwards, which shall hereafter be new paved, shall be paved agreeable to the following regulations, viz.

"That the foot path or walk on each side of such street shall be of the breadth of one fifth part of the width of the whole street, and be laid or paved with brick or flat stone, and secured with a beam or cut stone along the outside thereof."

The law provides that the remaining three-fifths of the street shall be properly arched, paved, and kept in repair by the householders on the street.

Also, "That no cellar light hereafter to be built in any street shall be extended from any house more than the fifteenth part of the width of such street. That no canopy, awning, shed, porch, portico, cellar-door, platform, stoop, or step hereafter to be built or erected in any street of this city, shall extend more than one tenth part of the width of such street, and that no stoop, porch or platform, other than with the backs, or railing, shall hereafter be built in any street of this city, under penalty of twenty shillings for each instance."—Daily Adv., April 20, 1789; Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 8.

20 Vice-Pres. John Adams arrives in the city at four o'clock, "amidst the acclamations of all ranks of citizens." He is met at Kingsbridge, and a cavalcade is formed there to escort him into the city.—Daily Adv., Ap 21, 1789. "From the Connecticut line to Kingsbridge, he was attended by the Light Horse of West-Chester County, under the command of Major Pintard. At Kingsbridge he was met by Gen. Malcom, with the officers of his brigade, and the City Troop of Horse, commanded by Captain Stakes. Also by Officers of distinction—many members of Congress—and a large number of Citizens in carriages and on horseback. On passing the Fort, a federal salute was fired. His excellency alighted at the house of the Hon. John Jay Esq. A Committee of both Houses of Congress, especially appointed for that purpose, attended to congratulate his Excellency on his arrival."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ap 22; N. Y. Weekly Museum, Ap 25, 1789.

" The diary of the Moravian congregation in New York contains the following record: "Doctor Livingston, the Low Dutch minister called here to acquaint Bro. Birkby [Moravian pastor], that it was the intention of all denominations to meet in their churches or places of worship on the day when the President moves from his house to Federal Hall to take the oath and to be inaugurated into his office; that in every place of worship there be a prayer in a solemn manner offered up to the Lord in behalf of this nation and also of the President and Vice President at 9 o'clock in the morning."—Penn. Mag. of Hist. and Biog., XIII: 245.

"In the afternoon at 4 o'clock, the Vice-President, his Excel-

1789 lency John Adams arrived here, and it occasioned a great to do
Apr. in the city, but as it rained heavily, the extravagant proceedings 20 were much alloy'd."—Ibid.

" The common council orders "that the committee appointed to provide a place for the Reception of the fire Engines, Buckets &c &c formerly deposited in the City Hall [see F 25] be also directed to provide a place for the City Watchmen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 446.

" The "elegant Dwelling-House, called White-conduit house," is advertised to be let from May 1st. The house is described as "two stories and half high, having seven fire places, three rooms on the first floor, three on the second floor, and three garrets; together with an agreeable pleasure garden, with beautiful arbours, and a stable and coach-house, delightfully situated nearly opposite Mr. Clarkson's on the northern end of Great-George street, commanding a very fine prospect; and its vicinity to this city renders it both a town and country residence to any genteel family." Applicants were directed to Arnout Canon, near the Fly-market ferry, or to William Alexander, corner of Reed and Great George Sts.—Daily Adv., Ap 20, 1789.

21 Vice-President John Adams is escorted to the chair of the senate, and delivers an address of acceptance of the position. For full text of the address, see Jour. of Congress. See also Annals of Congress (Gales ed.), I: columns 22–23; N. Y. Jour., Ap 23, 1789; Winsor, VII: 267. The installation of the vice-president is thus distinguished from the inauguration of the president. Cf. Ap 30.

" "The following arrangement is agreed upon by his Excellency the Governor and the principal officers of the State and city for the reception of the President of the United States. 1. A deputation of the state officers, to consist of his Honor the Chancellor and the Adjutant General, accompanied by a deputation from the corporation of the city of New-York, to consist of the Recorder, will receive his Excellency, the President of the United States, on the Jersey Shore. 2. A salute will be fired from the Battery immediately on the President's embarkation. 3. Should he pass the Battery, a second salute will be fired on his passing; and should he land in the city without passing the Battery, the second salute will be fired on his landing. 4. His Excellency the Governor, and the principal officers of the state, and 5. The Mayor and principal officers of the corporation will attend and receive the President on his landing, and thence accompany him to his house. The citizens who attend on the occasion, will form in such manner, as that the President and his attendants may conveniently pass through their ranks. 6. The Volunteers of the Legion of Gen. Malcom's brigade, and Col. Bauman's regiment of Artillery will parade in their uniforms. 7. Immediately after the salute on the President's landing, the bells of the several churches, etc., will ring, and continue ringing half an hour. 8. The colors of the Fort, and of the vessels in the harbour will be displayed on firing the first salute. 9. The city will be illuminated from seven to nine o'clock in the evening."—Daily Adv., Ap 21, 1789.

" The "Federal Barge" is launched. It is "between forty and fifty feet long, and moulded upon the finest model."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ap 22, 1789.

22 About noon, the president's barge, "being entirely completed, and making a most beautiful appearance," started for Elizabeth Town, where it arrived at about four o'clock. The gentlemen who attended in the barge, "to receive his Excellency, and escort him to the metropolis," were a deputation from the senate and house of representatives, the chancellor of state, the adjutant-general, and the recorder of the city.—N. Y. Jour., Ap 23, 1789. The boat was between 40 and 50 feet long, and cost "£200 or £300."—Letter of Fisher Ames to Geo. A. Minot, New York, Mr 25, 1789, in Works of Fisher Ames, ed. by Seth Ames (1854), I: 31.

An "Inventory of Articles Belonging to the President's Barge," dated June 3, 1789, and signed "Ebenezer Stevens," shows the following items:

"Barge Rudder & Tiller
15 Oars . . . 1 out
2 Boat Hooks
1 Mast & Sail
1 Gang board
1 Mop & Brush—gone
1 Crab & Block
2 Paynters
1 Takle & Swifter
1 Arning [awning?]
3 Cushions
1 Ensign & Penant Apr.
13 Shirts 22

—From the original MS. in metal file No. 10, city clerk's record-room. Artists who have pictured Washington's arrival and departure in this vessel do not show the mast and sail; these were probably not used on ceremonious occasions.

It is thought advisable to dispense with illuminations on the " evening of the arrival of the president, and the citizens are notified that there are to be none. The following is the proposed order of procession, from the place of landing:—"1. The Troop of Horse. 2. The Artillery, and the residue of the Legion. 3. The Military Officers, in uniform, who are off duty. 4. The President's Guard. 5. The President, the Governor and their Suites. 6. The principal Officers of State. 7. The Mayor and Corporation. 8. The Clergy. 9. The Citizens."—Daily Adv., Ap 22, 1789.

Contrary to this notification, the common council passes a different resolution: "Whereas this Board have reason to believe that a very great proportion of the Citizens are earnestly desirous to illuminate their Houses on the Evening of the arrival of the President of the United States, as a Testimony of their Joy on that interesting Event; and that Preparations are already made for that purpose It is therefore recommended to the Citizens to illuminate their Houses from the Hour of seven to nine; . . . And . . . that the Bells of the several Churches and other public Buildings commence ringing on the Presidents landing and continue for half an Hour."—M. C. C. (1784–1838), I: 446. At the same time, they issue a warrant to pay Gen. Malcom £16 "to procure Gun powder for the Militia on the Presidents arrival in this City."—Ibid.

"The Eagle in the front of the Federal State House is now dis- " played; the general appearance of this front is truly august."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 22, 1789. See F 6.

President Washington, having left Mount Vernon two days after 23 being notified of his election (see Ap 14), came North to take up his duties as the first chief magistrate of the United States. He passed through Alexandria, Baltimore, Chester, Philadelphia, and Trenton to Elizabeth Town Point, and was everywhere welcomed with public rejoicing and festivity.—Avery, Hist. of the U. S., VII: 18–19.

On the 23d he is conveyed to New York from Elizabeth Town, "amidst the joyful acclamations of every party and every description of citizens." One newspaper account of the event states:

"On this great occasion, the hand of industry was suspended, and the various pleasures of the capital, were concentrated to a single enjoyment. . . .

"The President was received at Elizabeth-Town, by a deputation of three Senators, five Representatives of the Congress of the United States [see Baker, Washington after the Rev., 128], and three officers of the State and Corporation [Chancellor Robt. R. Livingston, Adj.-Gen. Nicholas Fish, Recorder Richard Varick]; with whom he embarked in the barge, built for the purpose . . ., and rowed by thirteen pilots of this harbour, dressed in white uniforms; Thomas Randall, Esq. acting as cockswain.

"No language can paint the beautiful display made on his excellency's approach to the city. The shores were crowded with a vast concourse of citizens, waiting with exulting anxiety his arrival —His Catholic Majesty's Sloop of War the Galviston, (Mr. Dohrman's) ship North Carolina, and the other vessels in port, were dressed and decorated in the most superb manner.—His excellency's barge was accompanied by the barge of the Hon. Gen. Knox, and a great number of vessels and boats from Jersey and New-York, in his train.—As he passed the Galviston, he received a salute of thirteen guns, and was welcomed by an equal number from the battery.

"The whole water scene was animated and moving beyond description. The grand gala formed an object the most interesting imaginable.

"On his excellency's arrival at the stairs, prepared and ornamented, at Murray's wharf [foot of Wall St.], for his landing; he was received and congratulated by his excellency, the Governor of the State [Geo. Clinton], and the officers of the State and Corporation, and the following procession formed. First Col. Lewis, accompanied by 2 officers, and followed by the troop of dragoons, commanded by Capt. Stakes—The German grenadiers, headed by Capt. Scriba—Music—Infantry of the brigade, under the command of captains Swartwout and Steddiford—Grenadiers, under Capt.

1789 Apr. 23 Harfin—Col. Bauman, at the head of the regiment of artillery—music—Gen. Malcom and aid—Officers of the Militia—Committee of Congress—The PRESIDENT, supported by Governor Clinton—The President's suite—Officers of the State—Mayor and Aldermen of New-York—The French and Spanish Ambassadors in their carriage—the whole order followed by an amazing concourse of citizens.

"The procession advanced through Queen street to the house fitted up for the reception of his Excellency, where it terminated. After which, he was conducted without form to the house of Governor Clinton [in Queen (now Pearl) St. opposite Cedar St.], with whom his Excellency dined.—In the evening the houses of the citizens were brilliantly illuminated."—Daily Adv., Ap 24, 1789. This account is followed closely by the Gaz. of the U. S., Ap 25; Penn. Gaz., Ap 29; and N. Y. Jour., Ap 30, 1789.

Another newspaper account states that the president arrived at New York at about two o'clock, after a trip of two hours across the bay. His barge "was accompanied by a barge containing the Heads of the great departments of the United States, viz. The Honourable the Board of Treasury, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the Secretary of War." The Spanish packet ("Galviston") displayed "every flag known to foreign nations." The "North Carolina," belonging to Arnold H. Dohrman, Esq., was similarly decorated.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 25, 1789.

Elias Boudinot, at whose house in Elizabeth Town Washington took breakfast and met the committee of congress (of whom Boudinot was one), wrote to his wife on April 24 an account of the events of the day. After describing the crossing of Newark Bay, he says:

"When we drew near to the Mouth of the Kills, a number of Boats with various Flags came up with us & dropped in our wake. Soon after we opened the Bay, General Knox & several Gent^{s} in a large Barge, presented themselves with the splendid Colours. Boat after Boat & Sloop after Sloop added to our Train gaily dressed in all their naval Ornaments made a most Splendid Appearance—Before we got to Bedler's Island, a large Sloop, came with full Sail on our Starboard Bow when their stood up about 20 Gentlemen & Ladies with most excellent Voices, sung an elegant Ode prepared for the Purpose to the Tune of God Save the King, welcoming their great Chief to the Seat of Government—At the conclusion, we gave them our Hats, and then they with the Surrounding Boats gave us three Cheers.

"Soon after another Boat, came under our Stern & presented us with a number of Copies of another Ode, and immediately about a dozen Gent^{s} began to sing it in parts as we passed along—Our worthy President was greatly affected with these tokens of profound respect—As we approached the Harbour, our Train increased & the Huzzaing and Shouts of Joy seemed to add Life to this lively Scene—At this Moment a number of Porpoises came playing amongst us, as if they had risen up to know what was the Cause of all this Joy—We now discovered the Shores crowded with thousands of People—Men Women & Children—Nay I may venture to say Tens of Thousands; from the fort to the Place of Landing altho' near half a Mile, you could see little else along the Shores, in the Streets and on Board every Vessel, but Heads standing as thick as Ears of Corn before the Harvest—The vessels in the Harbour made a most superb appearance indeed, dressed in all the Pomp of attire. The Spanish Packett in a moment, on a Signal Given discovered 27 or 28 different Colors of all Nations, on every part of the Rigging and paid us the Compliment of 13 Gunns with her yards all Manned—as did another Vessel in the Harbour, displaying Colors in the same Manner.

"I had omitted the like Compliment from the Battery of 18 Pounders—we soon arrived at the Ferry Stairs, where there were many Thousands of the Citizens waiting with all the eagerness of Expectation, to welcome our Excellent Patriot to that Shore, which he had regained from a Powerful Enemy by his Valour & good Conduct—we found the Stairs covered with Carpeting & the Rails hung with Crimson—the President being preceeded by the Committee was received by the Governor & the Citizens in the most brilliant Manner—Here he was met on the wharf with many of his old & faithful officers & fellow Patriots who had borne the Heat & Burthen of the Day with him, and who like him had experienced every reverse of Fortune with fortitude & Patience, and who now joined the universal Chorus of welcoming their great deliverer, (under Providence) from all their fears.

"It was with difficulty a Passage could be made by the Troops thro the pressing Crowds, who seemed to be incapable of being Satisfied by gazing at this Man of the People—you will see the particulars of the Procession from the Wharf to the House appointed for his residence in the News Papers—The Streets were lined with the Inhabitants as thick as the People could stand, and it required all the Exertions of a numerous Train of City officers with their Staves, to make a Passage for the Company—The Houses were filled with Gentlemen & Ladies the whole distance, being about half a Mile, and the Windows to the highest stories, were illuminated by the sparkling Eyes of inumerable Companies of Ladies, who seemed to vie with each other to show their Joy on this great Occasion. Apr. 23

"It was half an hour before we could finish our Commission and convey the President to the house prepared for his residence. As soon as this was done, notwithstanding his great Fatigue of both Body & Mind, he had to receive all the Gentleman & Officers to a very large amount, who wished to show their Respect in the most affectionate manner.—When this was finished & the People dispersed, we went undressed, and dined with his Excellency Governor Clinton, who had provided an elegant Dinner for the Purpose.—

"This Ended our Commission. The Evening, tho' very wet was spent by all ranks in visiting the City, Street after Street, being illuminated in a superb Manner.—I cannot help stating now how highly we were favoured in the weather, the whole Procession having been completely finished & we had repaired to the Governors before it began to rain.—When the President was on the wharf an officer came up & addressing the President said, he had honor to command his Guard and it was ready to obey his orders. The President answered that as to the present Arrangement, he should proceed as was directed but, that after that was over, he hoped he would give himself no farther Trouble, as the Affections of his fellow Citizens (turning to the crowd) was all the Guard he wanted."—Bowen, Hist. of the Centennial of the Inauguration of Geo. Washington, 28–30, citing the original letter in the possession of Boudinot's grand nephew, Mr. E. Boudinot Colt, of Short Hills, N. J. The letter is also reproduced in the same history (by Clarence Winthrop Bowen), as first published in The Cent. Mag., Ap, 1889. See also Emmet Coll., No. 9594.

Dr. James Lloyd Cogswell, one of the spectators who witnessed Washington's arrival, wrote a description of the event, saying:

". . . The Genl's barge had an awning hung around with red moreen curtains, festooned. It was attended with the New Haven and Rhode Island packets, and a number of boats and barges decorated in the most beautiful manner. From the Battery to the Coffee House, where the Gen'l landed, the ships, docks, and houses were crowded with people as thick as they could stand. The guns of the Battery were fired as soon as the General passed, and all the people upon the battery gave three huzzas. The cheers were continued along from the battery unto the place of landing, as the barge passed. I was on board Captain Woolsey's ship, which lies in the slip by the Coffee House, and had a very fine prospect. The successive motion of the hats from the Battery to the Coffee House was like the rolling motion of the sea, or a field of grain waving with the wind when the sun is frequently intercepted with a cloud.

"A pair of elegant stairs, with the sides covered and carpeted, were erected to land the General safe on the dock.

"Immediately upon his landing, thirteen guns were fired from the dock, and the whole city rung with repeated huzzas. . . . The procession immediately formed and proceeded from the Coffee House. . . . The General walked . . . at the right of Governor Clinton. . . . The General was dressed in blue, with buff-colored underclothes. The procession moved very slow and with great solemnity. The windows, stoops, and streets were crowded . . . Notwithstanding all the exertion of the guard to keep the crowd off, they were so wedged in by Embree's corner [Pearl St.] that they could not move for some time. The General was obliged to wipe his eyes several times before he got into Queen Street. . . .

"It is now half after nine o'clock . . . I walked up Queen [Pearl] and Wall Streets and round by the new buildings back through Hanover Square. Every house is illuminated except those of the Quakers. The appearance is brilliant beyond description. Sir Jno's house [Sir John Temple's, 188 Queen St.] makes a grand appearance.

". . . The new buildings of McComb & Edgar [on Broadway] exceed any. Notwithstanding the rain, the streets were filled with men, women, and children. A great variety of taste has been dis-1789 Apr. 23 played in the arrangement of candles; some are in the form of a pyramid—some in one shape, and some in another. A great number of figures and curious mottoes are to be seen. Among the rest, one at Mr. Scriba's large brick house, at the corner of the Fly Market [17 Queen St.], took my attention; in one window was a building, supported by beautiful columns, with the names of the respective States upon them, supporting it; on a window on the right was wrote in an oval, neatly decorated, 'Vivant our illustrious President George Washington'; . . ."—Hist. Mag. (1860), 1st. ser., IV: 244.

His Excellency Don Diego de Gardoqui, the diplomatic representative from Spain, who witnessed the events of the day, wrote to the Spanish minister of state, Count Florida Blanca, on April 24, a descriptive letter, saying in part:

"When his Excellency found himself at a proper distance from his Catholic Majesty's man-of-war, the Galveston, commanded by the Lieutenant of the Navy Don Adrian Troncoso, who had taken his station at the confluence of the North and East Rivers, where he [Washington] had to pass, the above-mentioned officer saluted him with fifteen cannon-shots, five vivas for the king, and other honors —the first shot being so powerful in its detonation that it surprised the immense pageant by land and sea, meriting not only the general applause and hand-clapping of all, but also five more cheers instead of the customary three cheers . . .

". . . he proceeded on foot to the mansion designed for his residence, . . . through the drawn-up lines of State troops, who presented arms and lowered the standards as he passed them.

"After reaching the house a levée was held. When this terminated, the Governor ordered a company of infantry with its officers to guard the house; the moment General Washington noticed them, he begged them to retire, being in need of no other guard than his own fellow-citizens. . . .

"On that night the citizens had proposed to illuminate their houses with fire-works, but the heavy rain which began toward evening and lasted all night disappointed their intentions, as also the magnificent illuminations projected by the ministers of Spain and France."—Translation from the original in the Spanish Archives, pub. in The Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inauguration of Geo. Washington, 33.

Comte de Moustier wrote, on June 5, to the minister of foreign affairs at Paris, a brief dispatch, stating in part:

"I proceeded in a coach toward the place where the President had landed, . . . I arrived near to General Washington, whom I recognized only by his gestures of satisfaction at seeing me; and, what was undoubtedly a greater compliment, I was summoned at that moment. I descended from the carriage and accompanied him up to the humble house which had been provided as his residence. There he received homage from those who had escorted him, and from a great number of other people who had come to the house . . . Each shook his hand, according to the general habit, which begins to die out among the people of higher rank, and from which the President insensibly excuses himself, so that now he only shakes hands with those who offer theirs, instead of advancing his as he has always done before. There was also a great provision of wine and punch, which the President himself offered to me; but I reminded him how I had objected, in Mount Vernon, to that usage." —Ibid., 34, as translated from the French archives.

Miss Eliza Morton (afterwards Mrs. Josiah Quincy) saw Washington's arrival by looking from a shop window on the wharf where he was received. She stated in her recollections, written in 1821: "Carpets were spread to the carriage prepared for him; but he preferred walking through the crowded streets, and was attended by Governor Clinton and many other officers and gentlemen. He frequently bowed to the multitude, and took off his hat to the ladies at the windows, who waved their handkerchiefs, and threw flowers before him, and shed tears of joy and congratulation. The whole city was one scene of triumphant rejoicing. His name, in every form of decoration, appeared on the fronts of the houses; and the streets which he passed through to the Governor's mansion were ornamented with flags, silk banners of various colors, wreaths of flowers, and branches of evergreen. Never did anyone enjoy such a triumph as Washington, who indeed 'read his history in a nation's eyes.'"—Memoir of the Life of Eliza S. M. Quincy (1861), 50.

Gen. Samuel B. Webb wrote: ". . . in all my life, I never saw such unfeigned joy in every countenance."—Correspondence and Journals (Ford. ed.), III: 128.

Apr. 23 "Many persons who were in the crowd, on Thursday [Ap 23], were heard to say, that they should now die contented—nothing being wanted to complete their happiness, previous to this auspicious period, but the sight of the Saviour of his Country.

"Some persons, advanced in years, who hardly expected to see the illustrious President of the States, till they should meet him in Heaven, were in the concourse on Thursday, and could hardly restrain their impatience, at being in a measure deprived of the high gratification, by the eagerness of the multitudes of children and young people, who probably might long enjoy the blessing."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ap 25, 1789.

" "By a curious coincidence the 23rd of April 1789—the day upon which Washington made this triumphal entry into New York City—was observed in Great Britain as a day of thanksgiving for the recovery of his mind by George III, whose obstinate folly had resulted in the independence of the nation over which Washington was to preside."—Smith's N. Y. City in 1789, 224.

" From this date until April 27, the senate and house of representatives arranged the plans for the inauguration of Washington.—Annals of Cong., Vol. I; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XX: 450–51.

24 The senate and house of representatives wait on President Washington "to congratulate him on his safe arrival at the seat of government."—Penn. Packet, My 5, 1789.

25 The Chamber of Commerce meets at "the Coffee-House," at about half past eleven o'clock, and proceeds "to the house of his Excellency the President of the United States, headed by John Broome, Theophylact Beach, and John Murray, Esquires." They "were conducted into the audience room, and upon his Excellency's entering, M[r] Broome, the President of the Chamber, addressed him to the following effect:—That he had the honor in the name of that Corporation, to congratulate His Excellency upon his safe arrival in this city, under the dignified Character of President of the United States, and also to inform him that the members of the chamber felt a singular pleasure in having a gentleman of his distinguished talents appointed to preside over the Union; and farther assured him that it would be their uniform endeavour by every constitutional exertion in their power, to render his Excellency's administration prosperous and happy.

"To which his Excellency replied to the following effect. That he was greatly obliged to the gentlemen of the Chamber for the mark of their politeness and respect, and that he should be happy at all times, as far as lay with him, to promote the interest of commerce.

"After his Excellency's reply he was introduced by the President of the Chamber to every member present."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 27, 1789; Penn. Packet, Ap 30, 1789.

27 Congress decides that the oath shall be administered to Washington "in the outer gallery adjoining the Senate Chamber," instead of in "the Representatives' Chamber," which had been agreed upon on April 25.—Annals of Cong., I: 207.

" Mayor Duane, at the request of the common council, having prepared an address to be presented by the corporation to Pres. Washington, it is submitted by him to the board, and approved. The following is the text in full:

"To the President of the United States

"Sir.

"The Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty of the City of New York beg leave to offer you our most respectful and affectionate Congratulations on your safe arrival in this Metropolis; and at the same time to express the general Joy of our fellow Citizens of every Order on this auspicious Event

"In thus presenting ourselves before you we experience all the Emotions which naturally arise, from a high veneration for your Character, an exalted Sense of your Services, and a perfect conviction that a Trust the most momentous which could be conferred by a free People has been committed to a Citizen who has given unequivocal Proofs of his possessing all the good and great Qualities requisite to it's successful Discharge.

"With peculiar Pleasure Sir, we recall to mind that illustrious display of Wisdom Virtue and Valour which distinguished your military Command: With equal Pleasure we recollect the exemplary Moderation which marked your Retreat from the head of a victorious Army to the Shade of private Life. Permit us to add that we contemplate with pious gratitude that unparelled coincidence of circumstances, which has constrained you, by Motives that Patriotism 1789 Apr. could not resist, to reingage in the arduous Duties of a public Station.

27 "Long in the habit of revering you as the Father of our Country, we rejoice at the happiness of being once more placed under your Protection; we consider the Unanimity, which prevailed in your Appointment, as a presage that our national Government will be firmly established in the Hearts of all the People and receive their united and zealous support, and we are fully persuaded that, under the Divine Favour, it's operation will be productive of the most extensive Benefits and Blessings, and render the Union as respectable in Peace as, under your Auspices, it was triumphant in War.

"To our most fervant Wishes for your personal Happiness and for the Success of your Administration we should not do Justice, to the Sentiments of our fellow Citizens, if we did not add the strongest Assurances of their inviolable Attachment to you and of their earnest Disposition to render you all the Support which can flow from the most cordial Respect, Gratitude and Confidence.

"Signed in behalf of the Corporation

"Jas Duane Mayor."

The common council appoints a committee to "wait on the President to know when and where he will be pleased to receive the said Address."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 447–48. For its presentation, and Washington's reply, see May 9.

" The common council resolves not to lend the city's credit further for the expenses of altering the city hall (see Dec. 3, 1788; Jan. 7, 1789); and the commissioners for superintending these improvements are requested "to govern themselves accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 448.

" Trinity corporation petitions the common council for a grant of water lots, "from High to low Water mark & thence 200 feet into the River, opposite to their Land between Chambers Street & the next adjacent Street to the Northward" (Reade St.). The petition was granted on May 13, at a quit-rent of one shilling per foot front, to commence at the expiration of 21 years.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 448, 451. This, however, was reconsidered, and on May 25 it was ordered that the quit-rents commence at the expiration of 42 years.—Ibid., I: 454.

28 William Maclay records in his journal: "This day I ought to note with some extraordinary mark. I had dressed and was about to set out, when General Washington, the greatest man in the world, paid me a visit. I met him at the foot of the stairs. Mr. [Henry] Wynkoop just came in. We asked him to take a seat. He [Washington] excused himself on account of the number of his visits. We accompanied him to the door. He made us complaisant bows—one before he mounted and the other as he went away on horseback."—Maclay's Jour. (1890).

29 "The Committees of both Houses of Congress, appointed to take order for conducting the ceremonial of the formal reception, &c. of the President of the United States, on Thursday next [April 30], have agreed to the following order thereon, viz.

"That General Webb, Colonel Smith, Lieutenant-Colonel Fish, Lieut. Col. Franks, Major L'Enfant, Major Bleecker, and Mr John R. Livingston, be requested to serve as Assistants on the occasion.

"That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the President of the United States. That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the Vice-President, to the right of the President's chair; and that the Senators take their seats on that side of the chamber on which the Vice-President's chair shall be placed. That a chair be placed in the Senate-Chamber for the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the left of the President's chair—and that the Representatives take their seats on that side of the chamber on which the Speaker's chair shall be placed.

"That seats be provided in the Senate-Chamber sufficient to accommodate the late President of Congress, the Governor of the Western territory, the five persons being the heads of the three great departments, the Minister Plenipotentiary of France, the Encargado de negocios of Spain, the Chaplains of Congress, the persons in the suite of the President; and also to accommodate the following Public Officers of the State, viz. The Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor, the Chancellor, the Chief Justice and other Judges of the Supreme Court, and the Mayor of the city. That one of the Assistants wait on these gentlemen, and inform them that seats are provided for their accommodation, and also to signify to them that no precedence of seats is intended, and that no salutation is expected from them on their entrance into, or their departure from the Senate-Chamber.

"That the members of both Houses assemble in their respective Chambers precisely at twelve o'clock and that the Representatives preceded by the Speaker, and attended by their Clerk and other Officers, proceed to the Senate-Chamber, there to be received by the Vice-President and Senators rising. Apr. 29

"That the Committees attend the President from his residence to the Senate-Chamber, and that he be there received by the Vice-President, the Senators and Representatives rising, and be by the Vice-President conducted to his chair.

"That after the President shall be seated in his Chair, and the Vice-President, Senators and Representatives shall be again seated, the Vice-President shall announce to the President, that the members of both Houses will attend him to be present at his taking the Oath of Office required by the Constitution. To the end that the Oath of Office may be administered to the President in the most public manner, and that the greatest number of the people of the United States, and without distinction, may be witnesses to the solemnity, that therefore the Oath be administered in the outer Gallery adjoining to the State-Chamber.

"That when the President shall proceed to the gallery to take the Oath, he be attended by the Vice-President, and be followed by the Chancellor of the State, and pass through the middle door, that the Senators pass through the door on the right, and the Representatives, preceded by the Speaker, pass through the door on the left, and such of the persons who shall have been admitted into the Senate-Chamber and may be desirous to go into the gallery, are then also to pass through the door on the right. That when the President shall have taken the Oath, and returned into the Senate-Chamber, attended by the Vice-President, and shall be seated in his chair, that the Senators and the Representatives also return into the Senate-Chamber, and that the Vice-President and they resume their respective seats.

"Both Houses having resolved to accompany the President after he shall have taken the Oath, to St. Paul's Chapel, to hear divine service, to be performed by the Chaplain of Congress, that the following order of procession be observed, viz. The door-keeper and messenger of the House of Representatives. The Clerk of the House. The Representatives. The Speaker. The President with the Vice-President at his left hand. The Senators. The Secretary of the Senate. The door-keeper, and messenger of the Senate.

"That a pew be reserved for the President—Vice-President—Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Committees; and that pews be also reserved sufficient for the reception of the Senators and Representatives.

"That after divine service shall be performed, the President be received at the door of the Church, by the Committees, and by them attended in carriages to his residence.

"That it be intrusted to the Assistants to take proper precautions for keeping the avenues to the Hall open, and that for that purpose, they wait on his Excellency the Governor of this State, and in the name of the Committees request his aid, by an order of recommendation to the Civil Officers, or militia of the city, to attend and serve on the occasion, as he shall judge most proper."—From broadside, dated April 29, in Emmet Coll. (No. 9596), in N. 30 Washington is inaugurated president.—Winsor, VII: 267, 326. In anticipation of the event, spectators came from far and near, and the city was crowded.

"'We shall remain here, even if we have to sleep in tents, as so many will have to do,' wrote Miss Bertha Ingersoll to Miss [Sally] McKean; 'Mr. Williamson had promised to engage us rooms at Frauncis's, but that was jammed long ago, as was every other decent public house; and now while we are waiting at Mrs. Vandervoort's, in Maiden Lane, till after dinner, two of our beaus are running about town, determined to obtain the best places for us to stay at which can be opened for love, money, or the most persuasive speeches.' Another young woman, after recounting the vicissitudes of a journey from Boston, and various difficulties in finding agreeable accommodations in the metropolis, adds in a postscript, 'I have seen him! and though I had been entirely ignorant that he was arrived in the city, I should have known at a glance that it was General Washington: I never saw a human being that looked so great and noble as he does. I could fall down on my knees before him and bless him for all the good he has done for this country.'"—Griswold, The Republican Court (1855), 137–38.

The first newspaper report of the event referred to it as "the ceremony of the introduction of his Excellency George Washington, to the Presidency of the United States." It stated, in part:

"The scene was extremely solemn and impressive. . . .

"At nine o'clock A.M. the clergy of different denominations assembled their congregations in their respective places of worship, and offered up prayers for the safety of the President.

"About twelve o'clock the procession moved from the house of the President in Cherry Street, through Dock street, and Broad street, to Federal Hall [at Wall and Nassau Sts.]; in the following order.

Col. [Morgan] Lewis supported by two officers
Capt. Stakes with troop of Horse, Artillery.
Major Van Horne,
Grenadiers, under Capt. Harsin,
German Grenadiers, under Capt. Scriba
Major Bicker,
The Infantry of the Brigade
Major Chrystie,
Sheriff [Robt. Boyd]

The PRESIDENT and suite,
The committee of the Representatives [see Baker].
The Hon. Mr. Jay, General Knox,
Chancellor Livingston, and several other gentlemen of distinction.

"Then followed the multitude of citizens.

"When they came within a short distance of the Hall, the troop formed in line on both sides of the way, and his excellency passing through the ranks, was conducted into the building, and in the Senate chamber introduced to both houses of Congress—immediately afterwards, accompanied by the two houses, he went into the gallery fronting Broad Street, where, in the presence of an immense concourse of citizens, he took the oath prescribed by the constitution, which was administered to him by the Hon. R. R. Livingston, Esq; Chancellor of the state of New-York.

"Immediately after he had taken the oath, the Chancellor proclaimed him President of the United States.—Was answered by the discharge of 13 guns, and by loud repeated shouts; on this the President bowed to the people, and the air again rang with their acclamations. His Excellency with the two Houses, then retired to the Senate Chamber, where he made the following speech. [The inaugural address is printed in full.]

"His Excellency, accompanied by the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and both Houses of Congress then went to [St.] Paul's Chapel, where divine service was performed by the Right Revd. Dr. Provo[o]st, Bishop of the Episcopal Church in this State, and Chaplain to Congress [the Senate].

"The religious solemnity being ended, the President was escorted to his house, and the citizens retired to their homes. . . ."—Daily Adv., My 1, 1789. Most of the other newspapers of the country, during the next few days, published practically the same report.—See N. Y. Daily Gaz., My 1; Gaz. of the U. S., My 2; N. Y. Weekly Museum, My 2; Independent Gazetteer, My 4; Penn. Packet, My 4; Mass. Spy, My 6; N. Y. Jour., My 7; Maryland Jour., My 8; Boston Gaz., My 11. See also Hist. of Congress, by John Agg (1843), 29.

The account in the N. Y. Packet, May 1, mentioned the following additional features: In the first procession, from "the Federal State-House" to "the President's house," and back to the State-House, there were "Gentlemen in coaches" preceding the "Citizens on foot." The sheriff was on horseback. The president "joined the procession in his carriage and four." The balcony or outer gallery in front of the State-House was "decorated with a canopy and curtains of red interstreaked with white." See also the French minister's account in The Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inaug. of Geo. Washington, 48.

"The principal companies were Captain Stakes's troop of horse, equipped in the style of Lee's famous partisan legion; Captain Scriba's German Grenadiers, with blue coats, yellow waistcoats and breeches, black gaiters, and towering cone-shaped caps, faced with bear-skin; Captain Harsin's New York Grenadiers, composed, in imitation of the guard of the great Frederick, of only the tallest and finest-looking young men of the city, dressed in blue coats with red facings and gold lace broideries, cocked hats with white feathers, and white waistcoats and breeches, and black spatterdaskes, buttoned close to the shoe to the knee; and the Scotch Infantry, in full highland costume, with bagpipes."—Griswold, The Republican Court, 139. Apr. 30

When Washington went to St. Paul's Chapel for the religious service, from federal hall, the flag (or one of the flags) carried in the procession was provided by, and is still in the possession of, the Marine Society of N. Y.—See letter of Bishop Manning in N. Y. Times, Ag 4, 1924.

The accounts written by spectators were most graphic. Gen. Wm. Maclay, of Pennsylvania, who kept a private journal of his activities and interests while in New York, from 1789 to 1791, recorded very intimate observations and impressions of the ceremonies connected with the inauguration. The crowd was already great when he entered the city hall at about ten o'clock. The senate met, and the vice-president (John Adams) "rose in the most solemn manner." (Maclay states that Adams was often "at loss for expressions,"—because, as he supposed, he was "wrapped up in the contemplation of his own importance,"—at which times he "suffers an unmeaning kind of vacant laugh to escape him.") Adams said: "Gentlemen, I wish for the direction of the Senate. The President will, I suppose, address the Congress. How shall I behave? How shall we receive it? Shall it be standing or sitting?" The ways of the English parliament on such occasions were discussed quite thoroughly. While this was in progress, "Repeated accounts came [that] the Speaker and Representatives were at the door. Confusion ensued; the members left their seats. . . ." Then,

"The Speaker was introduced, followed by the Representatives. Here we sat an hour and ten minutes before the President arrived—this delay was owing to Lee, Izard, and Dalton, who had stayed with us while the Speaker came in, instead of going to attend the President. The President advanced between the Senate and Representatives, bowing to each. He was placed in the chair by the Vice-President; the Senate with their president on the right, the Speaker and the Representatives on his left. The Vice-President rose and addressed a short sentence to him. The import of it was that he should now take the oath of office as President. He seemed to have forgot half what he was to say, for he made a dead pause and stood for some time, to appearance, in a vacant mood. He finished with a formal bow, and the President was conducted out of the middle window into the gallery, and the oath was administered by the Chancellor. Notice that the business [was] done was communicated to the crowd by proclamation, etc., who gave three cheers, and repeated it on the President's bowing to them.

"As the company returned into the Senate chamber, the President took the chair and the Senators and Representatives their seats. He rose, and all rose also, and addressed them. [For address, see The Daily Adv., May 1, and other newspapers above cited.] This great man was agitated and embarrassed more than ever he was by the leveled cannon or pointed musket. He trembled, and several times could scarce make out to read, though it must be supposed he had often read it before. He put part of the fingers of his left hand into the side of what I think the tailors call the fall of the breeches, changing the paper into his left hand. After some time he then did the same with some of the fingers of his right hand. When he came to the words all the world, he made a flourish with his right hand, which left rather an ungainly impression. I sincerely, for my part, wished all set ceremony in the hands of the dancing-masters, and that this first of men had read off his address in the plainest manner, without ever taking his eyes from the paper, for I felt hurt that he was not first in everything. He was dressed in deep brown, with metal buttons, with an eagle on them, white stockings, a bag, and sword. . . ."—Maclay's Jour., 7–9.

Rudolph Van Dorsten, who represented The Netherlands at New York, stated among other things in his report on May 4th to the Recorder of the States-General that "His Excellency was dressed in plain brown clothes which had been presented to him by the mill at Hartford, Connecticut." One of the newspapers of the time stated that "The President on the day of his inauguration 1789 Apr. 30 appeared dressed in a complete suit of homespun clothes, but the cloth was of so fine a fabric and so handsomely finished that it was universally mistaken for a foreign manufactured superfine cloth." —N. Y. Jour., My 7, 1789.

Don Diego de Gardoqui, the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires, in his report to Count Florida Blanca, the minister of state, on May 1st, wrote, among other things, that Washington ". . . was introduced by the two committees of Congress in the Senate-chamber, and was received by the Vice-President, standing in front of his chair, which was placed to the right of the President's seat. He was also received by the Senators who occupied one of two rows of chairs next to the one of the Vice-President; the other row was occupied by the Ministers of Spain and France, the late President of Congress, the Ministers of State, War, and Exchequer, the chaplain of Congress, the escort of the President, the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the State, the Chancellor, Chief-Justice and other judges of the Supreme Court, and the mayor. The Speaker of the House of Representatives sat on another chair by the side of the President, and the Representatives obtained places on the same side."

"Shortly after the President had taken his seat, all those present arose, and the President, escorted by the Vice-President, and followed by the Chancellor of the State, and others that chose to follow, proceeded to the gallery . . . where the Chancellor gave the oath . . ., after which he proclaimed, in a loud voice, 'Long live George Washington, the President of the United States!'"

He also described the elaborate decorations in front of his own house, which was situated next to the fort. These consisted of "two magnificent transparent gardens, adorned with statues, natural size, imitating marble, representing the most peculiar attributes of Spain, viz., Justice, Integrity, Wisdom, Sobriety, Friendship, and Generosity. . . ."—Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inaug. of Geo. Washington, 46–47, citing the original in the Spanish archives.

The Comte de Moustier, the plenipotentiary of France, dispatched his report to his home government on June 5, stating, in part, that when the procession had reached "the Congress palace," the President, "holding his hat in hand, bowed to the public right and left; and, although there was an innumerable mass of people, everybody was uncovered and preserved a respectful silence." Regarding the administration of the oath, he said:

". . . Three doors communicating with this balcony were opened. The President passed by the middle one, followed by the Vice-President and the Chancellor, . . . The Senators went out by the right, and the Representatives by the left. On an embroidered cushion a Bible was brought, upon which the President placed his hand and repeated the following words after the Chancellor. 'I solemnly swear to discharge with fidelity the functions of President of the United States, and to do all in my power to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States of America.' Thereupon the Chancellor, making a sign with his hat to the people, exclaimed, 'Long live George Washington, President of the United States!' Three hurrahs, the customary acclamation of the people, followed; the President saluted the public profoundly, and re-entered with the Senators and Representatives.

"Everybody appeared to be equally imbued with respect and veneration for the illustrious chief of the republic, and no one perceived that the city was without police. The simplest citizen seemed to be filled with pride for the virtues of the man who was to govern them. Tears of joy were seen to flow in the Senate-chamber, at church, and even in the streets, and never has sovereign reigned more completely in the hearts of his subjects than did Washington in those of his fellow-citizens. Nature, that has conferred on him the art of governing, seems to have endowed his figure, which has nothing in common with the other Americans. He has the soul, look, and figure of a hero united in him. Born to command, he never seems embarrassed with the homage rendered him, and he has the advantage of mingling great dignity with great simplicity of manner.

"After having taken upon himself the robes of office of the first magistrate of a great republic, he betook himself on foot and without escort to the Chancellor's house to witness the fire-works which had been in process of preparation for several weeks. . . ."—Ibid., citing the original in the French archives.

Apr. 30 Miss Eliza Morton, then fifteen years of age, who in 1797 married Josiah Quincy, afterwards president of Harvard University (see Mag. of Am. Hist., Mr, 1889), wrote, in 1821, her recollections of the inauguration thus:

". . . I was on the roof of the first house in Broad Street, which belonged to Captain Prince, the father of one of my school companions; and so near to Washington that I could almost hear him speak. The windows and roofs of the houses were crowded; and in the streets the throng was so dense that it seemed as if one might literally walk on the heads of the people. The balcony of the Hall was in full view of this assembled multitude. In the centre of it was placed a table, with a rich covering of red velvet; and upon this was a crimson velvet cushion, on which lay a large and elegant Bible. This was all the paraphernalia for this august scene. All eyes were fixed upon the balcony where, at the appointed hour, Washington entered, accompanied by the Chancellor. . . . To the great body of the people he had probably never been seen except as a military hero. The first in war was now to be the first in peace. His entrance on the balcony was announced by universal shouts of joy and welcome. He was dressed in a suit of black velvet, and his appearance was most dignified and solemn. Advancing to the front of the balcony, he laid his hand on his heart and bowed several times, and then retreated to an arm-chair near the table. The populace appeared to understand that the scene had overcome him, and were at once hushed into profound silence. After a few moments the General arose and came forward. Chancellor Livingston read the form of oath prescribed by the Constitution; Washington repeated it, resting his hand upon the table. The Chancellor took the Bible to raise it to the lips of Washington; he stooped and kissed the book. At this moment a signal was given, raising a flag upon the steeple of the Hall for a general discharge of the artillery of the Battery. All the bells in the city rang out a peal of joy, and the multitude before us sent forth such a shout as seemed to rend the skies. The President bowed again to the people, and then retired from a scene such as the proudest monarch could never have enjoyed—the delight not only of his own nation and people, but of all mankind."—Memoir of Eliza S. M. Quincy, 51.

Walter W. Buchanan, a godson of Washington, saw the inauguration from the stoop of the police-station or watch-house at the south-east corner of Wall and Broad Sts., and referred to it briefly in his recollections of the period.—See My 1, 1789.

Another eye-witness wrote: "Upon the subject of this great and good man, I may perhaps be an enthusiast, but I confess I was under an awful and religious persuasion that the Gracious Ruler of the universe was looking down at that moment with peculiar complacency on an act which to a part of his creatures was very important. Under this impression, when the Chancellor pronounced, in a very feeling manner, 'Long live George Washington!' my sensibility was wound up to such a pitch that I could do no more than waive my hat with the rest, without the power of joining in the repeated acclamations which rent the air."—Am. Museum (1789), V: 505.

Washington "took the oath of office, administered by the Chancellor,—the Hon. Sam. A. Otis, secretary of the senate, holding a large handsome Bible on a red velvet cushion before him."—Jour. and Letters of Col. John May, pub. by the Hist. and Phil. Soc. of Ohio, N. S., I: 123.

Bowen states that: "Just before the oath was to be administered, it was discovered that no Bible was in Federal Hall. Happily, Livingston, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New York, knew that a Bible was at St. John's Lodge No. 2, in the City Assembly Rooms near by, and a messenger was dispatched to borrow the Bible, which is to-day the property of St. John's Lodge No. 1, one of the oldest Masonic lodges in the United States."—Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inaug. of Geo. Washington, 45, 51–53 and authorities there cited. Footnotes explain that this lodge was situated on the east side of Broadway, a little above Wall St. At a meeting of the Grand Lodge, in the Coffee Rooms, June 3, 1789, it was voted that St. John's Lodge No. 2 be considered "as the oldest lodge in the city, and take rank as the first." The lodge has since been known as St. John's Lodge No. 1. Another footnote describes the Bible, with illustrations.—Ibid. See also The Century Mag., Ap, 1889. For the first building built by the Masons in New York, see My 22, 1790.

1789 Apr. 30 "The transparent paintings exhibited in various parts of the city, on Thursday evening, were equal at least, to anything of the kind ever before seen in America.

"That displayed before the Fort at the bottom of Broad-way, did great honor to its inventors and executors, for the ingenuity of the design, and goodness of the workmanship; it was finely lighted and advantageously situated: The virtues, Fortitude (The President), Justice (The Senate), and Wisdom (The Representatives of the United States) were judiciously applied; of the first, all America has had the fullest evidence; and with respect to the two others, who does not entertain the most pleasing anticipations.

"His Excellency Don Gardoqui's residence next caught the eye—and fixed it in pleasing contemplation: The Tout-ensemble, formed a most brilliant front; the figures well fancied, The Graces, suggested the best ideas; and the pleasing variety of emblems, flowers, shrubbery, arches, &c. and above all the MOVING PICTURES [sic], that figured in the windows, or as it were in the back ground, created by fixing the transparencies between the windows, afforded a new—an animated, and enchanting spectacle.

"The residence of his Excellency, Count Moustier, was illuminated in a stile of novel elegance; the splendid bordering of lamps round the windows, doors, &c. with the fancy pieces in each window; and above all the large designs in front, the allusions, of which we cannot at present particularly describe, did great honor to the taste and sentiment of the inventor. [The "inventor" was probably Madame de Brehan, the Count's sister, "who was always industrious with her pencil when not occupied with more immediate duties to society."—Griswold, Republican Court, 145.]

"The above two instances of attention to honor this great and important occasion, so highly interesting to our 'dear country,' evince the friendship, the delicacy and politeness of our illustrious allies

"The portrait of 'THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY' exhibited in Broad-Street, was extremely well executed, and had a fine effect.

"There was an excellent Transparency, also shown at the Theatre, and at the corner, near the Fly-Market: In short, emulation and ingenuity were alive; but perhaps were in no instance exhibited to greater advantage than in the display of the Fire Works, which, from one novelty to another, continued for two hours, to surprize, by variety, taste, and brilliancy.

"The illumination of the Federal State House, was among the most agreeable of the exhibitions of the evening; and the ship Carolina formed a beautiful pyramid of Stars:—The evening was fine—the company innumerable—every one appeared to enjoy the scene, and no accident casts the smallest cloud upon the retrospect."—Gaz. of the U. S., My 2, 1789.

The extensive programme of fireworks, exhibited at the Fort, under the direction of Colonel Bauman, in honour of the day, was published in The Boston Gaz., My 11, 1789. Tobias Lear, the president's secretary, recorded in his diary, under date of April 30: "The President, Colonel Humphreys, and myself went in the beginning of the evening in the carriages to Chancellor Livingston's and General Knox's, where we had a full view of the fire-works. We returned home at ten on foot, the throng of people being so great as not to permit a carriage to pass through it."—The Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), XI: 383.

For an excellent summary of the events connected with Washington's inauguration, see Mrs. Lamb's article on this subject in the Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XX: 433–60; "New York the Federal Capital," by Moncure D. Conway, in The Mem. Hist. of the City of N. Y., III: 45–86; and Hist. Mag., 1st ser., III: 184–85. See also Frontispiece, Vol. III, which reproduces the only contemporary picture of the inauguration.

The regimental flag of the 2d Regiment, 1st Brigade, N. Y. State Artillery, which was displayed at ceremonies incident to the inauguration, was presented to the city on June 11, 1821, and formally accepted and paraded by the city on June 25, 1821.—Com. Adv., Je 26, 1821. The centennial of this presentation was celebrated on May 26, 1921, when the purpose was announced of preserving the fragment of the flag which remains by mounting it between glasses, and placing it for safe-keeping and exhibition in the armor-room of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

May 1 "Yesterday morning [May 1] the President received the compliments of His Excellency the Vice President, His Excellency the Governor of this State; the principal Officers of the different Departments; the foreign Ministers; and a great number of other persons of distinction. May 1

"We are informed, that the President has assigned every Tuesday and Friday, between the hours of two and three, for receiving visits; and that visits of compliment on other days, and particularly on Sundays, will not be agreeable to him.

"It seems to be the prevailing opinion, that so much of the President's time will be engaged by the various and important business, imposed upon him by the Constitution, that he will find himself constrained to omit returning visits, or accepting invitations to Entertainments."—Gaz. of the U. S., My 2, 1789.

Walter W. Buchanan, M.D., writing in 1860 regarding this period, said: "

". . . the late Dr. Hugh McLean, George Bond, John Hunter, George Cummings, Elias Desbrosses, Washington Irving, and myself,—formed, I think, the first Literary Society in the city of New York.

"We used to meet every Saturday afternoon in Mrs. McLean's garret back-room, over the kitchen, in Broad-street. In those days the corner house of Wall and Broad streets was entered from Broad-street, and was a police-office and watch-house. From its stoop I witnessed the oath of office administered by Chancellor Livingston to George Washington. The next house was occupied by a rush-bottom chairmaker. A door or two below that, left-hand side, was the Nestor of our profession, the venerable Dr. Anthon, and a door or two lower still, was Mrs. McLean's. We were in the habit of mounting to our literary symposium by a common rung-ladder. Each member of the company alternately read a tale or story of his own composition, and the youngest of the squad, Washington Irving, beat us all, . . ."—Hist. Mag. (1860), IV: 138.

Ebenezer Hazard writes from New York to the Rev. Jeremy Belknap, in Boston, and refers to the inauguration of President Washington "on Thursday last." He says: "At 9 o'clock of that day, most of the religious societies of this city met in their respective churches and spent about an hour in prayer with particular reference to the new government. I have been told that the clergy had previously consulted together upon the subject; and that when the bishop of the church, formerly called the Church of England, was applied to for his concurrence, he replied that their church had always been used to look up to government upon such occasions, and he thought it prudent not to do anything till they knew what government would direct. If the good bishop never prays without an order from government it is not probable that the Kingdom of Heaven will suffer much from his violence."—Belknap Papers in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 5th ser., III: 120. 2

Samuel Fraunces, the steward of the president's household, publishes a notice to the effect that, as the servants are furnished with money to procure provisions for the house, "no accounts, for the payment of which the Public might be considered responsible are to be opened with any of them."—N. Y. Packet, My 7; Daily Adv., My 7; Gaz. of the U. S., Je 3, 1789; De Voe, Market Book, 304. Up to this time, Fraunces was proprietor of a tavern at the corner of Nassau and John Sts. (see My 8, 1788). His wife at once took up the tavern business and carried it on for him at 49 Cortlandt St. (see My 9). 4

"This being a day for receiving company of ceremony, we had a numerous and splendid circle between the hours of two and three in the afternoon. The annual commencement of Columbia College, held in St. Paul's Church, is attended by Pres. Washington, Vice-Pres. Adams, Gov. Clinton, the "principal officers of the Republic," and several members of both the senate and the house.—N. Y. Jour., My 7, 1789; Gaz. of the U. S., My 9, 1789. 6

In the evening, the subscribers of the "Dancing Assembly" gave "an elegant Ball and Entertainment to his Excellency the President of the United States." Washington "was pleased to honor the company with his presence." Also, "His Excellency the Vice-President, most of the members of both Houses of Congress, the Governor of New York, the Chancellor, and Chief Justice of the State [Richard Morris], the Hon. John Jay, and the Hon. Gen. 7

1789 May 7 Knox, the Commissioners of the Treasury [Samuel Osgood, Walter Livingston, and Arthur Lee], His Worship the Mayor of the city, the late President of Congress [Cyrus Griffin], the governor of the Western Territory [Arthur St. Clair], the Baron Steuben, the Count de Moustier, Ambassador of his Most Christian Majesty, and many other foreigners of distinction were present. A numerous and brilliant collection of ladies graced the room with their appearance. The whole number of persons was about three hundred. The Company retired about two o'clock, after having spent a most agreeable evening. Joy, satisfaction and vivacity were expressive in every countenance—and every pleasure seemed to be heightened by the presence of a Washington."—N. Y. Packet, My 9, 1789. "Mrs. Washington had not yet reached the city, but Mrs. Jay and Mrs. Hamilton were among those present. . . . Washington . . . danced in two cotillions. Fraunces himself, having become steward of the president's household (see My 4), and given up his tavern in Nassau St. (see My 8, 1788), his wife, according to the above notice, carries on his tavern business at the new address, thus identified as the place where the stage-office is kept (regarding which, see N 13, 1787).

11 "The President, and Vice-President of the United States, the governor of this state, many members of Congress, and a number of other persons of the first character in the United States, honored the [John Street] Theatre with their presence. The house was uncommonly crouded and brilliant; and that excellent Comedy, the School for Scandal, and the favorite Comic Opera, the Poor Soldier, were acted with great applause. The box for the President, was elegantly fitted up and distinguished by the arms of the United States. The Vice President's box was also handsomely decorated; and the box for our Governor ornamented with the arms of the state."—Daily Adv., My 13, 1789.

Wm. Maclay's record of the event differs in some important particulars:

"I received a ticket from The President of the United States to use his box this evening at the theatre, being the first of his appearance at the playhouse since his entering on his office. Went. The President, Governor of the State, foreign Ministers, Senators from New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, M. [Maryland or Massachusetts], and South Carolina; and some ladies in the same box. . . . The play was the 'School for Scandal.' I never liked it; indeed, I think it an indecent representation before ladies of character and virtue. Farce, the 'Old Soldier.' The house greatly crowded, and I thought the players acted well; but I wish we had seen the 'Conscious Lovers,' or some one that inculcated more prudential manners."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay (1890), 30–31. See also "When Washington Was Playgoer," by James C. Young, in N. Y. Times Book Rev. and Mag., Ap 17, 1921, and Paul Leicester Ford's Washington and the Theatre. May 11

"There was but one theatre in New York in 1789, (in John Street,) and so small were its dimensions that the whole fabric might easily be placed on the stage of one of our modern theatres. . . ."—Custis, Recollections of Washington, 60.

Amateur plays were given in the president's own house while he was in New York. Wm. Duer says: "I was not only frequently admitted to the presence of this most august of men, in propria persona, but once had the honor of appearing before him as one of the dramatis personæ in the tragedy of Julius Caesar, enacted by a young 'American Company' in the garret of the Presidential mansion, where before the magnates of the land and the élite of the city, I performed the part of Brutus to the Cassius of my old school-fellow, Washington Custis."—Ford, Washington and the Theatre, 44.

12 In accordance with its notice of May 8 (q.v.), the Tammany Society celebrates its anniversary. "On this occasion marquees, etc. were erected, upon the banks of the Hudson about 2 miles from the city, for the reception of the Brethern of that Society, and an elegant Entertainment provided. 17 An exchange of notes between President Washington and Vice-President Adams determines the social procedure for the president, the principles on which social ceremonies, official and personal, may properly be performed. These letters are as follows:

President Washington writes to Vice-President Adams on May 17, requesting his views on the following points:

1. Should the president adopt a line of conduct, "equally distant from an association with all kinds of company on the one hand, and from a total seclusion from society on the other?"

"2. What will be the least exceptionable method of bringing any system, which may be adopted on this subject, before the public and into use?

"3. Whether . . . one day in every week will not be sufficient for receiving visits of compliment?"

4. Would it involve "disagreeable consequences, to have it known that the President will, every morning at eight o'clock, be at leisure to give audience to persons who may have business with him?"

5. Will it be practicable "to draw such a line of discrimination, in regard to persons, as that six, eight, or ten official characters, including in rotation the members of both houses of congress, may be invited, personally or otherwise, to dine with him on the days fixed for receiving company, without exciting clamors in the rest of the community?

"6. Whether it would be satisfactory to the public for the President to make about four great entertainments in a year, on such great occasions as the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, the alliance with France, the peace with Great Britain, the organization of the general government; and whether arrangements of these two last kinds could be in danger of diverting too much of the President's time from business, or to producing the evils which it was intended to avoid by his living more recluse than the presidents of congress have hitherto lived?

"7. Whether there would be any impropriety in the President's making informal visits; that is to say, in his calling upon his acquaintances or public characters, for the purpose of sociability or civility? And what, as to the form of doing it, might evince these visits to have been made in his private character, so as that they may not be construed into visits from the President of the United States? And in what light would his visits rarely at tea-parties be considered?

"8. Whether, during the recess of congress, it would not be advantageous to the interests of the union for the President to make the tour of the United States, in order to become better acquainted with their principal characters and internal circumstances, as well as to be more accessible to numbers of well-informed persons, who might give him useful information and advice on political subjects?

"9. If there is a probability that either of the arrangements may take place, which will eventually cause additional expenses, whether it would not be proper that these ideas should come into contemplation at the time when congress shall make a permanent provision for the support of the executive?"

The president appends some "Remarks" to the effect that "Many things which appear of little importance in themselves and at the beginning, may have great and durable consequences from their having been established at the commencement of a new general government." Further, that the president, "in all matters of business and etiquette," can have no object but "to demean himself in his public character in such a manner as to maintain the dignity of his office, without subjecting himself to the imputation of superciliousness or unnecessary reserve. . . ."

Adams answered on the same day:

"1. That an association with all kinds of company, and a total exclusion from society, are extremes, which . . . may be properly avoided.

"2. The system of the President will gradually develop itself in practice, without any formal communication to the legislature, or publication from the press. Paragraphs in the public prints may, however, appear, from time to time, without any formal authority, that may lead and reconcile the public mind.

"3. Considering the number of strangers from many countries, May and of citizens from various States, who will resort to the seat of 17 government, it is doubted whether two days in a week will not be indispensable for visits of compliment. A little experience, however, will elucidate this point."

"4. . . . It is submitted to consideration, whether all personal applications ought not to be made, in the first instance, to a minister of state. . . ." However, "access to the supreme magistrate ought not to be rigorously denied in any case that is worthy of his onsideration," but "in every case, the name, quality, and . . . business, ought to be communicated to a chamberlain, or gentleman in waiting, who should judge whom to admit and whom to exclude. Some limitation of time may be necessary, too, as, for example, from eight to nine or ten; for, without it, the whole forenoon, or the whole day, may be taken up.

"5. There is no doubt that the president may invite what official characters, members of congress, strangers, or citizens of distinction he pleases, in small parties, without exciting clamors; but this should always be done without formality.

"6. The entertainments mentioned in this article would much more properly be made by a minister of state for foreign or domestic affairs, or some other minister of state, or the Vice-President, whom, upon such occasions, the President, in his private character, might honor with his presence. But in no case whatever can I conceive it proper for the President to make any formal public entertainment.

"7. There can be no impropriety in the President's making or receiving informal visits among his friends or acquaintances, at his pleasure. Undress, and few attendants, will sufficiently show that such visits are made as a man, a citizen, a friend, or acquaintance. But in no case whatever should a visit be made or returned in form by the President; at least, unless an emperor of Germany, or some other sovereign, should travel to this country. The President's pleasure should absolutely decide concerning his attendance at tea-parties in a private character; and no gentleman or lady ought ever to complain, if he never, or rarely attends. The President's private life should be at his own discretion, and the world should respectfully acquiesce. As President, he should nave no intercourse with society, but upon public business, or at his levees. This distinction, it is, with submission, apprehended, ought to govern the whole conduct.

"8. A tour might, no doubt, be made, with great advantage to the public, if the time can be spared. . . ."

Mr. Adams suggests an answer to the final query in the following "Observations:"

"The civil list ought to provide for the President's household. What number of chamberlains, aides-de-camp, secretaries, masters of ceremonies, &c. will become necessary, it is difficult to foresee. But should not all such establishments be distinct from the allowance to the President for his services, which is mentioned in the constitution? In all events, the provision for the President and his household ought to be large and ample. The office, by its legal authority, defined in the constitution, has no equal in the world, excepting those only which are held by crowned heads; nor is the royal authority in all cases to be compared to it. . . . The sending and receiving ambassadors, is one of the most splendid and important prerogatives of sovereigns, absolute or limited; and this, in our constitution, is wholly in the President. If the state and pomp essential to this great department are not, in a good degree, preserved, it will be in vain for America to hope for consideration with foreign powers.

"These observations are submitted, after all, with diffidence, conscious that my long residence abroad may have impressed me with views of things incompatible with the present temper and feelings of my fellow-citizens; and with a perfect disposition to acquiesce in whatever may be the result of the superior wisdom of the President."—Life and Works of John Adams (ed. by his grandson, Chas. F. Adams), VIII: 489–93.

The members of the U. S. senate, with the vice-president at their 18 head, go in carriages from the "Chamber of Congress" to the president's house, and there the vice-president reads and presents to him an address in answer to his address of April 30 (q. v.) to both houses of congress.—Gaz. of the U. S., My 20, 1789.

William Maclay thus describes the scene: "Senate met. The address [to the president] was read over, and we proceeded in carriages to the President's to present it. . . . We had not been seated more than three minutes when it was signified to us to 1789 May 18 wait on the President in his levee-room. . . . We made our bows as we entered, and the Vice-President, having made a bow, began to read an address. . . .

"The President took his reply out of his coat-pocket. He had his spectacles in his jacket-pocket, having his hat in his left hand and the paper in his right. He had too many objects for his hands. He shifted his hat between his forearm and the left side of his breast. But taking his spectacles from the case embarrassed him. He got rid of this small distress by layng the spectacle-case on the chimney-piece. . . . Having adjusted his spectacles, which was not very easy, considering the engagements on his hands, he read the reply with tolerable exactness and without much emotion. I thought he should have received us with his spectacles on, which would have saved the making of some uncouth motions. Yet, on the whole, he did nearly as well as anybody could have done the same motions. Could the laws of etiquette have permitted him to have been disencumbered of his hat, it would have relieved him much.

"After having read his reply, he delivered the paper to the Vice-President with an easy inclination, bowed around to the company, and desired them to be seated . . . The Vice-President did not comply, nor did he refuse, but stood so long that the President repeated the request. He declined it by making a low bow, and retired. We made our bows, came out to the door, and waited till our carriages took us up."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay (1890), 41–42.

19 William Maclay records incidents which occur at the president's levee. He describes the Dutch minister, Van Berckel, as "gaudy as a peacock." He quotes a conversation he has with the president on the subject of farming.—Jour. of Wm. Maclay.

20 William Maclay writes: ". . . we took a long walk to view the gardens of a Dutchman who lives beyond the Bowery. Spent some time, with a degree of satisfaction, viewing his harmless and silent little beauties of the garden."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay (1890), 43. This was Baron Polnitz's garden, famous in its day, on the former estate of Andrew Elliot called "Minto;" it was bought by Robert Richard Randall in 1790, and was later known as "Sailors' Snug Harbor."—L. M. R. K., III: 951; Historic N. Y., 316. See, further, My 23.

23 ". . . General Washington went to see the curious agricultural improvements and newly-invented farming utensils at the seat of the Baron Polnitz [see My 20], in the neighbourhood of this city. Among the former is the cultivation of madder, woad, and several kinds of artificial grass. Among the latter are Winlaw's threshing machine, several ploughs constructed for different purposes and many other instruments of husbandry. The Baron Polnitz made experiments to shew the effects of different ploughs, some of which he held himself, for the sake of giving more perfection in the result. General Washington discovered great satisfaction in viewing the experiments, particularly of a machine made by the Baron Polnitz, for ascertaining the exact force which must be applied to a plough, under any circumstances, in drawing it through any kind of soil. The General was also so well convinced of the utility of the Horse-Hoe, for weeding vegetables, etc. that he has ordered one to be made, upon the principal of the Baron's for the purpose of sending it to Mount-Vernon, in Virginia."—Gaz. of the U. S., My 27, 1789. For illustrations of Winlaw's and other agricultural implements, see Columbian Mag., O, 1788, pp. 576–77.

25 The common council appoints a committee to see what remains to be done in altering the city hall, and to estimate the expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 453–54. See, further, Je 10.

" The inhabitants and property owners in Murray Street petition the common council, stating that "This Street has never been paved, that it is hills and Vallies, that in rainy weather parts of it are over the shoes in mud, that the lower part is washed into such Hollows that it is not passable with Carts and dangerous for foot Passengers after dusk, that other parts of the Street is higher than there lower floors by which means there property is Injured." They add "that it may be found absolutely necessary that a small Bulk head should be built a cross the Slip to prevent the entire breaking up of the street." They ask the Board to "Consider of there petition, tho it Regards those of the upper part of this City," and "that an Ordinance may be passed for a Speedy Regulating & paving of the Street."—From the original petition in the city clerk's record-room. The common council postpones consideration "until the continuation of Greenwich Street be compleated," but in the mean time orders that the alderman and assistant of the ward "direct a Bulkhead to be placed at the bottom of the Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 454. On July 9, they agreed upon filling up part of the slip, as well as building a bulkhead.—Ibid., I: 469. May 25

" City ordinances are passed for regulating and paving William Street from Fair to Beekman St.; for paving King George Street; and Water Street from Peck's Slip to St. James Slip; and for regulating Chatham Street from St. James to Division St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 454. There was much activity in regulating and paving streets for several years during this period.—Ibid., passim.

26 The joint committee appointed by the senate and assembly, in pursuance of "An act for regulating elections," meets to canvass and estimate the votes taken at the last election for governor, lieut.-governor, and senators of N. Y. State. Their session lasted seven days. On June 4, they announced that George Clinton had been elected governor, and Pierre Van Cortlandt, lieut.-governor.—Daily Adv., Je 5, 1789.

27 Mrs. Washington (generally referred to as "Lady Washington") arrives at New York from Mount Vernon. From Philadelphia, she was accompanied by "the Lady of Mr. Robert Morris." At Elizabeth-town Point, she was met by the President, Mr. Morris, and "several other gentlemen of distinction who had gone there for that purpose." She was "conducted over the bay in the Federal Barge, rowed by 13 eminent pilots, in a handsome white dress." On passing the Battery, a salute was fired; and on landing (at Peck's Slip), she was welcomed by crowds of citizens "who had assembled to testify their joy."—Daily Gaz., My 28, 1789. She had been expected to arrive at Peck's Slip at four o'clock.—Daily Adv., My 27. "The City troop of light horse, and Col. Bauman's artillery attended on this occasion."—*N. Y. A newspaper states: "The principal ladies of the city have, with the earliest attention and respect, paid their devoirs to the amiable consort of our beloved President, viz. The Lady of His Excellency the Governor—Lady Sterling—Lady Mary Watts—Lady Kitty Duer—La Marchioness de Brehan—the Ladies of the Most Hon. Mr. Langdon, and the Most Hon. Mr. Dalton—the Mayoress—Mrs. Livingston, of Clermont—Mrs. Chancellor Livingston—the Miss Livingstons—Lady Temple—Madam de la Forest—Mrs. Montgomery—Mrs. Knox—Mrs. Thompson—Mrs. Gerry—Mrs. Edgar—Mrs. M' Comb—Mrs. Lynch—Mrs. Houston—Mrs. Griffin—Mrs. Provost—the Miss Bayards, and a great number of other respectable characters."—*Gaz. of the U. 28 "Although the president makes no formal invitations, yet the day after the arrival of Mrs. Washington the following distinguished personages dined at his house en famille—Their Excellencies the Vice-President—the Governor of this State—the Ministers of France and Spain—and the Governor of the Western Territory—the Hon. Secretary of the United States for Foreign Affairs—the Most Hon. Mr. Langdon, Mr. Wingate, Mr. Izard, Mr. Few, and Mr. Muhlenburg, Speaker of the Hon. House of Representatives of the United States."—Gaz. of the U. S., My 30, 1789.

Paine Wingate, senator from New Hampshire, one of the guests, has left the following description of this dinner: "It was the least showy dinner that I ever saw at the President's. As there was no clergyman present, Washington himself said grace on taking his seat. He dined on a boiled leg of mutton, as it was his custom to eat of only one dish. After the dessert a single glass of wine was offered to each of the guests, when the President rose, the guests following his example, and repaired to the drawing-room, each departing at his option, without ceremony."—Baker, Washington after the Rev., 138.

The president's levee is attended "by a very numerous and most respectable company." It was not generally known that he was to enter the drawing-room at three o'clock, and this "occasioned inaccuracies as to the time of attendance."—Gaz. of the U. S., My 30, 1789.

June — A detailed description of the "Federal Edifice" is published, with an engraved view of the building. The text reads: "The citizens of New York, desirous of testifying their attachment to the new national government, and of making their city the place of the permanent residence of the Federal Legislature, have enlarged and repaired their city Hall, and made it a convenient and elegant structure, worthy of the respectable body for whose use it is designed.

"This building is situated at the end of Broad Street, where its front appears to great advantage. The basement story is Tuscan, and is pierced with seven openings; four massy pillars in the center support four Doric columns and a pediment. The frieze is ingeniously divided to admit thirteen stars in the metopes; these, with the American Eagle and other insignia in the pediment, and the tables over the windows, filled with the 13 arrows and the olive branch united, mark it as a building set apart for national purposes.

"After entering from Broad Street, we find a plainly finished square room, flagged with stone, to which the citizens have free access; from this we enter the vestibule in the center of the pile, which leads in front to the floor of the Representatives' room, or real Federal Hall, and through two arches on each side, by a public stair-case on the left, and by a private one on the right, to the Senate chamber and lobbies. This vestibule is paved with marble; is very lofty and well finished; the lower part is of a light rustic, which supports an handsome iron gallery; the upper half is in a lighter stile, and is finished with a sky light of about twelve by eighteen feet, which is decorated with a profusion of ornament in the richest taste. Passing into the Representatives' room, we find a spacious and elegant apartment, sixty one feet deep, fifty eight wide, and thirty six high, without including a coved ceiling of about ten feet high. This room is of an octangular form; four of its sides are rounded in the manner of niches, and give a graceful variety to the whole. The windows are large and placed sixteen feet from the floor; all below them is finished with plain wainscot, interrupted only by four chimnies; but above these a number of Ionic columns and pilasters, with their proper entablature, are very judiciously disposed, and give great elegance. In the pannels between the windows, are trophies carved, and the letters U. S. in a cypher, surrounded with laurel. The speaker's chair is opposite the great door and raised by several steps; the chairs for the members are ranged semicircularly in two rows in front of the speaker. Each member has his separate chair and desk. There are two galleries which front the speaker; that below projects fifteen feet, [and is suspended without the help of supporters;] the upper one is not so large, and is intended to be at the disposal of the members for the accommodation of their friends: Besides these galleries, there is a space on the floor, confined by a bar, where the public are [also] admitted. There are three small doors for common use, besides the great one in the front. The curtains and chairs in this room are of light blue damask. It is intended to place a statue of Liberty over the Speaker's chair, and trophies upon each chimney.

"After ascending the stairs on the left of the vestibule, we reach a lobby of nineteen by forty eight feet, finished with Tuscan pilasters; this communicates with the iron gallery before mentioned, and leads at one end to the galleries of the Representatives' room, and at the other to the Senate chamber. This room is forty feet long, thirty wide, and twenty high, with an arched ceiling; it has three windows in front, and three back, to correspond to them, those in front open into a gallery twelve feet deep, guarded by an elegant iron railing. In this gallery our illustrious President, attended by the Senate and House of Representatives, took his oath of office, in the face of Heaven, and in presence of a large concourse of people assembled in front of the building.

"The Senate chamber is decorated with pilasters, &c. which are not of any regular order; the proportions are light and graceful; the capitals are of a fanciful kind, the invention of Major L'Enfant, the architect; he has appropriated them to this building, for amidst their foliage appears a star and rays, and a piece of drapery below suspends a small medallion with U.S. in a cypher. The idea is new and the effect pleasing; and although they cannot be said to be of any ancient order, we must allow that they have an appearance of magnificence. The ceiling is plain, with only a sun and thirteen stars in the center. The marble which is used in the chimnies is American, and for beauty of shades and polish is equal to any of its kind in Europe. The President's chair is at one end of the room, elevated about three feet from the floor, under a rich canopy of crimson damask. The arms of the United States are to be placed over it. The chairs of the members are ranged semicircularly, as those in the Representatives' room. The floor is covered with an handsome carpet, and the windows are furnished with curtains of crimson damask. Besides these rooms, there are several others, for use and convenience; a library, lobbies and committee rooms above, and guard rooms below. On one side (which we could not shew on the plate) is a platform, level with the floor of the Senate chamber, which affords a convenient walk for the members, of more than two hundred feet long, and is guarded by an iron railing. June —

"We cannot close our description without observing, that great praise is due to Major L'Enfant, the architect, who has surmounted many difficulties, and has so accommodated the additions to the old parts, and so judiciously altered what he saw wrong, that he has produced a building uniform and consistent throughout, and has added to great elegance every convenience that could be desired.

"The exertions of the workmen [(the principals of which were Mr. J. Robinson, carpenter, and Messrs. Moore and Smith, masons)] ought not to be passed unnoticed, who effected so great a work, in an unfavorable season, in the course of a few months.

["It must be remarked, that the capulo here represented, is the remainder of the old building, and is not entirely consistent with the new; it is, however, intended to be rebuilt, and considerable alterations remain to be made to the roof; but when these will be accomplished is not in our power to determine."]—The Massachusetts Mag., Je, 1789. The same account was published in the Columbian Mag., Ag, 1789; also in the N. Y. Mag. or Literary Repository, Mr, 1790 (where the portions here introduced in brackets were added). See also description of Grim's view of the old city hall (Pl. 32-b), I: 272.

An open letter, written by "A Paviour" and addressed to the mayor, is published, describing the need of paving and grading the streets. Descriptive specifications are given for such improvements in Broadway, Maiden Lane, Queen St., "Comfoot Hill," Ferry St., Smith St., Broad St., Princess St., and Wall St. It begins thus: 3

"Broad-Way and the Range of the Docks are the highest and the lowest levels: the corporation should therefore ascertain their heights, by a just survey, never after to be altered; for the intermediate streets most depend on these two limits to regulate them in their levels, and to prevent repeated and expensive alterations. We have seen frequent alterations in the new pavings of last year: local alterations in paving must ever produce confusion in the plan of a city, where they are not conformable to a general survey. Wall-street is still two feet too high, opposite the stables: an arched wood-vault, belonging to one of the houses, is the reason this must not be touched; it was an object of too much moment; it would have cost the owner five pounds to lower it. The streets that run parallel to the two rivers should be, as nearly as possible, level. Two inches fall, to every ten feet, was the plan of the old pavement, and it might be necessary. On the present plan, four inches to every 100 feet is sufficient: witness, Water-street, from Mr. Waddington's corner to the Fly-Market: yet such is the force of former habits, that the very man that paved this last year (in some degree against his inclination) is this moment raising a hill in the same street, from the Old to Coenty's slip."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 3, 1789.

A letter, dated New York, June 6, 1789, and printed later in a London newspaper, reported that, on June 4, Washington gave "a very sumptuous entertainment" on account of "the recovery of his Majesty the King of Great Britain," at which were present "the Envoys of England, France, Holland, and Portugal, and persons of the first distinction."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 241. The New York newspapers of the time, now available in New York, make no mention of the event. 4

The comedy "The Clandestine Marriage," and a farce, "The Citizen," are performed at the John Street Theatre. "The President "

1789 June 4 of the United States and his Lady—the Most Honorable Robert Morris and Lady—the Gentlemen of the President's Suite—Honorable General Knox and Lady—Baron Steuben—and many other respectable and distinguished characters, honored the Theatre by their presence."—Gaz. of U. S., Je 5, 1789; Daily Adv., Je 5 and 6 1789; Ford, Washington and the Theatre, 36–37. This is the first recorded mention of Mrs. Washington's first appearance in New York outside her own house since her arrival.—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 240.

5 Geo Clinton's election as governor is celebrated by a grand jubilee at Fraunces Tavern.—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 343. This was the tavern in Cortlandt St.—See My 9.

" The correct lines of the Turtle Bay patent are the subject of inquiry in connection with the sale of the Common Lands.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 455.

" Joshua Levy is paid £11:3 "for the hire of his Store for a Watch House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 457. See, further, N 20.

9 "A Republican" sends from Albany to Francis Childs, for publication in The Daily Advertiser of New York, a letter which had been contributed by "Pro Republica" to the Albany Register on June 6, consisting of a long and timely criticism of the use of titles by newspapers when referring to Americans of distinction, many examples of which are transcribed from the Gazette of the United States. It calls attention to the fact that congress has "testified their sense of the insignificance of empty titles." Particular reference is made to the mention, in the Gaz. of the U. S. of May 30, of the names of the ladies present at Mrs. Washington's reception.—Daily Adv., Je 19, 1789. See My 27.

10 The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the Representatives of this City in the Legislature . . . on the most eligible Measures of obtaining from the State for the use of this City the Lands at the Fort & Battery & Nutten Island."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 457. See, further, Jl 30.

" The common council directs it also "to confer with the Representatives of this City in the Legislature . . . on the Subject of providing by Lottery or otherwise of Monies, beyond what are already directed to be raised by Tax, to defray the Expenses of the improvements & Repairs to the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 457. See, further, Je 18.

" The mayor reports to the common council that, for 330 tavern licenses which he has granted from March 1, 1788, to March 1, 1789, at 30s. each, he has received £495. The board directs that he retain 6s. out of each license fee, "being so much allowed to him by this Board as usual for performing the Duties of his Office as Mayor," and that he pay a like sum out of each license fee to the city clerk for his services, and the rest to the city treasurer for the use of the city.

The mayor also reports that, from Feb. 1, 1787, to Jan. 31, 1788, after deducting for collecting, he had received £580:15 as clerk of the market, of which his moiety was £290:7:6; also that, from Feb. 1, 1788, to Feb. 1, 1789, after such deduction, he had received £584:0:6, of which his share was £292:0:3. The other moiety he has paid to the city treasurer for the use of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 457–58. See, however, D 11.

" The common council orders the city treasurer to "pay off the Bond from this Corporation to Isaac Sears, deceased, assigned to Thomas Ten Eyck, as the state of the Revenue Fund shall permit."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 458. This refers to Sears's interest in the liberty-pole site which he conveyed to the city, Oct. 19, 1785 (q. v.); see also F 3, 1770.

The statement made by Miss Mary L. Booth (Hist. of the City of N. Y., 581) that payment was never made, and that "the grounds to the northwest of the City Hall still belong to the heirs of the New York Liberty Boys" (see I: 372–73; also Ja 6 and Je 20, 1785), is therefore doubly in error. Nothing has been found in the official records, either by Comptroller Prendergast's assistants or by the historical expert of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., to justify the assumption that Isaac Sears was acting in any but a private capacity in this transaction. Secondly, the researches instituted for the author by the comptroller's office (see I: 373, footnote) have resulted, since the publication of Vol. I of this work, in the discovery of the record in the department of finance that the bond of Isaac Sears, assigned to Thomas Ten Eyck, was paid off. This appears in the following entries in the city chamberlain's Record A, pp. 299 and 303:

June 12, 1789—"Sundry Accounts to City Cash—Interest paid Thos. T. Eyck Interest on a Bond to Isaac Sears . . . £8:7:9
"Bonds Payable—in part for the principal of D° £67:16:0

July 24, 1789—"Sundry Accounts to City Cash—Interest Account
"For interest on a Bond to Isaac Sears paid Thos. T. Eyck, from May 1, last . £1:3:4
"Bonds Payable—paid D° in full for principal of D° £100:0:0"

These payments retired the bond of the corporation to Isaac Sears, dated Oct. 19, 1785, representing the purchase price of his interest in the Harris plot (to wit, £80, with interest from February, 1770), amounting to £167:16.—See Je 20 and O 19, 1785.

The common council appoints a committee "to report a plan for enclosing the Ground in front of the Alms House &c & putting it into Grass & planting Trees therein."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 459. The work of developing this project lasted about five years.—See ibid., Vols. I and II. "

The French States General reorganizes as the National Assembly.—Anderson, Constitutions & other Select Docs. Illus. of Hist. of France (1789–1907), 1–2. 17

"His Excellency the President of the United States has been much indisposed for several days past, which has caused great anxiety in the breast of every true friend to America; yesterday he was visited by several physicians, and a chain extended across the street to prevent the passing of carriages before his door."—N. Y. Jour., Je 18, 1789. His illness was caused by a malignant carbuncle which compelled him to lie on one side for six weeks and troubled him for a much longer time. Dr. Samuel Bard was in frequent attendance.—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 241; Ford, The True Geo. Washington (1896), 52–53, and authorities there cited. 18

The common council decides, after hearing the report of the committee appointed on June 10 (q. v.), to apply to the Bank of New York for a loan of the further sum of £2,000, believing that it will be sufficient to complete the repairs and alterations on the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 461. The bank, however, refused, and on June 24 the common council ordered that $1,200 be borrowed elsewhere.—Ibid., I: 465. See, however, ibid., I: 491–92; and Ja 15, 1790. "

George Remsen and others, in a petition to the common council, dated June 8, state that they have partly built by subscription a market-house "between the Exchange and the East River, On the Spot where a Bridge has been erected;" and that, as it stands "over the Spot where a Bridge lately Stood," they have saved the city treasury over £30 which would have been necessary to repair the bridge. They therefore ask the board to contribute £15 to enable them to complete the market-house.—From the original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read June 18th, 1789." The board grants £15 toward finishing it (see O 14, 1788).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 461. See Je 30. "

The common council orders that the width of "the middle Road through the Common Lands" be increased 10 ft. on each side, and that this extra width be deducted from the Common Lands.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 462. On July 17, the order of June 18 was reconsidered, and it was decided to take the total of 20 feet from the east side only.—Ibid., I: 471. This was Manhattan Avenue, which was part of, or the same as, the Middle Road.—See L. M. R. K., III: 1005. "

"The President has been confined to his bed for a week past with a fever, and a violent tumor on his thigh;—I have now, however, the pleasure to inform you that the former has left him, and the latter in a fair way of being removed . . ."—Baker, Washington after the Rev., 140, citing letter from Tobias Lear to Clement Biddle. See, further, Jl 3. 22

It is reported by a joint committee of the U. S. senate and house of representatives that the two rooms on the first floor in the southwest angle of the city hall are not necessary for the accommodation of congress, and they suggest that these rooms be used by such persons as the city may employ to take care of the building. Rinier Skaats is accordingly appointed to this duty, and the board orders "that one of the windows of the said Rooms be converted into a Door," also that conductors be fixed on the city hall to prevent danger from lightning.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 462–63. Rinier Skaats was keeper of the old federal hall before receiving this new 24

1789 June 24 appointment. He was a striking personality,—wearing "a sort of Dutch pea-jacket, with short skirts, a pair of regular Dutch breeches, coming about as low as his knee-pan, woollen hose, with high-quartered shoes with square buckles."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 17, 1831, citing the N. Y. Mirror. See, also, Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 424, where, however, Bartholomew Skaats is the one described.

" The common council appoints a committee to report to the board a list of "the Materials & Articles remaing at the City Hall & that they cause them to be collected & deposited in some safe Place."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 463. This probably refers to the building materials used in the alterations, which, however, are not yet complete.—See ibid., I: 465.

" The sum of £50 remains due on a bond given by Nicholas Bogert, Henry Remsen, and others, to complete the purchase price of "the Lot of Ground whereon the Oswego Market is erected" (see L. M. R. K., III: 959), and suit has been brought against them. They petition the common council for aid in discharging the debt, and the subject is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 463–64.

" The northward regulation of Greenwich St. is indicated by a city ordinance of this date to pave it from Barclay to Murray St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 464. Cf. O 30.

" The common council agrees to grant to Trinity Corporation the triangular piece of ground at the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads (see Ag 20, 1788) at an annual rental of £18. The clerk of the board is directed to ascertain if the church will accept these terms, and if so to prepare the lease.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 464–65. See, further, Jl 27.

" The committee appointed to superintend the sale of the Common Lands (see Ap 3) reports by schedules the lots sold at auction and private sale, showing lot numbers, acreage, buyers, price, etc. The common council orders that the seal of the corporation be affixed to the articles of agreement.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 466–67, 467. For the application of these terms in the case of a sale or release to Trinity corporation, see F 26, 1790.

" A warrant is issued to pay Peter Elting £1:16:6. Part of this sum (£1:3) was "for Carriage & Liquour for Committee on Common Lands;" and the rest (0:16:3) was "for Building Stairs & Cleaning Murrays Wharf for Reception of the President."—From original audited bill, in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 467.

30 The common council orders that the "fœderal Ship" ("Hamilton"), which was used in the procession on the adoption of the new constitution by the state of New York (see Je 23, 1788), be removed from the Bowling Green; also that the fence be repaired, and the Bowling Green rented.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 468.

" The common council appoints a committee to "direct the removal of the Butchers &c out of the Exchange & to regulate the standings in the new Market [see Je 18] lately erected there."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 468. See D 4.

July 3 Washington writes to Jas. McHenry: "I have now the pleasure to inform you, that my health is restored, but a feebleness still hangs upon me, and I am much incommoded by the incision, which was made in a very large and painful tumor on the protuberance of my thigh. This prevents me from walking or sitting. . . . I am able to take exercise in my coach, by having it so contrived as to extend myself the full length of it."—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), XI: 401; Baker, Washington after the Rev., 140.

" A list is prepared of "Proprietors Names of Chatham Street July 3, 1789,"—from Magazine and Queen Sts. to Beekman St. It gives their names, sizes of lots, etc. The lots include that of the "Brick Meeting," and the spaces "from Goal pale fence to George Street" and "from Tryon Row to New Goal Fence of pales." The width of George St. is 25 ft.; of Frankfort St., 32 ft. 6 in.; of Thomas St., 42 ft. on one side of Chatham St. and 45 ft. 6 in. on the other side.—From MS. in package marked "N. Y. City, 1760–1800, Miscellaneous," in collection of the N. Y. H. S.

4 The presence of Washington in New York makes the celebration of Independence Day especially noteworthy. The legion of Gen. Malcom's brigade, composed of the grenadiers, infantry, troop of horse, and brigade company of artillery, under the command of Col. Chrystie, are reviewed "in the field." On their return from the parade, "they passed the house of the President of the United States, who appeared at his door in a suit of regimentals, and was saluted by the troops as they passed. His late indisposition deprived the troops of the honor and satisfaction of being reviewed by him in the field." At noon a salute was fired from the fort by Col. Bauman, and at four o'clock the officers "sat down to an entertainment provided for them at Mr. Samuel Fraunces's in Cortlandt-street, when toasts, suited to the occasion, were drunk."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 9, 1789. July 4

Members of "Society of the Cincinnati of the State of New York" and other state societies at present in the city met together at the City Tavern. A committee was appointed to wait on the president "with the congratulations of the day," and from thence to proceed to the vice-president, and the speaker of the house of representatives. An address was made to the president, to which he replied. The Society of the Cincinnati then "proceeded in procession, attended by Col. Bauman's regiment of artillery and band of music (whose appearance was truly martial) to St. Paul's church, where in the presence of a most respectable and brilliant audience, an elegant eulogium on Major General Nathaniel Greene was delivered by Col. Alexander Hamilton. The society on this occasion were honored by the presence of the Lady and Family of the President, his indisposition (the inconvenience of which thanks be to Heaven, are nearly surmounted) prevented his personal attendance—the Vice-President and ladies of his family, the senate, the speaker and the house of representatives. . . ."—Daily Adv., Jl 6; Gaz. of the U. S., Jl 10, 1789. The Cincinnati "wore their eagles at their button-holes, and were preceded by a flag."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 100.

It was possibly on this day, which was Saturday, that the following incident occurred, described by Dr. Buchanan (Washington's god-son) who, in 1860, wrote about his former playmate, the young "G. W. Custis," and other topics:

"The general's coach, with cream-colored horses with white manes and tails, was sent as usual on a Saturday for me to dine. . . . I found him and lady in the back dining-room, and after a time he disappeared, shortly thereafter making his appearance in full dress, black silk-velvet chapeau, and elegant steel-hilted sword. A servant soon approached him and the general followed him to the stoop, with sloping steps both up and down Cherry-street, before which were congregated a number of gentlemen to whom Washington . . . addressed a few words. . . . The company then came into the house, and were served with cakes and wine. On their departure the general again retired and came down to dinner in his usual costume of pepper-and-salt colored clothes. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., IV: 138–39.

"This day is published by Hodge, Allen and Campbell, and sold at their respective book-stores, the New-York Directory, and Register, for the year 1789, illustrated with an accurate and elegant plan of the city of New York, and part of Long Island, including the Suburbs. . . ."—Daily Adv., Jl 10, 1789. It is a 12mo volume of 144 pages. The title-page reads: *The New-York Directory, and Register, For the Year 1789. Illustrated with an accurate and elegant Plan of the City of New-York, and part of Long-Island, including the Suburbs, with all the Streets, Lanes, Public Buildings, Wharves, &c. exactly laid down, from the latest Survey. Price—3s. 6d. with the Plan of the City. New-York, printed For Hodge, Allen, and Campbell, and sold at their respective Stores. M, DCCLXXXIX.

The folding "Plan of the City of New York," drawn by "I [J] M'Comb, Junr," and engraved by C. Tiebout, measures 14⅜ in. wide and 8¾ in. high., and contains a list of "References" to numbered landmarks in the city, as far north as the house of "Mr Lispenard" on the road to Greenwich, at the North River (see L. M. R. K., 1789 July 10 III: 950). On the back of the title-page is printed an address "To the Public" by the publishers, dated July 4, 1789, explaining certain desired improvements in the text, including the following statement: "The editors hoped to have had it in their power to add the names of the continental officers appointed under the new constitution, . . . but those appointments not being yet established, and the call for the book becoming very general, they were therefore induced to give it without further delay in its present state . . ." (see also p. 103). A table of "Contents" precedes the list of names and addresses, which in turn is followed by the lists, etc. mentioned in the title-page, and a few others not mentioned there. These lists begin, on p. 101, with the names and addresses of the "Congress of the United States," preceded by those of "George Washington, Esq. . . . No. 3, Cherry street," and "John Adams, Esq. . . . Greenwich road." Senator Robert Morris, for example, is at "39 Great dock street," and Saml. A. Otis, the secretary of the senate, is at "5 Wall street." F. A. Muhlenberg, the speaker of the house, is at "Rev. Dr. Kunzie's, 24 Chatham row." Representative James Madison, Jr., of Virginia, is at "19 Maiden lane." The directory contains about 4,500 names. Of New York residents, John Jay resides at 133 Broadway, Alexander Hamilton, attorney at law, has an office or resides at 58 Wall St., and Aaron Burr, attorney at law, at the corner of Nassau and Little Queen (Cedar) Sts. For Burr's house, see also Ja 5, 1790.

13 The legislature passes the following resolution:

"... that Fort George in the City of New-York, and the lands adjoining to the same, ought to be reserved and secured for public uses; and that a proper House ought to be erected on part of the ground, for the residence and accommodation of the President of the United States; and that the Legislature will at their next meeting make the necessary legislative provision in the premises [see Ja 14, 1790]. And the Governor of this State is hereby requested, to cause the street commonly called Broadway, to be continued through the said fort, and to direct the materials of the said fort, and of the battery, to be collected and secured, at the expense of the State."—Assembly Jour., 13th sess., 15.

An open letter, dated Aug. 1, and signed by "A Number of Citizens," advised "the Representatives of this city" that "The stranger will certainly redicule the taste of the city in making choice of a spot which has two such gentell, delicate and sweet smelling avenues to court, through petticoat Lane and Stone street. The ground we would recommend would be either Spring Garden, or some spot on Rutger's farm, or what was formerly Delancey's, where there will be ground sufficient for the building, out-houses, stables, court, square, garden, and walk."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 6, 1789. A government house had been projected in 1774–75 (see F 26, Mr 1, 11, Ap 12, 1774, and Mr 7, 1775), but the war prevented its erection.

14 The Bastile is razed by a mob, and the French Revolution inaugurated.—Guizot, Hist. of France, VI: 13–18.

16 Agreeable to resolution of the common council on June 25, regarding the further sale of lots of the Common Lands, the committee superintending it reports the sale of eight lots at auction for a total of £1,140:4, and the board orders that articles of sale be executed for these. Two other lots are ordered sold at private sale. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 467, 470, 478; Daily Adv., Jl 16, 1789.

The common council also orders that the committee take measures "for running out & ascertaining the boundary Line between the proprietors of the Lands between the East River & the Common Lands."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 471.

18 Washington commends "models of machines for reaping and threshing and for cutting and deepening canals, which were exhibited to him by Henry Harbough of Baltimore."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 239.

21 The importation of copper coins from neighbouring states still causes their depreciation (see Je 8 and 20, 1787). The common council recommends that they be rated at 48 coppers to the shilling. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 472.

For cases wherein this valuation was the cause of loss, vide ibid., I: 473, 520. Another case is found in an undated petition, probably soon after this date, the original of which is preserved in file No. 7, city clerk's record-room, signed by John Hicks, Henry Dawson, Gilbert V. Mater, and Jacob Wilkins, Jr., which states that, as "owners of the Ferry Boats which ply from Brooklyn & the Fly Market," they have "for this some time past taken a Quantity of Coppers for ferriage &c: at the Rate of Twenty to a shilling;" and they complain that these coppers are "now lying on their hands and must of Course be a very great loss in their present depreciation." They ask the common council to "receive them on the same Conditions from the 1st to 20th July." They explain further that the public "seldom presents any other Money to pay their passage." Since then the board recommended that these coins be valued "at Forty Eight to a Shilling" (vide supra), and that inconvenience and loss will continue "unless Recd for Rent" by the common council. July 21

Later, copper coins ceased to circulate, and a plan was adopted for the city to issue bills of one penny, two pence, and three pence, to the total value of £1,000.—See F 26, 1790.

" The common council passes ordinances for paving Hanover Sq. and Vesey and Chatham Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 472.

" "All persons having accounts for goods furnished, or repairs done to the house of the President of the United States, previous to the 1st day of May last, are hereby desired to leave the same with Andrew G. Fraunces, No. 69. Crown-street, near the Bathing House, North River, on or before the first day of August next."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 25, 1789.

27 Trinity Corporation sells 16 lots at Vauxhall to Abraham Wilson and gives him a perpetual lease of the lots between Vauxhall and the Hudson River.—Trin. Min. (MS.). This Vauxhall property occupied the west half of the block bounded by Greenwich, Chambers, and Warren Sts., and West Broadway. For outline of its previous history, see L. M. R. K., III: 981.

" Trinity vestry agrees "to take a Lease for the Triangular piece of Ground near the Road from this City to Boston from the Corporation of the City at the Rent of Seventeen pounds per Annum." —Trin. Min. (MS.). This is evidently the ground offered by the common council on June 24 (q. v.) at £18. See, further, F 26, 1790.

28 Washington is now well enough "to receive visits of compliment from many official characters and citizens." Until "his strength shall be more fully restored," he proposes to receive only on Tuesdays. Mrs. Washington "will be at home every Friday, at 8 o'clock P. M. to see company."—Daily Adv., Jl 29, 1789.

" Bancker makes a survey of "Mr Foxcrafts Rose Hill at Greenwich."—From original in Bancker Coll. (box G-M, folder "Greenwich Village") in N. Y. P. L. This should not be confused with the "Rose Hill" of John Watts on 24th St. near Second Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 951.

29 Mayor Duane informs the common council that Gov. Clinton intends, on July 30 (q. v.), "to view the Fort and Battery to see what may be necessary" to be done towards opening & continuing the Broad Way through the same" (see Je 10), and that he wishes the corporation to accompany him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 473.

" The "want of a Regulation taking place in Mulberry Street and that part of Catharine Street between Mulberry and Bayard Streets" induces the residents in that vicinity to petition the common council for relief from the flooding of their lands when it rains. They recommend that "the Streets might be so Regulated as to Carry the Water through Cross Street into the Fresh Water pond."

At the same time, the inhabitants of Roosevelt St. petition the common council against leading the water from Mulberry Street through Roosevelt Street.—From the original petitions (in metal box No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read July 29th 1789 & referred to committee."

" The proprietors of lots in Chambers St., in a petition to the common council, "to direct the said Street to be regulated conformable to your general plan," say that this street "still continues in its natural irregular state," and that they are "desirous of improving their respective Lots," and are "at a loss how to sink Cellars and raise buildings thereon."—See the original petition in the record-room, city clerk's office. It is endorsed: "read July 29th 1789 & referred to the Aldn & Assist. of the West Ward." The survey of this street was approved on Aug. 19 (q. v.).

30 The governor, attended by the common council, having viewed the ground at the Fort and Battery ("which by concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly are reserved for public use and for continuing the Broad Way through to the River"), the mayor informs the board that the governor has proposed "to remove so much of the Fort" as obstructs "the Line of the Broad Way to the River," at the expense of the state; and the mayor indicates that it would be proper for the city "to run a Wharf or Bulkhead in the River, along the Battery from Ells Corner to the Flat Rock, to receive the earth to be removed from the Fort & to enlarge 1789 July 30 the Area of the Battery." The board resolves to "run a wharf or Bulkhead" accordingly, and a committee is appointed to procure someone "to make the said Wharf on Contract," and report an estimate.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 474–75. See, further, Ag 12.

" Jas. Nicholson, one of the assistant aldermen, holds "a Sum of Money arising from the Sale of Stone brought from the Battery to the City Hall." The common council resolves that, after paying him (presumably for making the sale), the balance be appropriated "to the painting & compleating such parts of the City Hall as may be necessary for it's preservation;" a committee is appointed "to direct the Business."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 475, 477.

Aug. 4 The privileged classes in France are abolished by the National Assembly.—Anderson, Constitutions & other Select Docs. Illus. of Hist. of France (1789–1907), 11–14.

" The legislature presents to Washington an address of congratulation upon his election to the presidency. His recent indisposition was the cause of its not being presented sooner. The address, which is dated "Albany July 15," is signed by Pierre Van Cortlandt, president of the senate, and Gulian Verplanck, speaker of the assembly. Washington replied expressing appreciation.—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 8, 1789.

6 "The proprietor of the speaking figure informs the public that he has compleated a small Balloon, he is making to ascend with, which will be exhibited on Friday 7th inst. to ascend at 6 o'clock in the afternoon from the fort, for the benefit of the large Balloon.—Joseph Decker."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 6, 1789. See, further, Ag 11.

7 By act of congress, the war department of the United States is organized, having charge, under the president, of matters relating to the land and navy forces and Indian affairs. Gen. Knox was later (see S 12) appointed the first secretary of war.—Senate Jour. (1789), 90; Winsor, VII: 357.

10 The public and private constitutions of the "Tammany Society or Columbian Order" are agreed upon. A photostat of this original constitution, made from the document in Tammany Hall and bearing the signatures of members from this date to April 3, 1916, is in the MSS. Div., N. Y. P. L. The first name which appears is that of William Mooney, Grand Sachem. The public constitution was published by Thos. Greenleaf in 1789.

The N. Y. Directory for 1789 contains the following notice of the society: "This being a national society consists of Americans born, who fill all offices and adopted Americans, who are eligible to the honorary posts of warrior and hunter. It is founded on the true principles of patriotism, and has for its motives charity and brotherly love. Its officers consist of one grand sachem, twelve sachems, one treasurer, one secretary, one door-keeper—it is divided into thirteen tribes, which severally represent a state; each tribe is governed by a sachem, the honorary posts in which are one warrior and one hunter." New constitutions were adopted in 1813 (q. v., Ag 9).

11 "The Proprietor of the Speaking Figure, informs the public, who were disappointed in seeing the ascent of the small balloon; which descended in Haerlem River, 9 miles from place of ascent. He has constructed another of 30 feet in circumference, for the benefit of the large balloon; it will ascend on the 15th inst. from a lot near the Race-ground, belonging to Mr. Seaman, bounded by Eagle, Suffolk and Cellar streets near Alderman Ivers's.—Joseph Decker."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 11; N. Y. Jour., Ag 13, 1789. The large balloon was later scheduled to ascend on Sept. 24, but, as the newspaper report states, it went up "in fumo."—Ibid., S 24, 1789.

12 The committee appointed to consider "erecting a Wharf or Bulkhead at the Battery to receive the Earth to be taken from the Fort" reports to the common council several plans with estimates of expense. The board decides "that a Wharf or Bulkhead be errected on a Line from the Corner of Kennedy's Wharf to the North Wt Bastion of the Battery," and that the committee "take Order for the immediate erection of the said Wharf in the most economical & best manner," reporting from time to time to the board. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 476–77. See, further, Ag 19.

13 A yacht race takes place "without the Hook." The pilot-boat "York," commanded by M. Daniels, "fairly beat the Virginia-built schooner Union, Capt. S. Merry, belonging to Curracoa." The breeze was light. They ran 14 leagues in five hours. "Upwards of 30 sail of vessels were at the match—and it is supposed near 2000 l. thus exchanged their owners."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 20, 1789. The race was run for a purse of "fifty half-joes," besides "other small bets."—Ibid., Ag 13, 1789.

Aug. 19 Washington receives and answers an address from "The Bishops, the Clergy, and Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the States of New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, in Convention at Philadelphia, 7th August, 1789."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 22, 1789.

" The common council passes an ordinance "to regulate the ringing or tolling of the Bells of the Several Churches in this City for Funerals."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 478.

" Elias Burger, Jr., enters into an agreement with the city to build a wharf or bulkhead "from the Corner of Kennedy's Wharf into the northwest Bastion of the Battery" (see Ag 12). It is to be 12 feet wide at the bottom and 8 feet 6 inches at the top; the front "battering" and the rear perpendicular; the surface of the wharf to be "two feet above the level of the lower Corner of Kennedy's Wharf and filled in with stone to the top;" with "four Oak standards of four by six Inches thick let in flush with the front into every length of Logs of thirty feet and fastened with a twelve Inch ragged Iron spike into each Log;" also "one Brace of Ten Inches diameter dovetailed in the front and Rear Logs in every course at the distance of nine feet," and "after the third course there shall be anchor pieces of Ten Inches diameter and thirty feet long dovetailed and bolted into the front and Rear pieces of the wharf at every Eighteen feet distance," etc. The whole wharf is to "be built of pitch pine under water and of other pine wood above water," and is to be finished by Oct. 15. The cost is to be £378.—From the original agreement, signed by Burger, in city clerk's record-room. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 478. Burger was paid for the work by instalments: Sept. 9, £100; Oct. 12, £100; Oct. 30, £100; Jan. 29, 1790, £78.—Ibid. I: 483, 492, 501, 520. See, further, My 19, 1790.

" The common council approves a survey of Chambers St. (see Jl 29), and orders that it be filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 478.

22 William Maclay records in his journal a graphic description of Washington's attitude toward the senate during a discussion of Indian affairs; the interruption caused by the noise of carriages, etc. He is led to think, by the debate, that the president "wishes to tread on the necks of the Senate."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 128–31.

25 Mary Washington, the mother of the president, dies at her home in Fredericksburg, Va.—Gaz. of the U. S., S 9, 1789.

26 Among many notable wax-works of contemporary subjects, exhibited by "Mr. Bowen" at "No. 74 Water St., opposite the Crane-Wharf," is one of "The President of the United States, sitting under a Canopy, in his Military Dress.—Over the Head of his Excellency a Fame is suspended (also in Wax) crowning him with a Wreath of Laurels."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 27, 1789. See, further, S 14.

" At its meetings on this and subsequent days, the subject of regulating and paving streets was uppermost in the transactions of the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 479–80, 481–82, etc.

27 A debate occurs in the house of representatives regarding the location of the permanent seat of government.—Annals of Congress (Wash., 1834), I: 786–848. See also Jl 16, 1790.

" William Maclay describes a solemn and formal dinner which he attended at the president's house. After Mrs. Washington withdrew with the ladies, "I expected the men would now begin," writes Mr. Maclay, "but the same stillness remained. The President told of a New England clergyman who had lost a hat and wig in passing a river called the Brunks [Bronx]. He smiled, and everybody else laughed. He now and then said a sentence or two on some common subject, and what he said was not amiss.—The President kept a fork in his hand, when the cloth was taken away, I thought for the purpose of picking nuts. He ate no nuts, however, but played with the fork, striking on the edge of the table with it."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 137–38.

16 The common council appoints a committee "to treat with the proprietor about the purchase of the Corner House opposite to the South East Corner of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 485. The committee reported on Sept. 29 that the property could be obtained for £450, and the board ordered that the committee conclude the bargain.—Ibid., I: 488. On Oct. 12, the committee reported that it had bought the lot "of Mr Wm Leary" (probably agent for Catharine Provoost—see D 4) for £450, half to be paid in cash on delivery of the deed, and the other half in a city bond at interest. The board approved.—Ibid., I: 493. This property, which was at No. 1 Broad St. (now covered by the building of J. P. Morgan & Co., bankers), was owned by the city from this time until 1816 (q. v.).—Liber Deeds, CXIV: 287; CCLXXIV: 214; and descrip. of Pl. 67, I: 448. See, further, O 23.

18 Congress passes "An Act for the temporary establishment of the Post-Office." This provides that the regulations "shall be the same as they last were under the resolutions and ordinances of the late Congress," and that the postmaster-general shall be "subject to the direction of the President of the United States." The act is to be in force only until the end of the next congressional session.—Acts of Congress (1789), chap. 16.

23 The "Air Balloon," announced on Sept. 12 to be exhibited on this day, does not ascend. It collects "two thirds of the city." The wind and "the great pressure of spectators" prevent Mr. Decker's giving "that satisfaction which he wished." He is blamed by some, "as if he designed it as a bubble," but of this the newspaper account clears him.—N. Y. Packet, S 24, 1789.

24 Congress passes and the president approves "An Act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States." It provides for a supreme court, which shall consist of a chief-justice and five associate justices, who shall hold two sessions annually at the seat of government, one commencing the first Monday of February, and the other the first Monday of August. It divides the United States into 13 districts, by states, part of Massachusetts being joined to the Maine District, and part of Virginia to the Kentucky District; and a district court is provided for each of these districts, consisting of one judge who shall hold four sessions annually, at the times prescribed in the act, and shall have power to hold special courts at his discretion. The place where each district court is to be held is prescribed, that of the district of New York being in New York City. This was opened Feb. 2, 1790 (q. v.). The act further provides for a division of these districts (except those of Maine and Kentucky) into three circuits, the eastern circuit comprising the districts of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York. The times when the first session of the circuit court in the several districts shall commence are prescribed, that in New York being on April 4, 1790. The sessions of the circuit court in the district of New York shall be held alternately in New York City and Albany. The several other provisions of the act relate to various powers, the jurisdiction and operation allowed to these courts.—Acts of Cong. (1789), chap. 20 (first session of the first congress). Elias Burger is paid £15 for a bulkhead across Murray Slip, and David Demarest £15 for filling in this slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 487. "

Payment is made to John McComb for surveying streets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 487. "

Before the adjournment of the first congress on Sept. 29, the last day of the first session, the two houses appointed a joint committee to wait on the president and "request that he would recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peacefully to establish a constitution of government for their safety and happiness."—Senate Jour. (1789), 154. The proclamation, recommending Thursday, Nov. 26, for a national thanksgiving, was issued on Oct. 3 (q. v.). 26

Mrs. John Adams, writing from "Richmond Hill (N. Y.)" to her sister Elizabeth, the wife of Rev. John Shaw of Massachusetts, says: "The house in which we reside is situated upon a hill, the avenue to which is interspersed with forest trees, under which a shrubbery rather too luxuriant and wild has taken shelter, owing to its having been deprived by death, some years since, of its original proprietor [Abraham Mortier], who kept it in perfect order. In front of the house, the noble Hudson rolls his majestic waves, bearing upon his bosom innumerable small vessels, which are constantly forwarding the rich products of the neighbouring soil to the busy hand of a more extensive commerce. Beyond the Hudson rises to our view the fertile country of the Jerseys, covered with a golden harvest, and pouring forth plenty like the cornucopiæ of Ceres. On the right hand, an extensive plain presents us with a view of fields covered with verdure, and pastures full of cattle. On the left, the city opens upon us, intercepted only by clumps of trees, and some rising ground, which serves to heighten the beauty of the scene, by appearing to conceal a part. In the back ground, is a large flower-garden, enclosed with a hedge and some very handsome trees. On one side of it, a grove of pines and oaks fit for contemplation."—Letters of Mrs. Adams (ed. by C. F. Adams, 1848), 343–44. See also S 6, 1790. 27

The Richmond Hill house "was a wooden building of massive architecture, with a lofty portico supported by Ionic columns, the front walls decorated with pilasters of the same order. . . . There was a fine lawn around it, shaded by large and venerable oaks and lindens, and skirted on every side by a young but thrifty natural wood of an hundred acres or more." The door opened into "a spacious hall, with a small room on each side opening to more spacious apartments beyond." A side door on the right led to "a wide stair-case with a heavy mahogany railing." Gulian C. Verplanck thus describes an official dinner which was held there during Vice-President Adams's occupancy, in "a large room on the second story with wide Venetian windows in front, and a door opening to a balcony under the portico," and which he, then a member of the New York assembly, attended: "There, in the centre of the table, sat Vice President Adams, in full dress, with his bag and solitaire, his hair frizzed out each side of his face, as you see it in Stuart's older pictures of him. On his right sat Baron Steuben, our royalist republican disciplinarian general. On his left was Mr. Jefferson, who had just returned from France, conspicuous in his red waistcoat and breeches, the fashion of Versailles. Opposite sat Mrs. Adams with her cheerful intelligent face. She was placed between the courtly Count du Moustiers, the French ambassador, in his red-heeled shoes and ear-rings, and the grave, polite, and formally bowing Mr. Van Birkel, the learned and able envoy of Holland. There too was Chancellor Livingston, then still in the prime of life." The Count Du Moustiers was responsible for a striking incident of the occasion. He had shown himself conspicuously disin-

1789 Sept. 27 clined to partake of the luxuries of the table so that the other guests were much perplexed. Then the narrator of the story relates that "at length his own body cook, in a clean white linen cap, a clean white tablier before him, a brilliantly white damask serviette flung over his arm, and a warm pie of truffles and game in his hand, came bustling eagerly through the crowd of waiters, and placed it before the Count, who, reserving a moderate share to himself, distributed the rest among his neighbors."—The Talisman for 1830 (ed. by G. C. Verplanck, W. C. Bryant, and R. C. Sands, 1829), 338–41.

A description written in 1790 to accompany a view of Richmond Hill (see Pl. 55-a, Vol. I) stated that the place was "the property of Mrs. Jephson," and that it was "formerly the head-quarters of the President, when Commander in Chief of the American army, at the commencement of the late war" (see Je 20 and S 14, 1776).—*N. 9 Washington, during exercise on horseback, visits the gardens of Mr. Perry and Mr. Williamson.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 16. "Perry's garden was on the west side of the Bloomingdale road, west of the present Union Square. Williamson's was a flower and nursery garden, and a place of public resort, on the east side of Greenwich Street, extending about three squares up from Harrison Street."—Ibid., footnote.

10 Washington, accompanied by the vice-president, the governor, Mr. Izard, Col. Smith, and Maj. Jackson, goes in his barge to visit "Mr Prince's fruit gardens and shrubberies at Flushing, on Long Island." Returning, he stopped "at the seats of General and Mr Gouvernr Morris" (Morrisania), and proceeded to Harlem, where the party were met by Mrs. Washington, Mrs. Adams, and Mrs. Smith. They dined at "the tavern kept by a Capt. Mariner," and returned home in the evening.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 17–18. Regarding Marriner, see ibid., footnote.

12 The frigate "l'Active," from the French squadron at Boston, having arrived on Oct. 11, the commander and other officers pay their respects to Pres. Washington. The next day the frigate "got under way for Boston, saluting the city as she passed."—N. Y. Jour., O 15, 1789; Washington's Diary.

The author's collection contains a charming little water-colour view (21⅞ in. by 4⅜ in.) of the Hudson River, bearing the inscription "Vue de Paulus hook de l'apartement de Mde la Mpuise de Brehan à New York." There is a French frigate in the foreground, which may well have been "l'Active." This would fix the date of the drawing as Oct. 11 or 12, 1789.

We know from Griswold's Republican Court, 93, 145, that the Marchioness de Brehan was the sister of the French minister, Count de Moustier, and that she and her son accompanied him on his mission to this country. "She was a very clever woman, wrote with spirit, and had some skill as an artist. She made several portraits of Washington, one of which was presented by him to Mrs. Bingham, and of another, which was engraved in Paris, many copies were sent to Washington, and to her friends here, after her return to France." On the occasion of Washington's inauguration (see Ap 30), the count's residence in Broadway, near the Bowling Green, was brilliantly illuminated and decorated. The transparencies in front of the house may have been designed by Madame de Brehan, "who was always industrious with her pencil when not occupied with more immediate duties to society." Madame de Brehan probably lived with her brother in the house on Broadway, and the drawing in the author's collection was doubtless made from a window of this house.

" Mayor James Duane informs the common council of his appointment as judge of the U. S. district court, and the appointment of Richard Varick (the recorder) to be mayor in his stead. The board appoints a committee to attend the new mayor and see him qualified before the governor on Oct. 14.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 493. For a brief sketch of Varick's life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 549. He was continued as mayor until Aug. 24, 1801 (q. v.).

" The common council orders that the commissioners of the almshouse take down the old powder-magazine at the almshouse, erected in 1747 (q. v.), and use the materials in building the store for the almshouse, to be erected there according to an order of May 4; £100 is paid toward building the store.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 493–94. On Dec. 11, £100 more was paid.—Ibid., I: 509.

" The common council agrees to the following resolution: "Whereas Major Pierre C L'Enfant having at the Request of the Citizens furnished a Plan for altering and improving the City Hall so as to render it suitable for the reception and accommodation of the Congress of the United States, generously undertook to superintend and direct the Work: And in the execution thereof hath displayed a highly distinguished Degree of Skill and Taste in Architecture, and hath moreover exerted uncommon Zeal and Industry

1789 Oct. 12 in accomplishing the said Design, notwithstanding the unfavorable Season in which it was undertaken And the said Hall from his Talents and Exertions hath become a signal Ornament of this City and a Monument of the Munificence of the Citizens.

"Resolved therefore that the Thanks of this Board be presented to the said Major L'Enfant for his eminent Services in forming and executing the said Plan and that the Freedom of this City be presented to him under the common Seal of the Corporation as a Proof of their Esteem

"Resolved also that this Corporation, as a further proof of their Sense of the Services of the said Major L'Enfant in the premisses will convey to him in fee a Lot of their common Land containing the quantity of Ten Acres in such place as shall be agreed upon by a Committee of this Board." Such committee is appointed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 495. See, further, D 30.

13 A deputation from the Society of Friends presents an address to Pres. Washington, to which he replies.—Gaz. of the U. S., O 17, 1789. In his diary he refers to this as an address from "the People called Quakers."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.). For the text, see Penn. Mag., XIII: 245. These were Philadelphia Quakers.

" The vice-president leaves New York "on a visit to his seat at Braintree, Massachusetts."—N. Y. Jour., O 15, 1789.

" The first act of congress providing payments for invalid pensioners of the United States, which was approved Sept. 29, is published as a broadside; a copy is in the N. Y. P. L.

14 Richard Varick is installed as mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831) I: 495.

15 Washington starts, "in his chariot and four," on his tour of the Eastern States.—Gaz. of the U. S., O 17, 1789. His own record states: "Commenced my Journey about 9 o'clock for Boston. . . The Chief Justice, Mr. Jay—and the Secretaries of the Treasury and War Departments [Hamilton and Knox] accompanied me some distance out of the city. About 10 o'clock it began to Rain, and continued to do so till 11, when we arrived at the house of one Hoyatt, who keeps a Tavern at Kings-bridge, where we, that is, Major Jackson, Mr. Lear and myself with six servants, which composed my Retinue, dined. After dinner, through frequent light showers we proceed'd to the Tavern of a Mrs. Haviland at Rye. . . The distance of this day's travel was 31 miles, in which we passed through (after leaving the Bridge) East Chester, New Rochelle, and Mamaroneck."—Washington's Diary (ed. by Lossing, 1860), 19; N. Y. Jour., O 22, 1789.

"According to one who witnessed his reception in one of the towns upon his route, Washington travelled in a post chaise drawn by four bay horses driven by postillions dressed in blanket-coats, liveries, jockey caps, buckskins, and boots. Col. Lear rode on one side of the chaise and Major Jackson on the other, while following it was a light baggage-waggon driven by a man in a round corduroy jacket, glazed hat, buckskins, and boots. In the rear there rode on horseback Washington's colored attendant, Billy, leading his white charger."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 243. See also Winsor VII: 328.

22 Mrs. Washington, in the absence of Gen. Washington on his Eastern tour, writes in a letter: "I lead a very dull life here and know nothing that passes in the town. I never goe to any publick place,—indeed I think I am more like a state prisoner than anything else, there is certain bounds set for me which I must not depart from—and as I cannot doe as I like I am obstinate and stay at home a great deal."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, citing "Curiosities of American History."

23 The proprietors of "Houses and Lotts of Ground fronting Mulberry and Cross Streets in the Outward" petition the common council against the regulation of Mulberry St. which was approved on Sept. 9 (q. v.). They state that "Mott Street which is paralel to Mulberry Street and at the distance of less than two Hundred feet therefrom is at present Twenty five feet and upwards perpendicularly higher than Mulberry Street, where it is intersected by Cross Street, And as by the regulation refer'd to, Cross Street is to remain as it is, it will thereby consequently be rendered for ever impassable except by Foot Passengers."

They further state "that the Fresh Water Pond and the Wells supplied by it are the only resources that this City has for Water, that every regulation therefore that tends to lessen the Depth of Water in that Pond or to contaminate it by an Accumulation of filth, must be repugnant to the Interest and dangerous to the Health of the Citizens, that these consequences must result from rendering it the drain from all the Streets in its neighbourhood is too obvious to mention." Oct. 23

They object to the intended regulation also because "it appears to them very improper that the Water should be brought from Chatham Street (which is not to exceed the distance of a quarter of a Mile from the East River) to the Fresh Water Pond, and from thence to the North River which is more than treeble the distance, in the way it must of necessity pass, if at all, Viz^{t} Out by M^{r} Lespinards and which will be altogether impracticable when those Lands are Improved."

They state further "that a great proportion of the Land about Fresh Water is high and that it will be attended with a great deal of Expence to have it dug down to accommodate it to the small proportion that lies low, and must also be followed with an irrepairable loss and Damage to a number of Estates in that Quarter."

They ask "that the regulation of Mulberry Street, as reported on the Ninth day of Septem^{r} last may be reconsidered and that the regulation of the said Street, as agreed to by your Board on the First day of August 1786 may still be adhered to."

Among the signers of this petition are Robert R. Livingston, John R. Livingston, James Beekman, Leonard Lispenard, Hugh Gaine, and others.—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Oct^{r} 23^{d} 1789 & The whole Board to go & view the Ground to morrow." (A similar petition, with other signers, dated Sept. 12, was submitted to the board, and was reported unfavourably by the committee to whom it was referred.)

The record in the minutes is that the common council resolves to meet next day at the Plow and Harrow Tavern in the Out Ward (see L. M. R. K., III: 980), to view the streets in that neighbourhood, where Mulberry and St. James Sts. are situated.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 497. On Oct. 30, the board ordered that "any further operation on the Ordinance for filling in & levelling Mulberry Street be suspended until April next." In the mean time, a comprehensive survey was ordered, covering all that part of the city.—Ibid., I: 501. Such survey was made, and ordered filed on April 6, 1790.—Ibid., I: 537. For an outline history of Mulberry St., see L. M. R. K., III: 1006.

" The "Roof at backs of some of the Chimnies of the City Hall" leaks; the "Corner or audience Room" there remains unfinished; and "for want of a proper Ash House" the building might be endangered by fire. The common council appoints a committee to "get the said Chimnies leaded, the said Corner Room finished & an Ash House built in the most safe & convenient Place."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 498.

" The common council orders "that Chains be fixed across Front Street to prevent the Interruption by the passing of Carriages during Market Hours," so "that the Country People resorting [to] the Fly Market may be accommodated as much as possible."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 498.

The common council also conceives it necessary "that Chains be provided to fix across the Street at the Exchange to prevent the Courts of Justice & the Legislature when they meet from Interruption by the Noise of Carts."—Ibid., I: 498. On Nov. 20, payment of £4:13:4 was made "for Chains fixed across the Street at the Exchange."—Ibid., I: 506. See, further, D 11.

" Isaac Roosevelt and others petition the common council "that a Bulkhead may be laid across S^{t} James Slip & that the same be filled up a certain distance from Cherry Street." Referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 498. The committee reported estimates on Nov. 20, and was directed to close a contract. At the same time, the proprietors and occupants of lots at the lower end of St. James St. were ordered "to fill up the said Street, from where the Pavement ends, so as to make it more convenient & passable."—Ibid., I: 504. On Dec. 4, £30 was paid to the committee on account, for the work of erecting the bulkhead.—Ibid., I: 508. On Dec. 30, balance in full, £20.—Ibid., I: 513.

" The common council orders "that the Ald^{n} & Assist^{t} of the Dock Ward direct such necessary Repairs to the Corner House [watch-house] opposite to the City Hall [see S 16] as to render it comfortable for the Watchmen & safe for the confinement of Persons who may be apprehended by the Watchmen in the night time."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 499. See, further, D 4.

" The common council resolves "that in future this Board will not grant any Money towards a Pump without a brass Chamber &

1789 unless the Well as to its make & Size be approved of by the Aldⁿ
O 23 & Assistᵗ of the Ward."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 499.

" The common council appoints a committee to make necessary repairs to "the Bridges of the Corporation Wharf at the North River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 499. Payment of £11:3:4 was made for this on Nov. 20.—Ibid., I: 506.

27 At the corner of Nassau and Ann Sts., stands Pearce's tavern.—N. Y. Packet, O 27, 1789.

30 The common council passes an ordinance "for the paving of Greenwich Street from Barclay to Warren Street & for compleating that part of Greenwich Street which lies opposite to Barclay Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 500. Cf. Je 24.

Nov. The common council orders "that the Aldⁿ & Assistᵗ of the 2 South Ward direct the Bridge North of the Exchange to be repaired."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 502. On Nov. 20, payment of £9:9:3 was made for these repairs (ibid., I: 506), and on Jan. 15, 1790, £7:7:1 (ibid., I: 517).

12 "Considerable progress has been made this season in the works at the Battery, one half of which are already compleated and formed into excellent wharves: the other half must lie over until next spring, but when finished will connect the whole into a most beautiful circuitous street around three-fourths of New York. from Greenwich street along the North River until it comes to White Hall, and from thence by the East River along Albany Pier, . . ."

The spire of Trinity Church, it is expected, "by help of good conductors, will be a great preservative against lightning, to all the houses situate within the distance of several hundred paces, and particularly so to the Federal Hall, where Congress meets."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., N 12, 1789. See the Colden-Johnson correspondence on the subject of lightning-rods, Ap 3, 1764.

13 Washington, returning to New York from his New England tour, breakfasts "at Hoyet's tavern, this side Kings-bridge." Arriving at his house between 2 and 3 o'clock, he finds "Mrs. Washington and the rest of the family all well—and it being Mrs. Washington's night to receive visits, a pretty large company of ladies and gentlemen were present."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed., 1860), 52. His arrival is announced by a federal salute from the Battery.—N. Y. Jour., N 19, 1789. See also observations of "Rusticus" in the Daily Adv., cited in Smith's N. Y. City in 1789, 243.

" The common council orders "that from this time to the 20th of March next the Watchmen parade at the Watch House [see O 23] and commence their Duty at seven O'Clock."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 503. For other early watch-houses, see L. M. R. K., III: 973. This "parade" was probably the march in column to the several posts, before the duties of the night commenced.

" The pumps or "engines" used by the firemen of this period are shown on an engraved certificate of a fireman's appointment.—See reproduction in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), opp. p. 153. See also engraved frontispiece of The Deed of Settlement of the Mutual Assurance Co. (N. Y., 1787).

14 Washington, in the afternoon, takes "a walk round the Battery," and later receives and answers an address from the president (John Wheelock) and corporation of Dartmouth College.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 53. This walk, which he mentions also on Dec. 7 and 9, and on other days, was his favourite exercise, although he also frequently refers in his diary to riding.

17 At the City Tavern (the present 115 Broadway) is given a performance of "Fashionable Ra[i]llery" by Mrs. Gardner of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, who has been playing with great success in Jamaica and Charleston. To this are added songs and a "whimsical Mock Heroic after-piece," entitled, "The Mad Poetess." At this time the performance began at seven o'clock.—Daily Adv., N 11, 1789.

20 "The improvements which have been made in every quarter of this City since last winter, seem almost incredible . . . The flaging of our streets add much to the convenience of the inhabitants, and the levelling of the Battery, so as to make a clear road from Broadway around the south end of the city, will be extremely conducive to health and exercise; add to this the beauty of the prospect, now ornamented by the spire of Trinity Church, which will have a fine effect to vessels coming from sea."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., N 20, 1789.

" The commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell propose to the common council the establishing of a workhouse in the bridewell for idle and intemperate vagrants, who are now crowding the almshouse, imposing on the public, and incommoding those who Nov.
are real objects of charity. The board approves, and orders that 20 the commissioners carry the plan into execution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 505. On the same day, the constables and marshals are paid £23:2:6 "for apprehendᵍ & conveying Vagrants to Bridewell."—Ibid., I: 506.

The common council orders "that the public Hooks & Ladders " be removed from the Gang Way of Mʳ George Codwise to the Market House at Pecks Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 506.

John McComb is paid £23:8:8 "for rebuilding the fire Engine " House in Vesey Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 506.

The city pays Jonathan Pearsee £260:9:8 "for subsisting criminal prisoners in Goal" from Oct. 1, 1788, to April 30, 1789; and Jameson Cox £88:4:2 for "the like" from Aug. 1 to Oct. 3, 1789.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 507. At its next meeting, Dec. 4, the common council ordered "that in future no criminal Prisoner confined in Goal be subsisted at the public expence without a special Order for the purpose from the Magistrate committing the prisoner."—Ibid., I: 507. On Feb. 12, 1790, this was repealed, and a resolution passed "that in future no prisoner in Goal be subsisted at the public expence if the Magistrate shall signify in the Mittimus that such prisoner is not to be subsisted at the public expence."—Ibid., I: 522.

There is "the fullest house of the Theatre ever known, owing 24 to the President and Lady being there, and its being previously known."—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, III: 145; N. Y. Jour., N 26, 1789; Mag. of Am. Hist., XIX: 108. Washington's own record of the event is: ". . . Went to the play in the evening—sent tickets to the following ladies and gentlemen and invited them to seats in my box viz:—Mʳˢ Adams (lady of the Vice-President), Genl [Philip] Schuyler and lady, Mʳ [Rufus] King and lady, Majʳ Butler and lady, Colᵒ Hamilton and lady, Mʳˢ Green—all of whom accepted and came, except Mʳˢ Butler, who was indisposed."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed., 1860), 56.

The occasion was a benefit for Mr. Wignell, given by the Old American Company. A comedy never before acted in America, called "The Toy; or, A Trip to Hampton Court," was presented, followed by "a Comic Sketch, interspersed with Music, called, Darby's Return, with an Account of the Countries which he has travelled through, particularly America."—Daily Adv., N 24, 28, 1789. Dunlap describes the expression on the face of Washington during what seemed to be personal allusions to himself in the progress of the play. He smiled at lines alluding to the government, and when relieved of any further personalities "he indulged in that which was with him extremely rare, a hearty laugh."—Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1833), 160–61. See also Ford, Washington and the Theatre.

Lossing (vide supra), in a footnote, says that a German named Feyles was the leader of the orchestra at the John St. theatre. "He composed the President's March for this occasion, and that tune was played at the moment when Washington and his friends entered the theatre. It was afterwards slightly altered, and has been known as Hail Columbia ever since." Cf. Hone's Diary, II: 125.

The "Dancing Assembly" meets this evening (Daily Adv., 25
N 24), instead of the following day which will be Thanksgiving Day. "The President & Lady and of course all the great folks of the City attend."—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, III: 145. Washington records that he "stayed until 10 o'clock."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 58.

Washington records: "Being the day appointed for a Thanks- 26 giving [see S 26], I went to St. Paul's Church, though it was most inclement and stormy—but few people at Church."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 58.

Trumbull, the painter, arrives from Paris by way of London. " He proceeded to paint as many heads of the signers of the Declaration of Independence as were present in congress, at the second session which commenced on Jan. 4, 1790.—Note by Lossing, The Diary of Washington (1860), 90; Autobiography, Reminiscences and Letters of John Trumbull, I: 163; Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 38–39.

"The prisoners confined for debt in the city of New York most 27 respectfully beg leave to return their grateful thanks to the President of the United States, for his very acceptable donation on Thursday last [Thanksgiving Day]."—N. Y. Jour., D 3, 1789.

The "President and his Lady, the Governor and his Lady, the 30
Chief Justice of the United States and his Lady," and other "dis-

1789 Nov. 30 tinguished characters," go to the theatre to see "Cymon and Sylvia," a "dramatic romance."—N. Y. Jour., D 3, 1789; Mag. of Am. Hist., XIX: 109, citing Washington's "Journal." The others to whom Washington presented tickets were: "Doct^r Johnson and lady, M^r Dalton and lady, the . . . Secretary of War and lady, Baron de Steuben, and M^rs Green."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 58. "This performance was not merely the last night of the season, but was also the last play seen by Washington in New York; before the theatre was reopened, the seat of government had been removed to Philadelphia."—Ford, Washington and the Theatre (Dunlap Soc. Pubs., 1899), 43.

" On or about this date, Vice-Pres. Adams returned "from his late visit to his seat in Braintree, Massachusetts."—Gaz. of the U. S., D 9, 1789.

Dec. 1 Adam Gerard Mappa arrives in New York, bringing with him the equipment of the famous Voskens type foundry of Amsterdam, Holland. Early the following year he began operating the first commercial type foundry in the United States. According to the autobiography of Francis Adrian van der Kemp, Thomas Jefferson, then United States ambassador in France, suggested to Mappa that he take to America his complete "Letter Foundry," not alone for "the Western, but the Oriental languages at the value of at least about £3500 New York Currency."—Francis Adrian van der Kemp: An Autobiography, 140 et seq.

3 Notice is published that "persons who have demands against the United States, for articles supplied, or services performed in finishing or repairing the house of the Hon. Mr. Osgood, for the reception of the President of the United States, agreeably to an act of Congress, of the 15th April last, are hereby requested to call at No. 81, King-street, for the settlement of their accounts."—Daily Adv., D 3, 1789.

4 The mayor delivers to the common council the title-deeds and release, from Catharine Provoost to the city corporation, "for House & Lot at the Corner of Broad-Street & Wall Street" (see S 16). This was the watch-house. The board orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer to pay her agent £225 (half the price), and that a bond from the city to her be issued for the balance at 5 percent.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 507. This bond was delivered to her agent (Wm. Leary—see S 16) on Dec. 17.—Ibid.

" The city pays £25 "towards compleating the Market House at the Exchange" (see Je 18).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 507.

11 The common council appoints a committee "to treat with M^r Bardin for the use of his Rooms, for the Courts of Justice, instead of the Exchange which will be wanted for the Meeting of the House of Assembly this Winter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 508. See also O 23. On Dec. 18, the recorder reported that Bardin was willing to appropriate his rooms for this purpose, "on the public's providing the necessary fire Wood & Candles."—Ibid., I: 511.

" "It being suggested by some of the Members that it would be more proper & consistent that this Board should establish a reasonable compensation to the Mayor of this City for his trouble in the execution of that Office instead of the uncertain Fees or allowance usually made to him out of the Monies arising from the public Markets & the Tavern Licenses &c^a;" now therefore, the board appoints a committee to treat with the mayor on the subject and report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 509. See, further, D 30.

12 Washington records in his journal: "Exercised in the coach with Mrs. Washington and the two children (Master and Miss Custis) between breakfast and dinner—went the fourteen miles round." This was over the old Bloomingdale road on the west side of Manhattan Island, leaving what is now Riverside Park, near the bluff where General Grant's tomb now stands, by a cross-road, to the Kingsbridge, and returning by the old Boston Road.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 110. Cf. Ja 9, 1790.

" The plan of another tontine is published. The treasurers are Messrs. Lockharts, bankers in Pall Mall. The trustees of a guarantee fund of $600,000 are Francis Baring, Edmund Boehm, and Thomas Henchman, of London.—N. Y. Packet, D 12, 1789. Cf. S 10, 1789.

17 "The Secretary of the Treasury—the Comptroller—the Register—and the Auditor, have removed their offices from Broadway, to the corner of Dock and Broad streets, near the exchange."—N. Y. Jour., D 17, 1789.

18 Washington records in his journal: "Read over and digested my thoughts upon the subject of a National Militia, from the plans of the militia of Europe, those of the Secretary of War, and the Baron de Steuben." On Dec. 19: "Committed the above thoughts to writing in order to send them to the Secretary of the Department of War, to be worked into the form of a Bill, with which to furnish the Committee of Congress which had been appointed to draught one" (see D 21).—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 112. The report of the sec. of war, dated Jan. 18, 1790, presenting "A Plan for the General Arrangement of the Militia of the United States," was published in Daily Adv., Ja 23–F 1, inclusive. The joint committee of congress sent the adopted bill to Washington for his approbation and signature, on April 29, 1790. It was entitled "An Act for Regulating the Military Establishment of the United States."—Diary of Wahington, ed. by Lossing (1860), 130. When Washington returned the bill with his signature, on the following day, he noted the fact in his diary, and added: "though I did not conceive that the Military establishment of the one was adequate to the exigencies of the Government, & the protection it was intended to afford."—Ibid., 131. Washington records in his diary: "Sat from ten to one o'clock for a M^r Savage, to draw my Portrait for the University of Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts, at the request of the President and Governors of the said University."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 63. "The bust portrait painted by Edward Savage from this and the subsequent sittings recorded in the Diary is still owned by Harvard College. It represents Washington in uniform, with the order of the Cincinnati on the left breast, . . . Mr. Savage afterward (1792) engraved this portrait in the stipple manner. . . ."—Baker, Washington after the Rev. (1898), 164, footnote. 21

". . . the Legislature of the state, which is to convene in this city on Monday the 11th of January next, will be accommodated with rooms in the building over the Exchange Bridge. And that, during the sitting of the legislature, the courts will be held in some rooms fitted up for the purpose, in that spacious building which has been intended for an hospital."—Daily Adv., D 25, 1789. 25

Mrs. Washington, in a letter to Mrs. Warren, wife of Gen. Warren, makes the following observations: ". . . Though the General's feelings and my own were perfectly in unison with respect to our predelection for private life, yet I cannot blame him for having acted according to his ideas of duty in obeying the voice of his country. The consciousness of having attempted to do all the good in his power, and the pleasure of finding his fellow-citizens so well satisfied with the disinterestedness of his conduct, will doubtless be some compensation for the great sacrifice which I know he has made. . . . 26

"With respect to myself, I sometimes think the arrangement is not quite as it ought to have been; that I, who had much rather be at home, should occupy a place with which a great many younger and gayer women would be prodigiously pleased.

". . . I know too much of the vanity of human affairs to expect felicity from the splendid scenes of public life. I am still determined to be cheerful and to be happy, in whatever situation I may be; for I have also learned from experience that the greater part of our happiness or misery depends upon our dispositions, and not upon our circumstances. . . .

"I have two of my grandchildren with me, who enjoy advantages in point of education. . . . My other two grandchildren are with their mother in Virginia.

"The President's health is quite re-established by his little journey. . . ."—Am. Hist. and Literary Curiosities (1860), 20–21.

The president's domestic family consisted of Mrs. Washington, the two adopted children (Eleanor Parke and Geo. Washington Parke Custis, the latter eight years of age); Mr. Tobias Lear, the principal secretary; Col. David Humphreys; Messrs. Lewis and Nelson, secretaries (the former a nephew of Washington, and the latter a son of Gov. Nelson of Virginia), and Maj. William Jackson, aide-de-camp.—Custis, Recollections of Washington (with notes by Lossing, 1860), 394.

The committee appointed on Oct 12 (q. v.) to report "the proper part of the Common Lands to locate the ten Acres to be 30

1789 Dec. 30 granted to Major L'Enfant," recommends "that ten Acres of the Common Lands between the Land of David Provoost dec[d] & the Post Road be assigned for the Purpose." This is agreed to by the members of the common council present, except the recorder. After motions are made for a grant of other lands instead of the foregoing, which neither the recorder nor three other members of the board concur in, the board orders "that one of the City Surveyors lay out the said ten Acres & that the Clerk prepare the Draft of a Grant accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 512. See, further, Ap 6, 1790.

" The committee appointed on Dec. 11 (q.v.) to treat with the mayor "on the subject of giving him a Compensation for his trouble in executing the Office . . . instead of the Fees usually allowed him," makes the following report: They estimate that Mayor Duane, during his mayoralty, received in fees and perquisites about £4,500, or an average of about £800 a year. During the first two years of his mayoralty, "he Appropriated to his own use the whole produ[c]e of the Fees arising from the Markets and Tavern Licenses;" but, for the last three years, "the Corporation have received for the use of the City, one half of the produce of the Fees arising from the Markets and Eighteen shillings for each Tavern Licence." Therefore, his fees and perquisites for the latter period have averaged only about £600 a year. The fees of the markets for the last three years have averaged about £290 a year; and the fees for tavern licenses during the same period about £210 a year. No certain estimate can be formed "of the Yearly amount of the Fees received by the Mayor of this City, on making Freemen, or Licences to Cartmen, Butchers and others, and on appointing Marshalls and other Officers in the City." The committee give their opinion, therefore, "that it would be proper, and have proposed to the present Mayor to pay him at the rate of Six hundred Pounds a Year, to commence the first day of January next. in Quarterly payments. . . ." Mayor Varick concurs in the report. —M C. C. (1784–1831), I: 513–14.

31 "The New-York Manufactory" is established in Vesey St. There are 14 weavers and more than 130 spinners. The object of the Manufacturing Society is to give employment to the industrious poor. John Pintard is secretary, and Alexander Robertson an active member. The linens, etc., manufactured here were sold at the factory.—Daily Adv., D 31, 1789.

" The Free African School had its beginning about the end of this year.—The N. Y. Mag. and Lit. Repository (1793), 258.

— New York City in 1790 was the largest city in the United States, with a population of 33,131; Philadelphia was second, with 28,522; and Boston third, with 18,320.—Federal Census.

— Early in this year, Duncan Phyfe, a Scotchman by birth and 22 years of age, came to New York from Albany, where he already had gone into business for himself as a cabinet-maker. His first shop was in Broad St.; he finally settled, in 1795, in Partition (Fulton) St., not far from the Common. Here he resided and worked during the rest of his life.—Cornelius, Furniture Masterpieces of Duncan Phyfe (1922), 37, 39. In a letter to the author, Mr. Cornelius gives his authorities for the foregoing statements. They are the notes of one Mr. Hagen, father of Ernest Hagen, cabinet-maker, published by Walter Dyer in Early American Craftsmen; the City Directories; and Goodrich's Picture of N. Y. (1828). When Partition and Fair Streets were rechristened Fulton Street, on Sept. 9, 1816 (q.v.), and the houses were renumbered, Phyfe's business addresses were Nos. 168 and 170, and his residence was opposite at No. 169. A contemporary water-colour view of his warehouse, salesroom, and workshop, as seen from his home, is reproduced as a frontispiece to Mr. Cornelius's book. It is owned by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

— In this year, the Quakers purchased a site which, on modern maps, was on Liberty St., 60 ft. west of Liberty Pl.—See Liber Deeds, XLVI: 290 (New York). Here their third meeting-house was erected in 1802—a brick building, measuring 40 by 60 ft. In 1826, the building was sold to Grant Thorburn, who occupied it as a seed store for nearly ten years; and it was then demolished and large brick stores were erected in its place.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 116–17; cf. Liber Deeds, CCIII: 309 (New York). Shown on Pls. 34, 40, 41, and 42, Vol. I. See also L. M. R. K., III: 928; Pl. 174, Vol. III. Onderdonk says that, in 1794, a building was put up on the land bought in 1790, which was used as a school and as a place of worship until 1802, when a new meeting-house was erected.—Annals of Hempstead, 102. 1790 —

Sometime between this year and June, 1793, the first flagstaff erected on the Battery was built, the site being, in the modern Battery Park, 8 few feet south-east of Greenwich St.—L. M. R. K., III: 962. No record of the erection of this flagstaff has been found. It first appears on the Drayton View (see Je 10–20, 1793, and Pl. 59, Vol. I), and the earliest known mention of it is in Drayton's letters of Je 15–25, 1793 (q.v.). As the old fort was ordered demolished on March 16, 1790 (q.v.), it is reasonable to assume that the flagstaff, which stood on the south-west bastion (see Pl. 46A-a, Vol. I), was taken down at this time, and the new one, known as the "churn," erected on the Battery soon after. The first reference to the flagstaff in the minutes is under date of July 22, 1793 (q.v.). This first flagstaff was taken down in 1809 (q.v., O 23 and D 26), and a new one built. —

In this year, the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, was occupied by a boarding school.—See descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590. —

The assessors' and collectors' books this year show the following value of estates in the city of New York: —

	Valuation of estates in round numbers	Amount of taxation in round numbers
East Ward	£630,000	£4,226
South "	103,000	721
North "	278,000	1,930
West "	367,000	2,493
Dock "	235,000	1,603
Montgomerie Ward	519,000	3,720
Out "	186,000	1,729
Harlem "	20,000	95
Total	£2,338,000	£16,517

The average rate of taxation at this period was thirteen shillings and sixpence on £100.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 512.

About this time, improvements on the east side of Broadway below Wall St. commenced, by the erection of first-class residences. For the names of the earliest occupants of the new buildings, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 523. —

About this time, a linseed oil factory, worked with wind sails, stood on a high wooded hill, about a quarter of a mile north-east of the Kolch. On the sloping hill back of the present city hall, toward the Kolch, there was a "beautiful meadow."—Watson's Annals of N. Y., 171. —

An elevation and two plans of "Government House," were drawn at about this time by John McComb, Jr. They are reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pls. 10-a, b, and c. See also descrip. of Pl. 46 A-b, I: 357. —

About this time, a plan was prepared showing the level of Queen St. from Maiden Lane and the Fly Market to Ferry St. and Peck Slip.—See the original MS. (from Holden sale) in N. Y. H. S. —

In an undated petition (of about this time) to the common council, John Foxcroft states that, "before the late War, and at the time of the Invasion of New York by his Britannic Majesty's forces," he was "Agent to the British packets resorting to America," and "was necessarily stationed in this City to execute such Agency." He claims that, in 1784, he was "improperly taxed" under an act of the legislature for raising £100,000. He paid part of the tax under protest, and seeks reimbursement.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room. Foxcroft was also postmaster-general.—See Ag, 1776. Other original petitions of a similar character are in the same file in the record-room. —

In this month, T. and J. Swords began to publish The New York Magazine, or Literary Repository. The publication continued through 1797.—Ford, Check-list of Am. Mag. printed in the 18th Cent., 9. See also Sabin, item No. 54799. Jan. —

Although the new (second) Trinity Church is not completed, a view of it, probably from the architect's drawing, is published and described in the first number of this magazine. This view is here reproduced as Pl. 54-a, Vol. I, and partly described on pp. 414–15, Vol. I. It is 104 ft. long and 72 ft. wide, and the steeple is 200 ft. high. The former edifice, burned in Sept., 1776 (q.v.), was larger—146 ft. long, including tower and chancel, and 72 ft. wide; but the steeple was only 180 ft. high. For more particular description, see Jl 14, 1827.

Washington records: "The Vice-President, the Governor, the 1

1790 Jan. 1 Senators, Members of the House of Representatives in Town, foreign public characters, and all the respectable citizens, came between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, to pay the compliments of the season to me—and in the afternoon a great number of gentlemen and ladies visited Mrs Washington on the same occasion."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 65.

5 Mrs. Byrne announces her removal to that "large, elegant and convenient dwelling house and garden, lately occupied by Col. Burr, and directly opposite to her late dwelling, corner of Nassau and Little Queen Streets. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ja 5, 1790.

6 The senate meets at the federal hall for the beginning of the second session of the first congress, a quorum being present.—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 173.

" Washington records: "Sat from half after 8 o'clock till 10 for the portrait painter, Mr Savage, to finish the picture of me which he had begun [see D 21, 1789] for the University of Cambridge."—Washington's Diary (ed. by Lossing, 1860), 66.

8 Washington describes in his diary the circumstantial details of his going to the city hall and reading, in the senate chamber, the "oral communication" which, as he recorded on Jan. 4, he desired to deliver to congress.—Diary of Washington (ed. by Lossing, 1860), 67–68. The method of reading messages to congress, by the president, was discontinued after Pres. John Adams's time, and not revived until 1913, by President Wilson.—N. Y. Times, Ap 7, 1913.

9 Washington records that on this day he "Exercised with Mrs Washington and the children in the coach the 14 miles round."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 68. "The route was by the old Kings-Bridge road, which passed over Murray Hill, where Lexington Avenue now does, to McGowan's Pass at about One Hundred and Eighth Street; then across on a line with the Harlem River to Bloomingdale, and so down on the westerly side of the island."—Ibid., footnote. Cf. D 12, 1789.

11 This is the day appointed for the convening of the legislature in "rooms in the building over the Exchange Bridge."—See D 25, 1789. Subsequent sessions were also held there, until March 12, 1793.—Assemb. Jour. (1790), 3; (1791), 3; (1792), 3; (1792–93), 3, 242, 247; Senate Jour. (1790), 3; (1791), 3; (1792), 3; (1792–93), 3, 114, 117. The legislature convened at Albany on Jan. 7, 1794 (q. v.).

" Washington communicates to both houses of congress "transcripts of the adoption and ratification of the New Constitution by the State of North Carolina."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 69.

14 At 11 o'clock in the morning the senate waits on Pres. Washington "at his house in Cherry-street," and presents an address in answer to his speech at the opening of the session. This address, dated Jan. 11, and signed by Vice-President Adams, the president of the senate, is replied to briefly by Washington.

At 12 o'clock, likewise, the house of representatives presents an address, signed by Frederick A. Muhlenberg, speaker, which is likewise briefly acknowledged.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 21, 1790; N. Y. Mag., Ja, 1790, p. 59. The members of both houses came in carriages, the representatives "with the Mace preceding the Speaker."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 71.

" The assembly appoints a committee "to prepare and bring in a bill agreeable to the concurrent resolution of the Senate and Assembly of July last [but see Jl 13, 1789], concerning Fort George, in the city of New-York, and the lands adjoining the same."—Assemb. Jour. (1790), 6. The bill was introduced on Feb. 4 (q. v.).

" Washington records in his diary (Lossing ed., 71) the names of his guests at dinner on this day, one of whom, William Maclay, thus refers to the event: "It was a great dinner—all in the taste of high life. I considered it as a part of my duty as a Senator to submit to it, and am glad it is over. The President is a cold, formal man; but I must declare that he treated me with great attention. I was the first person with whom he drank a glass of wine. I was often spoken to by him. Yet he knows how rigid a republican I am."—Maclay's Jour., 177.

15 On hearing a committee report on the city's indebtedness to the Bank of New York, the common council orders that a bond of the corporation be issued for the payment of £1,502:4:11, with interest at seven percent.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 516.

The mayor presents to the board the draft of a petition to the legislature for a law authorizing the raising of money by lottery or otherwise "to discharge the Debt incurred by this Corporation for repairing & improving the City Hall." This is agreed to.—Ibid. See F 19. Jan. 15

He also presents the draft of a petition for a law "to raise £11000 by Tax for the support of the Poor & other contingent Expenses of this City & County the ensuing year." This is also agreed to.—Ibid. See also D 10, 1788; Ja 17, 1791.

The common council orders "that the Treasurer be directed to sell, in manner most advantageous, on or before the 20th April next, the Buildings, situate in the Rear of the Alms House, formerly occupied as Barracks—the Purchaser or Purchasors to remove all the Materials by the first day of June next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 516. On Jan. 19, Daniel Phoenix, city treasurer, advertised for proposals.—Daily Adv., Jan. 19, 1790. These barracks were built in 1757–8 (q. v.).—L. M. R. K., III: 924. "

Washington records: "Still indisposed with an aching tooth, and swelled and inflamed gum."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 72. A curious and interesting account of the several serious physical ailments which Washington suffered at various times was pub. in the N. Y. Times, Mr 19, 1923, citing The N. Y. Medical Jour. and Medical Record. See, further, My 10, 15, 24. 18

Levi Pease, of Boston, publishes the following notice regarding the "Boston Stage:" ". . . having contracted to carry the public mail in the stage from New-York to Boston, for the year 1790—commencing January the first to go twice a week till the first of May, and three times a week from first May to first November, and to employ a person to go thro' with the mail to take Care of it. He engages that this conductor shall transact all private business committed to him with fidelity at a reasonable Commission—he will carry bundles, money, newspapers, &c. And may be seen every Wednesday, and Saturday Evening in New York, at Fraunces Tavern, in Boston at the subscribers House, in Hartford at Frederick Bull's Coffee House. 20

"Four active men are now engaged as Conductors, who have given bonds for the faithful discharge of their trust."

The announcement adds that "The Boston, Albany and Philadelphia Stages now put up at Fraunces' Tavern, Cortlandt-Street, where passengers will please to apply."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ja 20, 1790. This system of expressage or parcel-post between New York and Boston antedated by many years the so-called first express line which was established by Wm. F. Harnden in 1839.—See 1838–1839; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 378–80.

Washington records: "Exercised on horseback in the forenoon. Called in my ride on the Baron de Polnitz, to see the operation of his (Winlaw's) threshing machine." He describes it.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 72. 22

An advertisement is published asking for sealed proposals, prior to Jan. 31, "for building a brick house, forty feet long, by twenty-five feet wide, for the use of the Free Scholars of the First Presbyterian Church in this city." Ebenezer Hazard, on Broadway, has the plan of the building.—Daily Adv., Ja 25, 1790. The building was finished and occupied in October.—See O 8. It stood on Nassau St., between Liberty and Cedar Sts., opposite the Middle Dutch Church.—Proceedings of the Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church (1784–1809), Vol. II (MS.); Session Book (MS.). 25

The assembly concurs in a senate resolution that Francis Childs be appointed "Printer to the State." The resolution requires that he shall print the state laws, the journals of both houses of the legislature, and that in his newspaper he shall publish the governor's proclamations, etc., all for the sum of £100 per annum, the printer to furnish the paper.—Assemb. Jour., 13th sess., 20. 27

The "religious society called Quakers" having presented to the assembly an address "relative to permitting vessels to fit out in the port of New-York for the coast of Africa, for slaves," a committee of the assembly, while agreeing "in sentiment with the petitioners respecting the slave trade," deem it improper for the legislature to interfere, in as much as "the right of regulation is vested exclusively in the Congress of the United States."—Assemb. Jour., 13th sess., 21. 28

The common council orders that fire buckets be made of sufficient size to hold 2½ gals. of water.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 517. 29

The city pays £2:5 for making constables' and marshals' staves, and £4:13:10½ for painting them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 517. "

The committee appointed on Jan. 15 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, I: 517; see also May 13, 1789) to report on the future disposition of the slaughter-house, and the best manner of disposing of the stalls and "

1790 Jan. 29 standings in the markets, reports as follows: It is the opinion of the committee that "the Butchers will be greatly accommodated, by being permitted to slaughter at their own Houses, subject to such Regulations as the Corporation may establish; whereby the Expense of keeping a public Slaughter House will hereafter be saved;" also "that the present Slaughter House should be let out for the space of one Year after the expiration of the present Lease, free of any charge of Repair to the Corporation, for the purpose of accommodating such Butchers as may not be immediately provided with private Slaughter Houses & allowing them time to erect the same;" that one single rate of fees for each market be established—40s. per month in the Fly Market, 30s. in the Oswego Market, and 15s. in the Exchange, Peck's Slip, and new markets,—with assessors appointed by the butchers themselves; the clerk of the markets to collect these assessments on the last Saturday in each month, and pay the amounts collected into the hands of the city chamberlain. By this method, an annual income of £1,555 would be raised, "attended with little trouble & Expence in the collection & less liable to the inconveniences & impositions to which the present Mode is exposed." It is ordered that the clerk prepare an ordinance to carry the report into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 517–19. Such ordinance was adopted on Feb. 19.—Ibid., I: 525. This was repealed on March 26, and a more effective ordinance passed.—Ibid., I: 534.

" The "storing the Lamp Oil in Cask" being "subject to great waste from leakage," the common council appoints a committee to report "a proper place for the erection of a Cistern."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 519. On Feb. 26, the committee reported their opinion that "a House of 36 feet by 24 built of Brick & covered with Pantile with a Cellar at the one end & a Cistern or Cisterns at the other to contain fifty barrels That the Floor over the Cistern be made tight & descending from all sides towards the center over the Cisterns to receive the leakage of what may be stored in Cask, be erected in the yard behind the Bridewell." They estimated the expense of erecting such house at not more than £150. The report was agreed to by the board.—Ibid., I: 526. On March 19, the board ordered that the committee "who reported on the Oil Store" be directed to cause it to be erected immediately.—Ibid., I: 532. On March 26, £100 was advanced to the committee.—Ibid., I: 535. Final payment of £188:19:5 was made on Sept. 17 (q. v.).

" The common council orders a payment of a bill for £11 "for Repairs to the Court Room in the Exchange."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 520. This was doubtless in preparation for its occupation by the supreme court.—See F 1.

Feb. 1 The first session of the supreme court of the United States is convened. A news report of the event, published next day, stated: "The Supreme Court Of the United States, convened yesterday [Feb. 1] in this city; but a sufficient number of the Judges not being present to form a quorum, the same was adjourned till this day [Feb. 2] one o'clock. The Hon. John Jay, Chief Justice of the United States, The Hon. William Cushing, and The Hon. James Wilson, Assistant Justices, appeared on the bench. John M'Kesson Esq. acted as Clerk. The Court Room at the Exchange was uncommonly crouded.—The Chief Justice and other Judges of the Supreme Court of this state; the Federal Judge for the District of New-York; the Mayor and Recorder of New-York; the Marshal of the district of New-York; the Sheriff, and many other officers, and a great number of the gentlemen of the bar attended on the occasion."—Daily Adv., F 2, 1790; Gaz. of the U. S., F 3, 6, and 10, 1790. See also Carson, Hist. of the Supreme Ct. of the U. S. (1902). For the act establishing the federal courts, see S 24, 1789.

" Washington writes: "Agreed on Saturday last to take Mr. McCombs' [Macomb's] house, lately occupied by the Minister of France, for one year from and after the first day of May next."—Diary of Washington (ed. by Lossing), 86; and see 87. For an account of the Macomb property, see descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 422; and "Bunker's Mansion House" in L. M. R. K., III: 977.

" The announcement is published that Mr. Trumbull, who has lately returned from Europe, "proposes to describe, in a series of Paintings, the most remarkable Events of the late American Revolution. He has in contemplation the following subjects, viz. 1. The Death of Warren at the Battle of Bunker's Hill. 2. The Death of Montgomery in the Attack of Quebec. 3. The Congress of 1776, in the Declaration of Independence. 4. The Surrender of the Hessians at Trenton. 5. The Death of Mercer at the Battle of Princeton. 6. The Surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga. 7. The Treaty with France. 8. The Surrender of Lord Cornwallis at York-Town. 9. The Signing the Treaty of Peace. 10. The Evacuation of New-York by the British in 1783. 11. The Resignation of General Washington. 12. The President received by the Ladies of Trenton at the Triumphal Arch. 13. The Inauguration of the President. Feb. 1

"The Portraits of the principal Actors in these great scenes will be preserved, and Prints will be published of the whole. The two first of these Subjects are finished, and the Paintings in the hands of eminent Engravers in Europe. Four others are commenced, some of which are half completed. These, with the remainder . . . will require many years of application . . . We understand that the Engravings are to be published in numbers, containing two each. The price will be three guineas for every print."—N. Y. Mag., Ja, 1790, pp. 63–64.

" The expenses of the almshouse for the last quarter amount to £1,799:17:2⅓, and those of the bridewell to £236:0:1. The estimated amounts needed for the next quarter are £1,400 for the almshouse and £100 for the bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 521.

2 "The Federal Court for the district of New-York will be opened this day in the Consistory room opposite the Dutch Church in Garden-street."—Daily Adv., F 2, 1790. This was the first session of this court, which was one of those established under the act of S 24, 1789 (q. v.).

Known as the "United States District Court," for the district of New York, it is opened by James Duane, the judge of the court. The first grand jury, having been summoned, is present, and Judge Duane addresses them at length, beginning: "Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, In a charge to the first Grand Inquest convened for this District, I tread an unbeaten path. We are now become emphatically a nation. A new Constitution pervades the United States, . . ."—Daily Adv., F 3, 1790. On Feb. 4, when the district court met again, the grand jury presented an address to Judge Duane expressing thanks for the judge's charge, "in which the nature of our duty, and the judicial system of the United States are described in the clearest manner, and recommended by the most cogent reasons. . . ."—Ibid., F 5, 1790.

" "Rose Hill," a farm of 92 acres on the East River, "three miles from this city," is advertised for sale. There is "an elegant dwelling house, of 50 by 37 feet, a commodious farm-house of 50 by 20 feet, an excellent barn with carriage houses and stables, 80 by 40½ feet. . . ."—Daily Adv., F 2, 1790. Rose Hill was the country seat of John Watts prior to the Revolution. It covered 25 blocks of what became afterwards the Eighteenth Ward of the city.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 465. See also L. M. R. K., III: 951. See, further, S, 1790; Ja 31, 1811.

3 Washington records: "Visited the apartments in the house of Mr McComb's [Macomb]—made a disposition of the rooms—fixed on some furniture of the Minister's (which was to be sold, and was well adapted to particular public rooms)—and directed additional stables to be built."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 87.

After the removal of the federal government to Philadelphia, Washington wrote to his secretary, Tobias Lear, on Nov. 14: ". . . When all is done that can be done, the residence [selected for him in that city] will not be so commodious as the house I left in New York, for there (and the want of it will be found a real inconvenience at Mr. Morris's), my office was in a front room below, where persons on business were at once admitted; whereas now they will have to ascend two pairs of stairs, and to pass by the public rooms to go to it. Notwithstanding which, I am willing to allow as much as was paid to Mr. Macomb, and shall say nothing if more is demanded, unless there is apparent extortion, or the policy of delay is to see to what height rents will rise before mine is fixed. . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 583.

4 In response to the assembly's action of Jan. 14 (q. v.), a bill is introduced entitled "An act for securing and improving certain lands in the city of New-York, for public uses."—Assemb. Jour. (1790), 27. After much discussion and amendment in both the assembly and the senate, the bill became a law on March 16 (q. v.). 5 An advertisement offers for sale "That corner house which 1790 Feb. 5 makes the corner of Wall and Water Street, with the adjoining tenement, in Water Street commonly called the old Coffee House, [see Je 19, 1728] occupied at present by Mr Cusick the Hatter; the situation for business needs no discription, as it is well known to be one of the most Capital stands in the City. . . ."—Daily Adv. F 5, 1790. The houses were sold on Ja 31, 1792 to the Tontine Association.

6 This being "the anniversary of the Alliance between France and the United States," the day is celebrated "by the Chargé des [sic] Affaires of his Most Christian Majesty," who gives an entertainment "to his Excellency the Vice-President, the Honorable the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chief Justice, and the Heads of the great Departments of the United States—to his Excellency the Governor, and the Honorable the Chancellor of the State of New-York, and to the Diplomatic Body, and Foreigners of distinction. . . ."—Daily Adv., F 8, 1790.

" Washington writes: "Walked to my newly engaged lodgings to fix on a spot for a new stable which I was about to build. Agreed with——to erect one 30 feet square, 16 feet pitch, to contain 12 single stalls; a hay loft, racks, mangers, &c.; planked floor, and underpinned with stone, with windows between each stall, for £65."—Diary of Washington (ed. by Lossing), 88.

8 "On Monday [Feb. 8] the Grand Jury for the United States of this district, gave a very elegant entertainment to the Chief, Associate, and District Judges, The Attorney General and the officers of the Supreme and District Courts, at Fraunce's Tavern in Courtlandt-Street." After dinner "toasts were drank," the subjects of which were printed in the news report.—Gaz. of U. S., F 10, 1790.

10 Washington writes: "Sat . . . for Mr. Trumbull to draw my picture in his historical pieces."—Diary of Washington (ed. by Lossing) 90 and 190. Lossing adds in a foot-note that these "historical pieces" were the battles of Trenton and Princeton. He again sat to Trumbull on F 12, 15, 18, 20, 27; Mr 4, 22; Jl 8, 12, 20, etc.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 113; Baker, Washington after the Rev., 171 et seq.

12 The common council appoints a committee "to enquire into & cause a Survey to be made of the antient Bounds of the Fresh water Pond."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 523. There is in the Bancker Collection a copy, dated Feb. 17, 1790, and signed E. B. (Evert Bancker), of survey made Feb. 25, 1771 (q.v.), of the Fresh Water Pond.—See Vol. I, p. 358. Cf. Pl. 58, Vol. I. See also Ap 22, 1793.

13 Washington records: "Walked in the forenoon to the house to which I am about to remove. Gave directions for the arrangement of the furniture, &c. and had some of it put up."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 90. See also his entry of Feb. 16.

15 Several Oneida Indian chiefs, who came to New York to visit Washington, Clinton, and "the Great Council Fire of the United States," are entertained by the Tammany Soc. in their wigwam on Broadway (the City Hotel, 115 Broadway). After speeches and toasts, the Oneidas performed a dance which was loudly applauded.—N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., F 18, 1790. The society entertained the Creeks later in the year (see Jl 21 and Ag 2).

" Trinity vestry passes a resolution "That a Pew be appropriated for the Use of the President of the United States & properly ornamented, and that another Pew, opposite to the President's be set apart for the Governor of the State and Members of Congress." It is also resolved "that the Bishop wait upon the President & acquaint him that the Corporation have agreed to offer him a Pew in Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). For view of the president's pew in St. Paul's Chapel, see Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 107–113.

The vestry also resolves "that the Pews in Trinity Church be sold on the first Day of March next precisely at the Hour of eleven in the Morning, & that the Church be opened or consecrated on the 25th of the same Month."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Also, that "Streets upon the Church Lands to the Northward of Reade Street, at right Angles with Hudson's River [are to] be successively named as follows—viz^{t}—Duane Street—Jay Street—Harison Street—Provoost Street—Moore Street—Beach Street—Hubert Street."—Ibid.

16 Washington receives papers from the secretary of war relative to "a correspondence to be opened between Col^{o} Hawkins, of the Senate, and Mr McGillivray, of the Creek Nation, for the purpose of getting the latter, with some other chiefs of that nation to this place, as an expedient to avert a war with them."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 94. See, further, Mr 10.

18 The legislature passes an act to enable the common council to raise £13,000 by lottery to further defray the expenses of altering the city hall for the accommodation of congress.—Laws of N. Y. (1790), 13th sess., chap. 8. See, further, F 19.

19 A bill is pending in the assembly to apply to public use the fort, certain adjoining lands, and the Battery (see F 4). Although the city claims "Title as well to certain part of the said Lands as to the Soil from high to low Water Mark in the River in Front of the said Fort and Battery and the Lands adjoining the same;" yet the common council conceives that "the applying of the whole of the said Premises to public Uses will be beneficial to the Community." It is resolved that the board "signify their Consent that the said Lands and premises above mentioned should be vested in the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York in Trust to remain for such public Uses as the Legislature of this State shall from time to time declare & for no other Use." The resolution is referred to the recorder to present it, if necessary, to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 525. The bill was passed on March 16 (q.v.).

" The common council orders that the lamp committee "take order with respect to the removing the Lamps to the House, in the Broad Way, taken for the Residence of the President of the United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 525.

" The mayor lays before the common council a copy of the state law passed on Feb. 18 (q.v.), as petitioned for on Jan. 15 (q.v.), "authorizing this Corporation to raise £13000 by Lottery to discharge the Debt incurred by this Board in repairing & improving the City Hall." It is referred to a committee "to report a Scheme & the most proper Method of conducting the Business of the said Lottery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 525. The committee reported its scheme on March 4 (q.v.).

" A committee of the common council suggests that a cistern to contain the public lamp oil be erected "in the Yard behind the Bridewell." The expense, "with what labor & materials may be furnished by the Alms House & Bridewell," will not exceed £150.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 525–26. See O 22.

20 Washington records: "Sat from 9 until 11, for Mr. Trumbull. Walked afterwards to my new house—then rode a few miles with Mrs. Washington and the children before dinner; after which I again visited my new house in my coach (because it rained)."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 95.

22 The Tammany Society celebrates the 58th birthday of Washington, and passes a resolution "that the 22nd day of February (corresponding with the 11th of February old style) be this day and ever hereafter commemorated by this Society as the birth of the illustrious George Washington," etc.—N. Y. Jour., F 25, 1790. Kilroe, in his treatise on Saint Tammany, etc., 179, says: "This was the first anniversary of Washington's birthday after his inauguration, and its recognition by the Society was probably the first formal notice taken of the event in New York and perhaps in the United States."

" Washington records: "Set seriously about removing my furniture to my new house. Two of the gentlemen of the family had their beds taken there, and would sleep there to-night."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 96.

23 Washington's record of this day reads: "Few or no visitors at the Levee to-day, from the idea of my being on the move. After dinner, Mrs Washington, myself, and children removed, and lodged at our new habitation."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 96. On the next two days, he was occupied "arranging matters about the house."—Ibid.

In a detailed description of Washington's personal appearance and manner of address, written by a man whose father met Gen. and Mrs. Washington in their house in New York in 1790, there is the following account of the new residence: "The home of Washington was in the Broadway, and the street front was handsome.—The drawing-room in which I sat was lofty and spacious; but the furniture was not beyond that found in dwellings of opulent Americans in general, and might be called plain for its situation. The upper end of the room had glass doors, which opened upon a balcony commanding an extensive view of the Hudson River, interspersed with islands, and the Jersey shore on the opposite side. A grandson and daughter resided constantly in the house with the General, and a nephew of the General's, married to a niece of Mrs Washing-

1790 Feb. 23 ton, resided at Mount Vernon, the General's family seat in Virginia, his residence, as President, keeping him at the Seat of Government. The levees held by Washington, as President, were generally crowded, and held on Tuesday, between three and four o'clock. The President stood and received the bow of the person presented, who retired to make way for another. At the drawing-rooms Mrs Washington received the ladies who curtised, and passed aside without exchanging a word. Tea and coffee, with refreshments of all kinds, were laid in one part of the rooms, and before the individuals of the company retired, each lady was a second time led up to the lady President, made her second silent obeisåNce, and departed—nothing could be more simple, yet it was enough." —Boston Patriot, Jl 24, 1827. This description in the Boston Patriot is introduced with the statement that "The following article is from the London New Monthly Magazine. The London Sun attributes it to the pen of Hazlitt, and calls it 'A sketch of Washington, one of the greatest men the world has ever seen.'" See also Custis, Recollections of Washington (1860), 430–32, footnote.

26 The city treasurer suggests, in a letter to the common council, "the expediency of issuing small Notes to pass as a circulating Medium in this City and thereby remove the inconveniency which hath arisen to the Inhabitants from the want of small Change since the ceasing to pass of the Copper Coin." Whereupon, John Pintard, one of the assistant aldermen, submits a plan for this purpose, in which he says:

"Whereas the Inhabitants of this City have experienced great Losses from the circulation of base Coppers insomuch as at present to put an entire stop thereto whereby great inconveniences arise from the want of small change especially to the poorer Class of Citizens.

"In order to avoid the like ill consequences in future & prevent the gross Impositions which have been sustained by the coining and circulation of base Coppers; the following Plan for emitting small Bills of the value of one Penny, two Pence & three Pence, to the amount of one thousand Pounds current Money of the State of New York, is respectfully submitted." The bills are thus described:

"96,000 Bills of 1 Penny each is	£400
36,000 dº of 2 Pence	300
24 000 dº of 3 Pence	300
156 000 Bills	£1000.

Which Bills shall be respectively printed in the following Words.

"I promise to pay the bearer on demand . . . by order of the Corporation of the City of New York febʸ 26th 1790

"Daniel Phœnix City Treasurer."

Pintard's plan proposes the appointment of a committee of the board, acting gratis, to manage the details of ordering and printing the proposed bills, and putting them into circulation. The board approves the plan, and appoints Aldermen McCormick and Van Zandt and Mr. Pintard to be the committee to carry it into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 526-28. On March 19, Hugh Gaine was paid £25 for printing these notes.—Ibid., I: 532.

By May 14, it was found that the number issued was entirely insufficient, and a new issue to the amount of £1097:18 was ordered.—Ibid., I: 547. Again, on July 19, a further emission was ordered, and the committee required to "attend the Treasurer in the burning of those of the former Emission which were become defaced & brought into the Treasury & Exchanged."—Ibid., I: 565. For this issue Gaine was again paid £25.—Ibid., I: 569. For the committee's report on this issue, see Ag 10.

Mar. 1 Washington records: "Exercised on horseback this forenoon, attended by Mr John Trumbull, who wanted to see me mounted." —Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 97.

" As announced (Daily Adv., F 2), the pews in the new Trinity church are sold at auction. Many of the pews produced more than £50. The whole amount of the sale was £3,000.—Ibid., Mr 2, 1790.

4 Samuel Johnson of North Carolina writes: "I have just left the President's where I had the pleasure of dining with almost every member of the Senate. We had some excellent champagne, and, after it, I had the honour of drinking coffee with his Lady, a most amiable woman. If I live much longer I believe that I shall at last be reconciled to the company of old women for her sake, a circumstance which I once thought impossible."—Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 241.

Maclay records: "Dined with the President of the United States. It was a dinner of dignity. All the Senators were present and the Vice-President. I looked often around the company to find the happiest faces. Wisdom, forgive me if I wrong thee, but I thought folly and happiness most nearly allied. The President seemed to bear in his countenance a settled aspect of melancholy. No cheering ray of convivial sunshine broke through the cloudy gloom of settled seriousness. At every interval of eating or drinking he played on the table with a fork or knife, like a drumstick."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 206. Mar. 4

" The common council adopts the scheme of the lottery to raise money to discharge the debt incurred by the city for the alterations in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 528–30. See Je 10 and 18, 1789; Ja 15, F 19, 1790. It was published in the Daily Adv., Mr 15 et seq., and in other papers. For the next lottery, see F 25, 1791.

" Gerard Bancker is mentioned in a record of this date as state treasurer. He is requested to deliver to the committee which was appointed "to direct the printing of the Notes to be circulated for small Change" (see F 26) the paper granted by the legislature for that purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 530.

6 At this period, Washington recorded in his diary nearly every day his exercising on horseback, weather permitting, or in his coach or post-chaise with Mrs. Washington and the children, or his walking round the Battery.—Baker, Washington after the Rev., 174 passim, and authorities there cited.

8 "Resolved that the Committee of Leases view the Ground above Mr Lispenard's adjoining to Spring Street & consider the Propriety of extending the said Street thro' the Land of this Corporation to Hudson's River."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" An advertisement of this date shows that there was a theatre at No. 14 William St.—Daily Adv., Mr 8, 1790.

10 Washington engages Col. Marinus Willett to go "as a private agent, but for public purposes, to Mr McGillivray, principal chief of the Creek Nation" (see F 16).—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 99. On March 12, he signed his passport.—Ibid., 104. Willett succeeded in inducing McGillivray to come to New York with the other chiefs of their nation (see Je 21), and a treaty was negotiated.

" "The Custom House is removed to No. 6, Mill Street [present S. William St. opp. Mill Lane], adjoining No. 15 Duke Street."—Daily Adv., Mr 10, 1790. See also L. M. R. K., III: 974. It remained here until Sept. 1, 1798 (q. v.).

11 Marinus Willett writes from New York to De Witt Clinton: "Since my arrival here I have paid a visit to the prison—The wretchedness there is past my power to attempt a description—If distress ever claimed Legislative assistance, the melancholy situation of the Confined debtors in this place demand attention. My former opportunities enabled me to know their case to be always uncomfortable more so than the religion of Christians or sentiments of humanity justify—but the former circumstances bare no proportion to the present deplorable state of those unhappy people —May I not trust nothing I can say will be requisite to Induse you and the other Gentlemen who represent this city in our assembly to make an effort in favour of relief for those unfortunate members of our community?"—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), I: 15, in Columbia Univ. Library.

12 An advertisement announces the intended sale at public auction, on May 3, of "A Farm At the 11 mile stone on New York Island late the property of Col. Roger Morris—the mansion house in point of elegance and spaciousness is equal to any in this state, and from its elevated position not only enjoys the most salubrious air, but affords a prospect extensively diversified and beautiful. The farm contains about 140 acres, the greatest part of which is mowing ground, and extends across the Island from the East to the North river. On the premises are a large coach house and barn, with a garden containing a variety of the best fruits."—Daily Adv., Mr 12, 1790. Washington dined at the Morris house on July 10 (q. v.).

15 Washington receives an address from the Roman Catholics of the United States.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 105.

16 The demolition of Fort George and the erection of a government house (see Jl 13, 1789) are authorised by the legislature when it passes, on this day, "An Act for securing and improving certain Lands in the City of New York, for Public Uses, and for other purposes therein mentioned." The fort and "the battery adjacent thereto" are declared to be at present "useless for the purpose of defence." The law provides that part of Fort George and certain adjoining lands, described by specific boundaries, shall be "for 1790 Mar. 16 ever reserved for the purpose of erecting public buildings, and such works of defence as the Legislature shall from time to time direct," and that certain other lands near by shall be "vested in the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York, to remain for the purpose of erecting public buildings, and works of defence thereon; but without any power to dispose thereof, for any use or purpose whatsoever, and without any power of selling any part thereof." The principal landmarks mentioned in the description of the lands are the "dwelling-house of Captain Archibald Kennedy," the "old secretary's office on Whitehall Street," the ground of Captain Thomas Randall, and the "lots which front on Pearl Street." The law also authorises the city corporation "to cause the said Fort George to be demolished, and the ground whereon the said Fort stands to be levelled, and also to cause a bulk head to be erected [see Mr 26], from the end of the bulk head lately erected by them, continuing the same to the south-west bastion of the Battery aforesaid; and to sell and dispose of the buildings and materials of the said Fort, and to apply the monies arising therefrom, towards the erecting the bulk head aforesaid." Gerard Bancker, Richard Varick, and John Watts are appointed commissioners "to cause a proper house and other necessary buildings, to be erected on some part of the lands, in the first enacting clause in this act mentioned, for the use of the government of this State; and to be applied to the temporary use and accommodation of the President of the United States of America, during such time as the Congress of the United States shall hold their sessions in the city of New-York," and the state treasurer is empowered to pay them £8,000 "for the purposes aforesaid."—Laws of N. Y., 13th sess., chap. 25. See also Pl. 46A-c, Vol. I. On March 24 (q. v.), the commissioners advertised for plans for the government house.

" The New York Manufacturing Society is incorporated. Its object is "furnishing employment to the honest industrious poor." The company's stock is limited to £50,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1790), chap. 26 (Greenleaf, II: 309). It opened a workshop, in which were a carding-machine and two spinning jennies, and employed altogether 130 spinners and 14 weavers. "Jennies continued to be used to spin wool and to spin flax for sailcloth, but in the more rapidly organized and centralized cotton manufacture they were displaced almost immediately by Arkwright machinery" (see 1793).—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S. 1607–1860, 192.

" Washington is visited "by a Mr. Warner Miflin, one of the People called Quakers; active in pursuit of the Measures laid before Congress for emancipating the Slaves."—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 105. These measures produced much agitation in congress and throughout the country.—See the Gaz. of the U. S., passim.

19 The common council appoints a committee "to view the Land at the Fort & Battery & report the necessary Measures to be taken by this Board with respect to the levelling of the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 531. See, further, Mr 26.

" The common council orders that Mr. Skaats "deposit the Key of the Exchange Room in a proper House in the Vicinity so that access may be had to the Bell and the Cap^{t} of the Watchman is directed to dispatch one of his Men to ring it immediately on the discovery of Fire."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 531. On May 14, payment of £4:10 was made "for hanging the bell in the Exchange."—Ibid., I: 547.

" The common council orders that the alderman and assistant of the West Ward "direct a Bulkhead to be erected to prevent the running out of the Earth in the upper part of Greenwich Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 531–32.

22 "Resolved That the Committee of Leases be empowered to make, or confirm an Exchange with the Lutheran Congregation for Part of their Ground near Rector's Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Jl 12.

24 Richard Varick, John Watts, and Gerard Bancker, "commissioners appointed by a law of this State [see Mr 16] to build a Government House on the ground where Fort George now stands," advertise that "they are desirous of receiving plans for a house to contain, a room for the reception of the Legislature on public business, and drawing and dining room for special occasions; a drawing and dining room for private use, a room for a library, together with other requisite appartments and accommodations. It is at present proposed to front the house towards the Broad-Way, and that the extent in front shall be about eighty feet, and the depth as shall be found necessary.

"The sooner the plans shall be delivered is the more acceptable. "Any person or persons willing to contract for the delivery of timber, scantling, shingles, bricks or other materials will be pleased to deliver their proposals in writing at the office of the state treasurer No. 8 Great Dock-street."—Daily Adv., Mr 24, 1790. See Mr 26. Mar. 24

Prof. John C. Van Dyke says: "at twenty-seven John Mc Comb designed the façade of Government House in New York."—Rutgers College Pubs., No. 14, entitled Queen's Building, Rutgers College, 1809–1909, p. 24. However, the plan and elevation made by Mc Comb were evidently rejected, as they do not correspond with those of the Government House as executed. They are reproduced as A. Pls. 10-a and 10-b, Vol. III. The architect of the building has not been positively identified but was probably James Robinson.—See descrips. of Pl. 75, I: 460–61, and A. Pl. 10-a, III: 869–70.

The new Trinity Church is opened and consecrated, the service being attended by Pres. Washington, the bishops and clergy of all denominations, several members of congress, and other public officers, "together with an immense concourse of citizens." The sermon is preached by the Rev. Mr. Beach.—Daily Adv., Mr 26, 1790; descrips. of Pl. 105, III: 607, and Pl. 122, III: 629. Washington records his occupying his pew for the first time on this occasion, stating that it "was constructed, and set apart for the President of the United Sts."—Diary of Washington (1860), III. 25

A letter from Albany contains the following: "I am happy to observe that the Legislature has granted eight thousand pounds for building a Government House [see Mr 16]. I fear the sum will be insufficient to do justice to the situation on which it is to be placed, which, for my own part, I conceive to be equal to any in America. 26

"I trust the Architect, who planned the Federal Building [L'Enfant], will have an opportunity of displaying his genious on the present occasion; and, from the taste he has displayed in the alterations and additions to the City Hall, I have no doubt that he will erect an edifice which will do honour to the city of New York."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 2, 1790. See Ap 7.

" The common council, "conceiving it their Duty to use every Means in their Power to effect the compleat removal of the Earth & Stone & levelling the Ground at the Fort & Battery so as to accommodate the Building to be erected there for the use of the Governm^{t} [see Mr 24] and also to continue the Wharf or Bulkhead, in the River, to the Corner of the Battery at Whitehall Slip [see Mr. 16]; And this Board being at present destitute of the necessary pecuniary Means for the purposes aforesaid," it is resolved "that an Application be made to the Legislature for raising the Sum of £5000 for the purposes af^{d} in addition to the Sum directed by Law for defraying the contingent Expences of this City this Year." A petition to the legislature is drafted and agreed to for presentation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 533. The legislature's permission was granted on April 5 (q. v.).

The board appoints Tobias Van Zandt and George Janeway commissioners "to superintend the taking down the Stone & removing the Earth of the Fort—That they set apart & reserve such & so much of the Stone as may be necessary for the erection of the Gov^{t} House and that the residue of the Stone be sold under their immediate Inspection for the best price that may be had and that they render an acc^{t} thereof to this Board." They are allowed 10s. for each day either of them attends to this business, "to be divided between them."—Ibid., I: 534. See, further, Ap 6.

" Acting favourably on a petition of the firemen, the common council agrees to allow a "complement" of ten men for each engine; because, in the case of the smallest engines, which are used to approach nearest to a fire, "and are therefore best adapted for the Leaders [hose] to convey Water through Windows and narrow passes," only the firemen "are willing to support them, as it is attended by a general wetting by the Water which gushes out of the Seams."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 533.

The legislature passes "An Act for building a Bridge across Haerlem River." Lewis Morris, his heirs and assigns, are authorised, "at his and their own expence, to build a bridge from Haerlem across Haerlem river to Morrisania." The dimensions specified in the act are: Not less than 30 feet in width, "and between the centre arches thereof, shall be an opening not less than twenty five feet, over which shall be a draw not less than twelve feet, for the free passage of vessels with fixed standing masts." The toll-rates are also prescribed.—Laws of N. Y. (1790), chap. 37. Morris did not build, but sought financial aid in 1792 by proposing a plan of 31

1790 Mr 31 a tontine for the purpose.—See O 12, 1792; Mr 8, 1793; Mr. 24, 1795.

" By an "Act for the further Encouragement of Literature," the legislature authorises the regents to lease certain state lands (including Governor's Island) for the benefit of Columbia College and the academies in the state, and also grants them £1,000 "for the encouragement and promotion of science in the said college and the academies already incorporated." Governor's Island is to be so granted "that no more than two dwelling houses shall be erected on the said island."—Laws of N. Y., 13th sess., chap. 38. See Ap 13.

" Wm. Maclay writes in his journal "nothing remarkable, save a violent attack on Hamilton by Judge [Edanus] Burke of South Carolina, which the men of the blade say must produce a duel." Four days later, April 4, he wrote: "The town is much agitated about a duel between Burke and Hamilton. So many people concerned in the business may really make the fools fight."—Journal of William Maclay (N. Y., 1890), 227, 230. None of the biographers of Hamilton makes mention of such a duel, which, it would seem, did not culminate.

Apr. 2 John Trumbull offers proposals at New York "for publishing by subscription, two prints from original pictures, painted by himself, representing the death of Gen. " The clerk of the common council presents to the board "a Map or Survey of the 10 Acres of Common Lands to be granted to Major L'Enfant agreable to the Resolutions of this Board" (see O 12 and D 30, 1789). The board approves. The land is thus described: "Beginning at the North Corner of the Lane of two Roods Wide leading from the Post Road to the farm of David provoost decd thence No 43° East along the post Road eleven Chains & sixty one Links, thence So 49° 30′ East seven Chains & eighty three Links thence So 35° 30′ West eleven Chains and seventy two Links. & thence North 49° & 30′ West, along the said Lane, nine Chains & thirty six Links to the place of beginning. Containing Ten Acres of Land." The board orders that the clerk prepare a draft of the grant accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 536. On April 16, such draft was presented by the clerk to the board, who thereupon ordered that it be engrossed.—Ibid., I: 539. The position of this plot on the modern map would have been approximately between 66th and 70th Sts., east of Third Ave. See, further, Ap 30.

" The committee appointed (see Mr 19) "to consider of the Repairs & Improvements necessary to be made to the Battery and the Mode of carrying them into effect" reports:

"That they have ordered the Survey accompanying this Report to be made of the Battery from the Wharf erected by the Corporation last year to White Hall Slip.

"That in the Opinion of the Committee the said Wharf should be continued extending in a right Line to the Point A in the Survey being the outermost part of the Bastion on the Flat Rock and from thence in a straight direction to the Point B. being the South-west point of the Battery, agreable to the exterior Line A : B : in the Survey. . . .

"That the said Wharf so to be erected should in the Opinion of your Committee be constructed after a similar manner with the aforesaid part erected last Year and that Commissioners should be appointed to carry the same into immediate effect, authorized to make Contracts for the purpose in behalf of this Corporation upon the most œconomical Principles and that a Warrant be granted them upon the City Treasurer for said Purposes for a sum not exceeding five hundred Pounds and that they be accountable to this Board for the expenditure thereof. Apr. 6

"That the Commissioners so appointed should be instructed to lend every Assistance to the Commissioners for building the Government House, by levelling the Ground, digging the foundation for the Buildings about to be erected and preparing whatever Stone may be requisite for said Buildings & by lending every facility & Aid in their power to the said Commissioners."

The board appoints Ald. Isaac Stoutenburgh, Asst. Ald. Peter T. Curtenius, and John Pintard as such commissioners, and advances £500 to them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 536–37.

" The common council requires a committee to "cause a Survey to be made of the Broad Way from the South side of the burnt lutheran Church [s. w. cor. Broadway and Rector St.] northwards" for the purpose of new paving Broadway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 537. See, further, My 14.

7 The commissioners for building the government house advertise that they will continue to receive plans (see Mr 24) for the said house until April 12 at twelve o'clock, on which day, they mean to determine on the plan to be carried into execution. Masons and bricklayers, desirous to contract for the stone and brick work by the perch or rod are desired to send in their proposals without delay, to the state treasurer's office, No. 8 Great Dock.—Daily Adv., Ap 7, 1790. The plan for the government house was chosen by April 26 (q. v.). The architect has not been positively identified, but was probably James Robinson. See descrip. of Pl. 55-b, Vol. I.

" Senator Maclay writes: "I went this afternoon to hear a negro preach. I can only say it would be a favor to religion in general if preachers manifested the same fervor and sincerity that were apparent in his manner. He declared himself untutored, but he seemed to have the Bible by heart."—Maclay's Jour., 232.

10 The first act relating to the issuing of patents is passed and approved by Washington. It is entitled "An Act to promote the Progress of useful Arts."—Acts passed at the second session of the Congress of the U. S. (N. Y., 1790), chap. 7, p. 16. This was repealed by a new act of the same title, Feb. 21, 1793.—Ibid. (Richmond, 1793), chap. 55, p. 31.

The first patent was granted, on July 31, 1790, to Samuel Hopkins for "a new method of making pot and pearl ashes;" the second, on Aug. 6, 1790, to Joseph Stacey Simpson for "Manufacturing candles;" and the third, on Dec. 18, 1790, to Oliver Evans for "Manufacturing Flour and meal."—List of Patents granted by U. S. (1790–1836), 4; Weber, The Patent Office: Its Hist., Activities, and Organization, 3–4. The third patent, signed by Washington, is still preserved in the patent office.

" "A Foreigner" writes to McLean, the publisher: "I have remarked that New-York has the advantage of most of the other cities on this continent, in the accommodation it affords of hackney and job-coaches; but I cannot help observing the great impropriety which appears to me at Funerals, of the same carriages being used to convey the bodies of deceased children! . . . Would it not be both decent and respectful to make use of a mourning coach upon these occasions? One Mourning Coach, I believe, would be sufficient for this city . . ."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 10, 1790.

" ". . . a party of gentlemen went out with March's hounds, and put off a Fox near the five mile stone. They had a delightful Chace to Kings-Bridge, and earthed Reynard near the house of widow Days, where they were obliged to take off the dogs. Another Fox was put off, who afforded a fine chace round Fort Washington." There is to be another hunt on Long Island on April 13.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 12, 1790.

13 A committee appointed by "the Regents of the University" advertises an auction, to take place on the first Tuesday in May at the Coffee House, for the lease of "Governor's or Nutten's Island" to the person who shall bid the highest annual rent for the term of twenty-one years.—N. Y. Packet, Ap 13, 1790. See Mr 31.

1790 Apr. 14 The commissioners appointed by the common council to conduct the repairs of the Battery (see Ap 6) advertise for proposals "for delivering large spars and dock logs in this city in all the month of May."—Daily Adv., Ap 20, 1790.

15 Gerard Bancker, state treasurer, issues a notice that all persons having demands against the forfeited estates of about 200 persons mentioned in the notice, and who are relievable by the act of May 12, 1784, shall exhibit their accounts to him within four months, that he may discharge them as the law directs; otherwise they will be debarred from relief.—N. Y. Jour., Ap 22, 1790.

" The common council orders that the commissioners of the almshouse appropriate the "Ground adjoining the Gallows" as a "Bleach Yard for the Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 539.

" The common council resolves "that the Corporation of the Episcopal Church [Trinity] be informed that on their making Compensation to Hannah Baker to the amount of seventy pounds for the Improvements on the Triangular piece of Ground at the junction of the Post & Bloomingdale Roads," the board will grant this ground to Trinity on the terms agreed to by the board on June 24, 1789 (q. v.). It is ordered that the clerk communicate this resolution to the vestry, and request answer by April 30.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 528, 536, 540. On Aug. 27, the board ordered that the clerk "apply to the Corporation of the Episcopal Church for a positive Answer" with respect to this land, and report it at the next meeting.—Ibid., I: 585. The subject of a grant of this ground to Trinity had been under consideration since 1771 (q. v., Jl 22), but was never made, owing to lack of agreement on terms. See, finally, S 10, D 11 and 24.

" The common council, in taking for a city street that part of the ground of Dr. Thos. Jones (see S 9, 1789) that falls within Barclay St., considers such action as proper under the provisions of the law relative to the burnt part of the city, and that the proceeding can be taken at the city's expense. It therefore orders that commissioners report what compensation should be made to him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 540. Such report was recorded on July 9.—Ibid., I: 561–62. Settlement was made on May 20, 1791 (q. v.).

20 Washington starts on a tour of Long Island, having previously sent over his servants, horses, and carriage. He returned home about sundown on the 24th.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 121–28.

21 A request is presented to Trinity vestry in behalf of Abraham Wilson, "praying that the Board do relinquish their incumbrance on the property lately sold to him on the North westerly Side of Greenwich Street in order that he may obtain a Sum of Money lately granted by the Legislature for the encouragement of the Earthen Ware Manufactory." Granted, with qualification.—Trin. Min. (MS.). There was a pottery run by Abraham Wilson on the block bounded by Greenwich, Chambers, and Warren Sts. and West Broadway.—See the case of Bogardus vs. Trinity Church, 4 Sandford's Chancery Reports. This was the earlier "Bowling Green" and "Vauxhall" site.—See L. M. R. K., III: 981. Cf. Ag 8, 1787.

" A lottery scheme is advertised to raise £7,500 (agreeable to the act of Feb. 18, 1790), this sum being "part of the sum advanced by the Corporation for repairing and enlarging the City Hall, for the accommodation of Congress, which does so much honor to the Architect, as well as credit to the City."—N. Y. Packet, Ap 22, 1790.

26 The Tammany Society unanimously resolves "that, as a mark of respect due to the memory of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, in commemoration of his republican virtues, and as an incentive to imitate the same, That this Society wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of one month."—N. Y. Jour., Ap 29 (misdated 26), 1790.

Apr. 26 An advertisement reads: "The Commissioners [for building the government house] having agreed on a plan for the said house [see Ap 7], and directed the cellar to be dug, continue to receive proposals for laying the foundation and erecting the said edifice, by the perch or rod. It is expected that the same will be done in a good workman-like manner, and a due attention paid to saving the materials, which are to be furnished by the Commissioners.

"Also, proposals from stone-cutters, for the water-table, astler [ashlar], and other work in that line.

"Also, proposals for supplying timber and scantling of all sorts for the use of the said building.

"And also proposals from blacksmiths for the iron work, coarse and fine.

"It is requested that the above proposals will be made in writing, and delivered into the office of the state treasurer, No. 8, Great Dock-street, on or before Saturday next."—Daily Adv., Ap 26, 1790. The corner-stone of the government house was laid on May 21 (q. v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 55-b, I: 418.

30 It being intimated to the common council that Maj. L'Enfant declined to accept the grant of ten acres of the Common Lands, which the board intended to convey to him (see Ap 6), it is ordered that the clerk question him on the subject and report his answer; and that in the mean time the engrossing of the grant be suspended. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 542. See, further, My 14.

May — An account of Columbia College, written to accompany an engraving of the building (see Pl 53-a, Vol. I), states: "The building (which is only one third of the intended structure) consists of an elegant stone edifice, three complete stories high, with four stair cases, twelve apartments in each, a chapel, hall, library, museum, anatomical theatre, and a school of experimental philosophy.

". . . before the revolution, . . . the edifice was surrounded by a high fence, which also encloses a large court and garden; . . .

"The college is situated on a dry gravelly soil, about 150 yards from the bank of Hudson's river, which it overlooks; commanding a most extensive and beautiful prospect. . . .

"The college edifice has received no additions since the peace. The funds produce, annually, about £1000. The library and museum were destroyed during the war. The philosophical apparatus cost about 300 guineas. Until the revolution the college did not flourish. . . . It has between thirty and forty students, in four classes. The number for several years has been increasing. The officers of instruction and immediate government are, a president, professor of languages, professor of mathematics, professor of logic and rhetoric, professor of natural philosophy, professor of geography, and a professor of moral philosophy. There are many other professors belonging to the university, but their professorships are merely honorary."—N. Y. Mag., My, 1790.

10 Washington wrote: "A severe illness with which I was siezed the 10th of this month and which left me in a convalescent state for several weeks after the violence of it had passed; & little inclination to do more than what duty to the public required at my hands occasioned the suspension of this Diary." Lossing adds that the illness "reduced him [Washington] to the verge of dissolution. He was confined to his chamber for several weeks. His chief difficulty was inflammation of the lungs, and he suffered from general debility until the close of the session of Congress in August." —Washington's Diary (and footnote by Lossing), 136. See My 15.

1790 May 12 The celebration of the Tammany Society's anniversary this year was the beginning of pretentious annual pageants by the society and the introduction of "Long Talks." The festival on this occasion began at Bardin's Tavern and continued all day with meetings at the Brick Church, at "Brother Campell's at Greenwich," and finally at Bardin's again, where the society had its "wigwam."—N. Y. Jour., My 14, 1790; Kilroe's treatise on Saint Tammany, 178; N. Y. Mag., My, 1790. Senator Maclay records:

"This day exhibited a grotesque scene in the streets of New York. Being the old 1st of May, the Sons of St. Tammany had a grand parade through the town in Indian dresses. Delivered a talk at one of their meeting-houses, and went away to dinner. There seems to be some kind of scheme laid of erecting some kind of order or society under this denomination, but it does not seem very well digested as yet. The expense of the dresses must have been considerable, and the money laid out on clothing might have dressed a number of their ragged beggars."—Jour. of Wm. Maclay, 260.

14 Maj. L'Enfant's answer, dated May 11, to the communication of Robert Benson, clerk of the common council (see Ap. 30), is placed on record: It reads: "Sir. In answer to your Request of Yesterday I will acknowledge herein, that the Idea suggested of a disinclination in me to accept of a Grant of the ten Acres of Common Land, your Letter allude[s] to, is perfectly agreable with my Sentiments & Disposition to refuse the Gift."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 545. See, further, Ja 19, 1801.

" The common council adopts the plan of the committee (see Ap 6) for new paving Broadway. This states "that the regulation ought to take place from the Corner of the Bridewell Fence and that the Crown of the Street be continued in a right line from that place until it joins the new Pavement at the Lutheran Church, . . . The Places where the Difficulty of leading of[f] the Water occurs, are, the head of Fair [Fulton] Street, Little Queen [Cedar] Street and Trinity Church opposite Wall Street [.] Fair Street is nearly a dead level to William Street which being already paved a material Injury would arise to dig it down so as to lead the Water Eastward from Broadway." The construction of sewers to drain water from the streets in this part of town is also involved in the plan, as detailed in the report. A survey accompanies it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 545–46.

" The common council passes an ordinance "to prevent Swine from running at large in the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 547. It provides that if they are found after the first day of June next, they shall "be forfeited to and become the property of any person who shall seize and take such swine."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., My 17, 1790.

15 Maclay records: "Called to see the President. Every eye full of tears. His life despaired of. Dr. Mac Knight told me he would trifle neither with his own character nor the public expectation; his danger was imminent, and every reason to expect that the event of his disorder would be unfortunate."—Maclay's Jour., 265. See My 24.

19 The common council approves the articles of agreement prepared to be signed by Elias Burger, Jr., "agreable to a bargain made with him [see Ag 19, 1789] by the Committee for erecting a Wharf or Bulkhead at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 548.

" A committee appointed to report on a regulation of Greenwich Street, "from Cortland Street to the north side of the Street at Kennedys Coach House," makes its report and this is recorded in full. The report provides "that Crown [,] Little Queen, Thames, and Provoost Streets, Beaver Lane, and the Street between the Fort and Kennedys House, should all be regulated in such manner as to be on a streight regular descent from the Broadway, agreeable to the present survey thereof to the intersection of Greenwich Street when paved agreeable to this regulation, and that Oyster Pastey Street and Lombard [Lumber] Street be so regulated as to be upon an equal regular descent to discharge the water into the several streets aforesaid at their several intersections." See also Jl 16.

The committee further reports "that a Bulkhead must necessarily be built across the Slip at the lower end of Thames Street." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 548–49.

The Greenwich St. survey was made by "Goerick & McComb." —Ibid., I: 552.

The corner-stone of the government house (see Ap 26), "which is by a law of this state ordered to be erected on the lands at the Fort and Battery," is laid in the presence of the governor, chancellor, chief justice, mayor, commissioners, master mason, carpenter, and a "great concourse of respectable citizens."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., My 22, 1790; Daily Adv., My 22, 1790. 21

This building was planned as a residence for Pres. Washington during congress's sessions in New York City, but it was never used for that purpose because, before its completion, the seat of government was moved to Philadelphia (see Je 1). It was occupied by Govs. Clinton and Jay from 1791 to 1797. For a description of the building, see 1791. See also descrips. of Pl. 55-b, I: 418; Pl. 63, I: 441–42; and Pl. 66, I: 443–45.

A building is nearly completed on Crown St. for the Masons, and will be consecrated on June 24. It will be used by two chapters or lodges: one, "the chapter of Royal Arch Masons lately erected in this city," which, on May 18 last, adopted the name of "The Washington Chapter of Royal Arch Masons," and the other, the Holland Lodge.—Daily Adv., My 22, 1790. This appears to have been the first building erected by or for the Masons in New York City. The corner-stone of the second was laid in Frankfort St. on Oct. 13, 1802 (q.v.), and the building there was consecrated on June 8, 1803 (q.v.). This will correct a misleading statement regarding the "Masonic Temple (first site)," in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 954. Masonic temples were also erected in the Bowery and in Broadway before that on 23d St. was built. For the beginnings of the Masonic Order in New York, see N 28, 1737. 22

— The Lombardy poplar "has lately been introduced into America, by Monsieur Saulnier, superintendant of the French King's botanical garden in Bergen-county, New-Jersey, about four miles from Hoebuck ferry."—The N. Y. Mag., (June, 1790), 341–43. As explained by Dr. John W. Francis, "The elder Michaux, under the direction of Louis XVI., had been sent to America, from the Garden of Plants of Paris: he brought out with him the gardener, Paul Saunier, who possessed, shortly after, horticultural grounds of some extent in New Jersey. The Lombardy tree promised every thing good, and Paul spread it. It was pronounced an exotic of priceless value; but like many things of an exotic nature, it polluted the soil, vitiated our own more stately and valuable indigenous products: and at length we find [1857] that American sagacity has proscribed its growth, and is daily eradicating it as uncongenial and detrimental to the native riches of American husbandry."—Old New York (1866), 23–24. 1790 June 1 A New Yorker writes to one of the papers: "The determination of the House of Representatives [see My 31] to adjourn to Philadelphia, has occasioned much surprise. The necessity of a central situation is assigned as the cause of this vote; but Philadelphia is surely not the most central situation— . . .

"Public bodies are not influenced by the feelings which affect individuals; else how shall we account for the ingratitude which is displayed by this vote.—A few years ago, Congress was surrounded by enraged assassins—the lives of the members were threatened—the representatives of the States—the sovereignty of the Union, were insulted—the best men in America were at the mercy of ruffians . . . but the citizens of Philadelphia might by a slender effort have crushed this ignominious attack, and restored the energy of the laws. Congress implored protection—it was refused—they threatened to leave a city where their lives were in danger—they were insultingly sneered at and told that the citizens of Philadelphia did not fear their departure, because they could not exist out of that city. . . . Finding their persons in danger, they were compelled to depart—they were in fact disgracefully expelled, and after wandering from place to place, and suffering every kind of inconvenience, the citizens of New-York handsomely invited them to their city—made them a tender of their public buildings, and have continued for the space of five years to testify their esteem and respect for Congress as a body, and for its members individually by every mark of attention.

"When it was resolved that the new congress should assemble at New York, the Corporation, by considerable exertions, and at a great expence, erected and completed a magnificent building for their accomodation, and have furnished it in a most elegant and commodious manner: in short there is nothing equal to it in any part of the world; and while the citizens are paying taxes to defray this enormous expence, Congress propose to leave them without assigning any cause of displeasure. Still further to evince their disposition to accomodate the government of the union, the city is now erecting a noble mansion for the residence of the President of the United States—The corner stone was scarcely laid [see My 21], when this fresh proof of their respect for the government was repaid with a motion of adjournment to Philadelphia." —Daily Adv., Je 3, 1790. " Robert Richard Randall buys for £5,000 the country estate of Frederick Charles Hans Bruno Poelnitz, which, as "Minto," had formerly belonged to Lieut. Gov. Andrew Elliott (see 1766). Mr. Randall resided on the property until his death. By his will, made in 1801, he established, principally on the basis of this estate, one of the most munificent charities in the country, for the support of aged and infirm seamen, directing that a suitable edifice be erected and denominated "The Sailors' Snug Harbor."—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 640. Randall's purchase of June 5, 1790, was of six parcels of land, containing in all 21 acres, and was recorded in Liber Deeds, XLVI: 212–16 (New York). The property lay, generally speaking, between the present Fourth and Fifth Aves., Waverly Pl., and 9th St.; on its eastern boundary it ran to a point above 10th St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 951; Pl. 175, Vol. III. See, further, Je 1, 1801.

6 Jefferson writes to Wm. Short: "To-morrow I go on a sailing party of three or four days with the President. . . . The President is perfectly reestablished, and looks better than before his illness."—Baker, Washington after the Rev., 183.

8 The "Philadelphia Patriots" in New York report that it has become necessary to remove President Washington to Philadelphia "for the benefit of dry air," as the air of New York is "too saline for his constitution." In proof of the assertion, the fact is cited (evidently in sarcasm) that a Philadelphia physician, who has been called to advise him, recommends that the President go on "a fishing party" to Sandy Hook, "in order to avoid salt air."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 9, 1790. See, however, Je 9.

9 Col. Thomas Rodney (member of the continental congress, and first judge of the Mississippi Territory) writes in his diary, June 9 during a journey from Dover to New York: "I intended to have staged at ferry & went into N. Y. today, but finding Expenses very high every day & that the President and all the State officers were gone out of town & frolicking, I thought it best to return homeward . . . A little after passing the ferry met Mrs. Washington & another lady in a coach, they were preceded by a Servant about ½ mile a head, and two young Gentlemen on Horseback, Just before them, a Mulato girl behind the carriage and a Negro man Servant on Horseback behind, this was her Suits, small attendance for the Lady of the President of the United States. Yet the Motions of the President and his lady is the public Talk of all Ranks at & near New York."—From an original MS. volume, sold by Henkels, Phila. (item No. 609), on Oct. 22, 1919.

" Washington returns to New York in the afternoon "from Sandy Hook and the fishing banks, where he has been for the benefit of the sea air, and to amuse himself in the delightful recreation of fishing." It is reported that "he had excellent sport, having himself caught a great number of sea-bass and black-fish." The weather "proved remarkably fine, which, together with the salubrity of the air and wholesome exercise, rendered this little voyage extremely agreeable. . . ."—Gaz. of the U. S., Je 12, 1790, citing the Daily Adv.

14 "The [Fitch] Steam-Boat Is now ready to take Passengers, and is intended to set off from Arch street Ferry in Philadelphia every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, for Burlington, Bristol, Bordentown and Trenton, to return on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays."—Penn. Packet, Je 15, 1790. This steamboat line was maintained for two summers.—Bullock, "The Miracle of the First Steamboat" in Jour. Am. Hist., I: 48. See Ag 26, 1791.

" The common council orders "that in the Estimate for Paving the Broad Way [see My 14] the Bricks for the Walks on each side be included."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 553.

18 "During the course of the operation in levelling the works at Fort-George, several articles have been discovered, that probably had been deposited, and have lain since the first settlement of the city. Among other antique curiosities, are a number of old Dutch tobacco pipes, somewhat different from those in use at the present day, and more clumsily made; also the remains of a brass hilted sword of the fashion of the last century, which in its better days might possibly have made a part of the warlike furniture of some honest Batovian [Batavian?] or might even have had the honor to have graced the side of the commandant of Fort Amsterdam . . . —Besides the above, a few pieces of coin have been found; the most curious is a silver piece about the size and value of a pistareen coined at Gottingen [Groningen?] in 1605.

"In removing the earth where the Chapel . . . formerly stood [see Mr 18, 1741], a number of bones have been dug up, but the coffins were totally decayed. Three vaults also have been discovered. On opening the first, which was within the walls of the chapel, only the remains of a single coffin were to be seen, which by the plate appears to have been the body of the right Honourable Lady Elizabeth Hay, wife of Governor Hunter, who died the 8th of August 1716. This coffin was almost totally decayed.

"The second vault contained the remains of four or five coffins, two of which were of lead. One of them contained the remains of the Earl of Bellamont [Bellomont], who died in 1701, Governor of this then Province, as appears from a silver escutcheon chased with the arms of the Coote family of Ireland, being three cootes with wolves as supporters. The other probably contains the remains of his Lady. In the third vault nothing remained but a few bones, the coffins being entirely decayed into dust.

"For the satisfaction of the relatives of the deceased, we are authorized to assure them, that the Commissioners appointed by the Corporation to superintend the improvements, propose to collect all the remains of bodies that may be found, and have them decently interred in one of the burial grounds in this city."—N. Y. Jour., Je 18, 1790. The same account was published in the N. Y. Mag. (1790), 372. See also references to the discoveries in the N. Y. Packet, Je 12; N. Y. Jour., Je 15; N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 16; and N. Y. Packet, Je 17, 1790.

In a letter dated June 18, a writer states that: "Lord Bellamont died soon after his return to New-York, in May 1700, and was interred in the vault where his remains were lately found, probably with a view to have been sent to his friends in Ireland, as the case of the leaden coffin had been strongly bound with iron, the rods 1790 June 18 of which are still very stout. The second leaden coffin supposed to contain the body of Lady Bellamont, probably belongs to someone else. For in the Gentlemen's Magazine for December 1737, we are informed of the marriage of the Countess Dowager of Bellamont to William Bridgen, Esq., merchant of Mincing-lane, at Morton Court, near Ledbury, Herefordshire; and in the March Magazine of 1738, her death is announced on the 12th of that month in the 90th year of her age, four months after her aforesaid marriage.—Her title and age appear to correspond with the circumstances of Lord Bellamont's life. These particulars, however, can better be ascertained by the connections of that family in Ireland."—Daily Adv., June 19, 1790. "Lady Bellomont remained in New York for several years after her husband's death; but finally went to live in England, where she married a gentleman named Samuel Pytts. She survived the Earl some thirty-six years."—De Peyster, Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont, (1879), 58.

19 Titles of nobility are abolished in France.—Anderson, Constitutions & other Select Docs., etc. (1789–1907), 33–34.

" The following plea for local historical research is published: ". . . the levelling the works of Fort George has awakened a spirit of enquiry after former transactions, which if properly improved may rescue many circumstances from total oblivion. The history of our state and city is very defective, especially in local anecdotes which [,] altho' of little importance to others [,] are very material to ourselves. It is to be hoped therefore such as possess a turn that way, will direct their views to recover what still remains."—Daily Adv., Je 19, 1790.

21 There is taken up from beneath the ruins of the chapel which formerly stood in Fort George a flat stone, on which is discovered the following inscription in Dutch:

Ao Do. MDCXLII. W.
KEIFTH, DR. GR. HEEFT
DE GEMEENTEN DEESE
TEMPEL DOEN BOUWEN

In the year 1642, W. Kieft, Director-General, caused the congregation to build this temple.—N. Y. Jour., Je 25, 1790. Slight variations in the transcription of the original text occur in the Daily Adv., Je 23; N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 23, 1790; N. Y. Mag., Je, 1790; and N. Y. Packet, Je 24, 1790. The stone was removed to the belfry of the Garden St. Church, and was destroyed in the fire of 1835.—N. Y. H. S. Collections, 2d ser. (1849), II: 328–29. For an account of the construction of the chapel, see My, 1642.

23 The common council appoints a committee "to meet the proprietors [a marginal note reads "Kip Malcolm & others"] of the Land in the Rear of the Alms House & Bridewell and to ascertain the Division Line between the said Lands and the Lands of this Corporation and to lay out a Street there." A former committee on this subject is discharged.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 554. On Sept. 24, the committee reported that a survey had been made in keeping with the original Dutch grant, and the board ordered that Recorder Jones, "as Atty for this Corporation prosecute for all such parts of the said Lands as do not fall within the Line, agreable to the Dutch Measurement."—Ibid., I: 598. See N 12.

" The common council refers to the committee on Broad St., a petition from several persons "that in the regulation of that Street it may not be raised & that the Kennel may be continued in the middle of the Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 554.

24 Washington again takes up riding for exercise, this time between 5 and 7 o'clock in the morning.—Washington's Diary (Lossing ed.), 136. He did the same on June 28, 29, July 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 12 and 14.—Ibid., passim.

25 Among "the various improvements carrying forward in almost every quarter of the city," the bridge at the Fly Market "is not the least convenient." A plan is in contemplation "of raising the roof of the Market and erecting new pillars of brick to support same," the expense of which will be covered by subscriptions.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 25, 1790.

" Specifications for repairing "the Corporation Wharf at the North River" (see L. M. R. K., III: 989) are approved by the common council, and entered in the M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 555.

" The common council orders that the committee for regulating Broadway "direct Surveys to be made for the new regulating & paving of Maiden Lane & King [Pine] Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 556. On July 9, the committee's proposed regulation of Maiden Lane was agreed to.—Ibid., I: 560. See Jl 16. June 25

"That part of the ground in the fort where the chapel formerly stood being totally removed, the commissioners for conducting the repairs at the battery, with permission of Bishop Provost, deposited on Saturday last [June 26] the remains of the bodies which have been dug up, in the charnel-house in Trinity Church yard. The two leaden coffins, one of which contained the remains of the Earl of Bellamont, were cased and re-interred the same day in St. Paul's Churchyard."—Daily Adv., Je 28, 1790. The site of the charnel-house in Trinity churchyard, and that of Bellomont's burial-place in St. Paul's churchyard are to-day unknown; see, however, Je 8, 1801. 26

According to a notice issued on June 16, the pews "in the New [Middle] Dutch Church" were to be sold on this day.—N. Y. Jour., Je 22, 1790. The Church was reopened on July 4 (q.v.). 29

Samuel Meredith writes from New York to his wife: "The grand affairs [the removal to Philadelphia of the seat of government] was to day passed thro the Senate and is now ready for the House to act upon which will be laid before them tomorrow—10 years residence in Philadelphia and permanently at the Potomack —thus far I give you joy on. I have myself little doubt that it will pass in the House of Representatives [cf. Je 1] and then the signature of the President will make it complete at which no one has a doubt of as he has a predilection for the Potomack and no dislike to Philadelphia."—Am. Hist. Mag. (1908), 20–21; Annals of Cong., I: 1002. See Jl 14. July 1

The Tammany Society testifies "a grateful remembrance of the acts of '76 by reading the declaration of independence."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 6, 1790. This ceremony of reading the Declaration as part of the Fourth of July programme had its origin on this occasion.—N. Y. Daily Adv., Jl 15, 1805. 4

" Services are held in the Middle Dutch Church in Nassau St. for the first time since the Revolution. The church is rededicated because it "had been prostituted to the shameful purpose of horse-schooling, while the British possessed the city." The Rev. John H. Livingston, D.D., preaches the sermon.—N. Y. Jour. and N. Y. Daily Gaz., Jl 6, 1790; N. Y. Mag. (1790), 431; De Witt, Discourse, 42, 79.

5 As the 4th of July falls on Sunday, it is celebrated on Monday. Brockholst Livingston delivers an oration at St. Paul's Church, before the president, vice-president, senate, house of representatives, Society of the Cincinnati, and other citizens.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Jl 6; N. Y. Jour., Jl 6, 1790.

William Maclay thus describes the events of the day: "All the town was in arms; grenadiers, light infantry, and artillery passed the Hall, and the firing of cannon and small-arms, with beating of drums, kept all in uproar. The motion [for the senate to adjourn] was carried, and now all of us repaired to the President's. We got some wine, punch, and cakes. From hence we went to St. Paul's, and heard the anniversary of independence pronounced by a Mr B. Livingston. The church was crowded . . . I was in the pew next to General Washington. Part of his family and Senators filled the seats with us."—Maclay's Jour., 315–16.

6 The common council approves of proposals "for erecting Bulkheads in Cherry Street across George & Charlotte Slips in the Out Wd for the Sum of £186."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 557. On Aug. 20, £101 was paid on the contract.—Ibid., I: 579.

8 Washington sits again for Trumbull, who is drawing a portrait "at full length," which the artist intends "to present to Mrs. Washington."—Diary of Washington (1860), 145–46. In the catalogue of a loan exhibition of Washington portraits in 1889, Chas. Henry Hart said that this drawing was the "original of the life-size portrait in the City Hall, New York."—Bowen, Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inaug. of Geo. Wash., 545. It is reproduced in ibid., opp. p. 2; the city hall portrait (see Jl 19) is reproduced and described in the present work, Pl. 51, I: 364.

9 The common council agrees to a committee report on a proposed regulation and paving of Wall St. from Broadway to Broad St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 560.

10 Washington writes in his diary: "Having formed a Party, consisting of the Vice President, his lady, Son & Miss Smith; the Secretaries of State, Treasury, & War, and the ladies of the two latter; with all the Gentlemen of my family, Mrs. Lear & the two Children we visited the old position of Fort Washington 1790 July 10 and afterwards dined on a dinner provided by Mr. Mariner at the House lately Col° Roger Morris, but confiscated and in the occupation of a common Farmer."—Diary of George Washington, 1789–1791 (ed. by Lossing), 151.

12 The improvements made in the "naturally beautiful situation of this city, by the demolition of the high walls of Fort George," are observed by a correspondent in one of the papers. After describing the scenery viewed from this point, he adds: "A perspective view of our bay, with the islands, adjacent shores, hills, &c. would be well worthy the attention of some American genius who has studied landscape painting under the great masters in Europe, and would wish to steal from nature one of those scenes which she seems to have delineated with more than ordinary attention."—Daily Adv., Jl 12, 1790.

" "Upon hearing the Report of the Committee of Leases [of Trinity vestry], Resolved, that this Corporation cannot engage for any part of the Expence which may attend the laying out a street thro' their Ground from the House of Nicholas Bayard Esq^r^ to Hudson's River, nor take any other part therein except giving Consent that their Tenants if they think proper may appropriate as much of the Land in their Possession to that purpose, as may be necessary."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"Resolved that the Agreement whereby the Line between the Land of the Corporation and of the Lutheran Congregation near the Broad Way is to run in such a manner as to divide the present Gang Way be confirmed, and that the Seal of the Corporation be affixed to the proper Deeds for carrying the same into Effect."—Ibid. See S 13.

14 In a letter to his wife, Samuel Meredith says: ". . . the President has not yet set his name to the Bill [for the removal to Philadelphia] & there has been a piece addressed to him on the unconstitutionality of it which I believe will have very little weight with him, however I confess on many accts I should wish it done, in the first place it would tend to make up the minds of the people here to a removal, it would likewise enable our people to begin their operations for the accommodation of Congress which I am very much afraid they will do in a nigardly way. I wish I may be disappointed, for if they do, the Contrast between the New Yorkers and us will be remarkable, for they have certainly gone to an enormous expense, the half of what they have & are laying out would answer the purpose as well and as we are twice as large and rich it would fall but a fourth part as heavy on the Community."—Am. Hist. Mag. (1908), 22–23. See Jl 16.

16 An Act of congress is approved by President Washington "for establishing the temporary and permanent Seat of the Government of the United States." It provides: "That a district of territory, not exceeding ten miles square, to be located as hereafter directed on the river Potomac, at some place between the mouths of the Eastern-Branch and Connogochegue, be and the same is hereby accepted for the permanent seat of the government of the United States." The president is required to appoint three commissioners who shall survey this district, under his direction. They "shall have power to purchase or accept such quantity of land on the eastern side of the said river, within the said district, as the President shall deem proper for the use of the United States," and, prior to the first Monday in December, 1800, they shall "provide suitable buildings for the accommodation of Congress, and of the President, and for the public offices of the government of the United States." The president is authorised to accept grants of money "for defraying the expense of such purchases and buildings." Prior to the first Monday in December, 1790, "all offices attached to the seat of the government of the United States, shall be removed to, and until the said first Monday in December, in the year one thousand eight hundred, shall remain at the city of Philadelphia, in the state of Pennsylvania, at which place the session of Congress next ensuing the present shall be held." On the first Monday in December, 1800, "the seat of the government of the United States shall by virtue of this act, be transferred to the district and place aforesaid."—Acts Passed at the Second Session of the Congress, etc. (held in New York, beginning Jan. 4, 1790), chap. 28. The land for the federal city was surveyed under the direction of Andrew Ellicott (N. Y. Jour., O 8, 1790; F 28 and Mr 10, 1791), and the city was planned by Maj. Pierre L'Enfant (N. Y. Jour., Ja 11, 1792). See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., II: 483–89. The corner-stone of the city was laid on April 15, 1791 (q. v.).

July 16 The common council agrees upon a regulation and survey of King (Pine), Little Queen (Cedar), Crown (Liberty) and Nassau Sts. The surveys of these streets are approved and filed; and it is ordered that an ordinance for paving them be prepared.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 563–64, 565.

" Inhabitants of the West Ward, in a petition to the common council, state that "the Pump standing in the Middle of the Broadway nearly opposite to the old Lutheran Church" is an obstruction, and they ask that it be removed.—From original petition, in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. It is endorsed "Petition for filling up the Well opposite the Burnt Lutheran Church—read and Granted. July 16 1790."

19 The regiment of militia of this city, under command of Col. James Alner, musters "on the regimental parade." From here they march to the race-ground, where, after being reviewed, they "perform manoeuvres."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 23, 1790.

" The common council resolves "that The President of the United States be requested to permit M^r^ Trumbull to take his Portrait, to be placed in the City Hall as a Monument of the Respect which the Inhabitants of this City bear towards him." It is ordered that Mayor Varick "be requested to wait on the President and communicate the aforegoing Resolution."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 565. See Jl 20.

20 The mayor presents to Washington the request of the corporation "that he would honor them with permitting Mr. Trumbull to take his portrait to be placed in the City Hall . . ." The President grants the request. "The Picture will be placed, . . . in that Part of the Representatives Chamber, behind the Speaker—and will be so elevated as to be out of danger from being handled and sufficiently conspicuous from every part of the Room."—Daily Adv., Jl 21. It was finished on Sept. 2 (q. v.). This painting is reproduced and described as Pl. 51, Vol. I. It is a full-length portrait, and at the time the painter published his Autobiography (1841)—q. v., 164—it was hanging in the common council room of the city hall. It is now in the governors' room there. See Jl 1, 1791.

21 Col. Alex. McGillivray, chief of the Creek Indians, and 29 warriors (kings, chiefs, and head men) of the Creek and Seminole nations, escorted by Col. Marinus Willett (see Mr 10), come to New York. They embarked at Elizabethtown Point at about 10 o'clock in the morning, in a packet-boat especially fitted to receive them, under the direction of Maj. Stagg, and arrived at Murray's Wharf at about 2 p. m. Here Gen. Malcom, some troops, and the Tammany Society in full Indian costume received them. "The society was drawn up in two files, with the grand sachem at the head, who welcomed Colonel M'Gillivray ashore. He, with the warriors, marched in the centre of the society, which proceeded through Wall-street. When they came opposite the Federal Hall, Col. M'Gillivray, and the warriors saluted the Congress, who were in the front of the balcony, and returned the compliment—The procession moved on to the Secretary at War's [Gen. Knox's, in the lower part of Broadway], where the several warriors smoked the calumet of peace, and next proceeded to the President's [escorted by Gen. Knox], where they were particularly introduced—after which they waited on Governor Clinton, still accompanied by the society, who afterwards attended them to the city tavern, where they took up their lodgings during their residence in this city." Here they dined in company with Gen. Knox, the senators and representatives from Georgia, Gen. Malcolm, the militia officers, and the officers of the Tammany Society. "The Creeks seemed highly pleased with the polite and friendly reception they met with—and the pleasure was considerably heightened by the conviviality and good humour which prevailed at the festive board. . . .

"The number of citizens that assembled on the landing of Col. M'Gillivray has not been equalled since the first arrival in this city of the President—so anxious were all ranks of seeing the strangers, and at the same time to testify their joy at the prospect which is now held up to us of establishing a perpetual peace and friendship."—Daily Adv., Jl 22; Penn. Packet, Jl 24, 1790; Wickham's Diary (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. See Ag 2.

23 The common council agrees to a committee report for the regulation of Nassau, Fair, and Beekman Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 567.

The board also approves the report of a committee appointed "to ascertain a Line for straightening the East side of White Hall

1790 July 23 " Street from the South West Corner of Beaver Street to the north-west Corner of Great Dock Street."—Ibid., I: 568. A deviation from this plan was adopted on Sept. 17.—Ibid., I: 595.

" The common council appoints a committee to "procure Surveys of Great George Streets [St.] from the Bridewell northwds & of the Streets in the vicinity leading to the River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 568.

27 "The legion of General Malcolm's Brigade and Col. Bauman's Regiment of Artillery, the whole commanded by Col. Rutgers," are "reviewed by the President of the United States, and Governor Clinton accompanied by the Kings and Warriors of the Creek nation [see Jl 21], who lately arrived in this city.—The troops were compleat in uniform and arms, and performed a variety of firings and manœvres with great precision."—Penn. Packet, Ag 4, 1790. The review was held "on Col. Rutger's ground."—Gaz. of the U. S., Jl 28, 1790.

29 An entertainment on board the ship "America" (Capt. Sarley), lately from Canton, is "honored by the company of the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, several other heads of departments, the Governor of this state—Col. M'Gillivray, with the Kings, Headman, and Warriors of the Creeks, and a very respectable company of officers and soldiers."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 30; Penn. Packet, Ag 5, 1790.

30 City ordinances are passed "for the new paving of Nassau Street from Maiden Lane to Franckfort Street—Fair Street from the Broad Way to Gold Street—& Beekman Street from Gold Street to Nassau Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 569.

" The common council orders "that two of the City Surveyors Survey & lay out the Street leading from the East River between the Land late of James Delancey & the Heirs of Hendrick Rutgers decd according to certain Articles of Agreement indented & made on the 31st day of Octr 1765 between the said James Delancey & the said Hendrick Rutgers . . ."—*M. Aug. — A view of the light-house at Sandy Hook, drawn by Anderson and engraved by Tiebout, was published and described in the N. Y. Mag. for this month.

2 A "Complimentary conference" is held at the "great Wigwam" between the Tammany Society and the Creek Indians who are visiting the city (see Jl 21). "This conference was honored by the presence of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Chief Justice, of the United States, the Governor of this State, and the Mayor of the Corporation. A number of toasts were drank, a dance was performed by the Creeks about nine, several songs were sung by the members of the society, and about ten the society adjourned. An apparent satisfaction sat upon the brows of all present."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 3 and 10; Daily Adv., Ag 4, 1790. Kilroe says: "The friendly spirit with which the Creeks were imbued, in the course of their cordial entertainment by the Society, undoubtedly mollified their opposition to the whites and despite their distrust, influenced them to make the treaty of peace and friendship, which was concluded between the United States and the Creek Nation by Gen. Knox, on Aug. 7, 1790."—St. Tammany, 172. The treaty was approved by Pres. Washington, and ratified by the senate on Aug. 13 (q.v.).—N. Y. Jour., Ag 17, 1790. See also the portrait sketches of the Creek chiefs, etc., drawn by John Trumbull, and reproduced in his Autobiography (1841), 164–65.

3 "Last week [probably on Aug. 3] the key of the Bastile, accompanied with a fine drawing of that famous building, was presented to the President of the United States, by John Rutledge, jun. Esq. to whose care they were committed by the illustrious patriot the Marquis de la Fayette, for that purpose. Mr. Rutledge arrived in the Chesterfield Packet."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 11, 1790. The "Chesterfield" arrived on Ag 2.—Ibid., Aug. 3, 1790.

Louis Otto, chargé d'affaires, wrote on Aug. 4 to his government in Paris: "In attending yesterday [Aug. 3] the public audience of the President, I was surprised by a question from the Chief Magistrate, 'whether I would like to see the Key of the Bastile?' One of his secretaries showed me at the same moment a large Key, which had been sent to the President by desire of the Marquis de la Fayette. I dissembled my surprise in observing to the President that 'the time had not yet come in America to do iron-work equal to that before him.' The Americans present looked at the Key with indifference, as if wondering why it had been sent. But the serene face of the President showed that he regarded it as an homage from the French nation."—Americana (magazine), July, 1911. Aug. 3

Lafayette's letter, presenting the key to Washington, is dated at Paris March 17, and reads as follows: "Give me leave, my dear General, to present you with a picture of the Bastile, just as it looked a few days after I had ordered its demolition [in July, 1789], with the main key of the fortress of despotism. It is a tribute, which I owe as a son to my adopted father, as an aid-de-camp to my general, as a missionary of liberty to its patriarch." —Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), 494, footnote. He intrusted the key and drawing to Thomas Paine for transmission to the president.

Paine writing from London on May 1 to Washington remarked: ". . . I feel myself happy in being the person thro' whom the Marquis has conveyed this early trophy of the Spoils of despotism, and the first ripe fruits of American principles transplanted into Europe, to his great master and patron . . . That the principles of America opened the Bastille is not to be doubted, and therefore the Key comes to the right place . . . I have permitted no drawing to be taken here, though it has been often requested, as I think there is a propriety that it should first be presented. B[ut] Mr. West wishes Mr. Trumbull to make a painting of the presentation of the Key to you."—From Moncure D. Conway's Life of Thomas Paine (1892), I: 273. A copy of this letter, framed, hangs on the wall at Mount Vernon, next to the cabinet containing the key. Paine transmitted the present by J. Rutledge, Jr., who set out from London on May 31, on which day Paine wrote again to Washington so informing him.—Ibid., I: 274.

Washington wrote to Lafayette on Aug. 11 to acknowledge receipt of the key, which he refers to as "the token of victory." —Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), 493; see also p. 494.

On Dec. 13, Otto, the French chargé, wrote to his home government: "The Key of the Bastile, regularly shown at the President's audiences, is now also on exhibition in Mrs. Washington's salon, where it satisfies the curiosity of the Philadelphians. I am persuaded, Monseigneur, that it is only their vanity that finds pleasure in the exhibition of this trophy, but Frenchmen here are not the less piqued, and many will not enter the President's house on this account."—Americana, July, 1911. Evidence that ice houses existed at this time is found in the following item: "After we got through Hell Gate we drunk a bowl of Punch made with Ice which Mr. Yates a passenger had took on board at N. York. This was very curious to see Ice at this season of the year—which is kept (as Mr. Yates informed us) through the summer in houses built on purpose."—*MS. The Dutch Church applies to the common council for a grant, in fee simple, at a cost of £1,000, of a piece of land in Montgomerie Ward "heretofore granted to the said Church on an annual Rent reserved of £70 per annum."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 572. On Aug. 20, the board consented.—Ibid., I: 579. On Sept. 2, the grant and release, sealed and signed by the mayor, were "to be delivered to the Parties on the Treasurers notifying the Clerk that the consideration Money and Rent due is paid."—Ibid., I: 587. This grant to the Dutch Church conveyed the block bounded by King George (William) St., Queen (Pearl) St., Thomas (Duane) St., and Rose St.,—now traversed by New Chambers St. It was made on the express condition that the land was to be used only for a church and cemetery.—Liber City Grants, D: 636. The city, however, released the church from the conditions.—Liber Deeds, CCXLIX: 372. See also Liber City Grants, C: 545. 10

"A Receipt of the Treasurer for the said Notes was read & ordered to be filed." The mayor issues a warrant on the treasurer to pay Ald. McCormick £10:3:6 for the paper procured by him to print the notes on.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 572–73. See, further, Mr 11, 1791.

" The common council resolves "that His Excellency the Governor of this State [George Clinton] be requested to permit Mr Trumbull to take his Portrait to be placed in the City Hall as a Testimony of the Respect which this Corporation bears towards him." It is ordered that Mayor Varick "be requested to wait on his Excellency and communicate to him the foregoing Resolution." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 573. See, further, S 21.

" The common council appoints a committee "to take the Charge & Care of the City Hall on the adjournment of Congress from this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 573.

" The common council refuses a petition of Wm. P. Smith and others "to open the Doors of the City Hall to the Revd Mr John Murray Minister of the Gospel in the Universal Church from Boston."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 573.

12 The last meeting of congress is held at New York. Both houses adjourn "to meet in the city of Philadelphia on the first Monday in December next."—Jour. of the Second Session of the Senate of the U. S. (printed at Richmond, 1791), 109; U. S. Laws (1789–1815), II: 77, 190; Gales & Seaton, Hist. of Debates in Congress, I: 1071, 1074. The house on Aug. 11, and the senate on Aug. 12, as a closing act, passed resolutions of thanks to the corporation of the city of New York "for the elegant and convenient accommodations provided for Congress," and expressing the wish that the common council will permit "such articles of furniture, &c.," now in the city hall, as have been provided by congress, "to remain for the use of that building."—Gales & Seaton, I: 1074. The original messages signed by the two presiding officers, respectively, of the two branches of the federal legislature, are preserved in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. For the full text of both, as recorded in the common council Minutes, see Ag 13.

13 "Yesterday [Ag 13] the treaty of peace and friendship between the United States and the Creek nation [concluded on Ag 7] was solemnly ratified by the contracting parties, in Federal Hall, in presence of a large assembly of citizens.—The Vice President of the United States—the great officers of State—his Excellency the Governor—and of several members of both Houses of Congress.

"At 12 o'clock the President of the United States, and his suit—General Knox, the commissioner; the clerks of the department of the Secretary at war; Col. M'Gillivray, and the Kings, Chiefs, and warriors of the Creek nation being assembled, the treaty was read by the Secretary of the President of the United States.

"The President then addressed Col. M'Gillivray, the Kings, Chiefs, and warriors; he said that he thought the treaty just and equal; and stated the mutual duties of the contracting parties; which address was communicated sentence after sentence, by Mr. Cornell sworn interpreter; to all of which the Creeks gave an audible assent.

"The President then signed the treaty—after which he presented a string of beads as a token of perpetual peace; and a paper of tobacco to smoke in remembrance of it; Mr. M'Gillivray rose, made a short reply to the President, and received the tokens.

"This was succeeded by the shake of peace, every one of the Creeks passing this friendly salute with the President; a song of peace performed by the Creeks concluded this highly interesting, solemn and dignified transaction."—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 14, 1790 (with the text of the treaty).

" There are placed on record the following letters received by the common council from the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives, of the United States. The first reads:

"New York 12th August 1790.

"Sir.

"It is with great pleasure that, in obedience to an Order of the Senate of the United States, I have the honor to enclose their Resolution of this date, which was unanimously agreed to; and in behalf of the Senate, I request that you will be pleased to communicate the same to the Corporation of this City, and at the same time signify to them, that it is the wish of the Senate, that the Corporation will permit such Articles of furniture &c. now in the City Hall, as have been provided by Congress, to remain for the use of that Building. Aug. 13

"I am, Sir,
"Your Most Obedient
"Humble Servant.
"John Adams { Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate"

The enclosed resolution is as follows:

"United States of America
"In Senate August 12th 1790

"Resolved unaminously, that the thanks of the Senate be given to the Corporation of the City of New York, for the elegant and convenient accommodations provided for Congress.

"Attest,
"Sam. A. Otis Secy"

The other letter, dated Aug. 11, makes the same statements on behalf of the house of representatives, and is signed by their speaker, "Fredk. A. Muhlenberg." Their resolution of thanks, which they enclosed, was expressed in the same words as those of the senate, and was attested by "John Beckley Clerk."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 575–76.

"On Sunday morning, the 15th inst, the President of the United States embarked for Newport, on a visit to the state of Rhode Island, accompanied by Governor Clinton, Mr. Jefferson, Secretary of State; the Hon. Judge Blair, Mr. Smith of S. Carolina, and three gentlemen of his family."—Penn. Packet, Ag 28, 1790. The three last named were Col. Humphreys, Major Jackson, and Mr. Nelson. The journey was made on the packet "Hancock" (Capt. Brown).—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 18, 1790. 15

Washington did not include Rhode Island in his New England tour in Oct. and Nov., 1789. Rhode Island having ratified the Constitution on May 29, 1790, he determined to make a special tour to that state, which was the last to come into the Federal Union. For incidents on this trip, see Baker, Washington after the Rev., 191 et seq.

The common council orders "that the Street Committee direct Surveys for the Regulation of Mill Street & Great Dock Street from Coenties Slip to White Hall Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 577. 20

"Estimates & assessments for the paving of Wall Street from the Broad Way to Broad Street—Kings Street from the Broad Way to Queen Street—& Smith Street from Duke Street to Great Dock Street" are ratified by the board.—Ibid., I: 578. "

A public whipper is still employed as a city functionary. The common council agrees that Joseph Shelvey receive £18 "for his former Services," and that £35 per annum be allowed him "for his Services as well without as within the Bridewell in future." A warrant for the first amount is issued immediately.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 578, 579, 603, 623. See, further, O 14, 1808. "

Washington returns to New York from his trip to Rhode Island, "after a fine passage of 24 hours only." The return trip, like the out-going one (see Ag 15), was made on a Sunday.—Gaz. of the U. S., Ag 25, 1790. 22

The common council orders that the whole exterior of the city hall be painted, and necessary repairs made "for the preservation of the Building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 583. On Sept. 17, £100 was advanced "on Acct towards Repairs to the City Hall."—Ibid., I: 594. On Oct. 29, £100 more.—Ibid., I: 608. On Nov. 12, £100.—Ibid., I: 611. On Dec. 24, £200.—Ibid., I: 618. 27

The common council adopts specifications for the grading and paving of Duke, Princess, Garden, "Chestnut," and Cherry Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 583–84. "

The common council approves of a scheme for a second lottery under the same regulations as the last (see Mr 4), the drawings to commence the first Monday in Jan., 1791.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 585. A marginal note says this is "to reimburse expenses for repairing the City Hall." "

The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant to pay Ald. Stoutenburgh, one of the commissioners (see Ap 6), £1,500 "towards the Wharf at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 586. On Oct. 22, Stoutenburgh received £1,000 for the same purpose.—Ibid., I: 607. "

The governor of the state and the mayor and aldermen of the city of New York dine with Washington, who informs them "of 28

1790 Aug. 28 his intention to visit Mount Vernon—and that he should leave the city on the Monday following" (Ag 30). He expressed "the deep sense he had of the respectful attention which the corporation in particular, and the citizens in general had shewn him personally, and as first magistrate of the United States—and added that it was with the utmost regret that he should quit a residence which had been rendered so agreeable to him." The published report of the announcement states that "Mrs. Washington appeared greatly affected on the occasion."—Gaz. of the U. S., S 1, 1790. Washington expressed a wish that his departure might not be "noticed." The corporation of the city, however, met in the evening and agreed "to pay their respects to this illustrious personage on his departure."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 31; Columbian Centinel (Boston), S 4; Penn. Packet (Phila.), S 2, 1790.

30 At about nine o'clock, the "Corporation" of the city attended "at the presidency in Broad-way," to pay their respects to Washington. The governor, the "executive officers of government, several other officers, gentlemen of the clergy, and others, had already assembled to take their leave." At about ten o'clock, "the procession moved for the President's barge, which was laying at M'Comb's wharf, on the North-river, in the following order:

"Sheriff, with his insignia of office. Marshals and Constables, with insignias. Gov. Clinton—President—Chief Justice Jay.

The executive Officers of Government.

Corporation of New-York.

Several Officers

Clergy.——————————Citizens.

"At the wharf, the escort opened to the right and left, when the President, his Lady, &c. accompanied, marched forward and entered on board the barge, under the discharge of a salute of thirteen guns from the battery.

"As it was not generally known that we were that day to bid a final adieu, little or no preparations could be made, and as but few citizens knew of the circumstance, the concourse of people was not so great as otherwise it would have been. The barge was manned with thirteen men, in a uniform of white jackets, and black caps; the weather was serene and beautiful, and a few minutes landed them at Powles Hook ferry, where the carriages of the President and Suite, were waiting.

"The Custom House barge was manned on this solemn occasion; on board of which the officers of the customs accompanied the President's barge, and brought back the gentlemen from Powles-Hook, of whom the President and Lady, with an apparent sensibility, took an affectionate leave."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 31, 1790.

On arriving at Powles-Hook, Washington returned "the elegant barge" to the citizens who had presented it, with the following letter to Capt. Thomas Randall, which expressed his farewell and good wishes to the City of New York:

"New York, August 30th, 1790.

"Sir,

"On the 2d of May, 1790, I wrote you, requesting that my acknowledgments might be offered to the gentlemen who had presented an elegant barge to me, on my arrival in this city. As I am, at this moment, about commencing my journey to Virginia, and consequently shall have no further occasion for the use of the barge, I must now desire that you will return it, in my name, and with my best thanks, to the original proprietors: at the same time I shall be much obliged if you will have the goodness to add, on my part, that in accepting their beautiful present, I considered it a pledge of that real urbanity which, I am happy in declaring, I have experienced on every occasion during my residence among them; that I ardently wish every species of prosperity may be the constant portion of the respectable citizens of New-York; and that I shall always retain a grateful remembrance of the polite attention of the citizens in general, and of those in particular to whom the contents of this note are addressed.

"I am, with sentiments of regard and esteem, Sir, your most obedient and very humble servant.

"George Washington

"Thomas Randall Esq."

—Ibid., S 3, 1790, citing the N. Y. Mag.

Besides the president and Mrs. Washington, the travelling party comprised Eleanor Parke and George Washington Parke Custis, the two grand-children of Mrs. Washington, Maj. William Jackson, Thomas Nelson, two maids, four white and four black servants, and sixteen horses.—Baker, Washington after the Rev., 194–95, footnote. Aug. 30

In this month, General Gates and Mrs. Gates came north from Virginia "to take possession of their new and elegant seat on the banks of the East River, in the vicinity of the City of New-York."—Daily Adv., O 4, 1790. This place was "Rose Hill." See F 2. Henry Wansey, on May 23, 1794, refers to it as "a very pleasant country situation, about three miles from New York, on the borders of the Sound; from which you have a good view of Long Island, and of the shipping . . ."—Jour. of an Excursion to the U. S., 79. See, further, Ja 31, 1811. Sept. —

"The public were some time since informed in the Massachusetts Centinel, that a Bust of the President of the United States had been executed by Mr. Gullager [sic] of Boston, in Plaster of Paris; this statue, the first of the kind ever produced in the United States, is now in this city; several gentlemen of late have seen it, and it is pronounced a fine likeness . . . We are informed that the statue is open for inspection at Mrs. Loring's No. 4, Broad-Way, near the Bowling Green."—Gaz. of the U. S., 1790. It should be noted that Jean Antoine Houdon modeled a bust of Washington from life in 1785.—Hist. of the Centennial of Washington's Inauguration, ed. by Bowen, 542–43, citing Charles Henry Hart. Gülager painted a portrait of Washington in 1789.—Ibid. 1

The following notice is published: "All persons having demands against the Household of the President of the United States, are requested to exhibit them for settlement at his late Dwelling House in Broadway, before the 15th of September."—Daily Adv., S 1, 1790. "

"Estimates and Assessments for the paving of Maiden Lane and Nassau Street from the City Hall to Maiden Lane" are ratified by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 587. 2

A committee representing the St. Tammany Society, in a petition to the common council, state that, "having established an American Museum" (see Je), and having already received several donations therefor, they are at present "destitute of a proper place for depositing the same." They ask for "one of the rooms in the City Hall of this City, for their temporary accommodation." From original petition in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. The board grants the society "the use of the upper room in the city hall in front of the Library Room whenever the same shall be cleared by the officers of Congress."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 588. See S 10; O 11. In 1793, the museum was moved to the exchange (see O 15 and N 1, 1793). "

A petition from Benj. S. Judah to the common council for "a Grant of the Soil under the Water in front of his Land at Haerlem" is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 588. On Oct. 22, the committee reported that "the said Premisses consist of a Piece of Sedge or Thatch at Haerlem lying between high & low Water mark in Haerlem River in front of the upland there belonging to the Petitioner That the whole of the said River to low Water Mark on the Westchester side thereof is included in the City of New York as appears by the express Words of the Charter and all the Land between high & low Water mark on the Haerlem side of the said River being granted by the Charter to this Corporation and expressly excepted and reserved to them in their Settlement of the Line with the People of Haerlem, the Committee are of Opinion that the Land prayed for by the Petitioner belongs to this Corporation . . ." The board agrees with the committee that an accurate survey be prepared before making the grant.—Ibid., I: 606. On Oct. 29, Lawrence Benson entered a similar petition.—Ibid., I: 607. See, further, N 12. "

In explaining, in a report, why a petition for a grant of a water lot on the west side of Beekman Slip cannot be granted, the committee adds the following general observation: "

"The Committee wish to impress this Board with the importance of preserving every Slip as wide and Capacious as possible, The increase of the City is naturally followed by a proportionable increase of the Coasting trade, The harbours for which are at present scarcely sufficient for their accommodation and in a few Years they will be under the necessity of laying off in the Stream, or submitting to pay a heavy Wharfage to the proprietors of private Wharfs which must operate as a direct Tax upon the necessaries of Life.

"The Committee are therefore of opinion that it will be well in this Board, to countenance such measures which a Neighbourhood may adopt to extinguish the claim of preemption of individuals 1790 S 2 adjoining the public Slips, for the purpose of widening the same, . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 589.

" The common council approves a plan for regulating Chatham St., from Tryon Row to Frankfort St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 590.

" The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer to pay John Trumbull £186:13:4 for his portrait of Washington (see Jl 19 and 20).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 591.

A news item thus describes the portrait: ". . . a fine thing it is; designed & executed in his superior style of excellence . . . The whole piece is designed to convey to posterity an idea of The Man, at the most interesting period, when he finished his career of military glory—the evacuation of New York. It is therefore a warm, & highly ornamental business in every respect."—Columbian Centinel, S 11; Gaz. of the U. S., S 18, 1790. See Pl. 51, Vol. I.

In his Autobiography (1841), 164, Trumbull describes the astonishment of the Creek Indians on seeing the painting, on Washington's invitation, while in the room stood Washington himself in the uniform shown in the painting.

6 In a letter to Thos. Brand-Hollis, Mrs. John Adams again describes Richmond Hill (cf. S 27, 1789): "I have a situation here, which, for natural beauty, may vie with the most delicious spot I ever saw. It is a mile and a half distant from the city of New York. The home is situated upon an eminence; at an agreeable distance flows the noble Hudson, bearing upon its bosom the fruitful productions of the adjacent country. On my right hand, are fields beautifully variegated with grass and grain, to a great extent, like the valley of Honiton in Devonshire. Upon my left, the city opens to view, intercepted, here and there, by a rising ground, and an ancient oak. In front, beyond the Hudson, the Jersey shores present the exuberance of a rich, well-cultivated soil. The venerable oaks and broken ground, covered with wild shrubs, which surround me, give a natural beauty to the spot, which is truly enchanting. A lovely variety of birds serenade me morning and evening, rejoicing in their liberty and security; for I have, as much as possible, prohibited the grounds from invasion."—Letters of Mrs. Adams (ed. by C. F. Adams, 1848), 345–46. See Ja 16, 1794.

10 A committee of St. Tammany's Society, in a petition to the common council, states "That the said Society, instituted on a patriotic basis, hath so greatly increased in the number of its members, as to render any private accommodations for its meetings altogether insufficient." They also state that "they have opened a subscription to enable them to erect a building equal to their several uses, and from their great success have reason to anticipate a speedy completion of their intentions." They ask "permission to use the exchange-room weekly, as a temporary accommodation." —From the original petition, endorsed "granted," in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 592.

" On receiving information "that the Corporation of the Episcopal Church declined accepting of a Grant of the Triangular Piece of Ground at the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads on the Terms determined on by this Board on the 16th of April last" (q.v.), the common council orders "that the Treasurer demand and receive all the Rent due & which shall become due and also all Monies which shall have been received by any Persons for Rent due on the said Piece of Ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 592, 610. See, further, D 11 and 24.

" The common council adopts a plan for the regulation of Church St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 593.

13 Trinity vestry orders "that the Committee of Repairs, take such measures respecting the Flagging before St. Paul's & Trinity Church as they may think prudent."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" On the same day, "A letter from Mr. Lot Merkel dated the 13th of September 1790, written by order of the Corporation of the United German Lutheran Churches was read, thereupon resolved, that after the Lots on the South side of Rector Street are surveyed, the Line between this Corporation and the Lutheran Congregations, run along the Eastern side of the most Easterly of those Lots, & that Deeds be executed accordingly."—Ibid.

17 The common council adopts plans of the street committee for regulating the pavement in Broadway at Vesey St.; also for regulating Murray and Robinson Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 595–96.

" The common council pays the balance of £188:19:5, due "for erecting the Oil Store" (see Ja 29).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 596.

21 "The great and rapid improvements which have been effected in this city within a few years, observes a correspondent, have greatly added to its beauty, and attracted the attention and applause of strangers of every class—but as these improvements are confined chiefly to the court end, those families which reside in the retired streets find great cause of complaint." He makes particular reference to the streets "which lead from between the Friends meeting and the head of Queen-street, into the swamp, on both sides, particularly Rutgers' street," which he says are very dangerous on account of the water lying in the street.—N. Y. Jour., S 21, 1790. Sept. 21

" "Governor Clinton's picture [see Ag 10] is in hand, painted [by Trumbull] at the expense of the corporation; . . . The price for each [this and Washington's] is an hundred guineas."—N. Y. Jour., S 21, 1790. The exact sum paid for this portrait, on July 1, 1791 (q.v.), was the same as for Washington's (see S 2)—£186:13:4.

22 A long poem entitled "Picture of New-York—August 1790," alludes to various features of New York life. Reference is made to senators who > ". . . desert their seats,

> And walking forth as if for air,
> Strait to the anti-room repair,
> View Trumbull's forms sublimely blase,
> And feel the paint—with wondering gaze.
> Justly admire the glowing work,
> A lasting honor to New-York;
> An honor to our corporation,
> A future honor to our nation."

A foot-note explains that the ante-room is "The Room adjoining the Senate Chamber, where Mr. Trumbull paints his truly historical portraits of The President, and Governor Clinton."—Gaz. of the U. S., S 22, 1790. See also Jl 20, and S 18 and 21, 1790.

24 The common council ratifies estimates and assessments for paving Cherry St. from Dover to Catharine St., Princess St., Garden St., and Beekman St. from Gold to Nassau St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 597.

" The common council permits John Ackerman "to erect a Scale at his Door (provided it does not interrupt the passage in the Street) for the weighing of Flour brought to Market in Bags."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 597. Ackerman was a cartman, with an address in Church St.—City Directory, 1790.

29 A letter of this date from Philadelphia states that, "On the building to be appropriated to the use of the House of Representatives in this city, it was thought by some artists, that a dome covered with strong glass ought to be raised in imitation of the dome Cupola of your Federal Hall at New-York . . ."—Daily Adv., O 4, 1790.

" The common council agrees to a report of a plan for regulating and paving Mill St. "from the head at Duke Street to the present Custom House," and "from thence . . . to Broad Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 600–1.

—Daily Adv., D 11, 1790.

Oct. 2 Commissioners of Vermont and New York are in session at New York City to consider boundary claims. By Oct. 11, the subject was adjusted, Vermont being "dismembered from the state of New York," and the so-called New Hampshire grants acknowledged to be valid. "Thus the way is open for the ad-1790 O 2 mission of Vermont into the fœderal union."—N. Y. Mag. (O, 1790), 611.

5 The "annual review and inspection of the Light Horse, Artillery and Infantry of the militia of the city and county of New York" takes place. About 2,000 appear, under arms, under command of General Malcolm.—Gaz. of the U. S., O 6, 1790.

" Mayor Varick informs the common council "that the Gentlemen who had provided the Barge for the use of the President of the United States during his Residence in this City" have proposed "to present the said Barge to this Corporation." The board requests the mayor "to thank the Gentlemen for their Intention and to inform them that as this Board can have no use for the said Barge they decline an acceptance of her."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 602.

" The committee appointed on Sept. 10 reports a recommendation "That a foot Walk of sixteen feet broad be paved with Brick or flatt Stone along Chatham Row to the Northwest Corner of the Presbyterian Church Yard . . .

"That a foot Walk of sixteen feet broad be paved with Brick or flat Stone along the westerly side of Great George Street [Broadway] beginning at the Corner of Vesey Street at the intersection of the Kennel," and extending (the grade being specified) to the intersection of Barclay, Robinson, and Murray Sts., respectively.

"That a foot Walk of sixteen feet broad be paved with Brick or flat Stone ascending from the Corner of the Bridewell Fence to as great a Distance as the situation of the Ground and the convenience of the public Buildings will admit in order that a descent for as much of the Water from the Ground in front thereof as possible may be obtained . . ." The board orders that ordinances be prepared for such paving.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 602–3. Ordinances were adopted on Oct. 11.—Ibid., I: 603, 607.

These walks have been erroneously mentioned as the first sidewalks laid in New York (Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 335–36; Costello, Our Firemen, 51).—Cf. Je 11, 1672. For payments for the present work, see Jl 21, 1791. See, further, My 13, 1791.

" "The White House, at the corner of Whitehall and Pearl-streets," is advertised for rent, Cary Ludlow, No. 184 Water St., offering terms.—Daily Adv., O 5, 1790.

7 A lottery scheme is advertised, for the purpose of raising the residue of the sum granted by an act of the legislature on Feb. 18, 1790, to defray the expenses incurred by the corporation for repairing and enlarging the city hall.—N. Y. Packet, O 7, 1790.

8 "The trustees of the first Presbyterian Church in this city having finished a convenient building for a charity School at a considerable expence, propose to open the School in the course of next week."—Daily Adv., O 8, 1790. See also Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers (1813), 264–65.

11 John Pintard writes to Dr. Jeremy Belknap of Boston: "I am exceedingly indebted to you for your present of the Indian Bible, which came safe to hand. I shall deposit it with your permission and in your name in the American Museum [see Je], laterly instituted by the St. Tammany's Society in this city for the express purpose of collecting and preserving everything relating to the natural or political history of America. A small fund is appropriated to that purpose, and should the Society exist, this branch of it may arrive to something useful.

"I have not time to explain the principles of this Society, of which I am a member, further than that it is a political institution founded on a strong republican basis, whose democratic principles will serve in some measure to correct the aristocracy of our city."—Kilroe, St. Tammany, 135–36, citing Belknap Papers, III: 490. See Ap 6, 1791.

13 The last New York issue of the Gazette of the United States (see Ap 15, 1789) appears on this day. It was removed to Philadelphia, where publication was continued with the issue of Nov. 3.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431; Early Newspapers, II: 420.

14 The minutes of the Medical Society of the State of New York contain a plan for a dispensary "for the medical relief of the sick poor of this city." After the minutes, this query appears: "Might not the New York Hospital, now empty and useless, be advantageously converted into an Alms House, with cells for lunatics, the present Alms House into a Dispensary, the garden into a Botanic garden, and the funds of the Hospital appropriated for their support; at least, might not this be done for a few years, until adequate funds could be provided for the support of the Hospital as such?"—N. Y. Daily Adv., N 17, 1790; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 116. The action, on Feb. 1, 1791 (q. v.), of the governors of the hospital may have been an answer to this suggestion. See also Ja 4, 1791. Oct. 14

"The Medical Society having requested the use of a Room in the City Hall to meet in," the common council orders "that they be permitted to use the common council Chamber at such times as it shall not be wanted for the public use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 605. "

"A new fence ought to be made round the Burrying ground in Broadway."—Lutheran Min. (MS.). 19

The common council adds the recorder and others to "the Committee on the City Hall," and orders that it "report a Plan for the Bar in the Court Room."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 605. 22

It also orders "that the Students at Law be permitted to use the small Room adjoining the Common Council Chamber in the City Hall."—Ibid., I: 606.

The superintendent of the lamp department is ordered to "remove all the Lamp Oil to the Store House at the Bridewell [see F 19]."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 606. "

Samuel Fraunces has removed from Cortlandt to Broad St., into the house formerly occupied by the Widow Blaaw, near the Exchange.—Daily Adv., O 27, 1790. He moved to Broad St., he says, "through the advice of some of his friends," and there solicited the patronage of his brethren of the Tammany Society and of the respective lodges of the city. This, as far as we know, was the last place kept by Fraunces in New York.—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 343–44. 27

Lewis Ogden, executor of Anthony Rutgers, deceased, conveys to John Ireland a parcel of land in the West Ward, "whereon the said John Ireland now dwells."—Liber Deeds, XLVI: 396 (New York). This tract is the same which Anthony Rutgers, father of the decedent mentioned, purchased on Feb. 3, 1723 (q. v.), and which subsequently became known as Ranelagh Garden. See also Je 8, 1793. Nov. 2

A proposal, signed by Wm. Malcom, Dan. Denniston, H'y H. Kip, Jno. Kip, and Isaac van Vleck (see Je 23), "signifying their Desire to compleat their Affairs with this Corporation respecting the Lands commonly called the Negroe's burying Ground," and expressing their wish that a committee of the board settle the question of boundaries, "and upon such Settlement to receive and grant necessary Releases," is referred by the common council to the recorder and a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 609–10. 12

The Uranian Society petitions the common council for permission to use one of the rooms in the city hall one evening a week.—From original petition, in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. The board permits them "to occupy the lower Room in the Southeast Angle of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 610. "

The common council appoints a committee "to treat with the Corporation of the Dutch Church on the Subject of Widening Nassau Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 610. On Nov. 16, the committee reported to the board the following minute from the records of the consistory, dated Nov. 15: "The Committee [of the consistory], appointed to confer with a Committee from the Corporation of the City respecting the removal of the Fence of the New Church Yard and making Nassau Street in that place wider, reported that five feet might be given to the Street," provided the city pay for removing the fence; that the ground added to the street be "added as a flatt Pavement for foot Passengers," and that the church "shall have the Privilege of making Vaults under the said foot Way." The common council agrees to these proposals, "provided the Walk be nine feet wide in the whole & no more." A committee is given directions to have the fence removed accordingly.—Ibid., I: 612. "

The common council orders that grants be prepared to Benj. S. Judah (see S 2) and Lawrence Benson for the water lots in the Harlem River in front of their land, at a quit rent of 10s for every 100 ft., and on condition "that they leave a Street of 40 feet on the outward part of the Soil to be granted."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 610–11, 634. See, further, S 19, 1808. "

1790 Nov. 12 "Medals of the President of the United States, from one to two dollars, may be had at the Printing Office, Franklin's Head, Hanover Square."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., N 12, 1790.

14 Two large balloons are "let off" from the "heights of the Broadway." They cross the North River, and disappear in the direction of Philadelphia.—N. Y. Jour., N 15, 1790. It was later reported "that upwards of £700 was taken and lost at play, on the night of the grand gala last week at Balloon-House in the Broadway."—Ibid., N 22, 1790.

23 Attention is again called to the improvements being made in the city, which is "every day growing into symmetry, elegance and beauty." Her ancient limits are now extended a considerable distance into the Hudson, and "a mound, strongly compacted and solid as the earth itself, is nearly carried round the southwest point of the island;" when finished, it will effectually prevent encroachments of the water. The government house, "which is now nearly roofed, is a grand and noble structure, pleasing to the eye, and does no less honour to the taste of the architect than to that honourable body, whose public spirit furnished the means of thus elegantly accommodating the first magistrate of this opulent state." The city hall is "the finest building in the United States." —Daily Adv., N 23, 1790. See also L. M. R. K., III: 968. For a contemporary description of the government house, see 1791. See also Pls. 55-b and 66, Vol. I, and A. Pls. 10-a, b, and c, Vol. III.

26 The common council appoints a committee "to apply to the Gov^rs of the Hospital for the use of that Building as an Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 614. The governors of the hospital met at the Coffee-House on Dec. 13 and considered the question adversely, such use of the building being "foreign to the object of their Charter." This was reported to the common council on Dec. 24.—Ibid., I: 617.

Dec. — The charity school, whose house, in the rear of Trinity Church, was burned in September, 1776, was at this period kept in John St. The school-house belonging to the Dutch congregation was opposite "the Old Dutch Church." The school-house of the Presbyterians was a brick building, erected during the summer of 1790, in Nassau St., opposite "the New Dutch Church."—N. Y. Mag. (Dec., 1790), 727–28.

4 "The Board [Trinity vestry] agreed to the Sale of two Lots of Ground near the Air Furnace fronting to Greenwich Street, the one at fifty Pounds, and the other being a Corner Lot at seventy Pounds."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The air furnace stood on four lots, occupying a square 100 x 100 on the south-west corner of Park Place and Broadway, now covered by the Woolworth Building. It is shown on a survey (in Bancker Coll., N. Y. P. L.) made by Bancker for Abijah Hammond, April 2, 1795, of land on the north-west corner of Barclay St. and Broadway (also covered now by the Woolworth Building), where Hammond built the fine residence which he sold in 1799 to John C. Vandenheuvel.

"Resolved that a suitable Bell be provided for Trinity Church, and that the Committee of Repairs procure the same at the most reasonable Rate."—Ibid.

"Ordered that the School Committee ascertain the Expence of building a suitable House for the Charity School." At the next meeting consideration was "deferred."—Ibid.

6 The third session of the first congress begins at Philadelphia.—Jour. of House of Rep. (1790–91), 3. This was the first session to be held in that city.

11 Isaac Varian having petitioned to be allowed "to hire the triangular Piece of Ground at the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads" (see S 10), the common council orders that the city treasurer "let out the said Piece of Ground from Year to Year for the best Rent he can obtain for the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 615. For earlier references to this ground, see Jl 22 and D 12, 1771; Ja 31 and Je 26, 1772; N 1, 1786; Mr 12 and Ag 20, 1788; Je 24 and Jl 27, 1789; F 26, Ap 16, and S 10, 1790. See, further, D 24. In 1794 (q.v., Ag 4), it became a potters' field.

" The common council, having taken into consideration the accounts of the assessors "for their Services in executing the Law for taking a Census of the Electors and Inhabitants in this State," decides that the assessors of the Harlem Division of the Out Ward be allowed 14s for every 100 inhabitants, those of the Bowery Division 12s, and those of each of the other six wards 10s. Warrants are then issued, on the basis of the number of inhabitants, as follows:

	No. of inhabitants
South Ward	1,756	£8:15:–
Dock "	1,854	9: 5:–
East "	3,622	18: 2:–
West "	6,054	30: 5:–
North "	4,596	23:—:–
Montgomerie "	6,702	33:10:–
Bowery Div.	4,819	28:18:6
Haerlem "	503	3:10:–
	29,906	£155: 5:6

Dec. 11 —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 615–16.

12 Charity sermons are to be preached in the old and the new Dutch churches, when collections will be taken for the benefit of the charity school. "The ruin of the public buildings and the great injuries sustained in the late war, have prevented the Dutch Church from reviving this school until the last year."—Daily Adv., D 10, 1790.

13 Alexander Hamilton makes a report to the house of representatives upon the nature, importance, and advantages of national banks, and submits a plan for one.—Hamilton's Works (N. Y., 1810), I: 59–110.

14 The streets of New York have recently "undergone a thorough and very necessary repair." Complaint is made that "the parts of the streets, which are particularly appropriated for the convenience of foot passengers," are incumbered "with snow, wood, hay, casks, and even carts, and many other articles which are daily thrown on them by the occupiers of houses and stables."—N. Y. Jour., D 20, 1790.

24 The city treasurer reports that the amount of rent received "for the Triangular Piece of Ground near the three Mile Stone" (see S 10) is £54:8:6. It is ordered that the mayor issue his warrant to pay this amount to Hannah Baker (see Ap 16), and that she be released from her debt of £8:10 due to the city for rent of a lot in Colden St.; this to be "full compensation for the Improvements made on the same Piece of Ground by her late Husband." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 618. For the appropriation of this ground as a potters' field, see Ag 4, 1794.

" There were two companies of city watchmen at this time, under Alex. Lamb and Jos. Culbertson respectively, as captains. Each company received £47:19 for seven nights' service.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 619, 623, 624, 625, 628, 631. In Jan., 1791, Capt. Culbertson "and the eight other Watchmen his Assistants" were complimented by the foreman of the grand jury for putting to flight an armed mob, four times their number, and arresting six of them.—Ibid., I: 625–26. Capt. Culbertson received injuries in the riot.—Ibid., I: 695.

27 "The sales of stocks at Messieurs Pintard and Bleecker's auction on Friday, were very dull."—N. Y. Jour., D 27, 1790. Stock quotations were published at this time. On Dec. 23, the "Prices of American Stocks, last Evening" were given as:

"6 per cent. stock, 88 per cent.
"3 per cent. do. 45 do.
"Deferred 6 per cent. 41½ do."

—Ibid., D 23, 1790.

31 A city ordinance is passed for the removal of snow from the streets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 619. This appears to be the first city ordinance for this purpose.

1791

— In this year, Great Britain sent George Hammond as its first minister to the United States.—Winsor, VII: 462.

— In this year, Thomas Paine published in Baltimore the first part of Rights of Man: Being an Answer to Mr. Burke's Attack on the French Revolution. It was printed in New York in 1792, in which year the second part was published.—See Evans, 23659, 24650, 24651.

— In this year, the Provident Society of the City of New York was instituted for the benefit of sick or superannuated members, and the widows and orphans of deceased members. From Jan., 1804, to Jan., 1805, $964 was disbursed in benefits, exclusive of the expenses of operating the association.—Daily Adv., F 7, 1805. It was incorporated Feb. 16, 1805.—The Picture of N. Y. or The Traveller's Guide (1807), 104.

— In this year, Garrett Abeel wrote a description of "The Government House," from which the following extract is taken: "The 1791 door leads you into a large, elegant hall, the whole height of the — building, and is — feet by — feet —. It is on a level with the second story; (there) is a gallery around it by which a communication is kept up with all the upper rooms, which are large and convenient. A large stairs leads also to them at the side of the hall; the building having three sides of an eight square (an octagon) in the rear, gives room to enlarge, and to lighten two large rooms, one on each floor. Those, and indeed, all the rooms in the house, command a most extensive and delightful prospect some into the East River, some quite to the Narrows; others up the North River." —"Garrett Abeel's Records" in Year Book of the Holland Soc. of N. Y. (1916), 63–64. See also Pls. 55-b and 66, Vol. I, and A. Pls. 10-a, b, and c, Vol. III. For the commissioners' report on the Government House, see Mr 1.

— From this time forward, building operations in New York were very active. The large number of public buildings and churches erected between 1791 and 1807 is shown in the Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 574–75.

— A very rare view of Wall Street, Trinity Church, and the City Hall, drawn and engraved by Cornelius Tiebout, as it appeared at this time (1791–93), is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 57.

Jan. The dispensary (see O 14, 1790) is organized by a meeting of 4 subscribers at the city hall, who elect 12 managers for the ensuing year.—Daily Adv., Ja 5, 1791. For its location, see F 7.

6 The members of the German Society of the State of New York celebrate their anniversary festival. They meet "at their Hall, in King-George-street," then proceed to the Lutheran Church, where an oration is delivered by William Wilmerding in German and one by Jacob Morton in English.—N. Y. Mag. (1791), 58.

8 A country estate named "Sans Souci" is advertised for sale. It contains 42 acres, lies "six miles from the city, three miles from Harlem, about 300 yards from the post road to Albany and Boston, and is bounded in front by the East River." This was the section of the city afterwards called Yorkville. The house and grounds described in the advertisement are the typical "country seat" of the period. "The Dwelling-House is situated nearly in the center of the lot, on an eminence about 200 yards from the river, and has in full view, Long-Island, Blackwell's-Island, Barren-Island, the Ferry to Long Island and Hell-Gate, with the two small Islands near it. There is seldom an hour in the twenty-four that from ten to thirty vessels do not pass to, and from New York, which with Morrissania, Randal's-Island, the North-River, and the Jersey shore, can also be seen from the top of the house. The Dwelling-House is two stories high, 53 feet front, and 40 feet deep; it contains eight rooms, four on each floor, with a spacious entry both below and above, a neat mahogany stair-case, and a very good dry cellar under the whole, . . .; in the front of the house is a handsome piazza, and in the rear a portico; the house has two wings to it. The one on the right contains a good kitchen, greenhouse and bath, below and above, four rooms for servants, and an aviry, made in such a manner as to give the birds the heat of the green room in winter. The wing on the left, contains a large room intended for a library, and two convenient small rooms below, the upper part is unfinished, but can at a small expence be made into a billard room or rooms for servants; near the wing on the right, is a compleat and well finished dairy, large enough to hold the milk of 20 cows, and made so as to be sufficiently warm in winter, and cool in summer, and to receive through it, during the warm season, (from a pump) extraordinary fine water, springing from a rock; [other buildings and features are described]. A number of great and conspicuous advantages attend this elegant seat, fish and lobsters may be caught within a few rods of the house, which with oysters and other shell fish, may be preserved near the wharf, for months, without spoiling; and here the sportsman may also enjoy his gun and his dog, as quails, cocks, English snipes and rabbits, are always to be found when in season. The produce of the place can be taken to market by water, and manure from the city brought back, and a speaking trumpet, with ready money, will always procure firewood, at a much less price than it can be bought for at New-York. . . . apply to Mr. Anthony L. Bleecker, No. 208, Water-street." —Daily Adv., Ja 8, 1791.

The owner's name does not appear in the advertisement, but the description applies perfectly to the farm owned by the two brothers Abraham and William Beekman, whose house stood in the block between 63d and 64th Sts., Ave. A and First Ave., 100 feet west of Ave. A.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Title, I: 226. Thus, the deeds to the Beekman property show that it contained 45 acres, more or less, of which 30 were east of the Eastern Post Road, and 15 to the west. Randel's Map of the Farms (Pl. 86, Vol. III) shows the house without wings; these, however, appear on Map No. 205 T, in N. Y. register's office. Jan. 8

After Abraham Beekman's death, in Oct. 1789, the family wanted to sell the property, hence the advertisement of 1791. But they did not do so, in spite of all its advantages. They still owned it jointly in 1809.—Liber Deeds, LXXXIII: 189 (New York).

Nowhere else can we find a place that fits the description in the advertisement. The Gracie house is much too far from the road, much too near the river, and too far from town. The Flower Hospital now covers the site,—which must be distinguished from that of the Jas. Beekman place, which stood at the n. w. cor. of First Ave. and 51st St.—L. M. R. K., III: 948.

Trinity vestry orders "that the Committee of Pews for S^{t} Paul's Church, provide a proper Pew for the Students of Columbia College." It is also ordered "that all further Measures respecting the Bell to be procured for Trinity Church be suspended until M^{r} Laight can obtain Information from England upon the Subject of a Ring of Bells."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Regarding the bells, see Mr 14, Je 13, 1791, and F 8, 1796. 10

A broadside is printed at New York, by Childs and Swaine, state printers, which is the first published census of the state of New York. It is attested this day by Lewis A. Scott, secretary of state, as "truly made from the Returns delivered into this Office in pursuance of an Act, entitled, 'An Act for taking a Census of the Electors and Inhabitants in this State.' Passed the 18th February, 1790." It shows the city and county of New York to have 13,330 males, 14,429 females, and 2,263 slaves,—a total of 30,022 inhabitants. Of these it lists the number of "Freeholders of 100l.," "Freeholders of 20l.," and "Tenants of 40s." The same sort of tabulation is presented for other counties, except Clinton, and Ontario. The total population of the state is 319,627.—From original broadside, in N. Y. P. L. The city, in 1786, contained 23,614 souls; there had been, therefore, an increase of 6,408 in five years.—Columbian Centinel (Boston), Ja 12, 1791. (Other census figures presented in this newspaper, being in error, are partially revised in its issue of Ja 13.) Cf. O 24, 1791. 11

" A citizen, in a letter to the press, calls attention to the need of equalizing the wards of the city, which have retained their size and form since the passage of the Montgomerie charter, in 1730.—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ja 11, 1791. See Ja 21.

The common council approves the treasurer's "Estimate of Monies necessary for defraying the public Expences of this City & County the present Year amounting to £11683:12," and adopts a petition to the legislature for permission to raise £12,000 "for the ordinary conting^{t} Expences," and an additional £4,000 "for compleating the Wharf & other Improvements at the Battery and about the Gov^{t} House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 620. Cf. D 10, 1788; Ja 15, 1790. See also Jl 1, 1791. 17

On Feb. 16, the assembly having authorised the city to raise £3,000 by taxation for this purpose (Assemb. Jour., 1791, 14th sess., p. 65), this sum was voted by the common council on July 1. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 653. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 419.

" The common council orders "that the Freedom of this City be presented to the hon^{ble} Horatio Gates Esq^{r} Major General in the Army of the United States of America."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 621. On Feb. 25, the board approved the draft of this, and ordered that it be engrossed, signed, sealed, and presented.—Ibid., I: 628. The original certificate of his "freedom" is preserved in the Emmet Coll., N. Y. P. L. See, further, My 2.

" The common council resolves to apply to the legislature for "Power to regulate the Hackney Coaches and to lay a Tax on Wheel Carriages & Horses within this City and that the Monies arising therefrom be appropriated towards the Repairing of the Roads & Streets in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 621. See F 5.

Payment of £25 is made by the common council "towards the Walks in front of the Alms H^{s} Goal & Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 623. See O 5, 1790. 21

" The mayor lays before the common council a copy of a petition made by some of the inhabitants of the city to the legislature, "praying that the Wards in this City might be equalized." The 1791 Jan. 21 board resolves that such equalization is necessary and proper, and appoints a committee to confer with the assembly committee "on the Mode of equalizing the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 623–24; see also Vol. I, p. 359. An act for this purpose was passed on Feb. 28 (q.v.).

28 Announcement is made that the Society of the Cincinnati will meet at Corre's Hotel (69 Broadway).—Daily Adv., Ja 28, 1791. The building is shown and described on Pl. 68-a (Vol. I, p. 450). Under Corre and his successor, John Lovett, who became proprietor in the spring of 1794 (q.v., May 7), this small hotel became a favourite meeting-place of a number of societies, and of military, financial, and political bodies.—See Daily Adv., F 21, 1791; N. Y. Jour. & Pol. Reg., F 18, 27, Mr 17, Jl 25, Ag 23, 1792; Daily Adv., Jl 16, 1792; Diary, O 10, 1793; Daily Adv., Mr 10, 1794; Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., Ap 22, 1797. See F 22.

Feb. 1 By order of the governors of the New York Hospital, public notice is given "That they have made preparations for the reception and entertainment of patients," and that on this day "the physicians and surgeons will attend for the admission of sick."—N. Y. Daily Adv., Ja 28, 1791; Account N. Y. Hosp., 4; descrip. of Pl. 88, III: 571.

3 With this issue The New-York Packet is changed from a triweekly (see My 5, 1789) to a weekly.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 474; Early Newspapers, II: 427. The paper was discontinued on Ja 26, 1792 (q.v.).

5 The assembly passes "An Act to invest the Mayor, Alderman, and Commonalty of the City of New-York with power to license and regulate the fees of hackney coaches, and to lay a tax on all wheel carriages and horses within the City and County of New-York."—Assemb. Jour. (Childs & Swaine ed.), 47. This bill was reconsidered and negatived by the assembly on Feb. 25.—Ibid., 81. That such a law was needed appears clear from the common council's appeal of Jan. 17 (q.v.), and from an advertisement of Mr 18, 1794 (q.v.). See also My 23, 1788.

7 A notice for a meeting of the managers of the newly established dispensary (see Ja 4) shows that the "Dispensary Room" was situated at "the corner of Nassau and Beekman streets."—Daily Adv., F 7, 1791. See also F 24, and Jl 1.

22 The Society of the Cincinnati meets at Corre's Hotel to commemorate Washington's birthday. The Society of St. Tammany sent a message of congratulation to the Cincinnati "by the father of the council of Sachems, and brothers Melancton Smith, and John Pintard." An "elegant transparent portrait of the President General" had been erected in front of the building by Col. Bauman. The Tammany Society assembled "in their wigwam, at the Exchange."—N. Y. Mag. (1791), 118.

" "Alexander Robertson, Esq; merchant in this city, has made a donation to the Scotch Presbyterian church of New-York (under the charge of the Rev. Dr. John Mason) of two lots of ground in King street, . . . on which is to be erected a free school for the poor children of that congregation; all at his own private expence, estimated in the whole to be in value 2000l. . . . Mr. George Lindsey, stone-cutter, has also given a sufficiency of hewn stone to decorate the building, estimated worth 100l."—N. Y. Mag. (1791), 119.

24 The newly established dispensary for the poor is set in motion. The following notice is published: "The Subscribers being appointed a committee by the managers of the Dispensary, to make the necessary arrangements for setting the institution in motion, give notice that a suitable house for the Dispensary is provided at the corner of Beekman and Nassau streets (see F 7) where the Physicians and Surgeons will attend Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from one to two."—N. Y. Packet, F 24, 1791. See, further, Jl 1.

25 The common council orders that the city treasurer let out Bedlow's Island on the best terms he can get, reserving the privilege to use it as "a Pest Island."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 627. On March 11, the board appointed a committee to inquire into the condition of the buildings there, and report the terms at which the island should be let.—Ibid., I: 629, 642, 643. See My 30.

28 The legislature passes an act to change the boundaries of the seven wards of the city, making them equal in size (see Ja 11 and 21), and giving them numerical names, First, Second, etc. One of the landmarks mentioned in describing the boundaries of the Sixth Ward is the "Stone Arch built across the Stream running out of the Fresh Water Pond."—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 18 (Greenleaf, II: 349); Daily Adv., Ap 2, 1791; Man Com. Coun. (1852), 179. There is an undated survey of the seven wards, on which the "Arch-bridge" appears by name, in the Bancker Coll., N. Y. P. L. (Misc. box). See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 557. The new ward divisions are shown by dotted lines on the Taylor-Roberts Plan of 1797, Pl. 64, Vol. I. Feb. 28

Mar. 1 The commissioners for building the government house report to the assembly that £7,550:8:6 of the appropriation has been spent on the work, and that a balance of £449:11:5¾ remains. They also report that an additional £2,500 will be needed "to compleat the government house, together with a coach-house, stables, pumps, wells, and necessary offices, and for the purpose of erecting stone walls to support the ground and a handsome fence to enclose the same, . . . in proper style." The building "will be finished May next, so that in the autumn it will be sufficiently dry and fit to be occupied."—Daily Adv., Mr 3, 1791. On March 22 (q.v.), the commissioners were granted the money they asked for.

3 Congress resolves that a mint be established.—Senate Jour. (1790–91), 164, 174. See Ap 2, 1792.

9 A society for the promotion of agriculture, manufactures, and arts has recently been instituted, and the following officers elected: Robert R. Livingston, president; John Sloss Hobart, vice-president; John McKesson and Samuel L. Mitchill, secretaries; and Alexander Macomb, treasurer.—Gaz. of the U. S., Mr 9, 1791.

11 The common council orders that an ordinance be prepared "to permit the Cartmen to use Ironshod Wheels." These had been forbidden in 1784 (q.v., Je 2).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 629.

" The streets running from Broadway to Greenwich St., not already regulated, have been surveyed, and the common council now adopts plans and specifications for regulating Rector, Thames, Little Queen, "Lombard" (Lumber), Temple, Crown, Warren, Chambers, Barclay, and Gold Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 629–31.

"Lombard" was part of the present Church St.—L. M. R. K., III: 1005. Regarding Crown St., see Je 13, 1771; Ap 21, 1794. Chambers St. was one of the streets ceded to the city by Trinity Corporation on Sept. 18, 1761 (q.v.).—M. C. C., VI: 263. It was first shown, laid out and named, between Broadway and Greenwich St., on the Ratzer Map of 1767, Pl. 41, Vol. I. On June 27, 1796 (q.v.), plans were adopted for extending the street east of Broadway as far as George St. On June 10, 1811, the common council ordered that it be opened only to Chatham St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 625. On July 1, 1860, it was opened from Chatham St. to James Slip.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVIII: 175, 194, 198. This last extension was known for many years as New Chambers St.

" The quantity of bills issued by order of the common council (see Ag 10, 1790), and put into circulation as a substitute for small Change, being "unequal to the purpose intended," the board resolves "that a further Sum to the amount of £1000—in Notes of like denomination with the former be printed," and that the same committee that directed the printing of the former execute the present order.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 631. On July 15, Gaine was paid £20 for printing this issue.—Ibid., I: 658. On Oct. 4, another issue, to the amount of £1,000, was ordered, and a new committee appointed to supervise it.—Ibid., I: 674. On Feb. 6, 1792, the committee was enlarged (ibid., I: 697), and at the same time Gaine was paid £73:12 for printing the notes (ibid., I: 698). For the committee's further report, see F 17, 1792.

12 Trinity vestry directs its committee of leases "to examine and report what Part of the Land belonging to this Corporation ought to be reserved for a Church, Parsonage, School-House, Burial Ground and other public Purposes."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The need was supplied, evidently, through Mr. Stuyvesant's offer, on Ap. 9, 1792 (q.v.), of his land on which to build a church. The subject of building a charity school was before the vestry on March 11, 1793 (q.v.).

The vestry also orders on this day that the committee of leases "report a Plan for widening the Streets laid out in the Church Farm to the Northward of Warren Street and making such other Improvements in that Part of the Church Estate as may conduce to the Interest of Corporation and the Ornament of the City."—Ibid.

By the President of the United States of America.
A Proclamation.

Whereas it is the duty of all Nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey his will, to be grateful for his benefits, and humbly to implore his protection and favor — and whereas both Houses of Congress have by their joint Committee requested me to recommend to the People of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.

Now therefore I do recommend and assign Thursday the 26th day of November next to be devoted by the People of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be — That we may then all unite in rendering unto him our sincere and humble thanks — for his kind care and protection of the People of this country previous to their becoming a Nation — for the signal and manifold mercies, and the favorable interpositions of his providence which we experienced in the course and conclusion of the late war — for the great degree of tranquillity, union, and plenty which we have since enjoyed — for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national One now lately instituted — for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and in general for all the great and various favors which he hath been pleased to confer upon us.

And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions — to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually — to render our national government a blessing to all the People by constantly being a government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and impartially executed and obeyed — to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shewn kindness unto us) and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord — To promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us — and generally to grant unto all Mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best.

Given under my hand at the City of New York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789.

Go: Washington

THE FIRST FEDERAL THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION; SIGNED BY WASHINGTON IN NEW YORK, OCT. 3, 1789. SEE P. 1255.

1791 Mr 14 Use of a Bell for Trinity Church," it is accepted with thanks, and is to be returned "whenever demanded."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

18 The legislature passes an act empowering the corporation of New York City to raise £8,000 for the support of the poor and to defray other contingent expenses; also £300 for the "improvements at the battery, and in front of the government house," and £4,000 for paying watchmen, maintaining lamps, etc.—Laws of N. Y., 14th sess., chap. 34.

21 The Bank of New York is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 37 (Greenleaf, II: 360). It had been organized in 1784 (q.v.).

22 The legislature appropriates £2,500 for the use of the commissioners for building the government house (see Mr 1), and also authorises the payment to them of £800, "to be laid out in furniture, to belong to and be used in the said government house."—Laws of N. Y., 14th sess., chap. 45. For a list of the furniture bought for this building, see 1792.

24 The legislature passes "An Act to enable the Regents of the University to establish a College of Physicians and Surgeons within this State."—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 45 (Greenleaf, II: 371). The college was chartered in 1807 (q.v.).

" The legislature passes "An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Fires, and to regulate certain Buildings in the City of New-York." All houses of three or more storeys are to be built of brick or stone and covered with slate or tile, except the flat roof. Any building already erected may be new roofed with boards or shingles; and wooden buildings may be erected on new-made ground. Churches, as well as other public buildings, may be covered with boards or shingles.—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 46 (Greenleaf, II: 372). See also Costello, Our Firemen (1887), 52. For examples of the application of this law, see My 7, 1792.

" The legislature passes "An Act for erecting a Building for the Preservation of the Records and Public Papers of this State." In "their present place of keeping," these records and papers are "in great danger of being destroyed by fire." The act provides "That Alexander Macomb, John Pintard and Lewis Allaire Scott" be authorised "to erect, on the lot where the secretary of the state now resides, a building of such construction as to be proof against fire," both for preserving such records, etc., and for an office for the Secretary of state. The expense shall not exceed £375.—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 48 (Greenleaf, II: 373). The place where the records had been kept was undoubtedly the "old secretary's office on Whitehall Street," referred to in the law of March 16, 1790, for improving the Battery.—Laws of N. Y. (1790), chap. 25.

29 John Pintard, merchant; Joseph Mallenbrey, surgeon, and William Collet, coachmaker, are admitted and sworn as freemen of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 632.

" The common council grants a petition of Peter Goelet "for leave to erect a Stairs at the end of his Wharf at the Exchange Slip for the accommodation of Market Boats."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 632.

" "The Street Committee reports that in their Opinion the Bowling Green in front of the Gov^{t} House ought to be preserved and that it will be necessary the Fence should be raised in proportion to the Regulation of Broadway from the present finished Pavement to Whitehall Street & the Battery." The common council orders that the committee advertise for bids for this purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 633.

" The common council orders "That the public Lamps in this City (see D 3, 1788) be placed in the Walks along the Edge of the Kennels in all the Streets where the Walks are in the Judgment of the Street Committee of sufficient Breadth and in those Streets where the Walks are not of sufficient Breadth that the Lamps be fixed to the Houses to extend as far over the Walks as possible. And that the Lamps be placed at the Distance of 114 feet apart measuring from the one Lamp across the Street to the other."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 633.

" The common council orders "that the Inhabitants of Dey Street be permitted to make the Walks in that Street of the Breadth of nine feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 634.

30 Subscribers to "the Tontine" meet at the Coffee House. John Broome presides on request. A committee, consisting of John Broome, Gulian Ver Plank, John Delafield, William Laight, and John Watts, is appointed "to carry into effect the plan for building a coffee-house on Tontine." The committee is instructed to "immediately proceed to the purchase of a proper lot or lots of ground whereon to build the said coffee-house; and to erect the same in the most expeditious and economical manner, at the same time having in view convenience and elegance." It is to consult counsel "on the best mode of vesting the property in trustees, and of conveying the same to the subscribers, so as to answer the intent of the subscription;" and it is given power "to receive subscriptions for so many more shares as may be necessary to complete the building." Subscribers not completing their subscriptions within two months after being requested so to do "shall forfeit what shall have been paid, to the use of the subscribers."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 1, 1791. See D 1. Mar. 30

With the De Peyster papers at the N. Y. Hist. Soc. are various papers relating to the Tontine Coffee House. Those before 1800 are as follows:

Paper containing "Subscribers of Shares of the Tontine Coffee House," 1794–1798.

"An account of the New York Tontine, communicated to Samuel L. Mitchill Esq^{r} MD. Professor of Natural History &c." (Tells of its foundation in 1794, etc.)

Another list of subscribers, 1795–1815.

A printed copy of "The Constitution," etc. (N. Y., 1796).—See Je 4, 1794.

Apr. 5 The common council orders "that the lower Room in the S^{o}. East Angle of the City Hall be assigned for the use of the Magistrates."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 635.

6 John Pintard writes to the president of the Mass. Hist. Soc.: "I wish to hear whether your Antiquarian Society is commencing, or its prospects. An account will be given in some future magazine of our Tammany Society. (We have lately uncanonized him.) This being a strong national society, I engrafted an antiquarian scheme of a museum upon it. It makes a small progress, with a small fund, and may possibly succeed. We have got a tolerable collection of Pamphlets, mostly modern, with some History . . . If your society succeeds we will open a regular correspondence and interchange communications, duplicates, etc. . . .

"Our society proposes celebrating the completion of the third century of the discovery of America, on the 12th of October, 1792 [q.v.], with some peculiar mark of respect to the memory of Columbus, who is our patron. We think besides a procession and oration —for we have annual orations—of erecting a column to his memory. I wish to know, if possible, the dimensions and cast of your monument on Beacon Hill, to guide our calculations."—Kilroe, St. Tammany, 136–37.

15 The corner-stone of the city of Washington (see Jl 16, 1790) is laid. An account of the ceremonies appeared in the N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ap 29, 1791. See O 17, 1791. Cf. O 13, 1792, and S 18, 1793.

23 The common council orders "that the Committee on the Improvements at the Battery proceed to direct the clearing away the Ground & Rubbish about the Government House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 637. See My 30.

27 In a poem entitled "The Morning Walker," reference is made to "De Lancey's deserted mansion," where the rambler

> "A moment halts to view the ruin'd dome
> Whose doors are left without a lock, or key,
> While saucy winds, and dashing rains intrude
> Where once Dalinda at her toilet sat:
> Deserted rooms! that now can scarcely lodge
> Secure from storms, the beggar and her brat."

—Daily Adv., Ap 27, 1791. This was James de Lancey's residence, in the block bounded now by The Bowery, De Lancey, Rivington, and Chrystie Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 949; also F 3, 1786. By April 7, 1795 (q.v.), the house had been removed.

May 2 The mayor reports to the common council that he has presented to Maj.-Gen. Gates the certificate of the freedom of the city (see Ja 17).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 639.

" A committee appointed by the trustees of Columbia College to prepare a plan for teaching medicine in the college reports that it will be "proper at present to have Lectures in Chemistry, Anatomy and the Practice of Physic read in Columbia College," and recommends that "Dr. Romayne (who already has a very considerable number of pupils under his tuition and has been in the habit of teaching) be nominated Lecturer in those Branches." Romayne

1791 was appointed on May 5.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904

" Samuel Bauman informs the public that "The Post-Office is removed from Broadway [see O 5, 1789] to No 51 Wall-street, the corner of Smith-street. As the Post-Office is now removed to a more central part of the city, and for the conveniency of the mercantile business: It is therefore most earnestly requested, that masters of vessels will lodge such letters as they may have in charge at the Post-Office, on their arrival in this port . . . I am sorry to say that this has hitherto not been pursued in New York, from a custom no w[h]ere practised but here, for masters of vessels to leave their letters at the Coffee-House, without any further concern about their fate. This practice no doubt benefits Some, but injures others."—Daily Adv., My 2, 1791.

9 It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that a Lease for Lots N° 770. 771. 772. 773 of the Church Farm be granted to the Proprietors of the Air Furnace for twenty on [one] Years at the yearly Rent of five Dollars for each Lot."—Trin. Min. (MS.). These lot numbers are not found on any map of the church lands in the records of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co. The four lots on which the air furnace stood, as shown on the Bancker survey of 1795 (described in item of D 4, 1790), were Nos. 148–51, covering a square 100 x 100 on the south-west corner of Broadway and Park Pl.

It is also ordered by the vestry "that the Committee of Repairs report a proper Plan of a Fence for inclosing Trinity Church, and an Estimate of the probable Expence."—Ibid.

12 The anniversary of the Tammany Society is celebrated with an elaborate procession from the "great Wigwam" to the Brick Church in Chapel St., where an oration is delivered by Josiah Ogden Hoffman. From the church the cortège proceeded to "Campbell's grounds, where upwards of two hundred people partook of a repast." The "Cap of Liberty" had the place of honour at the head of the procession.—N. Y. Packet, My 19, 1791; N. Y. Jour., My 14, 1791. The "great Wigwam" was in Broad St.—Ibid., My 25, 1791. For later celebrations of the Tammany anniversary, see the newspapers of the day.

" Matthew Adam advertises a "Bleach-field & Thread Manufactory," which has been established by Henry Rutgers "near his dwelling-house at the ship-yards," and which Adam has leased.—Daily Adv., My 12, 1791.

13 "The side Walks of several of the Streets in this City being incompleat" (see O 5, 1790), the common council orders "that the Proprietors of the Lots opposite to the said Walks be notified to have the same compleated & laid with flatt Stones or Bricks without delay viz^{t} Both side of Wall Street from Hanover Square to front Street—Certain Parts of Front Street & Water Street—Both sides of the Street leading from Great Dock Street into the old Slip. the East side of the Street leading from Queens Street into Beekmans Slip And certain Parts of Water Street between the old Slip & Wall Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 641.

" The common council agrees upon a regulation of Whitehall St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 641.

" The common council decides to purchase the right of the representatives of the late Anthony Rutgers to the Fresh Water Pond for £150, and to negotiate with their agent as to the price "of the Slip of Meadow on the North West side of the Pond."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 642. The release from the Rutgers representatives was presented to the common council on Sept. 29.—Ibid., I: 673. See Ap 6 and D 31, 1733.

14 John Harrison alters the title of his paper to The Weekly Museum.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 507; Early Newspapers, II: 420.

20 The common council passes an ordinance to supplement "A Law to regulate the paving and keeping in Repair the Streets & for preventing Nuisances within this City." It is "for removing out of the Streets Trees & to prevent the erection of Bow-Windows and the placing or hanging of Goods out for Sale at the front of the Houses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 643.

On May 28, the first part of this brought a published protest in the form of a petition to the corporation. This stated that the "principal inducement" to remove the trees "is the complaints of some who seek for beauty in naked walls and an extensive view along the front of houses;" but the petitioners "look forward with impatience to the day when the liberal contributions of the citizens which the Legislature has submitted to your disposition shall afford them cool and shaded walks and they had fondly hoped that under your direction, the great avenues to the battery to wit Broadway, Wall, Broad and Beaver streets, would have been so planted that they might have reached that agreeable retreat without being exposed to all the inconveniences of summer sun . . ."—Daily Adv., My 28, 1791. On May 30, the common council acted on the petition by suspending the operation of the law, "as far [as] it respects Trees which do not obstruct any of the foot Walks," until Dec. 1.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 648. For an example of special permit to plant trees in Broadway, see Ap 22, 1793. May 20

" The common council settles the claim of Dr. Thomas Jones for compensation for loss in his lots on the north side of Barclay St. due to the widening of the street. The board agrees to pay the trustees of the college £157:11:2, and Dr. Jones £81:2:4, on their releasing to the city "such part of the said Lots as hath been thrown into the Street to widen the same for the public use as a Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 644. See S 9, 1789; Ap 16, 1790. The college release was presented to the common council on Aug. 12.—Ibid., I: 664.

21 The following announcement regarding the Tammany "American Museum" appears: "The Tammany Society has established a Museum for the purpose of collecting and preserving every thing relating to the history of America [see Je 1790]; likewise, every American production of nature or art, for which purpose, part of the funds of the Society are appropriated. The success of this institution, however, must, in a great measure, depend on the voluntary contributions of a generous public, and the present collection, has chiefly arisen from this source. Although quite in its infancy, the Museum already contains many articles in the historical and natural lines, highly deserving the notice of the curious. As almost every individual possesses some article, which in itself is of little value, but in a collective view, becomes of real importance. The patrons of this institution, solicit the attention of their fellow-citizens to the Museum, and request their aid towards forming a collection, which promises fair to become an object of public utility. The articles and names of the generous donors are carefully registered in a book kept for the purpose, the contents of which will be published at some future season. Everything, and from whatever clime, will be acceptable; for although the funds of the Society are confined to American productions, the doors of the Museum are, nevertheless, open to voluntary contributions, from every quarter. The corporation of this city ever disposed to encourage patriotic undertakings, and favorably impress'd with the importance of the present, has generously granted a room in the City-Hall [see S 2, 1790], on a range with the Library, for the use of the Museum, which is at present opened gratis, every Tuesday and Friday afternoons, for the gratification of public curiosity. Any article sent there on those days, or to M^{r} John Pintard, No. 57 King-street, will be thankfully accepted, and due care taken of them." A list of the "Laws and Regulations of the American Museum" follows. Gardiner Baker is the keeper.—Daily Adv., My 21, 1791. For an account of Baker, see Duer, Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker (1867), 8. See Je 1.

The city advertises for proposals for raising "the iron work of the Bowling Green, and the first course of stone work, in which it is bedded, two feet above the present level."—Daily Adv., My 26, 1791. 26

The common council approves a report of the street committee which expresses the opinion "that great benefit would result to their fellow Citizens by laying open a new Road on New York Island from Bloomingdale to Fort Washington;" that "it is very easy to extend the present Road terminating on the Lands of Nicholas De Peyster, thro' the Lands of said De Peyster & others and falling in with the present high Road to Kings Bridge somewhere about the Lands of Doctor Bradhurst & the Widow Watkins." The board orders that a survey of the intended road be made. Cf. F 17, and O 22, 1792. See, further, Jl 13, 1795. 30

This committee also reports its proposed regulation of the southern part of Broadway, in and around "Kennedy's Lane" (Marketfield St.), the Battery, the street in front of the government house (Marketfield St.), and Whitehall St.

The same committee recommends a plan for cleansing the public slips, that it "may be effectually done and at a more reasonable rate than in any other manner by Means of a Machine called a Dock Drudge;" that "such a Machine belonging to the Corporation of Albany & lately employed for the purpose of removing the Obstructions at the Overslagh in Hudsons River near that 1791 May 30 City, is now in this City for sale and may be purchased at a reasonable rate." The board appoints a committee to examine "the Vessel or Dock Drudge," and buy it if in good condition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 645–47. On June 10, the committee reported that it had bought the "Dock Drudge" for £150, and directed its removal "to Mr Hare's Ship yard" for repairs.—Ibid., I: 648.

" The common council passes "A Law for the new regulation & paving of the Street [Marketfield] in front of the Govt House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 647. See Ag 12.

" The city treasurer having let "Bedlow's Island" (see F 25) to James Sullivan for a term of four years, the common council approves a draft of articles of agreement, and orders that they be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 647.

" It is reported in the church council that (the refitted) "Trinity Church [Lutheran]" brings in an income of £28 per annum and "a lott adjoining leased to Mr. Corre £25."—Lutheran Min. (MS.). See S 6, 1792.

June 1 The announcement regarding the "American Museum" printed in the newspapers of May 21 (q.v.) is now issued as a broadside.—Emmet Coll., No. 11290. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 602.

13 It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that a white Marble Slab, with such Inscription as the Clergy of this Congregation shall direct be procured, and placed over the Front Door of Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). When the third Trinity Church (the present one) was being constructed in 1841, a commemorative box was deposited in the northerly front buttress of the tower, on which was engraved the principal dates, etc., in the church's history, including the inscription copied from this old marble tablet. For the full text of this inscription, see S 16, 1841.

"Mr Laight laid before the Board [Trinity vestry] a Plan for a Ring of Bells for Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Trinity vestry orders "that the Committee of Repairs take Order for completing the Pavement about Trinity Church."—Ibid.

"Also that the said Committee examine whether the Gallery in Trinity Church is sufficient to receive the Organ expected from Great Britain."—Ibid.

22 The beauties and tranquility of Kip's Bay are described in a poem or paraphrase entitled "Summer Excursion to Kip's Bay."—N. Y. Jour., Je 22, 1791.

24 The common council orders "that the Street Committee be permitted [to] take the Iron which formerly enclosed Pitts Statue and apply the same to the Railing at the front of the Arch in Broad Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 651.

July 1 A number of contributors to the "New York Public Dispensary" meet and elect seven governors for the ensuing year.—Daily Adv., Jl 2, 1791. With this, the establishment is fully organized.—See O 14, 1790; F 24, 1791.

" The common council appoints a committee "to take order for obtaining proper Frames for the Portraits in the City Hall of the President of the United States and the Governor of this State."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 652–53.

It is ordered that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer to pay John Trumbull £186:13:4 "for taking the Portrait of his Excellcy the Governor."—Ibid., I: 653. See Jl 19 and 20, Ag 10, S 2 and 21, 1790.

" The common council issues a mid-year order for raising money by taxation "within this City & County this present Year," to be paid to the city treasurer on or before Sept. 28. The sums to be raised are allotted as follows: £8,000 for the support of the poor, the bridewell, and the criminals in prison, for repairing and maintaining the public roads, and for cleaning and improving the streets; £3,000 "for the Improvement at the Battery & in front of the Government House;" and £4,000 for the watch and lamp departments. The proposed taxation is apportioned to the several wards.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 653. For subsequent annual taxation, or budget, see N 12, 1792, and later dates there cited.

2 The "Tammany Society or Columbian Order" announces the following arrangements for the celebration of July 4 (q.v.).

"1st The American colours to be displayed at the Great Wigwam [see My 12] at sunrise.

"2nd The Society to assemble at the Great Wigwam, punctually at 7 o'clock, on Monday morning [Jl 4], to dispatch ordinary business.

"3d The Society, attended by Military of the city, invited on the occasion, will form the line of procession in front of the exchange, and proceed to the [New Dutch] church, through Great Dock street, White-Hall street, Broad way, and Little Queen street —precisely at quarter of an hour before nine o'clock. July 2

"4th The galleries of the church are to be reserved for the use of the Military, and Society—The right side gallery for the Military and the left side gallery for the Society—the front gallery is appropriated for those who may wish to assist the music of the day—the rest of the church is for the accommodation of the public.

"5th On entering the church the music will perform until the audience is seated, after which the Declaration of Independence will be read by the Grand Sachem; at the conclusion of which Divine Service will be performed by the Rev. Dr. Lynn—A collection will then be made for the benefit of the Charity School of the church.

"6th After the dismission from the church, the Society will attend the Military to the parade, where a salute will be fired.

"7th The Society will re-assemble, in the evening, at the usual hour, at the Great Wigwam, which will be illuminated on the occasion—when they will regularly be dismissed."

"By order of the Grand Sachem

"John Swartwout, Sec.

"N. B. It is expected, the members of the Society will appear with a buck's tail in their hats, by way of distinction."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 2, 1791.

4 Independence Day is celebrated. The Tammany Society (see Jl 2), with military escort, parades "from their Wigwam in Broadstreet, to the New Dutch Church . . . From the church the procession moved to the battery, where the artillery fired a federal salute, and the infantry a feu-de-joye." The Society of the Cincinnati, after their annual meeting, dined at four o'clock at Corre's, "where they spent the evening in that social and agreeable manner peculiar to old soldiers." The revenue cutter was decorated and fired a salute.—N. Y. Mag. (1791). See also the sermon entitled The Blessings of America, preached in the Middle Dutch Church, at the request of the Tammany Society, by Rev. William Linn, and published by Greenleaf in 1791.—Catalogue, J. Carter Brown Library, item No. 3464. A citizen wrote to one of the newspapers that he never "beheld an anniversary or festival conducted with more rationality. The troops appeared exceeding well—the Tammany Society wore buck tails only by way of distinction—the Cincinnati were undisturbed—republican œconomy was observed on all hands—no disturbance interrupted the joy of the day—and in the evening, all retired, and satisfaction sat on every brow."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 6, 1791.

7 The "New Line Dispatch" advertises to run a stage during the summer between New York and Philadelphia in one day. The boat that conveys the passengers for the stage will leave the ferry stairs, opposite Pawles Hook, every afternoon (except Saturday) at 4:30 o'clock. Seats may be engaged of Jacob H. Butman at the Boston, Albany, and Philadelphia stage-office, No. 49 Cortlandt St., or of Benjamin Powel at the "Paules Hook" ferry-house.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 7, 1791.

8 The common council refers to the street committee "A second Petition from the Inhabitants of Great George Street [Broadway] between the Bridewell & Hospital for side Walks."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 654.

" The committee on Battery improvements reports that the plan proposed by Col. Bauman, "to carry out a Bastion at the point of the Battery & to finish the Wharf running into the East River corresponding with said Design," will cost at least three times as much as the plan proposed by the committee, which is "to make a Return at right Angles at the Point of the Battery & continue the line of the Wharf to the Whitehall Slip—the Quantity of Earth required for the former Plan being so much greater than for the latter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 654–55.

On July 15, Thomas Randall and others petitioned that Col. Bauman's plan be followed. They set forth the great advantage which would result "from the compleating of the Improvements at the Battery towards Whitehall Slip by extending the Line into the River so as to include the remains of the old half Moon Battery." This petition was rejected.—Ibid., I: 656.

11 Governor's Island is being improved for a place of resort for the spring, summer, and autumn seasons. It is thus described:

"The soil, naturally good, and consisting of about 75 acres, when improved into walks, groves and gardens, cannot otherwise than present a delightful scene of recreation to the man of taste, 1791 July 11 particularly after the fatigues and cares of business. The distance from the city is about ¾ of a mile, being a safe and easy passage. As improvements, in this view, are now begun on Governor's island, a house and summer houses erected, and several thousands of trees planted out, we may expect soon to see it metamorphosed from a neglected spot, into a seat of taste and rural elegance. The island abounds with excellent fresh water: and a clean gravelly shore, washed by waves that are poured in upon us, twice every 24 hours, directly from the bosom of the Atlantic, attended by a fresh sea breeze, offers every inducement to gratification, to those who are fond of bathing and swimming. The prospect from the plains and rising grounds is delightful; on one side a spacious and beautiful bay, covered with vessels of every description, from all parts of the continent, and every quarter of the globe: That part of the sound called the East River, and the majestic Hudson, who invites the eye to follow his waves a considerable distance, as they roll towards the mountains of the north, form a grand and picturesque scene on two other sides. The city of New York (the Naples of America) exhibits from this place, an elegant appearance, which will daily become more so, as the improvements are completed in the neighbourhood of the old battery, and new buildings erected in the room of stables, barracks, and other petty edifices, which ought always to be in the back ground or less noticed parts of a large city."—Daily Adv., Jl 11, 1791.

15 The common council issues orders for the payment of £2,000 toward "the Improvements at the Battery & ab[t] the Gov[t] House last Year," and for those "now prosecuting."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 658.

18 An auction was advertised on June 29 to be held on this day at the Merchants Coffee-House for the sale of the Two Brothers Islands, "about three miles to the eastward of Hell-Gate in the sound, and near the mouth of Flushing Bay, in the county of Queens." The advantages of the location are described. They are owned by Eleanor Brasher.—Daily Adv., Jl 6, 1791.

20 The Chamber of Commerce gives "a superb entertainment" at the City Tavern to Alexander Hamilton, secretary of the treasury.—N. Y. Mag. (1791), 424; Gaz. of U. S., Jl 23 and 27, 1791.

25 Pres. Washington signs an act creating the first Bank of the United States, in Philadelphia.—Hardenbrook, Financial New York (1897), 127; Winsor, VII: 268. The New York branch was opened in N. Y. City on April 2, 1792 (q.v.). The bank was liquidated March 4, 1811, its charter having expired by limitation. —Hardenbrook, 134.

28 The common council agrees to the petition of Robt. Boyd, that a space 28 ft. broad "be reserved in the rear of and extending in length paralel to the [Hudson] Market, from Partition to Vesey Street," and that the land on the west of this strip be leased to the proprietor of the adjoining lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 661. On April 30, 1792, the city treasurer reported on his "sale" of vacant lots here, and the board ordered that "leases" (for 21 yrs.) be prepared accordingly.—Ibid., I: 708.

Aug. 10 Wm. Cunningham, the British provost-marshal at the time of the occupation of New York by the British in September, 1776 (q.v.), is executed for forgery at Newgate Prison, London. For his dying confession, which gives a sketch of his life, see Genius of Liberty (Morristown, N. J.), Ja 15, 1801, in N. Y. P. L. See also Ag 4, 1774.

11 The city treasurer receives from the managers of the city lottery £1,304:13, the balance due after payment of the bond of the Bank of New York for monies advanced toward the repair of the city hall.—From the original account and balance-sheet in metal file No. 13, city clerk's record-room.

12 The city spends £1,000 for "Oak fire Wood to be laid up in the Bridewell Yard & to be disposed of next Winter" as the common council shall direct.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 663.

" The common council agrees to specifications and a map or survey for the regulation of the Bowery Lane. It begins at the head of Catharine St., extends to its intersection with St. Nicholas, past Pell St., Bayard St., Bull's Head Tavern, Grand St., Hester St., and so on to the two-mile stone.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 663–64.

" The common council pays Thos. Lafoy £359:7:1 as the city's share of the expense "of new paving the Streets about the Gov[t] House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 665. See also descrip. of Pl. 63, I: 441. See S 5.

15 A contagious fever appeared in the city at about this time, being first discovered near Peck's Slip. It spread throughout the city till the middle of October, when it greatly abated, as the weather became cooler, and soon disappeared.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 24, 1803, citing a pamphlet by Jonas Smith Adams, pub'd in 1792, entitled Inaugural dissertation of the malignant fever which prevailed in New-York during the months of August, September and October, in the year 1791. See also Medical Repository (1798), I: 315–25. Aug. 15

" The executors of the will of John Berian (see Jl 9, 1784) sell his interest in the Roger Morris property to Anthony L. Bleecker for £1,000. The deed was recorded on Aug. 13, 1792.—Liber Deeds, XLVII: 453. Bleecker increased his holdings on Feb. 1, 1792 (q.v.).

19 A letter to one of the daily papers expresses the opinion that the malignant fever is imported, and not of local origin. The writer relates an account of the arrival of a vessel from the West Indies, on which was the body of a seaman, who died at the Narrows. The vessel was brought to the dock in the rear of Gen. Malcolm's house; Malcolm lifted the tarpaulin to look at the dead man, and later sickened and died. The disorder "proceeded from Malcolm's house in Water Street, to the Coffee-house, and was very fatal." The only attempt to prove that it was of local origin, due to the accumulated filth at Peck's Slip, was made by Valentine Seaman, in a pamphlet pub'd by him in 1797, entitled An enquiry into the cause of the prevalence of the yellow fever in New York. But that Peck's Slip was not the place of its origin is averred by this newspaper writer, who contends that it was rather Malcolm's wharf, an eighth of a mile to the south of it.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 24, 1803, citing the Am. Citizen, Ag 19, 1791.

" A "Celebrated Company of French Rope Dancers," lately arrived in the country, begin a series of exhibitions at the City Tavern,—the performance beginning, as usual, at 6:30 in the evening.—Daily Adv., Ag 18, 1791.

22 A manuscript volume of the Minutes of the Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell, New York City, 1791–1797, begins (pages 1–5 are missing, the opening page being numbered 6) with a meeting of the said commissioners on this date. The volume is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, and is valuable in its revelation of the activities of those commissioners (for the first appointment of such commissioners, see My 14, 1784) in the general relief of the poor; the care of infants; schooling and binding out of children to trades; distributions of food and fire wood to the poor of the city; contracts for meat, wood, etc.; and the appointment of physician, midwife, apothecary, and almshouse keeper. Quarterly financial reports appear, as also estimates of expenditures for ensuing quarters.

Knowledge gleaned from this volume supplements advantageously the information obtainable from the Minutes of the Common Council of the same years. See Ag 29.

25 The trustees of the New York Society Library issue this notice: "The Library now consists of upwards of 3000 volumes, containing the works of many eminent writers, ancient & modern. Considerable additions of the best publications are constantly making to the library, and the members of the Society have lately very much increased in number . . .

"The trustees are anxious to make a collection of all pamphlets and other publications, that in any manner relate to the history or politics of this country, before or since the revolution. Several donations of this kind already have been made to the library, and it is hoped that gentlemen who are possessed of such papers will deposit them there, and make them, through that medium more extensively useful."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 31, 1791.

26 John Fitch secures a patent from the U. S. government which grants him for 14 years the exclusive right of manufacturing and using the devices he has invented for propelling a boat by steam.—Preble, Chron. Hist. of the Origin and Development of Steam Navigation, 33.

29 This record appears in the Minutes of the almshouse commissioners (see Ag 22): "Whereas on the 20th of June last, Catharine the Wife of one Benj[n] Weeks of this City Bricklayer, being disorder'd in her mind, is enter'd on our books, as an Object of the care of the Commissioners, and it being Suggested to the board that she, in her own right, is posest of property in this City Sufficient for her support, was it properly taken care of, therefore Resolv'd, that Willet Seaman and Will[m] De Peyster, be a Committee, who are desired to converse with the Mayor of the City, on the propriety of taking the necessary steps for Securing such a portion of the said property, (if so much may be found) as may 1791 Aug. 29 indemnify the public respecting her maintainance."—Minutes of the Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell, 1791–1797, (MS.), 6.

Sept. 3 The constituent assembly of France enacts a constitution, and the king accepts it.—Anderson, op. cit; Guizot, Hist. of France.

5 The mayor lays before the common council "a plan of a Fence to complete the Improvem^ts in front of the Gov^t House." The committee on the improvements at the Battery and government house is given orders "for the erection of the said Fence accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 668. See also descrip. of Pl. 55-b, I: 417. See O 25.

12 The common council pays £5:10 "for removing the Fence at the New Dutch Church."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 671.

20 The worst fire that has occurred in New York since those of 1776 and 1778 raged from one to seven o'clock in the morning on this day, and consumed "the whole block of buildings at the upper End of Mill-street through into Duke-street."—Daily Adv., S 20; Gaz. of the U. S., S 24, 1791. A list of the houses burned was published in the Daily Adv. for Sept. 21. "The custom-house, which was on fire several times, was saved only by the greatest exertions of a number of very active citizens;" and it was feared that the burning shingles, blown by a high wind from the south-west to a great distance over the city, would cause the town to take fire in other quarters. Two children were rescued from the flames of a house in Duke Street "by means of the pole and basket." —Ibid. The burned block was that "between the Jew's Ally and Duke-street, bounded on the north by Mill-street." Eleven houses, two stores, three stables, and one bake-house were destroyed. The loss was supposed to exceed £20,000. "The fate of the elegant buildings in Great Dock street, Hanover Square, Smith, and Princess streets, as well as the customs house, . . . was suspended for an awful period."—N. Y. Jour., S 21, 1791.

22 Lewis Ogden, executor of Anthony Rutgers, deceased; Egbert Benson, Samuel Bayard, and John Watts, executors of Mary Barclay, deceased, and Anthony Lispenard, convey to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York, all the land under water of the pond described in the patent to Anthony Rutgers, dated Dec. 31, 1733 (q.v.), and known as the "Fresh Pond called the Water adjoining to the Farm formerly called the Duke's Farm," and all right, title, and interest of Anthony Rutgers to land under water in said pond.—Liber Ancient Conveyances, register's office, I: 10–11. This Liber contains recent entries of many old transactions. Under this deed the city acquired title to the Fresh Water or Collect, which was subsequently filled in. This important transaction was not made a matter of record until April 5, 1917. See also L. M. R. K., III: 965; and Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 563–64.

" The directors of the Mutual Assurance Co. meet at the Coffee House and hear the report of the company's "Surveyor" regarding the company's losses by the fire of Sept. 20. They order that the amount of damages sustained by policy-holders be paid. The company undertook to rebuild the house of a policy holder, which was totally destroyed, and in advertising for bids took occasion to call attention to this case to prove the utility of insurance. The house to be rebuilt was insured for the trifling sum of £12. John Pintard was the company's "clerk."—Daily Adv., S 24, 1791.

29 The common council pays £59:17:1 "for new rooffing of the Com^n Council Chamber."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 673. On Oct. 4, the same amount was paid.—Ibid., I: 677.

Oct. 1 "We learn that the Theatre in John-street will be opened by the Old American Company on Wednesday next [O 5], after having undergone a thorough repair, and rendered commodious and elegant."—Daily Adv., O 1, 1791.

2 Archibald Robertson, the portrait painter, comes to New York from Aberdeen, at the request of Dr. Kemp of Columbia College, and the solicitation of Chancellor Livingston and Dr. Samuel Bard. He bore a commission from the Earl of Buchan, of Edinburgh, to paint a miniature portrait of Pres. Washington.—See an address by Mrs. J. Warren Goddard, before the N. Y. Genealog. and Biog. Soc., F 20, 1920; Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, II: 79; Century Mag., My, 1890. Several of his drawings of New York interest are reproduced in the ICONOGRAPHY.—See Pls. 60-b, 65, 72-a and b, Vol. I; and Pl. 95-a, Vol. III. This Archibald Robertson must not be confused with the Archibald Robertson who executed, between 1762 and 1781, the remarkable series of drawings of American cities, etc., referred to under July 12, 1776 (q.v.). There seems to have been no connection between the two men, although both were British officers in the American service, and both good draughtsmen, and their style was very similar. See, further, O 11. The N. Y. P. L. Bull. for 1926 will contain an account of these drawings by Mr. Lydenberg. Oct. 2

The account of John McComb, city surveyor, filed on this day, contains, among other items, one for regulating Great George Street from the Bridewell to the Stone Bridge, with "M^r Grurick" (Goerck).—From the original bill in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room. 4

"A Friend to Literature" writes to one of the daily papers remarking on the small number of people who go to Columbia College to hear the students' orations, declaring that it is impossible to produce public speakers without public support. In the course of his criticism, he says: "It is to be regretted that so indifferent and so ill furnished a hall is the only place the students have for the delivery of their Orations. The grammar scholars in the city are perhaps better provided for in this respect. May we not hope that the board of College [sic], and the worthy Trustees will shew a little public spirit, and endeavour to get a hall erected, spacious and elegant? This would add splendor to the Collegiate performances, and answer many other valuable purposes."—Daily Adv., O 6, 1791. 6

"Archibald Robertson, Limner, From the Royal Academy, London, who has been under the particular tuition of Mr. West and Sir Joshua Reynolds for several years, informs the ladies and gentlemen of New York, that he paints Portraits, Miniatures, &c. 11

"He proposes to open an Academy to teach drawing of Heads, Figures, Landscapes, Flowers, Patterns for sewing, Architecture, Perspective, &c. on Thursday 13th October, at No. 89, William street.

"The Class for Ladies will begin at ten o'clock forenoon, and for Gentlemen at twelve.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, who chuse to be attended at their own houses, will be waited on at such hours as do not interfere with his classes.

"As his terms will be very reasonable, he hopes by his attention to merit the patronage of a generous public.

"For further particulars enquire at his Lodgings at Mrs. Moon's, corner of Nassau street and Maiden lane, or at the Academy."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., O 11; and Daily Adv., O 11, 1791. The advertisement ran in these papers through the issues of Nov. 18. It should be noted that while this academy is referred to by writers on art in New York as the first in the city, an earlier school of art and architecture was established by Lacour in 1785 (q.v., D 6).

In December, Robertson went to Philadelphia, met Washington, and executed the commission to paint his portrait.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, II: 82–85. Besides the miniatures of General and Mrs. Washington, he painted a large oil painting of the general, and a smaller one of him in water colours on marble. For reproduction of the latter, with much information regarding Robertson's life and work, see the article by Edith Robertson Cleveland, in The Century Mag. (My, 1890), 8. This portrait has been deposited, and is on exhibition, at the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See, further, O 8, 1792.

Pres. Washington issues a list of the "Terms and conditions . . . for regulating the materials and manner of the buildings and improvements on the Lots in the City of Washington."—N. Y. Jour., N 2, 1791. See O 13, 1792. 17

Thos. Jefferson, the federal secretary of state, certifies that the original census returns of the United States have been deposited in his office, having been procured in accordance with "An Act providing for the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States," passed March first, 1790. They show that New York City and County contained at this time 33,131 inhabitants, including 2,369 slaves.—Return of the Whole Number of Persons, etc., printed by order of the house of representatives by Joseph Gales, Phila. (no date), in the author's collection. This was the first United States census, under the constitution. Twelve censuses were taken, however, prior to 1790, the first being in 1656.—A Century of Population, 11, 13, 294; and 13th Census Bulletin (1910). See also Assemb. Jour. (Childs & Swaine), 13. Cf. Ja. 11. 24

The common council orders "that the 26 stuffed Chairs remaining in the City Hall and which were formerly used by the Senate of the United States be removed to the Gov^t House for the 25

1791 O 25 use of that House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 682. For a list of furniture bought for the government house, see 1792.

Nov. — The earliest extant records of any fire company in the city—namely, those of engine No. 13—began in this month. Also, the first written report known to have been made of the doings of the fire department proper was made on Nov. 4 of this year.—Costello, Our Firemen (1887), 52.

10 The common council revises the law for preventing and extinguishing fires, and, agreeable to its terms, appoints two fire wardens for each ward. It also orders that "Wands, Caps & Speaking Trumpets," mentioned in the law, be provided.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 685; Daily Adv., N 14, 1791.

" The street committee reports a survey and regulation it has caused to be made of Great Dock St., Little Dock St., Front St., and Moore St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 685–86.

16 Fox hunting, "on this Island," is announced as follows: "The dogs will be cast off at Kissing Bridge, near the six mile stone." On Nov. 19, the hunt is to be on Long Island, on which day the dogs "will be cast off at Gravesend cedars at sunrise." The notice is signed "Marsh, Huntsman."—Daily Adv., N 14, 1791.

17 The common council resolves to celebrate the eighth anniversary of the evacuation of the city by British troops, and that a public dinner be provided at Corre's Hotel on the 25th; it orders also that gunpowder, not exceeding 250 lbs., be purchased for the use of the militia on that day.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 688. The constables and marshals were allowed £10 for expenses.—Ibid., I: 688. The cost of the dinner was £37:3:8.

21 Leather is advertised for sale at "the Leather Manufactory at Fresh-Water, near where the old Powder-House was." This factory was conducted by Henry Brooks.—Daily Adv., N 21, 1791.

25 Besides the public dinner at Corre's Hotel arranged for by the common council (see N 17), a report of the events of the day shows that a "number of select companies of the Old Whigs of New-York" observed the celebration. The firing of guns at the Battery—a customary feature—took place, and the "light-horse, the regiment and brigade of artillery, and the companies of grenadiers and light infantry, appeared in the field." The Tammany Society celebrated in the evening at their wigwam in Broad Street.—N. Y. Jour., N 26, 1791.

" The common council orders "that the Curtains in the City Hall which were left by the Senate of the United States be removed to the Gov^t^ House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 688.

" John Blagge and Thos. Ivers apply to the common council "for a Lease of the Soil under Water at the Slaughter House at Corlaers Hook."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 688–89.

30 A horse-race is advertised to take place on this day on Governor's Island.—N. Y. Jour., N 30, 1791.

Dec. 1 John Broome, John Watts, Gulian Verplanck, John Delafield, and Wm. Laight, five merchants comprising the board of directors of the Tontine Assn. (see Mr 30), purchase at public vendue, in front of the Merchants' Coffee House, for £2,510, the dwelling and lot of land "in the tenure and occupation of Anthony Bleecker, formerly held by Francis Lucas, and known as No. 22 Wall Street, reserving the right of way . . . through an alley adjoining one side of the said property, and leading from the adjoining farm and garden of Francis Clark." On Jan 31, 1792, the house and lot on the north-west corner of Wall and Water Sts. were bought of Dr. Chas. Arding and wife for £1,970; and on Aug. 22, 1792, the property was augmented by the purchase of the estate of Mordecai Gomez.—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 318–27, citing N. Y. Jour. of Commerce, Jl 25, 1871. See Ja 20, Ap 9, 1792.

7 The shop of James Hallet, the coach-maker (see Ja 22, 1750), adjoining the John Street Theatre, is destroyed by fire. The theatre is threatened, but is saved by the citizens.—Dunlap's Am. Daily Adv., D 13; Gaz. of the U. S., D 14, 1791.

12 The common council refers to a committee a communication from the Society for the Relief of Indigent and Distressed Debtors Confined in the Goal, in which they suggest "the necessity of erecting a Wall round the Goal" to enable the prisoners to walk in the open for air and exercise, to add to their comfort and prevent "Distempers."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 689.

" The city treasurer reports to the common council that he has rented the Hoboken ferry for £91 per annum to Joseph Smith. It is ordered that the Paulus Hook ferry be "sold" at public vendue in like manner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 689. On Jan. 6, John Holdran leased it at £380 per annum.—Ibid., I: 693.

Dec. 12 Payments made during the year to Ald. Stoutenburgh, toward the improvements at the Battery, have been as follows: July 15, £2,000 (including expenses for 1790); Aug. 29, £500; Oct. 4, £100; Oct. 12, £500; Dec. 12, £300,—total, £3,400.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 658. 668, 677, 678, 690. See, further, N 5, 1792; D 16, 1793.

15 The first ten amendments to the Constitution of the United States go into force.—Winsor, VII: 266. See also the official draft of the first 12 amendments (on parchment, framed), in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., U*).

17 A programme or circular of this date, announcing a performance by the Old American Co. at the John St. Theatre on Dec. 19, gives, with other necessary information, the following regulation: "Ladies and Gentlemen are requested to send their Servants at Five, to keep Places, and to order their Coachmen to take up and set down with their Horse Heads to the East-River, to avoid Confusion." Also this regarding tickets: "The Door-keepers are positively prohibited taking money at the Doors, unless in Exchange of Places, therefore Ladies and Gentlemen will be kind enough to supply themselves with Tickets. Vivant Respublica."—From original handbill in Emmet collection, No. 11125. This is the earliest example found of a "one way street."

20 Representatives from the fire department, authorized by their different companies, meet and form a constitution for the purpose of establishing a fund for the relief of firemen injured in the discharge of their duty. Oh Jan. 21, 1792, the fire department published a note of thanks to Messrs. Hallam and Henry "for the donation they have been pleased to present to them, in assisting to carry the benevolent design of their fund into execution."—Daily Adv., Ja 21, 1792; Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 789 et seq., Costello, Our Firemen, 52–53. The fund thus established for the relief of disabled firemen and their families was derived from various sources,—"from fines for chimnies being on fire, (which the Corporation generously granted them,) from monies arising from the sale of certificates to new appointed Firemen, and from such donations as may be given them . . ." The founders were incorporated on March 20, 1798 (q. v.), as "The Fire Department of the City of New York."—Daily Adv., Ja 3, 1800

" Hints for fire prevention are published.—Daily Adv., D. 20, 1791.

23 A model of Jerusalem, "as it stood when our Savior was on earth, made agreeable to the description of Josephus," size 16 by 9 feet, is on exhibition "at Mr. Hyer's, Baker, No. 7 Chatham street."—Daily Adv., Ja 4, 1792.

26 The debtors confined in the "New Goal" publish their thanks to Joseph Winter "for the seasonable Relief he has afforded them by his timely supply of a whole Bullock, and a proportionable quantity of Bread," adding that they "are not without hopes that the affluent will follow so laudable an example."—Daily Adv., D 27, 1791. See also D 31.

31 The following were the arrivals from foreign ports at the port of New York during the year 1791: 120 ships and barques, 280 snows and brigs, 1 galliott, 1 polacre, 158 schooners, and 158 sloops—total, 718; also 1,101 coasters. Comparing this list with that published in the Philadelphia papers, showing arrivals in that city for the same period, it appears that there was a balance in favour of New York of 151 vessels from foreign ports and 407 coasters.—Gaz. of the U. S., Ja 21, 1792. When these statistics were published in Boston, the statement was made: "These entries exceed those of Boston, but it will be considered, that there is but one port in the state of Pennsylvania, and one in New-York, whereas, there are 26 in Massachusetts, wherein Custom-Houses are established, exclusive of several small ones."—Columbian Cent., Ja 25, 1792.

" The exports from New York to foreign parts for 1791 amounted to $2,505,465.—Holmes' Annals, II: 390.

" During 1791, the Society for the Relief of Distressed Prisoners gave relief to 71 prisoners by distributing bread, beef, potatoes, wood, etc. in quantities specified in their report, at an expense for all objects of £136:1:7. Public contributions have been £151:10:5. The society has procured the discharge of six prisoners.—Daily Adv., Ap 5, 1792.

— In 1792, the Marseillaise Hymn was composed by Rouget de Lille (or L'Isle), at Strasburg.—Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

— Ebenezer Hazard's State Papers were published in this year. Hazard says in the preface that the object of the compilation was to lay the foundation of a good American history. "It was the 1792 Compiler's original Intention to visit each State in the Union, — and to remain there a sufficient Time to form a complete Collection of such Materials for its History as had escaped the Ravages of Time and Accident. His Design was honoured with the Approbation and Patronage of Congress, whose Recommendation of it gained him immediate Access to the Archives of New Hampshire and Massachusetts . . .; but before he could proceed farther, an Appointment, as Post Master General of the United States . . . prevented his continuing the Work in the Method he at first proposed:—the papers collected since have been picked up just as they happened to fall in his Way: . . ." He has thought it expedient to publish the compilation lest it should be scattered and lost and hopes, by laying a foundation, another may be induced to undertake to write a history as at first proposed. —Hazard State Papers, I: Preface. For what seems to be the first notice of an intention to publish such a work, see Ag 1, 1774.

— In this year, Gilbert Stuart arrived from Europe.—Mason, Life and Works of Gilbert Stuart (1879), 24. Dunlap says he came in 1793.—Hist. of the Arts of Design, I: 229–30. "His attelier or painting room was in Stone-street, near William-street."—From the "Biographical Sketch of the Late Gilbert Stuart," in the Knickerbocker Mag. (1833), I: 195.

— In this year, John Vanderlyn came to New York, and after three years' study under Archibald Robertson, became a portrait painter.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 157–59.

After two lengthy tours of Europe, he returned to the United States in 1815, and was immediately employed in painting the portraits of some of the most distinguished citizens.—Ibid., II: 162–63. In 1817 (q.v.), he projected the building of the New York Rotunda.

— Benjamin Tanner, probably a pupil of Peter R. Maverick (see Mr 16, 1786), was engraving in New York from this date until 1805. He worked in both line and stipple, and produced some excellent large portraits and historical subjects, especially views relating to the Revolution and the War of 1812.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 263–65. See also Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 176 and footnote. For a comprehensive list of Tanner's plates, see Stauffer, op. cit., II: 508–17, and Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 261–66. See also Pl. 83-a, Vol. III.

— During this year, operations for grading and paving streets continued active.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 693 et seq.

— "Baron John Cornelius van den Heuvel, Governor of Demerara, came to New York about 1792, a refugee from the ravages of yellow fever in that island. His intention was to remain here but a brief spell, but being charmed with the location, he built his seat, which stood on the present block between 78th and 79th Streets, Broadway and West End Avenue, until the summer of 1905."—Mott, The N. Y. of Yesterday, 95–96. The Vandenheuvel mansion became a road-house, about 1833, known as Burnham's Hotel.—Haswell, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 214. For view of Burnham's see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 336. As stated by Mott, supra, the building was demolished in 1905.—Information furnished by Messrs. Clinton & Russell, architects of Apthorp Apartments, now (1920) occupying the site. See L. M. R. K., III: 952; Pl. 177, Vol. III. The site must not be confused with that of the Apthorp mansion, which stood south of 91st St., 210 ft. west of Columbus Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 948. See Addenda.

— From 1792 to 1797, the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, was used as a boarding-house.—See descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590.

Jan. William Morton changes his paper from a daily to a semi-
3 weekly, the title being altered to The New-York Morning Post. The last issue located is that of June 12, 1792.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 464. Cf. Early Newspapers, II: 425.

9 Seven dwelling houses in Front St., between the Fly-market and De Peyster St., are destroyed by fire.—Daily Adv., Ja 10, 1792.

12 Livingston's sugar-house in Crown St. (Liberty St.) is offered for sale.—Daily Adv., Ja 12, 1792.

15 In a report to the regents, the trustees of Columbia College state "That the number of students . . . is greatly increased, amounting, inclusive of fifty six pupils at the medical school, to one hundred and fifty-six students.

"Already so respectable for numbers, and the abilities, assiduity and reputation of the teachers, the fairest prospect is presented of its fully answering the warmest wishes and expectations of the public, of its generous patrons and benefactors, and of every friend to literature and science. But it is well known, that the Jan.
funds of this institution were much impaired by the events of the 15
war. . . . the edifice was greatly abused and injured, and its repair made a considerable breach upon the remaining capital. . . .

". . . At this juncture then which appears so highly favorable, the Trustees, while they acknowledge with gratitude the former beneficence of the legislature, conceive that they would be unfaithful if they hesitated to disclose to them the wants and necessities which still continue to press upon Columbia College, and to solicit for relief. Their predecessors in office were only able to execute a part of the original plan of the intended edifice, which served the purpose of the institution in its infancy. The erection even of a hall for visitations, examinations, commencements and other public exercises, designed to be placed in the front of a square of which the present building forms only a side or wing, has for want of funds been deferred to the present moment . . .

"The College is besides destitute of a library, the few books which escaped the depredations of the war, not deserving that name—its philosophical and mathematical apparatus, though improved by a former donation by the Legislature, still remains incomplete; and it requires several other professors and a teacher of the French language, to perfect the means of a liberal and useful education.

"It is yet to be added, that in consequence of a city regulation for digging down and levelling the streets, the fences which surrounded the College ground have been undermined, and in a great measure destroyed; and cannot be repaired to any valuable purpose, but at the heavy expence of a stone wall, to prevent the waste of the soil, and the inconveniences which must accompany it.

"Under these embarrassing circumstances, the Trustees know not of any resource, but in the beneficence and liberality of the honorable the Legislature; . . ."—Assemb. Jour., 15th sess., 78–79. See Ap 11, 1792.

A number of citizens assemble at Corre's Hotel (69 Broadway), 16 and appoint Alexander Macomb, Brockholst Livingston, Abraham Duryee, Moses Rodgers, and John M'Vickar commissioners to receive subscriptions for a second bank in N. Y. City. Twenty thousand shares are subscribed, an excess of $9,000,000 over the proposed capital. The proposals for the new bank are published in full. On Jan. 19, the first payment of $200 on each share was to be made; and on Jan. 20 the stockholders were to ballot for thirteen directors.—Daily Adv., Ja 17, 1792. See also ibid., Ja 18, 19, 20, 21. The bank was to be called the "Million Bank of the State of New-York."—N. Y. Jour., Ja 18; Gaz. of U. S. (Phila.) Ja 18, 1792. See also McMaster, II: 81. It did not materialize.

"It may with propriety, be said, that a Tontine and Bank 18
Mania now rages in this city. The Coffee [House] Tontine was filled some time ago, and the purposes encompassed by the purchase of the block, situated at the north east [error for north-west] corner of Wall and Water-streets; since which little has been said about it.

"A Tontine was opened by the Tammany Society a few days ago, for the purpose of erecting a great wig-wam, or Tammany Hall, for the convenience of the meetings, and to accommodate the growing Museum of that respectable and patriotic society. The Tontine filled rapidly, and it is rumoured, that a spacious lot is already purchased for the purposes intended."—N. Y. Jour., Ja 18, 1792. See also Daily Adv., Mr 24, 1792. See, further, Mr 8.

"The committee appointed to superintend the business of the 20
Tontine Coffee House Institution, give notice, That they will pay a premium of Ten Guineas to the person who shall deliver in, before the 20th of February next, the best plan for the building they propose to have erected; and a premium of Five Guineas for the second best plan; the objects to be combined in the above plan are solidity, neatness, and useful accommodations. The building to be four stories high, and to occupy a space of fifty feet by seventy, being the corner of Wall and Water-streets."—N. Y. Jour., Ja 25, 1792. See, further, Mr 12.

George Knox having offered to present to Trinity corporation 23
"a Set of Lustres for Trinity Church," the Vestry orders that the committee on repairs superintend the placing of the same.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It is also resolved that the clerk of this corporation "be authorized to unite in a Petition to the Legislature . . . for Compensation for the Lands granted to the Corporation which fall within the State of Vermont."—Ibid.

1792 Jan. 26 The New-York Packet (see F 3, 1791) is discontinued with the issue of this date.—Early Newspapers, II: 427; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 474–75. Loudon and his son Samuel started a new paper on Feb. 15 (q.v.).

31 The "New-Line Dispatch" advertises that during the summer it will "perform the Route" between New York and Philadelphia in one day. "Boat that conveys the Passengers for the Stage, will leave the Ferry Stairs opposite Powles Hook, every Afternoon, Saturdays excepted," at 4.30 o'clock.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Ja 31, 1792.

Feb. — The trustees of Columbia College establish the medical school of the college on a more respectable basis by appointing Dr. Samuel Bard as dean of the faculty, and associating with him seven medical professors.—Moore, Hist. Sketch of Columbia College, 71. See also Mc Vickar, Life of Samuel Bard, 156. This was the beginning of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

1 Anthony L. Bleecker (see Ag 15, 1791) purchases for £1,000 the interest of Theodore Hopkins and Michael Joy in the Roger Morris property. The deed was recorded on Aug. 20, 1792.—Liber Deeds, XLVII: 456 et seq. Hopkins and Joy had bought the half which previously belonged to Isaac Ledyard (see Jl 9, 1784).—Shelton, Jumel Mansion, 134. Bleecker advertised the place for sale on March 1 (q.v.).

3 John R. Livingston acquires "Mount Pitt" from Morgan Lewis (see Ag 2, 1785).—Liber Deeds, XLVII: 376. A view of New York taken from "Mount Pitt" while Livingston owned it is reproduced as Pl. 62, Vol. I. The house is shown on Pls. 40, 41, and 42, Vol. I, and on a survey in the Bancker Coll. (box A-B, folder "Bowery"), N. Y. P. L.

10 James Watson acquires the property at the present 4, 5, and 6 State St.—Liber Deeds, LXXIII: 438; see also description of Pl. 56, Vol. I. In the same year he built his "elegant Houses" there.—Com. Adv., Mr 28, 1801.

15 "The Stock Exchange Office is opened at No. 22 Wall Street for the accommodation of the dealers in Stock, and in which Public Sales will be held at noon as usual in rotation by A. L. Bleecker & Sons, J. Pintard, McEvers & Barclay, Cortlandt & Ferrers, and Jay & Sutton."—Diary, F 15, 1792. This is the earliest mention of any attempt at organized dealings in stocks in this city. It indicates that the auctioneers had endeavoured to establish a public stock market by holding daily sales under a joint arrangement.—Eames, The New York Stock Exchange (1894), 13. But see Mr 21.

" The first issue of The Diary; or, Loudon's Register, published by Samuel Loudon and his son, Samuel, Jr., appears. Loudon began to publish The Packet, Jan. 4, 1776 (q.v.), which he has now discontinued (see Ja 26) in favour of this daily sheet.—Early Newspapers, II: 442; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 407, 475. For a sketch of Loudon's life and work, see N. Y. H. S. Quar. Bull., Oct, 1922.

" A petition of Charles Ward Apthorpe and others, asking the common council "to continue the Bloomingdale Road to Morris's House," is referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 698. On March 12, a petition opposing this was submitted by land-owners in Harlem, and referred to the same committee.—Ibid., I: 701. See O 22.

" Moses Rogers and John Titus submit a proposal to the common council "to erect one or more Mills on Haerlem Creek at Kings Bridge." Referred to committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 698.

18 The legislature passes "An Act to increase the Number of Fire-Men within the City of New-York." On account of the enlargement of the city, 150 firemen are to be added, if necessary, to the 300 already allowed.—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 9. See also Mr 19, 1787.

" The legislature passes an act to enable New York City to raise money by a tax for various objects, including £2,400 for "compleating the improvements at the battery, and about the government house, and making improvements in front of the gaol, alms house and bridewell."—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 10 (Greenleaf, II: 383). See May 18. Feb. 18

A meeting to nominate John Jay for governor is held at Corre's Hotel, 69 Broadway.—N. Y. Jour. & Pol. Reg., F 18, 27, 1792. "

Congress passes "An Act to establish the Post-Office and Post-Roads within the United States." This names and locates the various post roads throughout the country, provides for a general post-office at the seat of government, gives the powers and duties of the postmaster-general and his assistants, fixes the rates of postage, and orders penalties for infringement of the law.—Acts of Congress (1792), chap. 7. 20

"That pleasant and much-admired seat at Haerlem heights, formerly the property of the Hon. Roger Morris" (see My 13, 1765), is offered for sale by Anthony L. Bleecker (see F 1). It is described in the advertisement as "distant 10 miles from New York, containing about 130 acres of good arable pasture and meadow land, including 5 acres of best salt meadow. The land . . . extends across the Island from river to river, and from the advantage of a communication by water on either side, and the easy transportation of manure from the city may be brought to any state of improvement required." As the residence (which was built in 1765) is the only one still standing on Manhattan Island which has survived practically intact, from so early a period, the description of it, as presented in this old advertisement, is given below in full: Mar. 1

"On the premises is a large Dwelling House, built in the modern stile, with taste and elegance: It has in front a portico, supported by pillars, embellished and finished in character; a large hall thro' the centre; a spacious dining room on the right, with an alcove, closets, and a convenient pantry and store room adjoining, and beyond these, a light easy mahogany stair case. On the left is a handsome parlour, and a large back room, particularly adapted and fitted for a nursery. A passage from the rear of the hall leads to an oblong octagon room, about 32 feet by 22, with six sash windows, marble chimney pieces, and lofty airy cieling. On the second floor are seven bed chambers, four with fire places and marble hearths; and a large hall communicating with a gallery under the portico, and from which there is a most inviting prospect. On the upper floor are five lodging rooms, three of which have fire places; and at the top of the house is affixed an electrical conductor. Underneath the building are a large commodious kitchen and laundry, a wine cellar, store room, kitchen pantry, sleeping apartments for servants, and a most complete dairy room, the floor a solid flat rock, and which with common attention to cleanliness cannot fail to render the place constantly cool and sweet.

"There are also on the premises a large barn, and most excellent coach house and stables. The buildings have been rather neglected of late, and will want some repair, but are in some other respects substantially firm, sound and good.

"The house has a southern prospect, and being situated on rising ground at the narrowest part of York island commands an extended view of the Hudson and the opposite range of lofty perpendicular rocky clifts that bound its western shore, of the east river, Harlem river, Hellgate, the sound many miles to the eastward, and the shipping that are constantly passing and repassing those waters. In front is seen the city of New-York, and the high hills on Satten Island, distant more than 20 miles. To the left, Long-Island, Westchester, Morrissania, and the village of Haerlem, with its beautiful level, cultivated surrounding fields, exhibit a variety of the most picturesque and pleasing views; in short, Haerlem Heights, affords perhaps a prospect as extensive varied and delightful as any to be met with in the United States; and considering its healthy, desirable situation, the ample accommodation of the buildings, its proper distance from town, the excellent road that leads to it, and the many other attendant advantages cannot fail to strike the observant beholder as an eligible retreat for a gentleman fond of rural amusements and employment, and who wishes to pass the summer months with pleasure and comfort."—Daily Adv., Mr 2, 1792. See also Pl. 167-a, Vol. III. The place was sold on Sept. 25, 1793 (q.v.).

The directors of the "Tammanial Tontine" resolve "That all shares . . . on which the second payment is not made by the 1st day of April next, . . . be forfeited to the association."—Daily Adv., Mr 8, 1792. An elaborate prospectus, entitled The Plan of the New York Tammanial Tontine Association, was pub- 8

1792 lished in this year. The Association, though auspiciously inaugu-
Mar. rated, failed at this time, and a Tammany Hall was not built until 8 1811.—Kilroe, 189–91.

12 The common council orders that a "recommendation" from the board to the inhabitants, "to clear the Ice out of the Kennels in the Streets that the side Walks may not be overflowed," be published in the newspapers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 700.

" John Watts, in behalf of the committee of merchants superintending the erection of the Tontine Coffee House, on the north-west corner of Wall and Water Sts., petitions the common council for permission "to add to the said Building a Piazza to extend over the foot Walk in the Street." Referred to street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 700. On May 11, the board agreed to the committee report that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted, "so far as to allow them to erect a Piazza to the said Building of six feet in breadth along Wall Street."—Ibid., I: 715. See also L.M.R.K., III: 981, and Pl. 69, Vol. I. See, further, Mr 12.

" There is read to the common council a letter from Hon. John Jay, "submitting to the Board the Power of laying out & regulating Streets through his Land on Great George Street in such manner as they shall judge to be for the public convenience," and also offering, if the board shall think it expedient "to make a Canal from the fresh Water Pond to the North River, to release as much of his Land as may be required for that purpose and for Streets." Referred to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 701. This appears to be the original suggestion which eventually materialized in the making of Canal St. For the next records pertaining to the subject, see F 15 and 22, Mr 14, and S 26, 1796. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 560.

" The improvements at the Battery being incomplete, the common council orders that the committee in charge report to the board what further improvements are necessary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 701. On May 25, the order was renewed.—Ibid., I: 719. On June 11, Ald. Stoutenburgh made a verbal report on the subject, and the board directed that the committee "take order for making the said Improvements & Repairs accordingly."—Ibid., I: 723.

" "A Petition from the Neighborhood of the Oswego Market for permission to extend the Roof of that Building over the side Walk in Maiden Lane to accommodate the Country People" is granted by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 702. For its situation (second site), see L. M. R. K., III: 959.

14 The legislature passes "An Act to incorporate the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen of the City of New York, for charitable Purposes." The incorporation is to run to April (first Monday), 1812.—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 26 (Greenleaf, II: 414); Annals of the Gen. Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen (1882), 22–23. The charter, by-laws, rules of order, and list of members were published as a handbook in 1798. On April 3, 1811, the society was re-incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1811), chap. 113 (34th sess.). This act was amended on Jan. 26, 1821 (ibid., 1821, chap. 15, 44th sess.), and Feb. 18, 1833 (ibid., 1833, chap. 27). For the founding of this society, see N 17, 1785.

21 At a meeting held at Corre's Hotel (69 Broadway) the "merchants and dealers in stocks" pass a resolution that "on and after the 21st of April next they will not attend any sale of stocks at Public Auction," and they appoint a committee "to provide a proper room for them to assemble in, and to report such regulations relative to the mode of transacting their business, as in their opinion may be proper."—Diary, Mr 23, 1792. This makes a second important step in the development of a stock exchange. See Ja 15, and My 17.

26 Business speculation leads to failures and bad times. The failure of Wm. Duer is followed by that of several others.—Dunlap's Am. Daily Adv., Mr 29, 1792. See also ibid., Ap 7, 17, 21, 25, My 5, 1792.

" No amputation is permitted in the almshouse without consent of the commissioners. A record of this date shows this to be one of the "Standing rules." Permission is given by the commissioners, in case of a negro lad, "landed from on board a Portugees Vessel now in our port" with his feet "frozen off," for the "Amputation of both his legs."—Minutes of the Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell, 1791–1797 (MS.), 22.

27 The legislature passes "An Act to regulate the Practice of Physic and Surgery, within the City and County of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 37 (Greenleaf, II: 425). This act was superseded on March 23, 1797, by "An Act to regulate the Practice of Physic and Surgery in this State."—Ibid. (1797), Mar. 27 chap. 45 (Webster, III: 265).

Congress passes "An Act establishing a Mint, and regulating Apr. 2 the Coins of the United States."—Laws of U. S. (1792), chap. 16. See also Hist. of Am. Coinage, by D. K. Watson (1899); The Early Coins of Am., by Sylvester S. Crosby (1875).

The New York City branch of the Bank of the United States " opens at No. 5 Queen (Pearl) Street.—Hardenbrook, Financial N. Y., 141; Daily Adv., Mr 29, 1792.

Archibald M'Lean alters the title of his paper to New-York " Daily Gazette.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 404. See Ja 28, 1795.

The heirs of Hendrick Rutgers deliver to the common council " a map or survey, and a signed agreement, as "Proprietors of the Ground lying to the South of Cherry Street and North of the East River between Warren & Montgomery Streets in the seventh Ward," that Water St. will "be continued easterly in a direct Line through the Ground above mentioned so as to intersect Crown Point Street agreably to the above Plan;" 45 ft. in width "from the intersection of Water Street near Warren Street to Montgomery Street;" also that "Lombard Street" will be continued 45 ft. wide from Warren to Montgomery St. Agreed to and ordered filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 704–5.

The common council orders that pavements be laid in parts " of Greenwich, Crown, Little Queen, Thames, Great Dock, Little Dock, Front, Moore, and Broad Sts. Improvements were also made in several streets near Chatham Square.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 705 et seq.; 715, 741–42.

The legislature authorises the common council to fill in and 6 raise the tract of land, in the Fifth Ward, called "the Meadows," bounded "northerly by Chatham-street, southerly by the rear of the lots on the northerly side of Cherry-street, westerly by the rear of the lots on the easterly side of Queen-street, and easterly by Catharine-street." Five commissioners are appointed to supervise the work. The act also provides for continuing Roosevelt St. to the East River, and Frankfort St. to Queen St.—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 49 (Greenleaf, II: 447).

Samuel Green, of 15 Water St., exhibits a fire-escape which he 7 calls a "Patent Machine for safely conducting persons and effects from houses when on fire."—Daily Adv., Ap 7, 1792.

It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that M^r Robert Watts, Doctor 9
[Wm. Samuel] Johnson, M^r [Robert C.] Livingston, M^r [Hugh] Gaine and M^r [Theophylact] Bache be a Committee to confer with M^r Stuyvesant upon his Proposal for building a Church [St. Mark's] upon his Land."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Jl 8, 1793.

According to the following advertisement, the buildings on " the land purchased by the Tontine Ass'n, on the north side of Wall St. running west from Water St., were torn down soon after their purchase (see summary under D 1, 1791): "For sale, The materials of the three houses at the corner of Wall and Water Street, on the ground where the Tontine Coffee-house is to be erected. The purchaser to break down and remove the buildings, for which purpose fifteen days will be allowed; apply to David Grim. If not disposed of at private sale by Monday the 23^d inst. then to be sold at auction."—Daily Adv., Ap 13, 1792. The building on the corner was the old Merchants' Coffee House, erected prior to 1738, but abandoned as a tavern in 1772 when the new Merchants' Coffee House was erected on the opposite cross-corner.—See L. M. R. K., III: 979; also descrip. of Pl. 69, I: 452–54. See, further, My 15.

A law is passed for "laying out, repairing, and improving certain 10 public Roads and Highways, within this State." This includes the post roads on "the island of New-York."—Laws of N. Y., (1792), chap. 60.

The legislature passes an act "for the better support of the 11 hospital in the city of New York." This authorises the state treasurer to pay to the society of the hospital "the sum of two thousand pounds annually, for and during the term of five years, to be computed from the first day of February last, which sum . . . shall become chargeable upon the duty laid . . . on sales at vendue."—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 67. This act was repealed on March 31, 1795 (q. v.).

By an "Act to encourage Literature, by Donations to Columbia " College and to the several Academies in the State," the legislature grants to the trustees of Columbia College, for the use of the institution, £1,500, "for the purpose of enlarging its library;" £200

1792 Apr. 11 "for a chemical apparatus;" £1,200 "for the purpose of building a wall necessary to support the grounds of the College;" £5,000 "for the purpose of erecting a hall and an additional wing to the College pursuant to the original plan of the institution;" £750 annually for five years for salaries of additional professors. The board of regents is also granted £1,500 annually for five years.—Laws of N. Y. (1792), chap. 69. See also Dunlap's Am. Daily Adv., Ap 30, 1792.

18 A number of men and boys, including negroes, assemble in front of the jail, in the evening, break the lamps at the gate, and otherwise behave in a riotous manner. On the following day, the common council published a notice recommending that the inhabitants "be vigilant in suppressing" such disorderly assemblages, and that persons who have children, apprentices, or servants, restrain them from going out at night.—N. Y. Jour., Ap 19, 1792.

30 The common council passes an ordinance for paving Murray St. from Great George to "Chappel" St., and another for "digging out" Chambers, "Read," and Barley Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 709.

" Dr. Nicholas Romaine, having petitioned the common council "for the use of a Room in the City Hall to deliver Lectures," the board permits him "to use the lower Room in the Southeast Angle of the City Hall during the pleasure of this Board, at such time as it may not be occupied by the Uranian Society or required for public Use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 709. This room later became the town clerk's office.—See F 18 and Mr 25, 1793.

" Thos. Barrow's itemized bill for making frames for the pictures of the president and governor, and for "painting the plates and Hatts for the Fire wardens," for a total of £135:2:1, endorsed "filed 30th April 1792," is preserved in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room. Payment was made on May 1.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 710. Mr. Barrow was a dealer in prints.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), II: 157.

May 1 The common council orders "that a Block be sunk in place of the Bridge at Pecks Slip and that three Blocks be sunk in place of the Bridges at the Corporation Wharf North River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 710. From references in the minutes to these "blocks," they appear to have been somewhat similar to cofferdams, or frameworks of logs, sunk with stones, and connected by bridges, thus forming wharves or piers. See also My 23, 1796.

" The common council grants permission to Mayor Varick "to make Areas & Vaults under Kings [Pine] Street and the Broad Way at his House now erecting at the Corner of those Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 710. The rear of this lot is now No. 6 Pine St. For Varick's residence, "Tusculum," acquired after his retirement as mayor, see Ag 7, 1820.

7 The board approves of a proposal "to abolish the plan of the Workhouse Department in Bridewell & to return to the Alms House such poor Persons as are of decent Characters."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 711. This was repealed on Dec. 6 (q.v.).

" "A Petition of several of the Inhabitants at Pecks Slip setting forth that the Market House is become useless and tends greatly to obstruct the Street and praying an order for its removal was read & referred to the Street Comtee."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 712. See Jl 22, 1793.

" The common council grants a request from the president and directors "of the Branch of the National Bank in this City" that a city watchman "be stationed during the Night at the said Bank." The board also orders "that two additional Watchmen be employed every Night accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 712.

" The common council grants a petition of Abijah Hammond for permission "to have an Area & a Vault under the Street at his House building in Great George Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 712.

" The common council considers a petition from Thos. Ten Eyck which sets forth "that he is about to erect a Store House on a Lot of new made Ground lately filled in and gained out of the East River situate on the Corner of Front Street & Coenties Slip," and that "it will not be proper to erect the said Building of Brick or Stone or to cover it with Slate or Tile." He asks that, as allowed by the fire prevention statute (see Mr 24, 1791), the board will appoint five persons to view the ground. Granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 712–13. Other examples of the application of this law of 1791 follow:

May 7 On May 25, Benj. S. Judah made such a request concerning a building he proposed to erect in Little Water St.; this also was granted.—Ibid., I: 718. On June 11, likewise, Coles & Underhill petitioned regarding a store they desired to erect "upon the southwardly side of Front Street between Coenties & that old Slip," where the ground was "not sufficiently firm for the said Building to be of Brick." They requested permission "to build the same of Wood except the Front which they wish Brick."—Ibid., I: 723. Other examples appear in the minutes on July 2, Aug. 20, 29, etc.

The building law requiring such inspection of the ground—that of March 24, 1791 (q.v.)—see Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 46—was superseded by a new act of the same title ("for the more effectual prevention of fires and to regulate buildings in the city of New York"), passed April 8, 1796, which required that building construction should conform to the regulations prescribed in the act, under heavy penalty for failure to comply; but dispensing with inspectors to examine the ground in advance.—Ibid. (1796), chap. 55. See also F 3, 1794.

11 Because of inconvenience arising from there being more than one street with the same name in the city, the common council orders that the names of two streets laid out on the lands of Hendrick Rutgers, deceased, be changed, viz:—the name of the street called Warren to be changed to Clinton, and that called William to the name of Bedlow (the present Madison St.); and on account of some doubt as to whether the name of the street in the rear of Trinity Church was intended to be Lumber or Lombard, it is ordered that the said street in future be called Lumber (the present Church St.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 716–17.

15 David Grim, in behalf of the Tontine Ass'n, publishes a notice that he will call upon the subscribers to "the New-York Tontine Coffee-house" (see Mr 30, 1791) for a payment of £15 per share, on account.—Daily Adv., My 15, 1792. On May 29, the next year, he issued a similar notice, "in order to pay the bills, and compleat the building." At the same time, he asked for the bills of persons having demands against the association. His address was No. 8 Little Queen (Cedar) St.—Ibid., My 29, 1793. On July 18, 1795, still acting for "the committee for building the New-York Tontine Coffee-House," he requested payment of unpaid subscriptions.—Ibid., Jl 18, 1795. See, further, Je 5.

17 The "Brokers for the Purchase and Sale of Public Stock" sign a written agreement that they "will not buy or sell from this day for any person whatsoever, any kind of Public Stock at a less rate than one-quarter per cent. Commission on the Specie value," and that they will "give a preference to each other" in their negotiations.—Eames, The New York Stock Exchange, 14, citing the earliest record in the possession of the Exchange. See Ja 15, Mr 21.

This agreement among stock brokers established the organization that later developed into the New York Stock Exchange. From 1792 to 1817, the brokers dealt together under various agreements and in various places, the street dealings being usually near a buttonwood tree which stood in front of the present dividing line between 68 and 70 Wall St. After the completion of the Tontine Coffee House, in 1793 (q.v.), on the north-west corner of Wall and Water Sts., the brokers for a while met in that building. In 1817, (q.v.) they adopted a constitution under the name of the New York Stock and Exchange Board. They occupied a room in Washington Hall in 1819 (q.v.). When the first Merchants Exchange, at the corner of Wall and Hanover Sts., was completed, in 1827 (q.v.), the business formerly conducted by merchants, brokers, and various commercial bodies, in the Tontine Coffee House, was transferred to the new exchange, and the Coffee House was divided up into shops and offices. The Exchange Board secured a room in the Merchants Exchange at that time.—Ibid., 14–18. See also 1817, 1827, and 1865.

18 Authorised by the legislature on Feb. 18 (q.v.), the common council orders that £2,400 be raised "for compleating Improvements at the Battery & about the Governmt House & making Improvements in front of the Goal Alms House & Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 717.

23 John Youle, proprietor of the "New-York East River Air Furnace," advertises that he "has removed from his former residence at Beekman's slip, to nearly opposite his Furnace, at Corlaers-Hook, just beyond the ship-yards; where he carries on the Cast Iron Foundery, In all its various branches."—Diary, My 23, 1792.

25 "Ordered that the Street Committee cause a Survey to be made

1792 May 25 of the streets in the Meadow to the end that the Commissioners named in the Act of the Legislature on that subject [see Ap 6] may be enabled to judge of the Regulations intended & to proceed to the Business committed to them by the Law."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 719. See Je 11; S 3. Cf. Ap 22, 1793.

" The common council approves a report of the street committee for regulating Frankfort, Jacob, and Ferry Sts.; Gold St. from Beekman to Frankfort St.; William and King George Sts. from Beekman to Thomas St.; Gold St. from Beekman to John St.; Cliff St. from Beekman to Golden Hill; and Fair St. from Gold to Cliff St. An ordinance is passed for the new paving of these streets, according to the regulations reported.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 720. See, further, S 3.

29 "Vaux Hall," at the lower end of Warren St., is again offered for sale (see D 30, 1784). "The lot is 120 feet front on Warren street, has 15 fire places . . . The stable is 35 feet in front, on Chambers street, and 21 feet deep." This and a building in the rear were built two years ago.—N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., My 29, 1792. A similar advertisement appeared again on Feb. 8, 1794. The price was £2,200.—Daily Adv., F 8, 1794. See also "Vauxhall Tavern and Garden" in L. M. R. K., III: 981.

June 4 "A Petition from a number of the Inhabitants in the vicinity of the Exchange praying that, that Building may be removed" is referred by the common council to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 721. On Aug. 20, the committee had not come to a decision; whereupon, the board proceeded to consider the expediency of taking down the building, but voted against it.—Ibid., I: 736.

" Nicholas Denise announces that he "has just established, though at a great expence and under M. Boucher's directions, a very convenient Bathing House, having eight rooms, in every one of which Baths may be had with either fresh, salt, or warm Water . . . The said place is at his house called Bellevue, on the East river; prices fixed at 4s. per person, and attendance at the house at any time."—Daily Adv., Je 5, 1793.

5 The corner-stone of "the New York Tontine Coffee House" is laid at the north-west corner of Wall and Water Sts. John Broome, chairman of the committee, "deposited a handsome sum of money in the hands of Messrs. Moore and Robinson, the master builders, for the purpose of regaling the workmen in different stages of the building. The committee and gentlemen present then repaired to Mrs. Bradford's where they partook of an elegant cold collation."—Daily Adv., Je 6, 1792. The building is to be "50 ft. front by 70 ft. rear, and four stories high."—N. Y. Jour., Je 6, 1792. See also descrip. of Pl. 69, I: 453. The original invitation, dated June 4, addressed to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty, to attend the ceremony, written by John Broome, chairman of the Tontine committee, is preserved in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. On the first anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone (June 5, 1793), a dinner was held in the house itself.—Daily Adv. and Diary, Je 7, 1793. This earliest record of the use of the building indicates approximately when it was finished. See, further, Ja 5, 1793.

6 "A Federal Republican" contributes to the press a long letter denouncing the principles and methods of the Democratic Society of New York.—Daily Adv., Je 6, 1792.

9 A street plan is prepared showing the proprietors and tenants of lots on Murray St. from Great George to Chapel St.—The original MS., purchased at the Holden sale (item 1803), is in the N. Y. H. S.

11 Ald. Stoutenburgh, of the committee on repairs and improvements at the Battery and government house, makes a report, and is ordered by the common council to proceed with such work as is immediately necessary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 723.

" The common council refers to a committee a petition of Theodorus Brower "to hire the Ferry from this City to Bulls landing."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 723. Presumably, this landing was the same as that of the Bull's Ferry.—Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 941–42.

" The common council orders that "the Committee appointed to treat with the Exrs of Mrs Barclay decd as to the purchasing of the Meadow lying between the Corporation Lot and the fresh Water pond" purchase as much of the meadow as they deem expedient and on the best terms they can; also that this committee direct that the pond "be staked off so as to prevent encroachments thereon."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 724. On July 16, the clerk presented to the board a release from the executors of Mary Barclay "of a piece of the Swamp adjoining the fresh Water Pond." It was approved and ordered deposited in the clerk's office.—Ibid., I: 730–31. June 11 13 Robert Troup writes from New York to Chief Justice Jay, who is on his eastern circuit, regarding the canvass of votes for the governorship: "The Clintonian canvassers by fraud and violence have excluded you from the Government. The votes of Otsego, Tioga, and Clinton Counties have been rejected. . . . This violent and corrupt procedure has occasioned a great ferment in the City and the people are determined not to let the matter pass over in silence . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, III: 433–34. In spite of the prevalent excitement, Jay's public speeches and private correspondence show "the unusual spectacle of a popular leader striving to moderate the ardour of his followers, all burning to redress his wrongs; and impressing on them reverence for the laws, and courtesy and kindness towards his and their opponents.

"By many of the public meetings held at this time, Mr. Jay was declared to be the rightful governor of the State; and there can be little doubt that, had he thought proper to assume the exercise of the office, there would not have been wanting many ready to support his claims. It was fortunate for the peace of the State that he was actuated by principles the reverse of those which too often govern the aspirants for political power; and also, that the meeting of the Legislature, to which the people looked for redress, was still distant.

"The course pursued by Mr. Jay prevented any illegal ebullition of popular feeling. Governor Clinton was sworn into office, and the government was permitted to proceed without interruption."—Life of John Jay, by his son, William Jay, I: 293–94. See Jl 10, and N 6.

15 A report of the city treasurer, published in full as a tabulated balance-sheet, shows payments made, from the funds derived from the tax granted March 18, 1791, for maintenance of the poor, and other contingent expenses of the city and county of New York, and for improving the grounds near the government house. The expenditures for the last object, from July 8, 1791, to June 12, 1792, totalled £3,915:4:5. Attested on Oct. 8, it was published in the Daily Adv. (Supp.), N 5, 1792.

" A street plan is prepared showing the names of proprietors, tenants, etc., on Crown, Thames, and Little Queen Sts., between Broadway and Greenwich St.—See the original MS., from the Holden sale (item 1819), in the N. Y. H. S. Evidently this was prepared for the purpose of laying assessments for regulating these streets, as, on July 5, specifications were published and proposals invited by the assessors for this purpose.—Daily Adv., Jl 5, 1792.

16 A letter from John Cozine to the mayor is laid before the common council, setting forth "that a great number of Citizens are anxious to have a public Meeting;" that "It is supposed there is no place in the City, large or secure enough to contain with convenience the Persons that will attend it;" and that he is "requested to ask of the Corporation the use of the large Room in the City Hall on Monday Evening next" (June 18). The board orders "that Mr Couzine be informed that the Magistrates have Objections to any public Meeting of the Citizens in the City Hall in the Evening But that the Board do agree that the Citizens be permitted to have the use of the lower large Room in the City Hall on Monday next between the Hours of twelve at Noon & four in the Afternoon."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 725.

25 "Belvidere House, Near Corlaers-Hook, being almost finished, the proprietors are ready to receive proposals from any person properly qualified to keep it as a Hotel and Tavern: A bowling green is in front, and stables, wood house, and other necessary offices in the rear of the house, which consists of an elegant ball-room and a club-room, each forty-six feet by twenty-five, two parlours, eight bedchambers, a bar room, two kitchens, two wine cellars, two pantries, an ice-house, a vaulted larder and servants rooms.—Apply to Daniel Badcock, Robert Kemble, Wm. Rogers, Thomas White, Carlisle Pollock, Committee."—Diary, Je 25, 1792.

The Belvedere House was built by thirty-three gentlemen who composed the Belvedere Club, and was situated on the banks of the East River, in a beautiful location, the site being now bounded by Montgomery, Clinton, Cherry, and Monroe Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 976; Liber Deeds, LXXIII: 50–52. It was opened by John 1792 Avery on May 20, 1793 (q.v.). For a detailed description of the June place, see Aug., 1794, and Pl. 60-a, Vol. I. The statement in Man.

25 Com. Coun. (1853), 452, that it was built "many years before the commencement of the revolutionary war" is incorrect.

" The common council permits the "St Coecilia Society" to use the common council chamber on Saturday evenings.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 725.

26 The managers of the city dispensary, having received from Europe four sets of apparatus for resuscitating "the apparently dead" from drowning, asphyxiation, etc., place them in private dwelling houses in different parts of town, "where they will be delivered to any reputable house-keeper, who shall take the trouble to call for them in case of accidents."—Daily Adv., Je 26, 1792.

July A "tremendous westerly tornado" strikes New York and 1 causes considerable damage to houses and trees. It was reported that 29 persons lost their lives in this neighbourhood, principally by the over-turning of boats.—N. Y. Jour., Jl 4, 1792. A large folio broadside, printed in four columns, with cuts of 20 coffins at the top, and two sailing vessels at the sides, was published this year in New York, the text being, in part, as follows: "A True and Particular Narrative of the Late Tremendous Tornado, or Hurricane, At Philadelphia and New York, on Sabbath-Day, July 1, 1792. When several pleasure boats were lost in the Harbor. [Here follows a long account of the disaster.] Tell this not in Massachusetts, publish it not in the Streets of Connecticut, lest their sober minded young men and Maidens should bitterly reproach thee in the Day of thy calamity . . ." A copy of this scarce broadside was sold with the Sturges library at The Anderson Galleries, Nov. 20, 1922. Evans mentions a Boston edition. See also Nuggets of Am. History, described in catalogue pub. by the Am. Art Galleries of sale of books, etc., Nov. 19 and 20, 1917.

4 "The Portrait of Mr. Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, painted for the Citizens of New-York by Mr. Trumbull, has been received, and for the present, placed in the City Hall . . . this elegant specimen of Mr. Trumbull's abilities, is reckoned one of the finest productions of his pencil."—Daily Adv., Jl 4, 1792.

9 The common council orders "that the Battery Committee take down the Barracks & use the Materials on the Improvements making there."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 730. See "Lower Barracks" in L. M. R. K., III: 923. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 419.

" Trinity vestry orders "that the Ball intended for the Steeple of Trinity Church, which was not made Use of, be sold."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

10 A committee, "appointed at a meeting of the Friends of Liberty," attended by "a very great and respectable concourse of citizens, on horseback and in carriages," proceeds to Harlem Heights, where they meet Chief-Justice Jay, on his return from the eastern circuit, and escort him into town. "When the procession arrived at the two-mile stone, they were received by loud huzzas from a very great number of citizens on foot assembled at that place. As they approached the town, at the head of Chatham street a federal salute was fired and a painting exhibited, on which was written, 'John Jay, Governor by the Voice of the People.'

"The procession moved through Queen, Wall, Broad, Beaver streets, and Broadway, to Mr. Jay's house, amidst repeated huzzas and plaudits from his fellow citizens. At his own door he was conducted into his house by the Committee, where he was affectionately received by his family and friends. Before he entered his house, he attempted to say something on the occasion expressive of his feelings, and to make an acknowledgment for the partiality shewn him, but the loud and repeated plaudits of the People prevented his being heard.

"In several conspicuous places flags were displayed; a salute was fired at the Battery, and the bells were rung in all the Churches in the city."—Daily Adv., Jl 11, 1792.

13 A committee of New York citizens (Nicholas Cruger, chairman), in an address, congratulates Chief Justice Jay on his attitude toward the irregular canvass of votes in the recent election of governor, saying in part: ". . . Whether they [the friends of liberty] examine your conduct as a Member of the General Congress at the most trying periods of the late war, and of the Convention which framed the Constitution of this State, or consider your agency in negotiating the treaty which secured to America the blessings of peace, liberty and safety—they find a continued display of abilities and virtue which will hand your name down to remote posterity as one of the illustrious defenders of the rights of Man."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, III: 441. July 13

In his reply, Jay said in part: ". . . Such is our Constitution, and such are the means of preserving order and good government, with which we are blessed, that, while our citizens remain virtuous, free, and enlightened, few political evils can occur, for which remedies perfectly effectual, and yet perfectly consistent with general tranquility, cannot be found and applied . . ."—Ibid., III: 443. See also Je 13.

More than 200 "Friends to Liberty in this city" give an "elegant entertainment at the City Tavern" to John Jay. It is called a "feast of Freedom and Friendship." A band played at intervals during the dinner, and 15 toasts "were drank under a discharge of cannon, accompanied by the shouts and huzzas of the people." When Mr. Jay retired, he was accompanied home by a committee. "After Mr. Jay had retired the company drank, [to the toast] 'John Jay, Governor by the Voice of the People:—Three Cheers.' When the committee returned, the whole company broke up, and went in procession to Mr. Jay's house; and after giving him Three Cheers, they dispersed."—Daily Adv., Jl 20, 1792. 19

In 1794, F 3, £100; Ap 14, £100; Jl 14, £300; Ag 25, £150; N 3, £200; D 15, £200.—Ibid., II: 72, 89, 96, 114, 118. For paving, see Je 1, 1795. 30

The common council orders that the committee on improvements at the Battery "appropriate such of the Materials of the Barracks as may be necessary for the erection of a Watch House at the City Hall," and report a plan for the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 733. The watch-house was erected at the s. e. cor. of Wall St., on the site of No. 1 Broad St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 973. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 419. See Je 3, 1793 (q.v.). "

The common council appoints a committee to direct the making of "a Copper Pump for drawing Water out of the River in Cases of fire and thereby preventing the disagreable necessity of the Inhabitants going down into the Slips & handing the Water up in Buckets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 733–34. On Jan. 28, 1793, it was ordered that this pump "be deposited in the Engine House in the Rear of the City Hall." At the same time, James Kip and his son Richard were appointed firemen and given the management of this pump (ibid., I: 767), and Wm. J. Elsworth was paid £17:13:6 for it (ibid., I: 768). "

The common council appoints Ald. Van Zandt a committee "to locate about twenty Acres of the Common Lands to be reserved as a pasture for the Milch Cows at the Alms House," and purchase materials to fence it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 734. See O 22. "

Ald. Stoutenburgh, of the committee on improvements at the Battery, produces "a Plan of the Ground with a Sketch of the manner in which the Committee contemplated to fence in the said Ground." It is approved by the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 739. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 419. 29

A committee of the common council having investigated the title of Joseph Smith to the house and ground at the Battery of Christopher Blundel, deceased, who received letters patent from the late Gov. Clinton, and had a good title for 99 years from 1752, it is ordered that the committee "conclude a bargain" with Mr. Smith, whose lowest price is £750.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 737, 739. The purchase is intended to help complete the Battery improvements. On Sept. 10, a bond was given to Smith for the payment of his price by May 1.—Ibid., I: 744. See also descrip. of Pl. 44, I: 348; and L. M. R. K., III: 948, 949. "

In France, from Sept. 2 to 5, the Jacobins broke open the prisons, and massacred about 1,200 adherents of the aristocracy, principally Royalists and Constitutionalists, including 100 priests. —Haydn, Dict. of Dates, 384. Sept. 2

The street committee reports to the common council that, in 3

1792 Sept. 3 obedience to the order of May 25 (q.v.), they have caused surveys to be made for the regulation "of the several Streets in the Meadows." These are approved by the board, and the specifications entered in full in the Minutes, as usual, for the regulation of Roosevelt, St. James, Chatham, Fayette, Oliver, Catharine, Bancker, and Rutgers Sts., and Batavia Lane. See O 2.

The board then passed an "Ordinance for the filling in with Earth and raising the Lots of Ground and Streets in the Tract of Land called the Meadows, in pursuance of the Statute passed the 6th April 1792 [q. v.]."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 741–43. The commissioners named in the act of April 6 did not act promptly, and, on Oct. 2, the common council requested that they proceed. —Ibid., I: 748. On March 8, 1793, however, a new regulation of these streets was substituted.—Ibid., I: 774–76.

6 The Lutheran Church council, having been informed "that Mr. [David] Grim our Treasurer would wish to hire the Old Church in Broadway for a Store," appoints a committee "to Let the above mentioned Church to Mr. Grim for one year at £28 pr Annum."—Lutheran Min. (MS.). Grim's lease of the church was renewed on Sept. 3, 1793, at the rate of £16, "he to keep the same in repair."—Ibid. See also Vol. I, p. 450. See, further, Ja 5, 1795.

10 The common council directs that the committee on repairs to public buildings "take order for the sinking of two Cisterns to receive the Rain Water from the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 745. See, further, Jl 22, 1793.

The "3d century of the discovery of America (alias Columbia)" 12 is celebrated by the "Tammany Society or Columbian Order." In the evening a monument "upwards of 14 feet in height, being well illuminated, and resembling black marble," is erected in the "great Wigwam" in memory of Columbus. The obelisk is adorned with scenes representing important events in the discoverer's life and with suitable inscriptions. An "elegant oration" is delivered by J. B. Johnstone, toasts are drunk, and patriotic songs are sung. —N. Y. Jour., S 29, O 13 and 17, 1792; Diary, O 19, 1792. See also Columbian Celebration of 1792, an address before the N. Y. H. " "On the 31st March, 1790 [q.v.], an act was passed by the Legislature of this state, authorizing Lewis Morris, or his assigns, to build a bridge across Haerlem river, from Haerlem to Morrissania, and for the term of sixty years, to receive certain tolls therein specified, as an equivalent for the expence attending the same. General Morris, anxious to give as immediate effect to an act as possible, which promises such public utility, proposes to the public the following plan:—The sum of £4000 to be raised by a tontine subscription, which it is thought will be amply sufficient to carry into execution this highly useful public undertaking. The survey of the river has been made, and an estimate of the expences attending the building of the bridge by the celebrated Stone, who computes that a sum less then the above will be enough. . . . The tontine is to consist of 106 shares of £40 each, which six shares over and above the requisite number, the proprietor proposes reserving to himself, without contributing to the building . . ."—Daily Adv., O 12, 1792. The street committee having procured "a quantity of Post & 22 Rails for the purpose of enclosing the Pasture in the Common Lands for the Cows of the Alms House" (see Jl 30), proposes that they "be used for the present to enclose the fields in front of the Alms House to protect the Trees intended to be planted there this Fall." It is ordered that the street committee take order for enclosing the Fields accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 754. See also N 5, 1792; My 31, 1834.

" The common council orders that the street committee "cause a Survey to be made of the Road contemplated to run from the Blooming Dale Road to the Heights of Harlem," and report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 754. This seems to be in approval of the Apthorpe petition of Feb. 17 (q.v.). See, further, My 14, 1793; Jl 13, 1795.

Nov. 5 The common council orders that the commissioners of the almshouse be authorised "to pull down the old Stable and to build another (using the Materials of the old as far as they will go) on such part of the Bridewell Ground as they shall judge expedient." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 756. For the new stable at the almshouse, see S 29, 1795.

" Payments made during this year, to Alderman Stoutenburgh or Mr. Carmer, toward the improvements at the Battery and government house, have been as follows: March 12, £155:17:4; June 25, £500; Aug. 6, £500; Sept. 10, £500; Nov. 5, £1,000,—total, £2,655: 17:4.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 702, 726, 735, 745, 756. This makes a grand total expense, since the beginning of this work, of £6,055:17:4.—See D 12, 1791; D 16, 1793.

6 The legislature convenes. Petitions pour in from all parts of the state on the subject of the canvass of the votes for governor in the preceding May and June (see Je 13). "A tedious investigation ensued, and it was soon discovered that in the lower House the 1792 Nov. 6 anti-federal party had a small majority." Their votes cleared the election canvassers of the charge of improper conduct. "This result . . . was received by the people without surprise, but with a feeling of disgust that, at the next election, prostrated the party [the anti-federalists] by whom it had been effected."—Life of John Jay, by his son, William Jay (1833), I: 294.

7 A proposed sale by private contract of the "Square on which the City Tavern stands" is announced. "This is one of the most desirable situations in this city, and may be improved to very great advantage. Its dimensions is one hundred and five feet fronting Broad Way, and about two hundred feet deep, bounded by a street on every side."—Daily Adv., Nov. 7, 1792. No suitable offer having been made for the property, the place was put up at public auction on Jan. 29, 1793.—Ibid., Ja 6, 1793. See also Ja 24, 1793.

12 The common council orders "that an Application be made to the Legislature for a Law to raise the Sum of £15000 by Tax for the support of the Poor & the other contingent Expences of this City the ensuing Year & the further Sum of £1000 for compleating the Improvements at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 757. No details of an estimate for this budget for 1793 are recorded. —Cf. Ja 6, 1794; Ja 5, 1795; Ja 25, 1796.

17 What appears to have been the forerunner of the modern washing-machine is mentioned as a "Washing Mill" in The Diary, N 17, 1792.

26 The ninth anniversary of the evacuation of the city by the British is celebrated on this day (instead of the 25th, which was Sunday) by the Tammany Society "in their great wigwam, with that good humour and hilarity, which is so conspicuous in the sons of freedom." One of the toasts at the Tammany dinner was: "May the Duke of Brunswick, in a rapid retreat, want time to grease a flagstaff." In explanation, the editor of the Journal states: "When the British evacuated New York, they were so mortified at striking the English standard at the fort, that in order to save their feelings from further disagreeable sensations, at the sight of the American stripes, they greased the flag staff, hoping by that low stratagem, to prevent its being displayed."—N. Y. Jour., D 5, 1792. See N 25, 1783.

A public dinner at the city's expense is held at Simmons' tavern on this anniversary of the evacuation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 764.

29 Wynant Van Zandt's account for making a well in Broad St. near the city hall, endorsed "filed" on this day, shows it cost £115:8:5.—From the original bill, audited, in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room.

Dec. 1 A notice, dated Nov. 29, is published, of "a general Hog Hunt throughout this city," to be held on Sat., Dec. 1, at 5 o'clock. "The Order of the Hunt is as follows: Every apprentice is to bring with him one large mastiff or other dog, . . . , and to attend at the Fly Market, in Water-street, precisely at 5 o'clock. The hunt will proceed down Water street, Little Dock street, &c., scour the ground near the Battery; after which 'tis to return by Great Dock-street, Queen street, up Maiden Lane and Broad Way to the Poor House, and Bridewell; where the hogs are to be deposited for the advantage of the poor and others, criminals or debtors. After this the huntsman will direct the course of the hunt agreeable to his best discretion. . . .

"It is thought the sport will be fine and in great plenty, as the Wild Hog is said to abound over most of the ground."—Diary, D 1, 1792. Doubtless the notice was intended as a piece of local pleasantry.

6 Two of the bridewell rooms are to be appropriated by the commissioners "as a Work House [see My 7] for such of the Alms House Inhabitants as they shall from time to time think proper to remove thither." This is done because the almshouse is so crowded that all the paupers cannot be accommodated.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 760. The need of a new and larger almshouse has become evident. See the action taken on Jan. 20, 1794.

10 "Upon the Petition of the Episcopal Church of S^{t} Peters Church in the Township of West Chester requesting the Corporation to give them the Sounding Board lately removed from the Pulpit in Trinity Church, Ordered . . . and as much of the Iron work belonging to it as they may judge proper."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

17 The eastern end of John Street was, at this time, still called Golden Hill Street (see L. M. R. K, III: 1001), as appears by a petition which Thomas Pearsall, the proprietor of "the ground fronting to Queen-street and Golden-Hill-street," submitted on this day to the legislature against granting a law "for widening the lower end" of this street.—Assemb. Jour., 16th Sess., 66. Dec. 17

The accounts for the paving of Copsey St. (State St.) show that earth from "the old Fort" was used for filling in; and for this an allowance of £150 is made.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 761. Dec. 28

A list of some furniture, etc., purchased for the government house in 1792 is prepared. On March 22, 1791 (q.v.), New York State had appropriated £800 for the purchase of furniture for the government house, and these articles, or many of them, were probably bought with this money. The list reads: —

The earliest tax-book of the comptroller's office still extant contains entries beginning in this year. It has been deposited for safekeeping in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., together with the tax-book of 1795–1799. —

1793 In this year, the fire department consisted of 20 engines, two — hook and ladder companies, 22 foremen, 13 assistants, and 318 men.—Costello, Our Firemen, 56.

— C. W. Janson, writing of his visit to New York at this time, said "I was informed, that a piece of ground in the park, which, seven years ago, was not worth fifty dollars, had been recently disposed of, for the purpose of building upon, for five hundred pounds, currency of the state, which is eight shillings to the dollar.

"The time of my arrival in New York was during the reign of terror in France; the baleful consequences of which were severely felt in America . . ."—The Stranger in Am. (1807), 93. See F 1.

— Soon after this date, Charles Balthazar Julien Févret de St. Mémin came to New York. Under the patronage of John R. Livingston, he studied and developed his great talent in art. He introduced, with some improvements, the engraving of portraits by means of the "physionotrace," a machine designed exactly to reproduce on a reduced scale the human profile. These portraits became very popular, and he travelled from North to South, producing about 800 of these small plates. Other than these portraits, St. Mémin made views of the remarkable places he visited, including a view of New York from Long Island (Pl. 61, Vol. I), a view of the city and harbour from Mt. Pitt (Pl. 62, Vol. I), a drawing of the "Clermont" on the Hudson (Pl. 78, Vol. I), and a panoramic view of New York from Brooklyn Heights (Pl. 80-a, Vol. III).—Guigard, Notice historique sur la vie et les traveaux de M. Févret de Saint-Mémin (rare brochure in N. Y. P. L.); descrip. of Pl. 62, I: 440–41. See also Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 231–32; II: 453; and Pl. 56, Vol. I. See, further, 1797.

— From this time until 1803, John Roberts was working in New York. He was the engraver of the so-called Taylor-Roberts plan of New York City (see Pl. 64, Vol. I). He was a versatile genius, being equally skilled in miniature painting, engraving, music, and mechanics.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 115–17; Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 223. A list of his engravings is printed in ibid., II: 446–47.

— John Scoles, an engraver of portraits and subject plates, was continuously in New York from 1793 to 1844. He worked in both line and stipple, but with indifferent success. He engraved many of the views appearing in the N. Y. Magazine in 1793–96. At times Scoles united bookselling with engraving, according to the directories.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 242. There is a long list of his engravings in ibid., II: 459–71, and more are mentioned in Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 232–38. Three of his views, St. Paul's Church, the Government House, and Belvedere House, are reproduced as Pls. 54-b, 55-b, and 60-a, Vol. I.

— In this year, Walter Robertson, a painter of miniatures and oil portraits, arrived in New York from Dublin. He painted a miniature of Washington and copied several portraits by Stuart.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 118.

— The original bills for services performed by Casimir Th. Goerck, Evert Bancker, and John McComb, respectively, the city surveyors, for various periods from 1786 to 1793, are at present filed in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room.

Jan. John Buel begins the publication of the Evening Mercury. This
1 was a quarto of four pages, issued every week-day afternoon, immediately after four o'clock. The last issue located is that of Jan. 3, 1793.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 409.

5 At a meeting of subscribers to the Tontine Coffee House, held at the coffee-house, a resolution is adopted "That as the sum subscribed for building the Tontine Coffee-House, in consequence of the advanced prices of materials and labour, has proved insufficient to complete the same, that the committee appointed to superintend that building be authorized to collect from the subscribers, such further sums, as may be requisite to finish the building in a neat and economical manner, . . ."

It is also resolved that the "standing furniture required for the Coffee House" shall be supplied at the tenant's own expense (see Ja 9), at a cost not exceeding $2,000.—Daily Adv., Ja 23, 1793.

9 The committee of the Tontine Coffee House publish a notice, signed by David Grim, that the subscribers have authorised the committee to let the building from the first of May to a person Jan.
"qualified to keep it in a manner satisfactory to the public." 9
Applications must be made before Jan. 25. The committee announces that no subscriber shall be permitted to hold more than four shares of stock.—Daily Adv., Ja 9, 1793. See Ap 2.

The City Tavern (at 115 Broadway) is offered for sale. The 24 property is described as 100 ft. in front on Broadway, and 150 ft. in length.—Daily Adv., Jan. 24, 1793. A summary of events connected with changes later made in this property is as follows: On March 23, 1793, John Peter De Lancey and wife, for the sum of $6,000, conveyed the old City Tavern to nine gentlemen in trust for the subscribers of the "N. Y. Tontine Hotel and Assembly Room."—Liber Deeds, XLIX: 233; Bayles, Old Taverns, 371.

In November of this same year, Nicholas Cruger, chairman of the committee in charge of the work, offered a premium of twenty guineas for the best plan of a new building to be erected here.—Daily Adv., N. 25, 1793. Work on the new hotel proceeded slowly. In May, 1795, James Wilson, out of regard for his "reputation as an architect," published a statement to the effect that "the plan on which the Hotel and Public Rooms, in Broad-way is now building" was not his (see My 19, 1795). Although we find no adverse criticism of the new hotel in the newspapers of the period, it is evident that such criticism existed.—See Daily Adv., My 20, 1795. The architect was evidently Wilson.

The first reference found to the opening of the hotel is on Feb. 22, 1797 (q. v.), when a ball was given in the assembly-room of the new tavern. The statement made in Vol. I, p. 450, that the hotel was erected in 1792 is therefore an error.

Apparently, under its early management the hotel was not a financial success; for, on Feb. 6, 1800 (q. v.), the premises, occupying the entire block on Broadway between Thames and Cedar Sts., were advertised for sale. Mr. Weeks, a builder, was the purchaser, paying only $48,000 for a building which cost over $100,000 in its unfinished state.—See N 20, 1801.

John Lovett, formerly proprietor of the hotel at 69 Broadway (Daily Adv., N 13, 1799), announced the opening of the City Hotel under his management in the spring of 1801.—See Je 15, 1802 (q. v.). He remained until the spring of 1807, when Dusseaussoir became manager; he was succeeded in turn by John D. Fay and Solomon D. Gibson, in 1809. In 1810, Gibson became sole proprietor.—See Je 15, 1810. Chester Jenings took over the hotel in 1817, and altered the building somewhat; and, in 1838, Gardner and Packer undertook the management, hoping to "revive its former reputation." For a view of the City Hotel as it appeared at that time, see Pl. 125, Vol. III, and description. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, III: 421.

John Jacob Astor bought the premises on May 1, 1828 (q. v.). The hotel was demolished in the spring of 1849, and a block of shops was erected on the site.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 27, 1849; L. M. R. K., III: 977. For view, see frontispiece of city directory of 1796.

The common council orders that the committee on improve- 28
ments at the Battery "cause an Iron Railing to be put on the circular Breast Work in the Street in front of the Government House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 767. See also descrip. of Pl. 55-b, I: 417.

On petition by the firemen of engine No. 4, the common council 4 orders "that the said Engine be removed from the City Hall to the Engine House provided in front of the Theatre in John Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 769.

A published notice informs the public that "Proposals will be 5 received 'till the 1st day of March next, for raising the tower, and erecting the Steeple for the New Brick Church in this city" (see F 25, 1766).—Daily Adv., F 5, 1793. See Mr 14. The church, after the steeple had been added, is shown on Pl. 72-a, Vol. I.

The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church order that the 8 committee of repairs "be directed to furnish the Gallery of the New [Brick] Church with a sufficient Number of Candle-sticks."—Proceedings of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II.

Gerardus Hardenbrook, Jr. offers for sale "that excellent 9
Spring called the Tea Water-Pump, which has for many years supplied the city, and the shipping in the harbor, together with two Houses a Stable and three large Lots of Ground—a Lot of Ground

11 Trinity vestry directs its committee of repairs "to Procure Plans and Estimates for a Charity School."—Trin. Min. (MS.). These estimates were presented to the vestry Mr 11 (q.v.).

13 Congress unanimously re-elects Washington president, and, by a plurality of votes, re-elects Adams vice-president.—Annals of Cong., 1793, 2d cong. (pub. 1849), 645–46.

18 The common council, "conceiving that the removal of the Town Clerks Office of this City to the City Hall would tend greatly to the security of the public Records & Papers," orders "that the lower Room in the southeast Angle of the City Hall [see Ap 30, 1792] and the small Room next to it be appropriated to that use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 770. On Jl 29, payment of £72:6:8 was ordered "for repairg the Town Clerks Office Room in the City Hall."—Ibid., II: 25. See also Mr 25. The city clerk's office was formerly in the house of Nicholas Bogert, 28 Broadway, near the Oswego Market.—Daily Adv., Mr 30, 1790.

20 "Mr. Wilson's Tavern near Fort Washington" is mentioned in an advertisement asking for the return of a cloak taken by mistake in exchange for a "Camblet cloak lined with green baize, silver hook and eye."—Daily Adv., F 20, 1793. This was the Blue Bell Tavern. See O 12, 1753.

25 John R. Livingston advertises "Mount Pitt" for rent. Describing its advantages, he refers to "an highly cultivated garden, filled with the best fruit the climate affords." It contains "between ten and twelve acres of land, on which are the dwelling, coach and ice houses, stables, and other out building in compleat repair."—Daily Adv., F 25, 1793. It was again advertised in ibid. on F 4, 1794; F 6, 1795, and Mr 7, 1797. The 1794 advertisement stated that "Mount Pitt" was situated "directly back of the Belvidere Club-House." Livingston's town house was at 67 Broadway.—City Directory. The hill from which "Mount Pitt" took its name was cut down in the autumn of 1794 (q.v., N 11).

Mr 4 Washington's second term as president begins.—Winsor, VII: 269.

7 The legislature passes an act providing for the improvement of John St., which is only 12 ft. 4 in. wide, by enlarging its lower end in the manner described by the act. This act also provides for vesting in the corporation of the city of New York whatever "estate, right, title, interest, claim and demand" the people of the state of New York have, or which anyone at any time has left, for streets or highways in this city.—Laws of N. Y. (1793), chap. 42.

9 The legislature passes "An Act to organize the Militia of this State."—Laws of N. Y. (1793), chap. 45 (Webster, III: 20). It was amended by ibid. (1796), chap. 67 (Webster, III: 200).

10 In Paris, a decree which creates an irresponsible criminal court, known as an extraordinary revolutionary tribunal, launches the "Reign of Terror." This lasted until July 28, 1794 (q.v.), when Robespierre and his associates were overthrown.—Anderson, op. cit., 152; Guizot, etc.

11 The committee on repairs presents to Trinity vestry the estimates and plans for a charity school (see F 11). One of the estimates was "for completing the mason work only, by Pears & McComb," £1,152. The vestry appoints a committee "to devise ways & means for the expence," and also to pay the cost of "erecting a Steeple upon St Paul's Chapel."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, My 13 and 27.

12 The legislature incorporates the Society for the Promotion of Agriculture, Arts, and Manufactures.—Laws of N. Y. (1793), chap. 59 (Webster, III: 38).

14 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church appoint a committee "to raise a Tower and Steeple on the New Presbyterian Brick Church, and to procure a Bell and Clock as aforesaid."—Proceedings of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. On July 8, they ordered that application be made to the Bank of New York for a loan of £400 for "carrying on the Building of the Steeple of the New Church."—Ibid.

18 The common council orders that the committee on the Battery improvements employ persons to prevent injury to the trees and fences there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 773. See Pl. 56, I: 421.

22 Specifications for the regulation of Warren St. between Broadway and Greenwich St. are prepared by Evert Bancker.—See original (item No. 1823 of Holden sale) in N. Y. H. S.; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 778.

25 One of the deputy sealers of weights and measures presents to the common council a standard yard measure, which he has procured from "the Exchequer in England." It is in accord with the standard established in the colony of New York before the Declaration of Independence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 777. Mar. 25

" The common council permits the Uranian Society to use "the Room on the second Floor [of the city hall] next but one to the Senate Chamber," as the room they have occupied heretofore is "now appropriated to the use of the Town Clerks Office" (see F 18).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 777. See also Ap 15.

Apr. 1 Brockholst Livingston purchases from Lindley Murray a tract of six acres known as Bellevue Place, on the East River near the present 26th St.—Liber Deeds, CDLII: 245. Conveyance was not perfected, however, until Ap 23, 1798; L. M. R. K., III: 953 ("Bellevue Hospital"); Pl. 176, Vol. III.

2 At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, it is ordered "that Messrs John Broome and John Murray be authorized to agree with Mr. Hyde [John Hyde, proprietor of the Tontine Coffee House—see City Directory] for the use of a room for the accommodation of the Chamber at their next and subsequent meetings."—Min. of Chamber of Com. (MS.); Bishop, A Chronicle of 150 Years, 150–51. See Je 14.

11 The corner-stone of "the New Episcopal Church" is laid "at the ground appointed for that purpose, in Ann street."—N. Y. Jour., Ap 13, 1793. See also N. Y. Mag. (Ap, 1793), 256. The location was on the north side of Ann St., between William and Nassau Sts.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 59–60. This first site of Christ's Church was at 49 Ann St.—L. M. R. K., III: 932.

15 The common council permits "Several Young Gentlemen composing a Law Society" to "participate in the use of the Room in the City Hall lately granted to the Uranian Society" (see Mr 25).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 3. On Sept. 30, the board granted a petition from this society for the use of the senate chamber to meet in once a week.—Ibid., II: 38. This room, according to the original petition of this later date, was "late the Senate Room of the U. S." The "sole object" of the association which was composed "principally of members of the Bar," was "of a Literary Nature." The petition was signed by E. Laight, W. Cutting, J. W. Mulligan, W. F. Broome, J. Bainbridge, R. Riker, A. Bleecker, and P. Irving, in behalf of the association.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room.

" There is advertised for sale "All the property both real and personal belonging to the New-York Manufacturing Society, consisting of a large and spacious brick building, constructed and built for the purpose, with a convenient dwelling house for the manager, and a wash house adjoining, situated in Vesey Street. . . . The materials consist of reels, looms, a carding machine, spinning jennies, with every other machinery necessary and compleat for carrying on the cotton and linen manufactory; . . ."—Diary, Ap 15, 1783.

22 Washington issues a proclamation of neutrality, in view of the state of war existing between Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, Gt. Britain, and the United Netherlands, on the one hand, and France on the other.—Winsor, VII: 464, 515. For its effect, see Je 10.

" The common council orders "that the Surveyor make a proper Plan or Survey of the Land & Meadows at and about the fresh Water Pond with the Streets which may be necessary marked thereon."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 4. See also 17th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1912), 122; and F 12, 1790.

" The common council permits John Watts "to plant Trees in front of his House in Broad Way."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 4. This is evidently a special permit modifying the ordinance of May 20, 1791 (q.v.), which required the removal of trees from the streets.

" The "house and grounds at Bloomingdale, . . . containing about 50 acres, which comprehended the two farms formerly belonging to the late General De Lancey, and John Van Cortlandt," are advertised for sale. The house "was finished last September, on a plan of elegance and convenience, equalled by few houses on the continent." Its interior and exterior are described in detail in the advertisement. It was a good example of the architecture of the period. Some of its features are described as follows: ". . . the bed chamber floor contains five spacious chambers, with large and convenient dressing rooms to each, the park front is decorated with a portico and pediment, supported by columns and pilasters in a chaste and beautiful stile the drawing room and dining parlour, with the rooms over them, form into half hexagon projections in the front, next the river, and enclose an interior portico entrance to the hall, finished with a pediment, supported by bold columns

New York, 12th. August 1790.

Sir,

It is with great pleasure that, in obedience to an Order of the Senate of the United States, I have the honor to enclose their Resolution of this date, which was unanimously agreed to; and in behalf of the Senate, I request that you will be pleased to communicate the same to the Corporation of this City, and at the same time signify to them, that it is the wish of the Senate, that the Corporation will permit such articles of furniture &c. now in the City Hall, as have been provided by Congress, to remain for the use of that Building.

I am, Sir,

Your most Obedient Humble Servant

John Adams
Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.

The Mayor of the City of New York.

VICE-PRESIDENT ADAMS' LETTER TO MAYOR VARICK TENDERING TO THE CITY THE FURNITURE USED BY THE U. S. SENATE IN THE OLD CITY HALL; DATED AUG. 12, 1790. SEE P. 1272.

1793 Apr. 22 and pilasters, the rooms are all finished with stucco walls and cornices. . . . the farm is remarkable for the richness of its soil, and universally admired for the beauty of its landscape, intermixed with meadow grounds, pasture and knowls of natural wood land, more pleasing than all the labored works of art. The two former proprietors of these grounds, having each planted great quantities of fruit-trees, the farm has now a double portion of the best fruit trees in full bearing, the bank next the river, cloathed with thriving young wood, and beautifully romantic has been improved by walks laid out . . ., and by a road which leads to a small wharf, or landing place on the river."—Daily Adv., Mr 13, 1793.

29 The common council orders "that the name of the Street called Copsey Street, beginning at the White Hall, and passing round by the Gov^t House to Kennedy's Lane or Slip, be changed to State Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 5. There is in the Bancker collection in the N. Y. P. L. (A-B box, under "Battery") a "plan of the proposed alteration at the Battery, showing the new street proposed 18 feet wide." This street is evidently the present State St., south of Battery Pl.

May 6 Isaac Stoutenburgh, Jr., city surveyor, is paid £7:8 for surveying the Bloomingdale Road. (The bill does not show the extent of the survey.)—From the original in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 6.

10 Recorder Samuel Jones having completed the revision of the laws and ordinances of the city, the common council passes favourably upon them, and orders that the clerk have them printed, with the city charter "and an Appendix of such of the Statutes of the State as immediately relate to this Corporation or the Police of this City." The titles only are entered in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 6–7. They were printed (1793) by Hugh Gaine in 8vo.

13 The committee appointed by Trinity vestry on March 11 (q.v.) reports that the best way to meet the expenses of building a charity school and erecting a steeple on St. Paul's Chapel is to let out the church lands on long leases.—Trin. Min. (MS.). As there is no further record of erecting a charity school at this period, it appears likely the building plans were deferred.

14 On learning "that the Wall of Trinity Church burying Ground would render it very inconvenient to pave Lumber Street with foot Walks on each side," the common council orders "that a foot Walk be made only on the West side."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 8.

" The committee on the Bloomingdale Road reports to the common council, and the board orders "that the said Road from it's commencement at Horns House to Nicholas De Peyster Barn be immediately opened to its proper & legal Wedth of four Rods. And thence to the Post Road at M^rs Watkins of the same Wedth if the proprietors will give the Land." A committee is appointed to attend to the opening, and to confer with the owners of the land on the subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 9. The situation of "Horns House" is shown on the first section of Christopher Colles's survey of roads, reproduced as Pl. 51-a, Vol. V. See also Mott, The N. Y. of Yesterday, 5–6. See, further, Jl 13, 1795.

16 The trustees of the New York Society Library issue a notice that they "propose to begin the building of a Hall for the reception of their books as soon as materials can be collected—and as they are desirous of erecting a building which will be at the same time ornamental and useful, they would wish to avail themselves of the taste of the artists in this place—they will be, therefore, obliged to such as have talents in designing, to furnish them with plans as early as possible—a present of ten pounds will be made to the person whose plan shall be adopted. The building is to be 30 feet in front, 60 in depth, and two stories high. Those who furnish plans will please to leave them with Jacob Morton, Esq. in Broadway, within three weeks from this date."—Daily Adv., May 17, 1793. The building was erected at the present No. 33 Nassau St., and opened in April, 1795 (q.v.)—L. M. R. K., III: 957.

20 The common council grants a petition for the widening of Stone St., and orders that the corporation contribute £50 toward the expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 10.

" "Belvedere House [see Je 25, 1792], Being open for the reception of Company, and the Bowling green adjoining, being now in order for their amusement," John Avery advertises that "he will at all times be prepared to provide Dinners, Suppers, Coffee, Tea, &c. and entertainment for large parties and public bodies; . . . quoits are also provided for those who may prefer that amusement."—Daily Adv., My 20, 1793. See Jl 2. Avery was the tavern-keeper at Belvedere until May 1, 1796 (see Ap 29, 1796). The house is shown on Pl. 60-a, Vol. I. May 20

John Ramsay having petitioned on May 20 "for the Privilege of erecting a Mill on the Stream of the Creek at Kings Bridge," the committee of the common council to whom the subject was referred reports the opinion that this should be granted, "so far forth as to commence at the west side of Kings Bridge on the north side of the Creek extending west along the Creek one hundred feet And the same length on the south side of the Creek extending across the Creek reserving a passage way of fifteen feet for small Craft to pass & repass and to pay an annual Rent of five Pounds." The board agrees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 10, 11. See, further, D 22, 1794. 27

John Cochran, the commissioner of loans of the United States in this state, having petitioned the common council for office quarters, the board orders "that he be permitted to occupy the Exchange for the use of his Office Or if that should not be found convenient for him, that he be permitted to occupy the Room in the City Hall called the Council of Revision Room And also the Room used as a Museum whenever it shall no longer be used for that purpose: provided that whenever the said two Rooms or either of them shall be required for the public use of this State or of this City this Permission shall cease."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 10–11. On June 3, he was permitted to use, in addition, "the Lobby of the Senate Room until the Meeting of the Legislature or until it shall be wanted for any other purpose."—Ibid., II: 13. "

The common council ratifies estimates and assessments "for the paving of Great George Street from Vesey Street to Murray Street," and "Chatham Row from Ann Street to the North Corner of the Presbyterian Church Yard."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 11. "

Trinity vestry resolves "that the Committe for Building the School House purchase the materials for Building the Steeple [see Mr 11] of S^t Pauls Church and that the Treasurer pay for the same."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The plans for the steeple were ready by Oct. 3 (q.v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 72-a, I: 458. "

New York was thus described in June or July of this year: "The plan of this city is in no way regular, like Philadelphia and others, but is laid out with reference to the ground, which I think preferable to a forced and insipid regularity. The houses are chiefly built of brick, and the roofs tiled: there are a few still remaining, built after the old Dutch stile, serving as a foil to the English taste that now prevails. June —

"The situation of the city is naturally healthy and pleasant, but the intolerable negligence of those in office, whose business it is to direct and see the streets, docks, and slips, kept clean, is such, that some of the streets, and, I believe, every dock and slip, (where small craft lie,) are so abominably filthy, that any person, coming fresh from the Country or off the water, can scarcely refrain from sickness in passing them, occasioned by innumerable kinds of the most nauseous stenches that abound in warm weather. Instead, therefore, of being surprised at the yellow or any other epidemical fever prevailing, (the fatal mortality of which, at New York, I too frequently had opportunities of noticing in the summer of 1795,) I rather wonder they have it not every summer. . . .

"York-Island . . . is joined to the main by a bridge, still called King's Bridge; a name so seldom met with in America, that they seem to have taken much childish pains to alter every sound approaching to royalty: witness King-street to State-street, in Boston; Queen-street to Pearl-street, in New York; and so on throughout America. . . .

"A want of good water is a great inconvenience to the inhabitants, there being few good wells in the city. Most of the people are supplied every day with fresh water from a pump, near the head of Pearl-street, conveyed to their doors in casks. It is a reflection on this city, affluent as it is, that they do not have it supplied by pipes, which has often been proposed by individuals, but never acceded to. It would not only be convenient, but highly beneficial in the event of fire, cleansing the streets, and purifying the air. I experienced much friendship and hospitality at New York, my acquaintance lying chiefly among the friends, or quakers."—Struggles through Life, Exemplified in the Various Travels and Adventures in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America of Lieut. John Harriott (2nd ed., London, 1808), II: 60–62.

The proprietors of lots, and others, in the vicinity of the ex- 3

1793 June 3 change, petition the common council "that Basons may be erected there for reception and accommodation of River Vessels." Referred to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 13.

" A number of "Masters of Albany & other River Vessels" having complained to the common council on April 29 "of the want of a safe Bason at the North River," and recommended "the making of one at the Slip opposite to Thames & Little Queen Streets," the committee to which the subject was Referred reports "that another Bason at the North River for the accommodation of Vessels is necessary That the space between the Piers of Swartwout and Leake is the most eligible place on the Westerly side of this City for such Bason." The board adopts the proposal, and appoints a committee to cause it to be executed according to a plan accompanying the report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 4–5, 13–14. See also Je 10.

" It is ordered by the common council "that the Committee appointed on the subject [see Jl 30, 1792] take down the old & prepare for the building of a New Watch House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 14. The following is a summary of its history: The location, selected on July 22 (q.v.), was "the Corner Lot at the City Hall."—Ibid., II: 23. On July 29 (q.v.), an allowance of £200 was granted for building it.—Ibid., II: 25. It was in process of construction on Aug. 21 (q.v.), when an order was issued that it be lengthened "eight feet on Wall Street," and that it have "a front on Broad Street to extend from its termination on Wall Street to the Corner of Telyou's House."—Ibid., II: 29. On July 29, 1793, £200 was appropriated toward the expense of erecting it (ibid., II: 25); on Sept. 30, 1793, £300 (ibid., II: 38); on Jan. 6, 1794, £90 (ibid., II: 59); and on June 10, 1794, £119:16:7. The building was completed about Feb. 3, 1794 (q.v.). This, in 1794, appears to have been the only watch-house in the city (City Directory; Thorburn, Reminiscences, 229), but two years later another was completed on Chatham Sq.—See D 19, 1796. Regarding the development of the watch-house system, see N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1824; and City Directories, 1798, 1799, et seq. The Wall St. watch house was demolished in 1816.—L. M. R. K., III: 973. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 419.

" This evening's performance at the John Street Theatre is scheduled as a benefit for James West, but the actor plans an additional entertainment for the public. He advertises: "Æriel excursions having become the topic of much conversation in America, Mr. West is happy in an opportunity of exhibiting a Balloon to the ladies and gentlemen of New-York—On Monday therefore, at 3 o'clock, P. M. he will launch a Balloon of thirty-six feet circumference, beautifully variegated, preceded by a smaller one of about twelve. Tickets at a dollar, six shillings, and half a dollar each, will not only give admittance to the exhibition, but carry the bearer to the Theatre in the evening into Box, Pit or Gallery according to the price. The Balloon will ascend from the College Green."—Daily Adv., Je 3, 1793. West seems to have angered the people by issuing tickets headed "Theatre Royal," for, on June 19, he made this apology:

"Having learned from a number of my friends that I have given offence to the Public . . . I think it my duty . . . to come forward, and in the most respectful terms, to apologize for the unintended insult, it seems I have offered . . .

"With regard to the tickets I issued with 'Theatre Royal' printed on them, . . . I made use of them purely from necessity, and not with intention to insult the feelings of any person . . .

"I have in my possession Mr Peter R. Maverick's receipt for six pounds eighteen shillings which money I paid him for a set of copper plate tickets for the night of my benefit; these I placed in the hands of a number of people to dispose of for me, and they not only admitted the bearer to see the process of filling the balloons, by shewing them at the door of the college yard, but to see the performance in the evening at the Theatre: in the afternoon of the day that they were to be let off it was hinted to me that I was liable to be greatly imposed on, that those tickets I had distributed might be used only to get admittance into the yard, and afterwards returned to me;—so that I should receive no compensation, whatever, for the expence and trouble I had been at . . . in order to prevent this imposition recollecting I had other tickets in my possession quite different from those I had already put out . . . I innocently, and without any intention to offend, gave them in exchange for those that were handed to me at the door of the college yard: had I entertained the most remote idea that this procedure would have given rise to any disagreeable consequences, I solemnly declare I would rather have forfeited every pecuniary advantage I reaped by adopting it."—Ibid., Je 20, 1793. John Bill Ricketts, an equestrian performer, has procured "a convenient lot of ground near the government house, where he is erecting a circus." In three weeks, on returning from Philadelphia, "he is to begin his exploits in horsemanship."—Diary, Je 6, 1793. His circus, described as "at the North River," was completed July 20.—Ibid., Jl 10, and 20, 1793. Described on July 27 as "on the North River, back of Mr. M'Comb's buildings," it was advertised to be open in a few days.—Ibid., Jl 27, 1793. The French frigate "L'Embuscade," which landed the French minister plenipotentiary, Edmond Charles Genet, at Charleston, So. Car., on April 9, anchors in the North River. Its salute of fifteen guns is returned from the Battery.—Daily Adv., Je 11, and 15, 1793. On his arrival at Charleston, Genet had set out by land for Philadelphia, where Pres. Washington and congress received him, while the vessel cruised along the coast seeking and capturing English prizes.—Daily Adv., Ap 20, 22, 23; Dunlap's Am. Daily Adv. (Phila.), Ap 27, 29, 30; May 3, 4, 14, 30, 1793. He brought to Washington the French declaration of war against England. Although the treaty of commerce between France and the United States guaranteed to France the exclusive right of shelter for her ships-of-war and privateers and for their prizes, Washington at once issued a proclamation of neutrality (see Ap. 22). This produced ill feeling. The French minister attempted to fit out cruisers from our ports; this the President opposed.—Hildreth, United States, II: i, 427. See also Ag 12, 1793. The common council resolves to "set apart a Dock and Bason for the Reception of coasting Vessels and small Craft which bring Provisions and Produce to this City;" and to make "Wharfs for landing thereof." See, further, Je 17. "

It also resolves to make "a proper and convenient Place for the like purpose on the North River." The board decides not to make "any further Grants of Water Lots or of the Soil between high and low Water Mark beyond Catharine Slip on the East River or to the Northward of the Corporation Dock on the North River until such Places as aforesaid be set apart and appropriated for public Uses as aforesd." The board resolves that, on the North River, "the space between the northermost Grant to the Episcopal Church & the Water Lot petitioned for by Mr Harrison be reserved and set apart for the purpose of a public Wharf & Bason accordingly." A committee is appointed to examine and report "the most proper place to be reserved for a public Wharf and Bason on the East River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 14–15.

15 to 25 John Drayton, describing a tour of the United States, which he records in letters to a friend, writes of New York, in part, as follows:

"After passing these islands [Governor's etc.], we came opposite the battery; which is at the extreme point of the town: and is situated much like that, which was at White Point at Charleston. It has no merlons, or embrasures; but the guns (which are thirteen in number) are placed upon carriages on a stone platform en barbette, some few feet above the level of the water. Between the guns, and the water is a public walk; made by a gentle decline from the platform: and going round the ground upon which the battery is placed. Some little distance behind the guns, two rows of elm trees are planted; which in a short time will afford an agreeable shade. The flag staff rises from the midst of a stone tower, and is decorated on the top with a golden ball: and the back part of the ground is laid out in smaller walks, terraces, and a bowling green.—Immediately behind this, and overlooking it, is the government house; built at the expence of the state. Then in the back ground, was the city of New-York, crowded with excellent buildings: and its wharves lined with shipping, and with people. For the day being Sunday [June 9], the inhabitants were naturally invited to the waters edge; as well for pleasure, as excited by curiosity." (pp 9–10.)

June 25. "The greater part of its wharves, are built upon East river: and there, the trade of the city is principally carried on. It is said to contain thirty thousand inhabitants; and is crowded with stores and shops: the most of which are in the retail line, though many of them are in the wholesale business. . . . Industry, appears as the leading character among the catalogue of their virtues. It directs them to pursuits, where an harmony of action adds happiness to the individual; and rejoices him to see founded thereon, the strength of his country. In honest occupations perhaps no Americans are more attentive: whether we view them as relating to perseverance, or ingenuity. And I never saw the latter more tried, than in a contest between two public vendue criers: which, one day, arrested my attention in the streets.

"Besides having a flag, denoting it to be auction day, the vendue masters employ public criers: for the express purpose of persuading people to attend the sale. They walk before the door of the auction room, and strive by all the power of their eloquence, to catch the attention of the passing crowd. . . ." (pp. 14–16).

"From eleven to two o'clock, the merchants, brokers, &c. meet at the Tontine coffee-house, in Wall-street; where, they transact all their concerns in a large way, and where, the politics of the day are considered. This, is a most convenient, and large building; having an elegant suit of rooms, bath, and other conveniences. Here, the insurance offices are kept: blank checks on the different banks, are ready for those who may want them, and every thing in the busy line transacted. When the Ambuscade frigate was here, there was a vast throng in this house, every evening. It consisted of two parties, and was productive of much opposition of sentiment; which, I believe would ere long have brought them to extremities, had not the cap of liberty, with a motto on it of 'Sacred to Liberty,' been fixed up in the coffee room; where, it now is, . . ." (p. 18).

"The streets of the city are all paved with round stones, except on the sides: where, they are generally paved with brick, or flat stones. They are irregular. Some, of them being straight; some, forming almost a bend of half a circle; others, cutting them acutely; others forking, and making a triangular area of houses. One part of a street, may be wide enough for several carriages to pass; while another part of it, admits only two with difficulty. The best streets in it are Broad-way, Broad-street, Queen-street, and Wall-street. But notwithstanding this irregularity, there is something extremely agreeable in the appearance of the town. . . ." (p. 19).

"At the lower end of Broad-way, is the battery, and public parade; of which, I have already given you some account: and I now present you with a sketch of it, as seen from this spot. While I was taking it, the Ambuscade sailed by, having a liberty cap on the fore-top-gallant-mast head. . . ." (p. 20). June 15 to 25

"Overlooking this prospect, is the government house; placed upon an handsome elevation, and fronting Broad-way: having before it an elegant illiptical approach, round an area of near an acre of ground, enclosed by an iron railing. In the midst of this is a pedestal, which formerly was pressed by a leaden esquestrian statue of the King of Great-Britain: but having been dismantled of that, for the use of the continental army, it now remains ready, in due time I hope, to receive the statue of the President of the United States of America. . . ." (pp. 20–21).

"A vast number of houses have been built in this city, since the war; some of which are extremely ornamental: and none more so, than the government house. It is two stories high. Projecting before it is a portico, covered by a pediment: upon which is superbly carved in basso relievo the arms of the state, supported by justice and liberty, as large as life. The arms and figures are white, placed in a blue field: and the pediment is supported by four white pillars of the Ionic order, which are the height of both stories. . . ." (pp. 21–22).

"Federal-hall, is built upon Wall-street, and fronts Broad-street in the same manner, as the government house does Broad-way. This, is an elegant and grand building; well adapted for a senatorial presence. Here, I saw portraits of the president, of the secretary of the treasury, and of the present governor of this state; executed by colonel Trumbull as large as life; and as far as I could judge good likenesses. The back ground of the president's portrait, represents a part of New-York; and the British fleet sailing up the narrows. Here, are also a museum, and library. The library contains about five thousand volumes. The museum, was shewn to the worst advantage; being but partially exposed, and that, in a very small room. In a footnote Drayton adds: "Note. The museum has been since moved from Federal hall to the exchange, at the foot of Broad-street: where, it offers a more extensive gratification to the spectator. Among its present curiosities is the model (in clay) designed, and executed by the celebrated Italian artist in statuary, Mr. Ceracchi, for perpetuating the memory of American liberty. It is made upon a scale proportioned to one hundred feet in length, and as many feet in height: and for grandeur, and emblematical device, is supposed would surpass any thing of the kind, whether ancient or modern. Nothing, but the expence attending the execution of it, has impeded its progress: that being estimated at forty thousand guineas.—Perhaps, at some future day, should Mr. Ceracchi be then living, the finances of America may assist the completion of so happy a design. Here also is to be seen Mr. Bowen's wax-work, in the middle of the museum. Among which, are those of Alexander Hamilton secretary of the treasury of the United States, Dr. Franklin, and John Hancock, late governor of the commonwealth of Massachusetts. These, with the rest of the collection, are now placed with an happy taste in a room sixty feet, by thirty: with an arched ceiling of twenty feet high.

"The building in which this museum is kept, was formerly the public resort of merchants; and has been long built. It is supported on arcades, and is ornamented with a cupola; on the top of which in regal times a crown was placed. But that now lies neglected, and almost unnoticed in a corner of the museum; giving way to the more pleasing decoration of a liberty cap." (pp. 22–24).

"At the upper end of Broad-way, fronting an area of three or four acres of ground (which are laid out in public walks, and planted with trees) are some public buildings; consisting of a bridewell, a poor house, and jail: with its attendant the gallows. The criminal is here partly hidden by a lattice work; which, I am led to believe may have a good tendency: as whether the culprit dies, bravely or like a coward, those around are ignorant of it . . ." (pp. 23–24).

"Near these buildings is an hospital, capable of containing a large number of invalids: and some little distance from it is the college; where about eighty students are at present. . . ." (p. 25).

"The rides in the neighbourhood of the city, are for miles beautiful. Every elevation of ground, presenting some handsome country seat . . " (p. 25).—Letters Written During a Tour through the Northern and Eastern States of America, by John Drayton (Charleston, S. C., 1794). See also descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 433–36.

1793 June 15 to 25 A view of the battery and harbour of New York, and the Ambuscade Frigate, drawn by J. Drayton, and reproduced from this work, is shown and described in Vol. I, Pl. 59. This print is the first to show the "churn" or flagstaff, which had been built at the south-west extremity of the battery shortly after the demolition of the old fort in 1790.

There will be tight-rope and slack-rope dancing and "Equilibriums." In order that the garden may appear to the best advantage, the orchestra will be placed "in the middle of a large tree, elegantly illuminated."—Daily Adv., Je 22, 1793. 2 An announcement in one of the daily newspapers, reads: "The 4th of July being the anniversary of the Independence of America, should be celebrated by the Sons of Freedom, from every class of its citizens. The gentlemen Merchants have associated for this purpose, and are to dine together at the Old Coffee House, the Cincinnati at the City Tavern, the Officers of the Militia at the Tontine Coffee House, and the Sons of Tammany at Corre's.

"A subscription is opened for all the genuine Republicans in this city of every class not already engaged to join in celebrating that day in union, harmony and love—Mr. Avery at the Belvidere House [see My 20] is to provide the repast.

"The expence will be apportioned to the means of the guests; and the place for their reception be called for that day Liberty Hall."—Diary, Jl 2, 1793. See Jl 4. July 2

A number of "Sons of Liberty" celebrate the anniversary of American independence by dining at "Mr. Avery's, formerly called the Belvedere House; but now known to them by the name of Liberty Hall." They have "a true republican repast—Previous to dinner, the Cap of Liberty was erected in the lower hall, under a discharge of thirteen cannon. The motto it bears is,—'Emblem of Liberty, Union and Peace.' The inscription in the rear fixed upon the wall is in the words following:—'This Cap is this day erected by the sons of Liberty—may all who view it bear in mind its motto; and withered be the hand that shall attempt its removal.' 4

"A select party of Gentlemen, members of the Belvedere Club, dined above stairs, and shewed every mark of tenderness and affection to the associated Sons of Freedom below."—Diary, Jl 6, 1793. Belvedere House was only temporarily called Liberty Hall (see Jl 2 and 30).

" For the city's part in celebrating the Fourth of July, the following payments were ordered on July 15 by the common council: £10 to John Elsworth "for the Use of his House & Liquor for the Constables & Marshalls;" £12:6 to Col. Bauman "for Gun Powder for the Artillery;" £15:4 to John Stoutenburgh "for the like for the Militia;" and £4 to "The Sextons of the several Churches for ringing the Bells."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 21. On July 29, payment of £43:5 was made to John Simmons "for the expences of the canvassing Committee & for the celebration of the late anniversary . . ."—Ibid., II: 25.

8 "Mr Stuyvesants offer respecting an Episcopal Church to be Built upon his Land, towards which he Engages to give Eight hundred pounds and a Lot of Land 150 feet in width and 190 Feet in Length," is taken into consideration by Trinity vestry, which thereupon resolves "That this Board do accept of the same and will take measures for Building a Church accordingly as soon as the situation of the Corporation will admit thereof and that Messrs Stuversandt [sic], Gaine and Jones be a Committee to procure proper plans for the Building and Enquire what aids Can be obtained from well disposed persons towards the same."—*Trin. 14 After a cruise of 25 days (see Je 20), the French frigate "L'Embuscade" returns to port. She fires a salute in commemoration of the destruction of the Bastile (on July 14, 1789). In honour of the day, a number of patriotic French and American citizens assemble at Corre's, where "an elegant entertainment" is provided. Flags of France and the United States are displayed in town, and in the evening the Tammany Society invites the French consul and other citizens to their "Wigwam."—Daily Adv., Jl 15, 1793.

15 Robert Watts, Aaron Burr, Ebenezer Stevens, and James Morris, "Commissioners for erecting a Bridge across Harlem River," make application to the common council "that a Road be laid out in the most convenient manner leading to the said Bridge." Referred to street com.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 20.

" The common council orders that the fire engine house in Greenwich St. be removed to the hay scales in front of the basin at Thames and Little Queen Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 21.

22 Complaints are made to the commissioners of the almshouse that many inmates of that institution, "under a pretext of fetching water from Chatham Street, were frequently seen in tipling shops, & begging in the Streets." Inasmuch as the water in the new well in the almshouse yard had been recently examined and "concluded to be wholesom," the commissioners deemed they were justified in abridging the "priviledges thus abused by the paupers of the house," and in compelling them to patronize the local well exclusively in the future.—Minutes of the Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell, 1791–1797 (MS.), 74.

"This additional minute appears: "Whereas it hath been frequently observ'd that persons of infamous Character, passing 1793 July 22 the Street, in front of the Bridewell, have made it too much of a practice to hold combinations or altercations with those in confinement, and sometimes Stones or brick bats are thrown and the glass of the windows distroy'd,—and whereas the statement of facts, having been laid before the Common Council, with a recommendation of having wooden Blinds fixed before the windows of such rooms as were most exposed, they approved of the measure" (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 22). A committee is appointed to carry the recommendation into effect.—Ibid.

The same committee is required "to make two Cisterns to receive the Rain Water from the City Hall" (see S 10, 1792).—Ibid.

" The common council authorises the payment of £8:4:6 to Joseph Griffiths "for altering & improving the Flagg at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 24. This is the first reference in the Minutes (erroneously given as July 16 in descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435) to the flagstaff which was erected on the Battery soon after the demolition of the fort in 1790 (q. v.). See D 19, 1796.

28 Capt. Dennis of the U. S. revenue vessel "Vigilant," arriving in port, states that Capt. Courtnay of the British frigate "Boston," off Sandy Hook, sends a challenge to Capt. Bompard of the French frigate "L'Ambuscate" (L'Embuscade), which is at New York. On the following day Capt. Bompard inscribed a note "in the Coffee-house book" accepting the challenge, and hoping to find the "Boston" at the Hook on July 30.—Daily Adv., Jl 30, 1793. At the same time, he sent a letter to Capt. Courtnay demanding first that he receive assurances from him that the latter is "unattended by any other armed vessel," and that he will not employ "any artifice or stratagem, unbecoming the character of a brave and candid soldier." Not receiving an answer, Capt. Bompard resolves "not to disappoint the martial ardour of Capt. Courtnay," and accordingly sailed on the morning of the 31st.—Ibid., Ag 1 and 7, 1793. Nine vessels were chartered by different parties to see the action.—Ibid., Jl 30, 1793. For an account of this naval duel, which occurred on Aug. 1, see ibid., Ag 2 and 7, 1793; and Diary, Ag 6, 1793. The first news of the conflict was circulated in New York by a narrow folio handbill, dated Aug. 2, now very scarce. One of these was sold with the Jonathan Trumbull collection at Anderson's, Dec. 8, 1813; on its margin were written comments to the effect that the two ships fired at each other, lost a few men, and then made off from each other as fast as they could. This, however, does not agree with the report in the Daily Adv., op. cit., which appears more favourable to the Frenchman. For an account of the comparative strength of the two vessels, see James, Naval Hist. of Gt. Britain, I: 110–14. The colours of the "Ambuscade" were presented to the Tammany Society, "as a token of respect which those virtuous patriots merit. . . . from their Republican Brethren of France."—Diary, Ag 6, 1793.

An English traveller, C. W. Janson, then in New York, describes the scenes in the city, during and after the engagement, thus: "The wounded were landed and sent to the hospital. I counted thirteen on pallets and double that number less severely wounded. Nothing but commiseration resounded through the streets while the ladies tore their chemises to bind up their wounds. Advertisements were actually issued for linen rags for that purpose, and surgeons and nurses in numbers repaired to the sick ward . . . I witnessed Bompard's triumphal landing the day after the engagement. He was hailed by the gaping infatuated mob with admiration and received by a number of the higher order of Democrats with exultation. They feasted him and gave entertainments in honour of his asserted victory. He was a very small, elderly man, but dressed like a first-rate beau, and doubtless fancied himself upon this occasion six feet high. At this moment I verily believe the mob would have torn me piece-meal had I been pointed at as a stranger just arrived from England. I ground this supposition on the fact of a British lieutenant of the navy having been insulted the same day at the Tontine coffee house; but he escaped further injury by jumping over the iron railing in front of the house. The flags of the sister republics were entwined in the public room. Some gentlemen secretly removed the French ensign, on which rewards were offered for a discovery of the offender, but he remained in secret."—The Stranger in Am., by Charles William Janson (London, 1807), 430–31. Resolutions alleged to have been drawn up on this day "At a meeting of a large and respectable number of the friends to Aristocracy, Peace, and Union with Great Britain," and signed by "Peter Pacificus, jun. secretary," were published on July 31. These resolutions declare that it is "the indispensable duty of all good subjects to discountenance the present disposition of the people in favor of France, and to endeavor . . . to kindle animosities between the Americans and French;" that all who have any intercourse with the French are "enemies and disturbers of peace," and all who buy, sell, or wear "the National Ribbon of France" are "friends of riot and disorder;" that the practice of saluting French ships shall be discouraged because "it may eventually tend to draw upon this country the just wrath and vengeance of our Most Sacred Majesty, George the Third, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. &c. &c.;" that an address requesting the governor to forbid the firing of cannon in honour of French ships shall be drawn up; and, in conclusion, "That if this address to the Governor should fail of the desired effect (which we greatly fear) this meeting will call together the friends of Monarchy throughout the state, appoint a leader, and oppose by force the entrance of French vessels; set fire to the Ambuscade frigate, tar and feather every French Democrat we find in the city; pull down the Cap of Liberty at Belvedere [see Jl 4] and the Tontine Coffee House; and bid defiance to the host of vile Republicans who infest this metropolis."—*N. The French fleet, of 15 sail, arrives from "the Chesapeak." Several thousand citizens welcome the vessels. The admiral waits on the governor at government house, after which the flagship fires a salute of 15 guns, which is returned from the Battery. "What greatly added to the beauty of this scene was the arrival of the Ambuscade, from her cruise . . ."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 3, 1793. See also, Jl 28; and descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 420. 2

"The Embuscade lay at New York from the 2d of August to the 9th of October, getting in her lower masts, and repairing the damages she had sustained by the Boston's fire." The Boston made for the Delaware, where she encountered two French frigates, and, discharging the pilot, "hauled up for St. John's, Newfoundland," where she arrived on the 19th.—James, Naval Hist. of Gt. Britain, I: 110–14.

Citizen Genet, minister plenipotentiary from the Republic of France to the U. S., returns to New York. The ringing of bells and firing of cannon greet him. 9 An "alarming and infectious" scourge of yellow fever is raging in Philadelphia. There is much apprehension in New York that the pestilence may be brought here "by persons coming from thence after having taken the Infection." Therefore, in order to provide a place "out of the City" to which such persons may be sent, the common council appoints a committee "to procure the use of the House on Nutten [Governors] Island until 1st Novr and to provide Bunks &c if necessary."—*M. 15 The governor issues an order that the health officer of the port shall have a black flag constantly displayed on every vessel "performing quarantine below the point of Governor's Island," in order to prevent market boats and others approaching too near.—N. Y. Jour., S 18, 1793.

16 Mayor Varick reads to the common council a letter from Gov. Clinton, which states that the health officer has informed him that a sloop from Philadelphia, which entered the harbour last evening and came to one of the wharves, has on board "a Person infected with the contagious Distemper now prevailing in that Place;" that the governor is convinced "that every Measure which he was warranted by Law to take to prevent an intercourse with that City would prove ineffectual." So he submits it "to the Discretion of the Corporation to devise such farther Measures in aid of those already adopted as they might find themselves authorized to take or the necessity of the Case would justify for the prevention of so great a Calamity as the spreading of that malignant Dissease would prove to our fellow Citizens."

The mayor informs the board "that the Inhabitants at a Meeting at the Coffee House had appointed a Committee to aid this Board in any Measures which might be adopted to prevent the introduction of that Dissease into this City;" that this committee, among other arrangements, "had employed Doctors Buxton & Irwin to aid the Health Officer in his Duty & that they had employed Nathan Strong at the Whitehall & Henry Dufour at the North River to prevent Persons immediately from Phila from entering this City . . ." The board approves, and appoints a committee to work in conjunction with that appointed by the citizens, to take necessary measures to prevent the introduction of the disease here.

It also authorises and requests the mayor "to appoint under the Common Seal of this City such and so many of the respectable Inhabitants in each Ward as he may judge necessary for the purpose of aiding the Magistrates in carrying into strict execution the Law for preventing Nuisances in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 33–34. The board advances £100 to the Chairman of its committee "for prevents infectious Distempers" (ibid., II: 35); on Oct. 21, £200 (ibid., II: 45); on Oct. 28, £200 (ibid., II: 47); on Dec. 30, £260 (ibid., II: 58). 21 Noah Webster, of Hartford, is informed by a New York correspondent that the yellow fever "rages in Phila with an unrelenting fury," and that the magistrates in New York have issued "Strict orders to Stop all Travellers from the Southward in order to prevent, if possible, the introduction of the disease in this town.—The warves & Landing places are guarded night & day & the vessels from Pha Stopped at the Narrows to perform a Quarantaine which cannot exceed 40 days nor be Less than 14, after due examination of the health officer & the appointed committee for that purpose.—The urgency of the circumstances render the precaution Indispensible, tho', (as you may easily conceive) it is attended with many inconveniences to the Trade & necessary Intercourse between the two places.—but the first Law of Nature is that of Self-preservation & no other consideration can oppose it.—The persons infected of the disorder or Suspected to be so, are immediately removed on Governor's Island; but Since the measures have been taken, there is but one Instance of a man coming from Phila who has been transported & who died the day after.—The alarm of the Citizens of New York has been & is still very great but till now they are without any foundation."—Letter of C. Lagarenne to Noah Webster, among Noah Webster MSS., in N. Y. P. L. See S 30.

23 The common council orders that, in case the mayor should be informed of any person "being sick and suspected of the infectious 1793 Sept. 23 Dissease prevailing at Phil[a]," he shall direct Doctors Treat, Bard, and Pitt Smith to examine them, and the board will meet the expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 35.

25 Anthony L. Bleecker (see Mr 1, 1792) and Mary, his wife, sell their Roger Morris property to William Kenyon for £ 3,750. The deed was recorded on Aug. 11, 1800.—Liber Deeds, LVIII: 491 et seq. Kenyon sold the place on Aug. 29, 1799 (q.v.).

27 On account of the yellow fever which rages in Philadelphia, all intercourse between New York and that city is stopped by hand-bill notices. A plea is published that the regulation be observed.—Rising Sun (Kingston, Ulster Co.), S 28, 1793 (in N. J. H. S.).

30 On a suggestion that the landing of cattle at Catharine Slip is become dangerous to the inhabitants, the common council orders that no cattle be landed at any place in the city to the westward of Col. Rutgers's.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 37–38.

" The city has been suffering from a long continued drought. Mayor Varick lays before the common council a suggestion from the citizens' committee "to prevent the introduction of the infectious Distemper prevailing in Phil[a]" (see S 16), "that watering the Streets of this City by Means of the Fire Engines would aid the Inhabitants in cleansing them and tend to correct the Air and prevent Putrifaction or offensive smell from the Kennels in consequence of the long continued Drought." It is resolved "that it be recommended to the Engineers and Fire Men of this City to make the necessary arrangements for watering the several Streets of this City with the Fire Engines on Saturday next (unless a previous considerable fall of Rain should [make] it unnecessary [)] and the inhabitants are requested to aid the Fire Men in this Business.

"And it is also recommended to all the Inhabitants to work at the same time all the public and private Pumps and to scrape or sweep the Kennels that the Water may have it's free Course."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 38.

" Payments ordered by the common council on this day for city work include £27:3:7 "for two Cisterns at the City Hall" (see S 10, 1792, and Jl 22, 1793).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 38.

Oct. 2 "A Citizen" writes to one of the newspapers: "when we walk to the environs of the city, and even in it, where the houses are scattered, we find dead horses, dogs, cats, and other dead animals lying about in such abundance as if the inhabitants accounted the stench arising from putrid carcases a delicious perfume. We find large quantities of stagnating water that needlessly remain in many places in the vicinity of the city. . . . That Augean stable, that sink of putrification, the fly-market, with its malignant dock, etc is not likely to be cleaned. . . . If we have occasion to go, or if we dare advance to the concentrating point of stench and corruption, the Fly market, particularly towards the lower end of it, and the docks and slips in the neighborhood, we shall, in some measure, experience the scenes described in the accounts we have of Grand Cairo. . . . Through the breaches, or openings under the market, are likewise thrown into that dreadful abyss of corruption, many of the offals of the shambles, all manner of heads of carcases, spoilt meat, spoilt pickle etc. both from the stalls and from certain cellars near at hand. . . . But what is still worse, the double portion of all the carrion and putrid substances that have been accumulating during the whole day and evening of Saturday, are early on Sunday morning collected into heaps in the street, there to lay all day under the full influence of the solar rays. . . . A wish has lately been intimated, that the machine should be employed in cleaning out that dreadful gulf of stench, and nastiness, that lies under and beyond the Fish Market, . . . because it hinders the tide and land floods from cleaning that seeming avenue of disease that runs under the whole Fly Market."—N. Y. Jour., O 2, 1793.

7 At a meeting of a joint committee from the common council and the citizens (see S 16) appointed to prevent the introduction and spread of infectious diseases in this city, a letter from the mayor of Philadelphia is taken into consideration, in answer to one from this committee, on the subject of contributing towards the relief of the poorer and most distressed citizens of Philadelphia; and it is resolved that it be recommended to the common council to furnish $3,000, and to take measures either to be reimbursed by the legislature or to have the amount refunded by a tax on the city.—From the original minutes of the committee, in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. See O 11. Oct. 7

Archibald and Alexander Robertson (see O 8, 1792) advertise the "Columbian Academy of Painting, No. 89 William-street, New-York." They are "Limners," and "Paint Portraits, Miniatures, make designs of every kind for engraving, &c." They state: "From the encouragement they have met with from the Citizens of the United States, they have been induced to establish their Academy on the most liberal and extensive footing, both in the Academical stile of studying from nature, and as a School of Painting and Drawing—being provided with a number of casts from the antique, and a complete assortment of patterns for the use of their pupils in heads, figures, flowers, animals, &c. on [in?] chalks; historical pieces, landscapes, (of which a number are views of remarkable scenes in this country) flowers, &c. in India Ink and water colors, &c. 8

"Their public class for Ladies during winter, will be from 3 till 5 o'clock, afternoon, on Tuesday's, Thursday's and Saturday's; an evening class for gentlemen on the same days from 7 'till 9 o'clock. Private tuition as usual."—Daily Adv., O 8, 1793. See My 4, 1795.

The citizens' and the common council's committees (see S 16) having jointly recommended that the city furnish $3,000 "towards the Relief of the poorer and most distressed Citizens of Philadelphia under the pressure of their present great Calamity," the board resolves to provide the sum of $5,000 for this object; that a loan of this sum be negotiated by the mayor with the Bank of New York, and that he inform the mayor of Philadelphia of this resolution and pay the sum to his order.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 43. The bank made the loan on the city's bond, at only 5 percent interest, in view of "the benevolent use intended."—Ibid., II: 45. Mayor Varick takes his oath of office before the governor at the government house.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 44. In the previous year, this ceremony was conducted in the common council chamber.—Ibid., I: 752. 14

A number of persons gather in the fields, and proceed to demolish completely two houses of ill fame, and to damage several others. Three persons are wounded by defenders using small arms, and the mayor is injured in trying to disperse the people.—Daily Adv., O 16, 1793. "

On Oct. 17, the magistrates published a notice addressed to the citizens, stating that the riots on the evenings of Oct. 14 and 15 were conducted by boys, apprentices, negroes, and sailors, and recommending that parents and masters keep their children, apprentices, and servants, at home in the evening. They appeal for co-operation to aid the city watch, etc.—Ibid., O 17, 1793.

On Oct. 21, the common council paid £4:16 "for extra Watchmen to quell a Riot" (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 46). On Nov. 18, Lieut. John Lovell was paid £29:12 "for the Services of a Detachment of light Horse on a late Riot" (ibid., II: 51); and, again, on June 30, 1794, two of the city watchmen were paid £10 each "for their Exertions & the Wounds they rec[d] in quelling a late Riot" (ibid., II: 85). Cf. the similar episode of July 17, 1799.

The following advertisement appears: "At the Exchange; New York Museum & Wax Work. Mr. Bowen respectfully informs the public, that he has added his collection of Wax Work (never before exhibited in this city) to the Museum. 15

"It is displayed in the centre of that spacious and elegant Hall, surrounded by a very large collection of well-chosen productions of Nature, which, together, now form one of the most pleasing and grand scenes ever offered to public view in America.

"The Doors will be opened at Candlelight, and the Exhibition closed at Nine o'clock.

"The Museum and Wax Work will be opened every day, from 10 to 1 o'clock in the morning, and from 3 to 5 in the afternoon."—Daily Adv., O 16, 1793. On Sept. 2, 1790 (q. v.), the common council granted a room in the city hall for the museum, and the collection was still there on May 27, 1793 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 10–11). It must have been moved to the exchange at some time between May 27 and Oct. 15. Cf. Drayton's account, under Je 15–25. See, further, N 1.

Nov. 1 Gardiner Baker publishes a list of the contents of the "Museum and Wax Work. At the Exchange, New York." The attractions include living animals, birds, snakes, and fishes, preserved animals and birds, and "Artificial Curiosities." Baker adds: "The room in which the Museum is contained, is 60 feet by 30, with an arch of 20 feet high, on which is elegantly painted a sky blue, and intermixed with various kinds of clouds in some of which are naturally represented a thunder storm, with flashes of lightning.—On the walls are elegantly painted a large number of trees, from various parts of the world . . . also on the walls of the room are painted a number of beautiful birds . . . together with a large variety of foreign animals. . . .

"The above paintings are copied from the best historical prints, and are universally allowed to be excellent imitations, with respect to colour and form.—The whole making a most superb and magnificent appearance."—Daily Adv., N 4, 1793. See Mr 31, 1794.

4 The common council refers to the road committee a petition of John B. Coles "to erect a Mill on the Stream of Harlem River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 48. On Nov. 11, a similar petition of Walter and John Townsend was so referred.—Ibid., II: 49. And on Dec. 2 (q. v.), one from John Ramsay. 25 The common council ordered, on Nov. 18, that arrangements be made for a "Corporation Dinner" on this Evacuation Day, and that the militia be supplied with gunpowder not exceeding 200 lbs.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 51.

The day is celebrated by the ringing of bells at the following buildings: Trinity Church, St. George's, St. Paul's, Old Dutch Church, New Dutch Church, North Dutch Church, Old Presbyterian Church, New Presbyterian Church, German Presbyterian Church, French Presbyterian Church, city hall, and jail.—From a warrant issued Dec. 2 to pay 12 shillings each to the sextons and others who acted as bell-ringers, filed in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room. This item of expense amounted to £7:4. Other city expenses, paid on Dec. 2 for this celebration, were £29:18 to John Hide for the public dinner; £4:12:3 for gunpowder for the militia, and £21:1:9 for gunpowder for the artillery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 53.

Dec. 2 The common council refers to the committee on streets and roads: "A Memorial of John Ramsay on the Subject of his Mill lately erected on the Stream of Harlem River at Kings Bridge;" "A Petition of the Inhabitants in Partition Street for numbering the Houses" (see D 30), and "a Petition from the Mechanicks Society with a plan for rendering the Piece of Ground, at the upper end of Chatham Street lately purchased by the Society, more square & convenient for the erection of a Hall for the said Society."—*M. 16 Payments by the city in this year for the improvements at the Battery and around the government house have been as follows: Jan. 21, £1,000; March 18, £200; March 25, £400; May 14, £300; July 1, £400; Sept. 9, £325; Dec. 16, £7:16:2,—total, £2,632:16:2.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 766, 776, 778; II: 9, 18, 32, 55. The grand total expense for these improvements was £8,188:13:6. See D 12, 1791; N 5, 1792.

17 John Avery (see My 20) advertises that the "Belvidere Ball Room. For the use of public or private parties, is now decorated for the reception of such Ladies and Gentlemen as may please to add to its brilliancy by their presence. . . . The construction of this room is truly remarkable for the most pleasing echo of music."—Daily Adv., D 18, 1793. See 1794. For later reference to the Belvedere, see ibid., Ap 16, My 24, Je 24, 1794.

22 A newspaper correspondent, in an open letter addressed to the city magistrates, complains that on this day (Sunday) he saw about 200 "Negroes, Boys, and Gentlemen," skating on the Fresh Water Pond ("commonly called the Collock"). He considers it a flagrant violation of the Sabbath, and evidence of neglect of duty on the part of the magistrates.—Weekly Museum, D 28, 1793.

24 A professorship of law is instituted at Columbia College.—Assemb. Jour., 18th sess., 85. This was filled by James Kent, subsequently chancellor of New York State.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 76–77.

30 The street committee, reporting on the petition of Dec. 2 of the inhabitants of Partition St. "for numbering the Houses," presents the following plan, which the common council adopts, for numbering houses in all the streets:

"That the following Method in the Opinion of your Committee will be the most simple and convenient. Beginning at the next House in every Street terminating at either of the Rivers where such Street intersects the main Street next to the River and all Houses below such intersecting Street to be numbered separately beginning with N° 1 looking upwards in all main Streets and downwards in all the Slips on the one side of the Street and N° 2 on the opposite side and so on to the end of the Street or Slip That all Streets be numbered separately as far as they are known & distinguished by the name by which they are called as for example: From the Intersection of Duke Street down to the East River is called Old Slip from the said Duke Street down to the Intersection of Maiden Lane Smith Street from thence to the Intersection of Frankfort Street William Street and from thence to the Intersection of Queen Street King George Street That from the Intersection of Pearl Street and Whitehall Street to the River be called Whitehall Slip And be numbered beginning at the said Intersection and in like Manner with all the other Slips both on the East and North Rivers. That Greenwich Street be the boundary of the Intersection Streets on the West side and Great Dock Street Hanover Square Queen & Cherry Streets on the East side of this City. That a Board be put up at each end of every Street with the Name of the Street and an Index or hand pointing towards the Street painted thereon, That one of the Surveyors of this City [Evert Bancker, Jr.—see Je 10, 1794] be employed to make the numbers on the Houses with Chalk and notify the Occupants thereof and a Painter to mark the number with Paint on the front of the House near the Door. That any Occupant of any House may be permitted to put up the number at his or her own expence provided it be done within twenty Days after such Notice and that the Subject of this Report be put under the direction of a Committee of this Board to see the same carried into immediate execution." Dated Dec. 26, 1793, and signed by the street committee. The board appoints a committee to 1793 D 30 carry the report into execution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 57. See, further, Je 10, 1794; and descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 423. Regarding the renumbering of the houses on Wall St. at this time, see 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1914), 105 et seq.

" Among payments made for city work are £260 "towards Expences of the Committee for preventing infectious Distempers" (see S 16); and £32:14:7 "for provender for the Horses employed on Improvements in the Fields."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 57–58. The original bill for the latter item is preserved in metal file No. 12, city clerk's record-room.

" Representatives of "a number of Students composing a Law Society," in a petition to the common council, say that they "have lately formed themselves into a Society for their mutual improvement in the knowledge of their profession, and are desirous of meeting at the City Hall in the Room lately occupied by the Museum or any other . . . one Evening in each week."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 14, city clerk's record-room. Although endorsed "granted," the record was not entered in the minutes of the board.

31 During 1793, "There entered the port of New York 683 vessels from foreign ports, and 1,381 coasting vessels."—Merchants' Mag. (1845), XII: 366.

— At the close of 1793, Jefferson resigned as secretary of state.—Winsor, VII: 463.

— The first edition of The Columbian Muse. A Selection of American Poetry, from various Authors of established Reputation, made its appearance this year (printed by J. Carey, New York). Another edition, in this year, was printed by J. Carey, N. Y. for Matthew Carey, Phila. Among the poems of N. Y. interest is "Character of St. Tammany," by Wm. Prichard.

— In this year, Samuel Morey of Conn., who commenced his experiments on the Connecticut River in 1790, propelled his steamboat from Hartford to New York City at the rate of five miles an hour. "Chancellor Livingston, Judge Livingston, John Stevens, and others, were on board this boat when she went from New York to Greenwich."—Preble, Chron. Hist. of the Origin and Development of Steam Navigation, 38 et seq. In 1797, Morey exhibited another steamboat on the Delaware.—Ibid., 40–41.

— The Prince de Talleyrand spent part of this year in New York City. He states in his memoirs: "I witnessed the return of the first American trading expedition to Bengal; the ship owners connected with it were largely repaid for their outlay, and in the following year, fourteen American vessels started for India from different ports, in order to obtain a share of the enormous profits secured by the English company . . ."—Memoirs of the Prince de Talleyrand (ed. by the Duc de Broglie; trans. by Beaufort and Hall, 1895), I: 181–83. See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), opp. p. 352, of the house in which Talleyrand was said to have lived, on the Bloomingdale Road, near the Hudson River and 75th St., once known as Major Thompson's, but in 1863 Perritt's mansion.

Herbert L. Stone wrote of this period: "I had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Jefferson in an old two-story house in that [Cedar] street, . . . And there was Talleyrand, whom I used to meet at the houses of General Hamilton and of Noah Webster, with his club-foot and passionless, immovable countenance, sarcastic and malicious even in his intercourse with children."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 422. Dr. Francis, speaking of Aaron Burr's home, "Richmond Hill," said: "Here Talleyrand, who in the morning had discoursed on the tariff with Hamilton, passed perhaps the afternoon of the same day with Burr, on the subject of the fur trade and commerce with Great Britain, associated with Volney, . . . while the Syrian traveller, in his turn, descanted on theogony, the races of the red men, and Niagara. I cannot well conceive of a greater intellectual trio."—Francis, Old New York (1866), 17–18.

— In this year, New York court cases were first published in Coleman's and Caine's Cases.—See Hist. of Bench and Bar, I: 239.

— Alexander Anderson, a native New Yorker, is generally recognized as the "Father of Wood-Engraving in the United States." He began to work as a copperplate engraver in this year, and, even after taking his M.D. degree at Columbia, continued his former profession. He attained considerable proficiency in this branch of art, and, in 1820, became interested in the wood-engravings of Bewick and his followers. Though Dr. Anderson was entirely self-taught, he soon established an enviable reputation in this new field. His use of the "white line" in wood-engraving was peculiarly successful and effective.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 8–9; Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 134–36. For a list of his engravings, see Stauffer, op. cit., II: 11–14, and Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 47–50. 1794 —

In 1794–98, Elkanah Tisdale was established in New York as an "Engraver and miniature painter." He worked in both line and stipple, but his plates possess little merit. He was a better designer than engraver, but his best work was as a miniature portrait painter.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 272–73. In the list of his engravings mentioned in ibid., II: 535–39, occur one of the "New Theatre" and one of the "New City Tavern." Additional plates are listed in Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 285–86. —

In or about this year, Archibald Gracie built a country-seat, overlooking the East River.—The Picture of N. Y. (1807), 186; cf. Liber Deeds, CXX: 194 (New York); Mag. Am. Hist. (Nov,, 1879), 690–92. The house is still standing on the north side of 88th St., between Avenue B and the East River, within the enclosure of Carl Schurz (East River) Park.—See L. M. R. K., III: 949; Pl. 177, Vol. III. —

In this year, Charles-Balthazar-Julien Févret de Saint-Mémin drew and engraved his "View of the City and Harbour of New York, taken from Mount Pitt, the seat of John R. Livingston, Esq.," which is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 62. This is the most interesting and beautiful view of the period showing the city from the north. A very similar view, drawn by Archibald Robertson, bearing the date "11th April 1779," and showing the fortifications in the foreground, is owned by Harris D. Colt, Esq. It belonged originally to the splendid collection of about fifty sepia drawings of American cities, etc., made by Robertson just prior to and during the Revolution. For a brief description of such of these views as are of New York interest, see Jl 12, 1776. This collection now belongs to the N. Y. P. L. (Spencer Fund). —

A view of Belvedere House, as it appeared in this year, is shown in Vol. I, Pl. 60-a. This building was erected in 1792 (see Je 25, 1792) as a sort of country club. It occupied a beautiful site overlooking the East River, on grounds bounded by the present Montgomery, Clinton, Cherry, and Monroe Sts. For mention of the house in this year, see Ag 26; see also Henry Wansey's account under Mr 24. —

The present firm of W. H. Schieffelin & Co., wholesale druggists and manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations, was originated in 1794 by Jacob Schieffelin, whose warehouse was at 193 Pearl St.—King's Handbook (1893), 911. —

"This day the new-built Episcopal Church, entitled Christ's Church in Ann-street, will be opened."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Ja 1, 1794. The sale of pews was to commence on March 25.—Daily Adv., Mr 18, 1794. This congregation, the first Episcopal one in the city independent of Trinity Church, had been incorporated in 1793. For its later history see Mag. Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 60–62; L. M. R. K., III: 932. Jan. 1

Abraham Brower is admitted to partnership with Samuel Loudon and his son, and their paper appears as The Diary; or Evening Register.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 407; Early Newspapers, II: 419. See O 22. "

Thomas Greenleaf changes the title of his paper (see My 4, 1790) to Greenleaf's New York Journal & Patriotic Register.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 434. He started another paper on May 11, 1795. "

The city treasurer lays before the common council an "Estimate of Expences of the City & County of New York for the Year 1794 including Fees of Collection & other Deductions." It shows a total of £20,000, and is to be raised by tax, for which purpose the board approves a petition to the legislature for a law authorizing the raising of the money by a tax.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 58–59. This was the annual proceeding. Cf. Ja 5, 1795; Ja 25, 1796. 6

Pursuant to resolutions adopted at its previous session, the legislature begins its seventeenth session, at Albany. It adjourned on March 27.—Assemb. Jour. (1794), 3, 180; Senate Jour. (1794), 3, 84. It next met at Poughkeepsie (see Ja 6, 1795). 7

"From a calculation made on good ground it appears, that the banks in this city [New York] circulate to the amount of three 9 1794 Ja 9 millions of dollars. This is probably a sixth or seventh of all the current specie and bank notes in the United States."—Am. Minerva, Ja 9, 1794.

13 Congress passes a law providing that, on and after May 1, 1795 (q.v.), "the flag of the United States, be fifteen stripes alternate red and white. That the Union be fifteen stars, white in a blue field."—Laws of U. S., 3d cong., chap 1.

" Trinity vestry passes a resolution "that the Four Streets to the Southward of Hubert Street be named as follows: Vestry Street, Laight Street, Desbrosses Streets, and Watts Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

16 Aaron Burr, writing from Philadelphia to his daughter Theodosia, says: "On Sunday se'nnight (I think the 26th) I shall, unless baffled or delayed by ice or weather, be with you at Richmond Hill."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, I: 375. This reference shows that Burr occupied Richmond Hill at least three years before he procured his long lease from Trinity Church (see My 1, 1797). In 1795, he was still in possession of the house (see Ja 5 and S 17, 1795). The city directory for 1794 gives Burr's address as "office in Partition-street, and house on Richmond hill," but the directories for 1795–97 record only the business address.

Another authority states: "The house at Richmond Hill, Greenwich Village, in which Aaron Burr lived, was a notable resort for the learned and elegant people of New York. . . . Burr occupied it for a country residence before he became Vice-President. There he entertained Jerome Bonaparte, Talleyrand, Volney, Louis Philippe, and many other notable foreigners, as well as the leading members of New York's early aristocracy. . . . It was there that Burr laid his far-reaching political plans. Jefferson, Madison and Hamilton all visited and dined there. Mayor Edward Livingston, beloved of the people, was an especially favored guest. . . . The gateway to the grounds stood about at the end of Macdougal Street, and north of the gate was a pond, generally called Burr's Pond."—Moss, The Am. Metropolis, III: 304–5. See also Pidgin, Theodosia, the first Gentlewoman of her Time, chapter on "Richmond Hill;" and Parton, Life of Aaron Burr, 154.

20 The first steps are taken for building a new almshouse. The common council decides that "the present Buildings" have "become unfit for the comfortable accommodation of the Poor and in so ruinous a Condition as not to justify the expending any more Monies thereon in repairs." A petition to the legislature is decided upon, "for leave to set on foot a Lottery for the raising of £10,000 to defray the Expences of erecting a new Building competent for the Purpose." Such petition is at once read and agreed to by the board, which orders that it be sealed, signed by the mayor, and given to the members of senate and assembly from this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 60. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 601. See, further, Je 16.

" Mayor Varick lays before the common council "Certificates and Vouchers to support the Claim of this Bd against the Public for the Arms & Accoutrements taken out of the City Hall & furnished to the Continental Troops raised by this State in the Year 1775." The board orders that a petition to congress for payment for them be prepared.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 60. Congress rejected the petition.—Ibid., II: 79.

" The city pays £157:10:6 "towards the Expenses of the Committee for prevents the spreading of infectious Dissease."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 61.

22 Half of Blackwell's Island is again offered for sale (see Mr 8, 1784), regarding which information is offered by Joseph Hallett of 204 Water St., or by Josiah Blackwell of Newtown, L. I.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 22, 1794.

24 John Butler founds a society of Unitarians in New York. He was doubtless the first Unitarian who preached here. He issued his first public notice on this day.—Daily Adv., Ja 24, 1794; McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., II: 238 et seq.; Winsor, VIII: 487. His meeting-place was an "assembly-room" on Cortlandt St., near Broadway.—Ibid. A so-called "Unitarian Society" is mentioned in his published notice in the Daily Adv., Mr 14, 1794. His notices ceased in April, two months prior to the arrival in New York, on June 4 (q.v.), of Joseph Priestley, the scientist, afterwards known as one of the founders of Unitarianism in America. The first preaching in New York after Unitarianism became recognized as a distinct religious denomination was on April 25, 1819 (q.v.). See also Winsor, VIII: 487.

Feb. 3 The common council appoints a committee to determine whether the made ground on the East River front in the vicinity of Wall St. is sufficient to bear buildings of stone or brick.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 62; see also ibid., II: 68, 74–75, and many other similar examples, between 1791 and 1796, showing the operation of the law governing such cases, referred to under date of May 7, 1792 (q.v.).

" The common council orders "that the Committee on the erection of the new Watch House fit up the upper Room for the accommodation of the High Constable."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 63. This date probably marks the completion of the building.—See Je 3, 1793.

6 In an "Advertisement," bearing this date, addressed "To the real Republicans of New-York," and signed by Jno. Clark and others, it is said: "The Cap of Liberty has this day been insulted and torn down, in an exulting manner, after having been erected in a peaceable and orderly manner, in the public Porter House, of Charles Gardner. If Republicans suffer such daring and unpresedented conduct to prevail, farewell to Liberty. It is time, fellow-citizens, to drive the Wolves from amongst the sheep, and destroy their Calves."—Daily Adv., F 7, 1794; Diary, Mr 7, 1794. This was the first of a series of "Liberty Cap" episodes which stirred public indignation at this time.—See My 18, 1795.

11 A letter, signed "Democrat," is published, appealing to "all true Republicans" to change the names of King, Queens, Princess, and Duke Sts.—Am. Minerva, F 11, 1794. This was answered later by "Candor," whose objection was that "The names of towns, cities and streets in America are standing historical monuments; they tell us from what country, whether England, Holland, Germany or France, the first settlers came, and the names of King and Queen street tell us we were once subject to a foreign monarch. This so far from being a reason for abolishing the names, should be a reason for preserving them . . ."—Ibid., Ap 19, 1794; and see D 30, 1793.

Nevertheless, the following notice was published (probably late in the year) regarding alterations made in the names of certain streets, and in the method of numbering the houses:

"What was formerly known by the names of Little Water-street, Albany-pier, Louis, Governeur's, Hallett's and Jones's wharfs, and Front-street, are now called Front-street, from Whitehall to Beekman-slip.

"Little Dock-street, Crugar's wharf, and Water-street, are now called Water-street, from Whitehall-street to Catharine-slip.

"Pearl-street, Great Dock-street, Hanover-square, and Queen-street, are now called Pearl-street, from State-street, near the Battery, to Chatham-street.

"Duke and Stone streets are now called Stone-street, from Whitehall-street to that part of Pearl-street formerly called Hanover-square.

"Princess and Beaver streets are now called Beaver-street.

"The numbers in all the above streets begin at the West end.

"Smith-street, William-street, and King George-street, from the Old-slip to Pearl-street, near Chatham-street, are now called William-street, and the numbers begin at the Old-slip.

"Great George-street and Broadway, are now called Broadway, from the Government-house (where the numbers begin) to a little beyond the Hospital.

"Copsie-street, near the Battery, is now called State-street, and the numbers begin at Whitehall-street.

"Prince-street is now called Rose-street, and the numbers begin at Frankfort-street.

"Golden-hill and John-streets are now called John-street, and the numbers begin at Broadway.

"Crown-street is now Liberty-street, and the numbers begin at Maiden-lane.

"Fletcher and Cooper streets are now called Fletcher-street, and the numbers begin at Pearl-street.

"Little Queen-street, is now Cedar-street, and the numbers begin at William-street.

". . . it was intended by the Corporation, that what was formerly King-street should be called Congress-street, . . . but the Corporation have lately appointed it to be called Pine-street, and the numbers begin at Broadway.

"Maiden-lane and the Fly-market, are uniformly called Market-street in this Directory [for 1794]; but the Editor understands, that from Broadway (where the numbers begin) to No. 112, corner 1794 Feb. 11 of Pearl-street, is to continue by the name of Maiden-lane, and from No. 112, to the East-river, is to be called the Fly-market, as formerly, although the numbers are continued on from Broadway to the end of the said market."—N. Y. Directory, 1794. See also F 24; Ap 21.

13 The first sheet of De Witt's map of the state of New York, just published, is advertised for sale by Hugh Gaine.—Daily Adv., F 13, 1794.

15 The constitution of "The Democratic Society of the City of New York" is published in full.—Am. Minerva, F 20, 1794; N. Y. Jour., F 19, 1794. Regarding the relations of the Democratic and Republican parties at this period, see Ap 3.

17 "A proposal of Zebina Curtis & others for conveying Water into this City" is read in common council and referred to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 63. Still other proposals were submitted in 1795 (q.v., Mr 30 and Ap 7).

24 A large number of inhabitants of Smith St. sign a petition, addressed to the committee of the common council appointed to regulate the streets of the city and re-number the houses (see D 30, 1793), asking that one name be given to Smith St., William St. and King George St., all of which names are at present found in the same street, which begins at the Old Slip and ends in Queen St. The three names tend to perplex strangers; this condition has been a subject of complaint for many years. The petitioners are indifferent as to whether the street be called Smith or William St., but they observe "that there would be a propriety in continuing the name of the street which has been particularly noted for Business, for William Street is more generally known to strangers than either of the others, and which prudence and Policy would dictate should not be altered, particularly when we consider the situation of those who reside therein, being principly merchants in the Dry Goods Line."—From the original MS., in metal file No. 5, city clerk's record-room.

The common council orders that Smith St. (from Duke St. to Maiden Lane), William St. (from Maiden Lane to Frankfort St.), and King George St. (from Frankfort to Queen St.) be considered one continuous street called William St.; also that Broadway (from the government house to Vesey St.), and Great George St. (from Vesey St. to the "Sand Hill cross Road") be one continuous street called "Broad Way;" and that Pearl St., Great Dock St., Hanover Sq., and Queen St. be one continuous street called Pearl St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 65. Regarding Broadway, see also Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 551. Modern Pearl St. appears first as "The East River" in 1644 (Liber GG: 92, Albany); "The Strand," 1647 (ibid., 166, 204); "The Waal" (sheet-piling or bulkhead), 1659 (Liber Deeds, A: 161, 174); Pearl St. from North River to Whitehall St., 1652 (Liber HH: 1, Albany); it is shown as one with Dock St., Hanover Square, and Queen St. in 1730 (Pls. 26, 27-a, 27, Vol. I); the western end was called Magazine St. until 1811 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, VI: 574). For the assembling and renaming of other streets, see Ap 21. See also F 11.

" Wm. C. Thompson advertises: "The Tea Water Pump, To be let with two houses—Also half of said pump, house and three large lots of ground to be sold."—Daily Adv., F 24, 1794. See D 6, 1796.

Mar. 3 The Old American Company presents the first opera written and produced in America—"Tammany, Or, The Indian Chief"—the prologue being spoken by Mr. Hodgkinson, who acted the title role, and the epilogue by Mr. Martin; "The overture and accompanyments composed by Mr. Hewit, with new scenery, dresses, and decorations."—Daily Adv., Mr 3, 1794. It was an operatic spectacle, written by Mrs. Hatton, "a lady of this city," who was a sister of Mrs. Siddons and the Kembles.—Ireland, Records of the N. Y. Stage (1866), I: 109; Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1833), I: 200.

5 John Ireland advertises to let "That beautiful garden, near the Hospital, called the Ranelagh" (see Ap 5, 1788). In the garden are apple, pear, peach, plum, and cherry as well as nut trees, berries of all kinds, flowering shrubs, asparagus, etc. There is a "very elegant green house," as well as a "tolerable good dwelling house adjoining the garden." Applications are to be made to Ireland, on the premises.—Daily Adv., Mr 5, 1794; L. M. R. K., III: 952.

9 Jonathan Ludlow, a friend of De Witt Clinton, writes that the news of the recapture of Toulon is celebrated in New York by "the ringing of Bells firing of Cannon hoisting colours singing & dancing to the Tune of the Carinagnole in the Tontine in the evening & the special meeting of the Democratic Society attended by congratulations & other expressions of republican Joy which was easily read in the Countenances of all the well wishers to the pure cause."—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), I: 24, in Columbia Univ. Library. Mar. 9

All "True Republicans" are invited to secure tickets for a collation at Corre's Hotel, 69 Broadway, to commemorate the "glorious account" lately received of the recapture of Toulon and the "successes of our brave Republican Friends and Allies." Officers and soldiers of the militia are requested to appear in uniform.—Daily Adv., Mr 10, 1794. American and French officers and about 800 citizens "paraded through several of the Streets with the two Flags join'd and the Liberty Cap, to Corre's Hotel where a Collation was provided for such as had tickets."—Alex. Anderson's Diary (MS.), in Columbia Univ. Library. 10

Edward Livingston writes from New York to De Witt Clinton: "The English party is apparently annihilated here[;] after finding from two specimens we gave them that the People were no longer desposed to bear the insulting injuries of Britain[,] the warmest of her Friends acknowledge that She has 'misused us past indurance' . . . the Ministerialists now talk of nothing but a Standing Army who are to Swim across the Atlantic & pluck the Crown from Georges Brow—while they give 20000 Dollˢ to fortify our port they are to raise 15 Regiments to garison it—We are in Great Tribulation at the loss of the bill for fortifying the harbour for every Military man that I have conversed with thinks the provision of congress so totally inadequate that we must be forced to Supply the deficiency by Subscription unless the Legislature try a Second bill" (see Mar. 20).—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), I: 25. 13

For the causes of ill-feeling between the people of the U. S. and England, see McMaster, Vol. II, chapters 8 and 9. They are also indicated in the instructions to Jay on April 19 (q.v.), and in the treaty of Nov. 19 (q.v.).

"Baron Stuben has been to take a view of the harbor of this city, to ascertain, for his private satisfaction, the best place for erecting fortifications. We hear he is decidedly of opinion, the best place is at the Narrows, several miles from this city. This place was contemplated by the British, during the last war; in case they had been necessited to guard the city from an attack by sea. It is judged that resistance at that place will be as effectual as any other, and certainly a stand at a distance from the city will be the most eligible."—Am. Minerva, Mr 17, 1794. 17

" The common council orders that the committee on improvements in the Fields (see Jl 30, 1792) "employ a Person to keep the Boys & Cattle from injuring the Trees."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 68.

The proprietors of hackney carriages publish a scale of fares for different parts of the city, "to prevent impositions by the Coachmen." Among the items are the following: 18

"To take up and set down one or two passengers within the town, to the south of the tea-water-pump," 2s.

"For waiting for company in town, each hour," 4s.

"To carry or fetch one passenger to or from Belvidere, by day," 4s.

"For every one exceeding one," 2s.

"To carry or fetch one or four passengers to or from Belvidere, by night," 8s.

"To go to Bell-View," 16s.

"To go round Apthorp's tour," £1:8.

"To go to Harleam, one day," £1:12.

"To go to Harleam, half a day," £1:8.

"To go to the fort," £2.

"To go to King's Bridge," £2:8.

Congress orders that New York and other ports and harbours in the United States be fortified.—Laws of U. S., 3d cong., chap 9. 20

" At a meeting of the citizens at the Coffee House a committee of five is appointed "to dispatch an express to-morrow to the Assembly [at Albany] with a petition for a greater sum for fortifications [see Mr 13]."—Anderson's Diary, 1794 (MS.), 50. See Mr 26.

Henry Wansey, F. A. S. (a Wiltshire clothier), arrives at New York by boat from New Haven, after passing through Hell Gate. 24

1794 Mar. 24 Of his visit he writes: ". . . We moored our vessel at Burling slip . . . , and . . . I landed, and enquired out the Tontine coffee-house. New York is much more like a city than Boston, having broad footways paved, with a curb to seperate them from the road. The streets are wider, and the houses in a better style. . . . The Tontine tavern and coffee-house is a handsome large brick building; you ascend six or eight steps under a portico, into a large public room, which is the Stock Exchange of New York, where all bargains are made. Here are two books kept, as at Lloyd's, of every ship's arrival and clearing out. This house was built for the accommodation of the merchants, by Tontine shares of two hundred pounds each. It is kept by Mr. Hyde, formerly a woollen draper in London. You can lodge and board there at a common table, and you pay ten shillings currency a day, whether you dine out or not. No appearance of shop windows as in London; only stores, which make no show till you enter the houses. House rent is very dear; a hundred pounds stirling a year is a very usual price for a common storekeeper. . . .

". . . In the evening called on Mr Jay, brother to the Embassador, and took a walk with him and Mr Armstrong, to the Belvidere, about two miles out of New York towards the Sound—an elegant tea drinking house, encircled with a gallery, at one story high, where company can walk round the building and enjoy the fine prospect of New York harbour and shipping . . .

"From hence we crossed the Boston road, to another tea drinking house and garden, the Indian Queen. This place is filled by Frenchmen with their families. Here they all wear the tricoloured cockade, I observed, whether aristocrats or democrats."—Jour. of an Excursion to the U. S. in the summer of 1794, by Henry Wansey (Salisbury, 1796), 73–74.

" "Resolved That the Committee appointed for that purpose proceed with the Building of the Steeple of S^{t}. Pauls Church according to the Plan agreed upon by the Vestry."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The steeple had been designed by James Lawrence (see O 3, 1793). It was finished by Dec. 1 (q. v.).

26 An embargo for 30 days is laid on all ships and vessels in the ports of the U. S.—Laws of U. S., 3d cong., p. 140. On April 18 the embargo was extended until May 25.—Ibid., p. 141. See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., II: 173–74.

" The legislature passes "An Act authorising the Erecting of Fortifications within this State." This is done because the monies that may be appropriated by the congress for fortifying the city and port of New York may not be sufficient. The sum of £30,000 is appropriated "for the purpose of repairing and erecting fortifications at or near the city and port of New-York." George Clinton, Matthew Clarkson, James Watson, Richard Varick, Nicholas Fish, Ebenezer Stevens, and Abijah Hammond are named commissioners, with full power to repair and erect such fortifications. They are to procure cannon and ammunition, by applying first to the president of the United States. They may appropriate part of the moneys "to the building and equipping of one or more floating batteries." Other commissioners are named for the western and northern frontiers.—Laws of N. Y. (1794), chap. 41 (Webster, III: 61). The legislature made further provision on April 6, 1795 (q. v.).

27 As "the depredations committed by the Algerine corsairs on the commerce of the United States render it necessary that a naval force should be provided for its protection," congress authorizes the president to provide and equip four ships of 44 guns each and two of 36 guns each.—Laws of U. S., 3d cong., chap 12. The keels of three of these frigates were laid, but when the U. S. made peace with Algiers in 1795 (q. v., S 5), their building was stopped. They were later completed, and the first one, the "United States," was launched on May 10, 1797 (q. v.). They were the foundation of the U. S. Navy.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., II: 170–71, 323–24.

" The legislature passes an amendment to its act "to prevent the bringing in and spreading of Infectious Distempers in this State." It provides, among other things, that from time to time Governor's Island may be appropriated for the purpose of erecting buildings or tents to accommodate infected persons, in spite of any grant made by the Regents (see Mr 31, 1790).—Laws of N. Y. (1794), chap. 53 (Webster, III: 68–69).

" On the night of the 27th, two English vessels attempted to leave port by way of Hell Gate, "nothwithstanding they knew of the embargo." On the morning of the 28th, the collector of the port requested "the Brigadier General of the Militia of this state" to assist him in pursuing and bringing them back, but the time being too short to call out a detachment of militia, "a number of fellow citizens of different regiments stepped into the custom house boat, under the command of an officer, and proceeded up the East River, shortly after which the two elopers were safely moored in our harbour."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Mr 29, 1794. Mar. 27

31 Gardiner Baker writes from the Exchange to the common council, soliciting their "favour and approbation to occupy the vacant lot of ground, on the corner of Pearl Street fronting the Battery as A Menage for the use of the Present Living Animals and Birds that belong to the Museum [see N 1, 1793] and those that may hearafter [sic] be collected, the present number consists of Five Animals and Two Birds." He declares that if his request is granted he will "Caws the Lot to be enclosed with a neat fence, which shall be handsomly painted, so as to be in some measure ornimental."—Misc. MSS. (Box B) in N. Y. H. S. The common council acceded to the petition on April 1 (q. v.).

Apr. 1 The common council refers to the street committee a petition of William Valleau for permission to erect and fill in a bulkhead "so far into the River in front of his Ship Yard at Corlaers Hook as to enable him to launch Ships."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 69.

" The common council permits Herman Le Roy to plant trees in front of his house in Broadway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 69.

" The common council grants to Gardiner Baker, keeper of the Museum, "the use of the small Corner Lot at the end of Pearl Street near the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 70. See, further, S 29.

" The methods employed to prevent yellow fever being conveyed to New York are indicated in a common council order to pay one Verdine Elsworth £47:8 "for the storage of Baggage of Passengers from Phil^{a} during the late infectious Fever—the use of his Boats by the Committee and for subsisting the two Marshalls stationed at Powlus Hook by order of the Committee."

The legislature having granted money to "indemnify" the city "for the Expences incurred last Year in preventing the Malignant Fever at Phil^{a} being brought into this City," the common council orders that the mayor be requested to draw an order, on behalf of the board, on the state treasurer to pay the city treasurer.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 71.

3 The commissioners "appointed to direct the fortifications, proposed at this port," go down to The Narrows. On the following day "they proceeded to Governor's Island, to examine and determine on the most proper places to erect forts and other works for the defence of the city and harbour."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ap 5, 1794.

5 "It is in contemplation to add furnaces with apparatus on an entire new plan, to all the fortifications at the entry of the harbours of the United States by which shot may be heated Red Hot, in half the time usually taken for this process."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ap 5, 1794.

9 Chief-Justice John Jay, having been called into conference with the president at Philadelphia, writes in a private letter to Mrs. Jay: ". . . The question of war or peace seems to be as much in suspense here as in New York when I left you." On April 10, he added: "The aspect of the times is such, that prudential arrangements calculated on the prospect of war should not be neglected, nor too long postponed . . . Great Britain has acted unwisely and unjustly; and there is some danger of our acting intemperately."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 2–3. See Ap 19.

" "As many people are now setting out trees in the streets of various parts of the city, would it not be advisable to observe some uniformity and exactness in setting them out? In the Broad Way particularly, a continuation of trees from Trinity Church, along what is called Jarvis's Parade, as far as St. Paul's, would look very beautiful, and cause the said Parade to be cool and pleasant for a walk in the summer mornings."—Diary, Ap 9, 1794. See also descrip. of Pl. 68-b, I: 452.

14 Mayor Varick, "as one of the Commissioners for erecting Fortifications for the Defence of this City," informs the common council that the commissioners "had determined on the erection of Works on Bedlows Isle & on Ellis's Isle and that the Law under which they acted required that the Land on which the Fortifications are erected must be vested in the People of this State and therefore that it will be necessary for this Board to grant surrender

1794 Apr. 14 & assign the said Isle called Bedlow's Isle & the Soil from high to low Water mark around the said Isle called Ellis's Isle to the People of this State for the Purposes of erecting Fortifications as aforesaid." The board orders that the clerk prepare the draft of a grant and report it to the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 71–72. See, further, Ap 21.

" The common council orders that the outside street or wharf from Whitehall Slip to Coenties Slip be 70 ft. wide.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 72. The importance of this brief regulation is fully apparent in an order passed on April 7, 1795 (q. v.).

" The common council permits the mayor to plant trees in front of his houses in Broadway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 72.

18 "Yesterday [April 18], being good Friday, in contempt of Judas the traitor, the seamen on board a Portuguese brig, lying at Jones's wharf, hanged his effigy to the yard arm, where it hung till this day; when, on the firing of several guns, and much noisy vocifiration, it was lowered into the water and roundly ducked, then taken up, dragged through the streets and beat with clubs as it passed, to the no small diversion of the boys and other spectators. Such is the mode some nations adopt to manifest their zeal for religion, and their abhorrence of its enemies."—Diary, Ap 19, 1794.

19 The president appoints Chief-Justice Jay envoy entraordinary from the United States "to the Court of His Britannic Majesty." —Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 6. Jay's instructions, dated May 6, and signed by Edmund Randolph, secretary of state, give a clear statement of the causes and objects of the mission, the principal aim of which was "to repel war, for which we are not disposed, and into which the necessity of vindicating our honor and our property may, but can alone, drive us; to prevent the British ministry, should they be resolved on war, from carrying with them the British nation; and, at the same time, to assert, with dignity and firmness, our rights, and our title to reparation for past injuries." These injuries and ways of redress are thus concisely summarized:

"I. One of the causes of your mission being the vexations and spoliations committed on our commerce by the authority of instructions from the British Government, you will receive from the Secretary of State the following documents [the official correspondence with Great Britain] . . . You will perceive that one of the principles, upon which compensation is demanded for the injuries . . . is, that provisions . . . are not to be ranked as contraband . . . Compensation for all the injuries sustained, and captures, will be strenuously pressed by you . . . If the British ministry should hint at any supposed predilection in the United States for the French nation, as warranting the whole or any part of these instructions, you will stop the progress of this subject, as being irrelative to the question in hand. It is a circumstance which the British nation have no right to object to us; because we are free in our affections and independent in our government. But it may be safely answered, upon the authority of the correspondence between the Secretary of State and Mr. Hammond, that our neutrality has been scrupulously observed."

"II. A second cause of your mission, but not inferior in dignity to the preceding, though subsequent in order, is to draw to a conclusion all points of difference between the United States and Great Britain, concerning the treaty of peace. . . . You were a minister at its [the treaty's] formation, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs when the sentiments of the Congress, under the confederation, were announced through your office; and as Chief Justice you have been witness to what has passed in our courts, and know the real state of our laws, with respect to British debts."

III, IV, and V. Jay is given discretion as to entering into negotiations for a commercial treaty; and, if he so decides, he shall make a treaty with certain stated objects, relating to reciprocity, imports, safety of neutral commerce, contraband, blockade, visit and search, privateers, export of military stores, convoy of merchant ships, fishing grounds, inheritance by aliens, sale of prizes of war, pirates, shipwreck, safety of Americans in British dominions in times of war, consuls, Indian wars, troops in Canada along Great Lakes, etc. General instructions are added regarding such treaty.—Ibid., IV: 10–21. See My 12, and N 19.

21 A "fatigue party, consisting of about 50 officers of the regiments of artillery and brigade of militia, of this city," perform a day's work on the fortifications on Governor's Island.—Daily Adv., Ap 22, 1794.

In accordance with the common council's order of April 14 (q. v.), the clerk produces "the Draft of Grant to the people of this State of Bedlows Isle & the Soil from high to low Waters Mark around Ellis's Isle for the purpose of erecting Fortifications for the Defence of this City and no other with a proviso that whenever all or any part of the Premisses shall be no longer used for the purpose of Fortifications the same be revert to & vest in this Corporation." The board approves and orders that the grant be engrossed, sealed, and signed by the mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 73; Liber E of City Grants, p. 22 (in comptroller's office). Cf., however, Je 7 and 13, and Ag 10, 1796. Apr. 21

" The common council orders that a ferry be established between New York and Nutten (Governor's) Island, and appoints a committee to report regulations for it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 73. On May 5, this committee reported that it had agreed with John Hillyer to keep this ferry for one year from May 1, "He to provide a sufficient number of good Boats to carry Passengers and to receive three pence for each Passenger, to carry all fatigue Parties gratis & to keep in Repair the Ferry Stairs & to have the exclusive Priviledge of the Ferryage."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 75. See, however, Je 22, 1795.

" The common council orders that the artillery officers and the officers of Col. Post's light infantry companies have permission "to exercise in the Saloon of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 73.

" The common council orders that the following alterations be made in the names of the following streets: Stone St., Duke St., and the little street from Duke St. to Hanover Sq., to be considered one continuous street, and named Stone St.; Verlettenbergh and Garden Sts. to be one continuous street named Garden St.; King St. to be named Pine St.; Little Queen to be Cedar; Crown to be Liberty; Prince to be Rose; and Beaver and Princess Sts. to be one continuous street named Beaver St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 73–74. See also F 11.

22 A number of cartmen volunteer "to go on Governor's Island on Saturday next [April 26], to assist building the Batteries." They appeal to other New York cartmen, "possessed of the least spark of patriotism," to meet at the ferry stairs at Whitehall at eight o'clock that morning.—Daily Adv., Ap 23, 1794.

23 A news item states: "We hear that the Tammany Society are determined to improve the present opportunity of adding to the incidents of their distinguished zeal for the safety and welfare of the Republic in general and of this port and city in particular, by turning out to work with their own hands upon the fortifications in the harbor. By actions of this kind, the dignity and honor of true Republicans is shown."—Kilroe, St. Tammany, 187–88, citing Columbian Gaz., Ap 23, 1794. See My 2. For the reasons for these patriotic demonstrations on the part of the citizens, see Mr 13.

28 This is the day appointed for the Democratic Society to work on the fortifications on Governor's Island.—Daily Adv., Ap 26, 1794. According to a letter of April 3, the Democratic Soc. of N. Y. City, of which James Nicholson was president, had "the same objects in view" as the Republican Society of Ulster County. —Ibid., Ap 17, 1794.

May 2 The members of the Tammany Society were to meet on this day at "Tammanial Hall," to go to work on the fortifications on Governor's Island.—The Diary, Ap 29, 1794.

In the evening, the "English Republicans" or "natives of Great Britain, and Ireland" were to meet at "Mr. Ellis's Tavern in Water-street, near Crane Wharf," to fix a day to work on the fortifications.—Daily Adv., Ap 30, 1794. They appointed May 10 for the purpose.—Diary, My 3, 1794.

" The students of Columbia College meet at "the old coffee house" and fix upon May 8 for assisting at the fortifications on Governor's Island.—The Diary, My 2, 1794.

" "To be sold at auction, On Friday, the 9th May, at 12 o'clock on the premises. The materials of the City tavern [see Ja 24, 1793], and the two adjoining buildings, the purchaser to remove the same, on or before the 15th June. A. L. Bleecker and Sons."—Daily Adv., My 2, 1794.

3 The "Republican Ship-Carpenters" are this day to meet at "Eden Hunt's Tavern, Water-street," to decide when to work on the fortifications on Governor's Island.—Daily Adv., My 1, 1794.

" "The Journeymen Hatters . . . , who may be inclined to assist at the public works, now going forward at Governor's Island," are requested to meet on the evening of May 5, "at the house of Mr. Bush in the Fields."—Daily Adv., My 3, 1794.

1794 May 5 This is the day appointed by the cordwainers of the city to work on Governor's Island. They are to meet at "the house of Mrs. Amory."—Diary, My 3, 1794.

" "The Lawyers, disposed to contribute their labor towards completing the fortifications on Governor's Island are requested to meet at Hunter's Tavern tomorrow [May 6] to make necessary arrangements."—Daily Adv., My 5, 1794.

6 This is the day appointed by the St. Andrews Society of the State of New York to work at the fortifications "now erecting upon Governor's Island."—Daily Adv., My 5, 1794.

7 A "Professorship of Humanity" is instituted at Columbia College.—Assemb. Jour., 18th sess., 85. This was filled by the Rev. Elijah D. Rattoone.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 78–79.

" The "Peruke-Makers and Hair Dressers" of this city are to work on this day on "the fortifications now erecting on Governor's Island." They are to assemble at the Exchange.—Daily Adv., My 6, 1794.

" A committee of the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen is appointed "to confer with the Commissioners of Fortifications, to ascertain when it would be most desirable for the Society to assist at the public works on Governor's Island."—Annals of the society (1882), 31. Arrangements were subsequently made to contribute a day's work.—Daily Adv., My 24, 1794.

" The students at law are requested to meet at "Mr. Hunter's tavern, Broadway, late Corre's hotel," on May 8th, to appoint a day "to contribute their labor towards compleating the fortifications on Governor's Island."—Daily Adv., My 7, 1794.

8 "The Patriotic Grocers of this City who are disposed to assist at the Fortifications erecting on Governor's Island, are requested to meet at the Old Coffee House," on the evening of May 9.—Daily Adv., My 8, 1794.

9 The Chamber of Commerce passes resolutions approving of Jay's mission to England.—Daily Adv., My 10, 1794. See also N 19, 1794, and Jl 21, 1795.

10 The "patriotic Schoolmasters in this city" made arrangements "at citizen Gad Ely's schoolroom," on May 6, to assist at the fortifications on Governor's Island on the afternoons of this Saturday and the next.—Diary, My 8, 1794.

" "The zeal of our fellow citizens, in aiding at the Fortifications does not yet abate, though there have been bodies of volunteers of 50 to 100 every day during the past 3 weeks."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 10, 1794.

12 Chief-Justice Jay, envoy extraordinary to Gt. Britain (see Ap 19), sails from New York for England. A large number of citizens, assemble at the Battery, cheer and fire a salute as his vessel passes out of the North River. The Tammany Society celebrated its anniversary in the evening and toasted his mission as well as success to the armies of France.—Daily Adv., My 13, 1794.

Writing to Mrs. Jay, in a farewell note on May 12, Mr. Jay said: ". . . I have seen this day's newspapers, and the Philadelphia democratic resolutions published in them. They give me no concern, and I hope they will be equally indifferent to you. The less you say on such subjects, the less you will flatter the importance of those who may not wish us well . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 21. In a footnote, Henry P. Johnston, editor of Jay's letters, adds this explanation: ". . . The resolutions referred to in the letter were adopted by one of the many Democratic clubs in the country which grew out of, and formed the popular enthusiasm over, the French Revolution. The Philadelphia Society denounced the English mission less than it reflected upon the President's appointment of Jay. It was claimed that his office of Chief Justice had been degraded to partisan uses—a step 'the most unconstitutional and dangerous in the annals of the United States'."

" "Great credit is due to the citizens of New York for the spirit and unanimity with which they aid the works on Governor's Island. The voluntary services performed on the fortification amounts to many thousand days works. The zeal of all parties in this business proves, that however men may differ on speculative points, or certain measures of government of little importance, yet all men agree to put the country in a posture of defence. The difference of parties seems to be this; whether we shall go to war before it is necessary or not."—Am. Minerva, My 12, 1794.

" "The patriotic republican Bakers" of the city are to meet "at the flag staff, on the battery to contribute one day to the erection of the fortifications on Governor's Island."—Diary, My 8, 1794.

The coopers are "to attend at Whitehall Dock" on this day, for the same purpose.—Daily Adv., My 9, 1794. May 12

This is the day appointed by the tallow chandlers "to contribute their labour" toward erecting fortifications on Governor's Island. Boats are to be provided at the exchange.—Daily Adv., My 9, 1794. "

The members of the Provident Society were requested "to attend at White Hall Dock" on this day to work on the fortifications.—Daily Adv., My 10, 1794. "

The common council passes ordinances for "filling in Greenwich St. from Rector Street to the Battery;" and for "making the side Walks from Pearl Street to front Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 77. 14

This day was scheduled by the tanners and curriers for their work on the Governor's Island fortifications.—Diary, My 15, 1794. 16

The "Moulders and others belonging to the Foundaries in this city," at a meeting held "at Brenneysen's tavern" on May 15, agreed to work on the fortifications on Governor's Island on May 17.—Diary, My 15, 1794. 17

"Citizens Roquet and Migevaut" publish an advertisement in French that they "have opened an Academy of Arms, Dance, etc. at their lodgings in the Ambuscade hotel No. 241 Broad Way near the Bowling Green."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 24, 1794. "

Henry Wansey records (see, however, My 12): "Dined with Mr. Jay [see Mr 24], and in the evening went to the [John Street] theatre, with Mrs. Sands and her two daughters. . . . the actors mostly from England: price of admittance to the boxes, one dollar. A very bad theatre; a new one [the Park] is going to be built by subscription, under the direction of Hodgkinson, the present manager . . . 19

"In 1740, there was but one[!] printing press in New York; now there are near twenty, and some map engravers. The following newspapers are published at New York: the Daily Advertiser, American Minerva, Daily Gazette, Diary, Evening Post, Greenleaf's; New York Journal, and one other that I do not know the name of [The Herald]. [There were at least two presses here in 1740.]

". . . I moved to more private lodgings, at Mrs. Loring's, near the battery. This is the pleasantest situation imaginable. Our common sitting room was fifty feet by thirty, and twenty in height, with windows on two sides of it. As we sat at dinner, we could see the vessels, on one side of the room, sailing out of the harbour; and on the other, the same turning up Hudson's River, apparently sailing round the house, within fifty yards of us . . . At this house lodged Mr. Genet, the late French Embassador; . . .

"Mr. Genet is on the eve of marriage with General Clinton's daughter. Being a Girondist, he must not return to France again: he has now bought an estate near Jamaica, in Long Island, where he intends wholly to reside . . ."—Journal of an Excursion to the U. S., 75–76.

On this day, the "members of the Deacon Society of this city, who propose assisting at the Fortifications erecting on Governor's Island," are to meet at "the Grand Deacon's house, in James's Street."—Daily Adv., My 17, 1794. "

"The Journeymen Cabinet Makers" were requested, on May 15, "to attend the Masters with their apprentices" at the house of Jacob Brower, 59 Nassau St., on the 20th, to assist at the fortifications on Governor's Island.—Diary, My 15, 1794. 20

The German Society of New York, at a meeting presided over by the Baron Frederick William von Steuben, adopts a resolution that "all its members and all the German inhabitants of New York in general if it were desired, should work for a day at the forts which have just been commenced on Governor's Island."—Life of Steuben, by Frederick Kapp (N. Y., 1859), 594. See Je 5. 21

"The New York Society for the information and assistance of persons emigrating from foreign countries" is established. It is made necessary by the great increase of emigration from Europe to the United States, due to "the oppressions of many of the governments of Europe, and the public calamities likely to ensue." Coming to America for protection and safety, they sustain inconveniences on their arrival "in consequence of their being unacquainted with the manners and customs of the country, and the most eligible mode of establishing themselves in their several professions." The society adopts a constitution. The president is Wm. Sing, and the secretary L. Wayland.—Am. Minerva, Jl 15, 1794. See O 15 and 21. 22

26 The common council orders "that an Ordinance be prepared to prevent the danger arising from the watering of Horses at the public Pumps."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 79. The title of the ordinance, as passed on June 2, is "A Law to prevent danger from Horses going loose or at large in the Streets of the City of New York."—Ibid., II: 80.

28 Wansey goes to Governor's Island to see the fortifications. "General Clinton was there to inspect the trying of some cannon just planted on the new battery, . . . and we . . . afterwards returned with his Excellency, in his eight-oared barge. . . .

"I went . . . to the federal hall, . . .; there I was shewn a handsome library, with a large collection of books; some good paintings also by Trumbull (an American artist, student under West) of General Washington, Governor Clinton, and Mr. Hamilton."—Wansey's Jour., 82–83.

29 This is the day appointed by the "associated body of House Carpenters of the City," on May 26, for their work on the fortifications on Governor's Island. They are to meet "at the Flag-Staff on the Battery."—Daily Adv., My 26; see also Je 3.

31 Wansey describes "Dickson's cotton manufactory at Hell Gates, about five miles from New York;" also one at Brooklyn. He mentions one at Beverley, Mass., and another at "Paterson, fifteen miles west of New York." He adds shrewd critical observations on the way these establishments should be conducted.—Wansey's Jour., 83–85.

June Hugh Torrance, president of the associated body of house
3 carpenters of the city, announces that they are to meet in front of Trinity Church this morning to go to work on the fortifications at Governor's Island. All carpenters are invited "to join in the laudable fatigues of the day."—Daily Adv., Je 3, 1794.

The "Republican Irishmen" are asked to meet in the evening "at Mr. Hunter's Hotel, Broadway."—Ibid. They appointed June 11, but on that day postponed the work till the 14th.—Ibid., Je 11, 1794.

" "John Jacob Astor, No. 149 Broad-Way, Corner of Crown-street, Gives Cash for all kinds of Furs; and has for sale A Quantity of Hatter's Fur. Also to Let on Leases Several pleasant situated Lots of Ground, in the Bowery a little North of the Bull's Head Tavern."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., Je 3, 1794.

4 Rev. Joseph Priestley, LL.D., arrives from England. Addresses from the colleges and societies of New York are presented to him, including the Democratic Soc., the Tammany Soc., the Associated Teachers, and the Republican Natives of Gt. Britain and Ireland. He declines to join the Democratic Society. As explained by Henry Wansey, "The first principles of this Club is a rooted aversion to the government and policy of Great Britain; and a close attachment to French politics."—Wansey's Jour., 87–90, 261–83; Observations on the Emigration of Dr. Joseph Priestley, and on the several addresses delivered to him, on his arrival at New York, a religious-political pamphlet, by William Cobbett (London, 1794). " Wansey, describing the public buildings in New York, says the "Governor's House" is "a very handsome brick building, with a portico, similar to the mansion house in London. . . ." The exchange, he says, "is a very poor building, standing on arches." It has been "disused since the Tontine coffee house was built, at which place the merchants now meet and transact their business."—Wansey's Jour., 92–93.

"The Library, or Literary Coffee-house, now building, is in form and style something similar to the governor's house, though not so large."—Ibid., 93. The Society Library on Nassau St. was under construction at this time.—See My 16, 1793, and Ap, 1795. Wansey's observation doubtless applied to the library rather than to the Tontine Coffee House in Wall St., which had recently been completed.—Compare the view of the library (in Keep's Hist. of the N. Y. Society Library, 230) with the view of the government house (Pls. 63 and 66); and see the view of the Tontine Coffee House (Pl. 69, Vol. I).

" The constitution of the N. Y. Tontine Assn. bears this date. It states that 203 shares were subscribed for, at $200 a share, severally depending upon a life selected by each subscriber, who stated the age, etc. of each nominee, during whose natural existence he was to receive his equal proportion of the net income of the establishment. Upon the death of the nominee, the subscriber's interest ceased, and his interest became thereby merged in the owners of the surviving nominees. The "nominations" by the subscribers were not completed until March, 1795.

The preamble names its building the Tontine Coffee House. It directs that it be kept and used as a coffee-house. On the opening of the Merchants' Exchange, a little to the west on the opposite side of Wall St., the interests of the shareholders demanded a change in this particular; and they applied to the court of chancery for permission to let the premises for general business purposes; and by its decree in 1834 the restrictions were removed.—From article by Fredk. De Peyster in Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 458–59. The Constitution and Nominations of the Subscribers to the Tontine Coffee-House (47 pp., 4to) was published in 1796. 6 The governors of the N. Y. Hospital agree upon an address to the citizens, as an appeal for contributions, and they order that it be signed by their president and published. It contains a history of the society and of its building, beginning with 1770, when first organized; followed by the petition of March, 1770, to Lieut.-Gov. Colden for incorporation; the grant of a charter on June 13, 1771; the raising of funds under the provisions of a by-law; the petition of Feb. 2, 1772, from the governors to the assembly asking for a grant of money, and the act passed giving them £800 per annum for 20 years; the arrival from England of Dr. John Jones with a proposed plan of a building, which after some alterations was approved by the governors; the partial destruction by fire of the unfinished building, Feb. 28, 1775, involving a loss of £7,000; the society's petition, in the next month, to the assembly for a grant of £4,000, which, being secured, was spent in rebuilding; the occupation of the building during the war as a British garrison; its later restoration, and first occupancy as a hospital in January, 1791; the memorial in 1792, which secured from the assembly a grant of £2,000 for five years, etc.—Daily Adv., Je 21, 1794.

10 A committee of the common council, appointed to confer with Trinity corporation regarding a petition which the church has made, reports, and the board decides to "grant their Estate and Interest in the Soil between High & low Water Mark so far into the River as to extend to the East side of a Street, of 50 feet wide, 150 feet West of Washington Street" (which is to be continued).

1794 June 10 This is on condition that Trinity corporation, without delay, "dig out Greenwich Street agreeable to the Regulation thereof, so as to make it convenient for the passing of Carriages of Pleasure & Burthen And also that they do without delay lay a good & sufficient Wharf or Bulkhead, the outerpart of which to be 210 feet from Washington Street aforesaid and make the said Street of 50 feet wide and keep the same together with the said Wharf or Bulkhead in good order & Repair."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 81–82. This resolution was delivered to Trinity vestry on June 16, and accepted. —Ibid., II: 87; Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, Jl 14. This is the first proposal in regard to the opening of the street later known as West St. In 1798 (q.v., Feb. 12), the city sought power from the legislature to make this street. Concerning the date of actual opening, see descrip. of Pl. 71, I: 456, where it appears that, while West St. existed in some form as early probably as 1800, it was not actually laid out and regulated until 1830.

" The common council orders payment of £34:4 to Evert Bancker, Jr., "for the ball^{ce} of his Acc^{t} for numbering the Houses;" £109: 17:10 to Isaac Terboss "for paint^{g} & putting up the numbers & Names of the Streets;" and £31:5 to Wm. J. Elsworth "for tin plates for the numbers."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 82. On March 9, 1795, £1:12:6 was paid "for putting up the Names of Streets 6th Ward."—Ibid., II: 132. This was in accordance with the method adopted on Dec. 30, 1793 (q. v.). On Oct. 30, 1797, the common council paid £9:3:6 to Josiah Furman "for numbering the Houses in several Streets 5th & 7th W^{ds}."—Ibid., II: 402.

12 Gov. Clinton issues an order that "All Ships and Vessels of War belonging to Foreign Nations other than such as are employed in Commerce, coming into this Harbour, are forbid approaching the City nearer than one mile Southward of the Southermost Point of Governor's Island: And all Ships and other Vessels of the Description first mentioned now in this Port, are with all convenient speed to remove to a situation conformable to the above."—Daily Adv., Je 13, 1794.

13 At about this time Henry Wansey returned to New York. He thus refers to the favourite lodging-houses: "Mrs. Loring's pleasant lodging house being too full to admit me, I took up my quarters at Mrs. Gordon's No. 137, Greenwich-street, a new built pleasant house; paying eight dollars a week, for lodging and boarding."—Wansey's Jour., 199.

" The common council appoints a committee "for purchasing Materials for the erection of a new Alms House." Ald. Stoutenburgh is made chairman.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 83. See Je 30.

19 Grant Thorburn, writing in 1845 of events and the appearance of the city at this period, said, among other things:

"There was only one hosiery-store in the city; it was kept by Mr. Winslow, at number nine Wall-street . . . Then, there was not a broker in Wall-street . . . Mr. Winslow's shop was in an old frame-building, next house to the corner of Wall and Broad-streets, on the Broadway side, in Wall-street. The first house round the corner, in Broad-street, was an old Dutch frame-building, the gable-end fronting the street, with five or six steps to climb up to the stoop, having a broad board on each side of the door, forming a comfortable seat for eight persons. Here John Babb kept an iron cage manufactory, wherein to confine tame birds in a free country. It was from this stoop that general Hamilton addressed the sovereign people, assembled in front of the old City-hall, in 1795, to consider on, dispose of, and discuss the merits of the famous British treaty, whose fate was then pending before Congress. [Here he describes the burning of the treaty at Bowling Green.] A large buttonwood-tree stood at the corner of Broad and Wall-streets at that time . . . [see descrip. of Pl. 67, I: 446]. I verily believe it had stood there since the days of Governour Van Twiller. On the opposite corner, where Burtsell keeps his blank-books [in 1845], there stood the only [not so] watch-house then in New-York. Next to the watch-house, in Broad-street, was the residence of the worthy and venerable Doctor Anthon. Lower down dwelt Conrad W. Ham, who, for crackers, cakes, oly cooken, was second to none, (excepting Nicholas Bogart.) On the opposite side was the house of Alderman John Nitchie. These three were the last of the Mohicans, and with them may be said to have perished the last of the Dutch dynasty in Broad-street." (pp. 148–150.)

"In my own time I remember the old Tea-water pump, which stood between Centre and the rear of the lots on Chatham-street; which was then, in 1794, considered the only water we could obtain fit for drawing tea. It was brought to our doors, and sold for a penny-bill per gallon. It has long been out of use, and was, I believe, filled up about eighteen years ago. I found the water brought by a pipe into a liquor store, in the house No. 126 Chatham-street. I drank of it to revive recollections." (p. 214.)—Thorburn, Fifty Years Reminiscences of New-York (1845). June 19

20 John Ireland conveys to the city as much land as may be necessary to continue Barley St., at its present width, from its termination at the east side of Ireland's land, through his land, to that of Trinity corporation.—Liber Ancient Conveyances, I: 22, in register's office. Barley St. was the name of the present Duane St., from Greenwich to Pearl St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 998.

21 The sail-makers of New York are to meet at the exchange "to join the fatigue" at the fortifications.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Je 21, 1794.

23 The first regiment of militia of New York City and County, and other citizens, assemble on their regimental parade, and proceed to Governor's Island, where they perform a day's labour on the fortifications. This "fatigue party" consisted of 264 men.—Diary, Je 24, 1794.

" The "Patriotic Sawyers" are to meet on this day "at Hunter's Hotel, Broadway," to appoint a day for work at the fortifications. —Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Je 18, 1794.

" Wansey mentions James Rivington in his journal as "the bookseller, formerly of St. Paul's Church-yard," and who is "still a chearful old man."—Wansey's Jour., 214.

25 "The Commissioners appointed to repair and erect Fortifications in the City of New-York and its vicinity, present their thanks to the members of the Corporations, the Militia and the different Societies . . . of their fellow citizens who have contributed their aid in forwarding the works on Governor's Island. Considering the advantages which will at all times result from being in a respectable state of defence, the benevolent uses to which those works may be applied by affording proper places of confinement for Culprits, and thereby forwarding the views of the legislature in mitigating the rigor of our criminal code, the incompetence of the sum allowed, and the difficulty of procuring laborers at this season of the year, the Commissioners feel themselves justified in calling on their fellow citizens for a continuance of their generous aid . . ."—Daily Adv., Je 25, 1794.

29 Gravesend (Coney Island) is already a "summer resort," according to Wansey, who says: "A Mr. Bailey, of New York, has just built a very handsome tea-drinking pleasure house, to accommodate parties who come hither from all the neighbouring parts; he intends also to have bathing machines, and several species of entertainment. . . . So much company resort to this pleasant island on each fine Sunday, from New York and other places, as to keep four large ferry boats, holding twenty persons each, in constant employ. Between three and four thousand persons had passed over that day."—Wansey's Jour., 218–19.

30 Wansey makes the following observations about New York: "It is a clean, healthy town, the streets pitched with pebbles, and the foot-way paved and raised as in our principal towns; in some places with broad stone, in others with brick only.

"The soil is very sandy, and soon burnt up by the sun; it would take rain almost every other day. The water is very bad to drink, except at one pump in Queen-street, which is called the tea-water pump; and another at Mrs. Loring's & near the Battery. . . .

"In respect to their buildings, I date a new era from their acceptance of the federal constitution. Then they began to feel themselves united as a nation, and all their public works and undertakings seem to have commenced in a more important style.

"Most of the families of New York have black servants. I should suppose that nearly one fifth of the inhabitants are negroes, most of whom are free, and many in good easy circumstances.

"A friend wrote me from thence in December, 1794, that there had been upwards of eight hundred and fifty new houses built that year, and yet hardly one to be got, though the rents were 1794 June 30 doubled within the last seven years. This is owing to the great increase of its trade, and it bids fair in my opinion, to be the largest city in the union. . . .

"They have some very elegant chariots, coaches, and post-chaises. I saw the chariot of a maiden lady (with a Dutch name) who lives a few miles out of New York, that cost eight hundred guineas. It was built in England (by Hatchet, I believe.) In country places they are fond of driving one horse chaises, on account of the bye roads. . . .

"No stages are allowed to travel on Sunday. The day, however, is not so rigidly observed as formerly. . . .

"All vegetables are very dear; Mrs. M— told me, it cost her generally half a dollar a day for cabbages, carrots, and potatoes, and but a moderate sized family.

"Almost all the beer drank at New York is brewed in London. They have one or two breweries here, but they do not succeed very well. I was often in company, at dinner, with a Mr. Leipner, who owns the brewery in Greenwich-street. He says, there is not barley enough raised for home consumption, . . . They [the farmers] do not drink much beer themselves, preferring cyder and whiskey, which they get without buying."

Wansey here mentions the prices of various provisions.—Wansey's Jour., 226–31.

He also describes the mode of conducting an election: "The mode of election is as plain and simple as possible. I was at New York during the election: I saw no additional bustle in the streets. The names of the Candidates having been published, the proper officers went about, through every ward, door by door, and received each persons vote, in writing sealed up, which was afterwards opened before the Committee, setting in the Hall, and there registered. No canvas by the Members; no holiday on the occasion; no appearance of tumult or inebriation. The sums total for each Candidate being made up, they are inserted in the newspapers." He cites an instance of electioneering, which was universally reprobated.—Ibid., 241–42.

" The common council pays Ald. Stoutenburgh (chairman of the committee for building a new almshouse) £1,000 towards materials for that purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 85. For later expenses, see Ap 5, Je 27, 1796.

" The common council orders payment of £2:16 for lamp-posts, £7:4 for watchmen's boxes, and £14:11 for "a Fence Gov^{t} House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 85.

July — Professor Samuel Latham Mitchill makes a report to the Senatus Academicus on "the present state of Learning in the College, collected from written statements handed in by the Professors." 4 Payments made by the city for the celebration of the Fourth of July this year consist of £73:19:4 for gunpowder; £22:11 for a public dinner; £10 for the constables, etc.; £6:12 "for the Sextons of the Churches for ringing Bells;" and £25:7:6 for gunpowder for the militia.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 89, 93.

8 "The committee appointed to report on the most eligible situation for erecting a new Theatre request the favour of all those gentlemen who have already subscribed, also those who wish to become subscribers, to attend this Evening, 8 o'clock at the Tontine Coffee House."—Daily Adv., Jl 8, 1794. See Ag 19. The "New Theatre" here projected later became famous as the Park Theatre. Brown says that plans for the theatre were furnished in 1793 by Mark Isambard Brunel, the French engineer who built the Thames tunnel.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 11. See also descrip. of Pl. 91, III: 577. When the theatre was opened on Ja 29, 1798 (q. v.), credit for its construction was given to the Messrs. Mangin.

14 The common council permits "a Society of young Men by the name of the Honarian Society" to use "the Room in the City Hall in common with the other Societies."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 87. According to a permit of July 21, this was the common council chamber. On that day "the Society of Teachers in this City" were given permission to meet in "the Common Council Chamber at such times as it shall not be wanted for public use or occupied by the Societies who have the use of it."—Ibid., II: 89–90. Cf. Ap 15, 1793.

July 14 In connection with the grant of water lots to Trinity corporation, and the making of streets on soil so gained and filled in (see Je 10), the street committee reports to the common council that it has "caused a Survey to be made (and which is herewith presented to the Board) of that part of Greenwich Washington Reade & Duane Streets which are connected with the Grant agreed to be made to the Corporation of Trinity Church." It also makes the following suggestions:

"First That the Grant heretofore promised to the said Corporation [Trinity] between Chambers and Reade Streets be limited to the dotted Line intersecting the said Grant, from the East Corner thereof on Washington Street & Reade Street to a Point on the West side thereof so as to be parallel to the line of Duane Street. Note the Angle B.

"second That the said Corporation be requested to Release to this Board the Land which lies adjoining to the River west of Washington Street and between Reade & Duane Streets. If the said two Objects be obtained, a spacious Square will be formed between Washington Street and the new Street intended in the Front on Hudsons River and open to the Harbor or Bason that may hereafter be made in front thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 87, 92. Trinity vestry acceded to these proposals.—Ibid., II: 90. In 1807, Duane Market was built on the "spacious Square" west of Washington St., between Reade and Duane Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 958.

28 Robespierre, after having put to death 2,774 persons, is himself guillotined, and the "Reign of Terror" ends.—Guizot, etc.

Aug. — The following detailed description is published to accompany an engraved view of Belvedere House (see Pl. 60-a, Vol. I): "Belvedere House . . . is situated on the banks of the East river, about a quarter of a mile beyond the pavement of the eastern extremity of the city of New-York. It was built in the year 1792 [see Je 25, 1792], by thirty-three gentlemen, of whom the Belvedere Club is composed. The beauty of the situation induced them to extend their plan beyond their first intentions, which were merely a couple of rooms for the use of their Club; and they erected the present building, as well to answer the purposes of a public hotel and tavern [see My 20, 1793], as for their own accommodation.

"The ball-room [see D 17, 1793], which includes the whole of the second storey of the east front, is an oblong octagon of forty-five feet in length, twenty-four wide, and seventeen high, with a music gallery. This room is occupied by the Club on their Saturday meetings during the summer season; the right to which, on that day, is the only exclusive privilege which the proprietors retain. The windows of this room open to the floor, and communicate with a balcony twelve feet wide, which surrounds the eastern division of the house, and affords a most delightful promenade. . . .

"The room on the ground floor is of the same shape and dimensions of the ball-room, and is generally used as a dinner and supper room for large companies and public entertainments.

"The west division of the house is composed of two dining parlours, a bar-room, two card-rooms, and a number of bed-chambers. The west front opens into a small court-yard, flanked on each side with stables, a coach-house, and other offices. The little grounds into which the east front opens, are formed into a bowling-green, gravel walks, and some shrubbery, in as handsome a manner as the very limited space would admit of.

"The want of extensive grounds is, however, much compensated for by the commanding view which the situation gives of the city and adjacent country. The prospect is very varied and extensive; a great part of the city, the bay of New-York, Long-Island, the East river as far as Hell-Gate, the island of New York to the northward of the city, and a little of North river, with its bold and magnificent bank on the Jersey side, altogether compose a scenery which the vicinity of few great cities afford."—N. Y. Mag., Ag, 1794. See Ag 20 and N 11.

4 The common council orders "that the Triangular Piece of Ground at the junction of the Post & Bloomingdale Roads be appropriated to the use of the Alms House for a Burying Ground," and "that the Road Committee take order thereon."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 92. See S 15, and O 16, 1794; Jl 3, 1797. This was later the site of Madison Square. For the evolution of this locality, see L. M. R. K. III: 970 (title "Madison Square").

1794 Aug. 4 The common council gives a permit "to the Proprietors of the Tontine Hotel about to be erected" to make an area to the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 92. This was the City Hotel on Broadway.—L. M. R. K., III: 977.

7 Mayor Varick, in a charge to the grand jury, defines the position and powers of the United States and the duty of citizens respecting neutrality, for the protection of citizens of the belligerent powers who are in New York. He refers especially to the treatment received by the officers of the British ship "Thetis" (Capt. Cochrane) which was recently in this port. He asked for an inquiry into the facts of the case.—Minutes (MS.) of Court of Quarter-Sessions, VII: 231. See also Washington's proclamation of neutrality, Ap 22, 1793. The grand jury reported to the court on Aug. 9 that they were unable to discover evidence on which to base a presentment in the "Thetis" case.—Ibid., VII: 238.

9 A count is made, from lists published in The New York City Directory, to show the number of householders and other persons occupying stores, shops, etc. for the years 1790 to 1794, respectively, with the following result: In 1790,—4,500; 1791,—5,800; 1792,—6,700; 1793,—7,700; 1794,—9,000.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ag 9, 1794.

11 An advertisement for the sale of horses mentions the stable as on "Brewers Hill, Maiden Lane."—Am. Minerva, Ag 11, 1794. This must refer to the rising ground from about Gold St. to William St., where Maiden Lane was steepest, and where there is still a considerable rise in the land. The brewery of Anthony Rutgers stood on land now known as Nos. 47-51 Maiden Lane; the dwelling being at No. 59.—See My 27, 1772.

18 The common council decides that it cannot grant a request of Edward Livingston "to remove at his own Expence the Building lately erected at the Battery for a Labratory & to place the same on the Ground of the Gov^{t} House along the Rear of the Lots fronting Pearl Street to the end that he may be enabled to erect a House on the Corner Lot of Pearl Street with a front on State Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 94–95. For Livingston's further action in the premises, see O 27.

19 "New Theatre [see Jl 8]. The Committee appointed to regulate and modify the proposals offered by Messrs Hallam and Hodgkinson, after having made every enquiry are of opinion, no place that is to be purchased can be found eligible as where the present Theatre stands.

"They have had a plan, given in by Mr. Wilson, which merits their most decided approbation, in which every accommodation and convenience has been minutely attended to, and they are convinced will meet the countenance of the friends to an elegant and well regulated stage in general.

"The terms as proposed by messrs. Hallam and Hodgkinson have been adopted under the following modifications:

"1. Every subscriber shall have his choice, whether he prefers seven per cent as legal interest, or five per cent and a free ticket of admission to every performance (benefits and charity plays excepted).

"2. A committee and treasurer will be appointed by the subscribers, to form all contracts, pay all demands and call for such proportions of payment as necessity may require.

"3. Those whose shares may hereafter be purchased out according to ballot, by the managers, shall have the use of their free ticket for the following season, every one of which are regularly to consist of seven months.

"4. The committee, fearful that the proposed sum of ten thousand five hundred pounds would not be adequate to the expence, upon an estimate made, have thought proper to encrease the number of subscribers to eighty, they making at one hundred and fifty pounds each, twelve thousand pounds.

"The committee offer this plan to the public, with the hope that such as wish to make up the number of subscribers wanted, will be as early as possible, that the necessary arrangements may be made to commence next spring and materials purchased the present autumn."—Daily Adv., Ag 19, 1794. Meetings of the subscribers were held several times during the next few months.—Ibid., S 5, 1794, Ja 27, Ja 28, and F 2, 1795. Later the number of subscribers was increased to 100 (see F 24, 1795).

21 With this issue (misdated Ag 23) the title of John Buel's paper (see Ag 22, 1793) is changed to The Columbian Gazetteer. Buel reverted to the original title on Sept. 4.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 391. It was discontinued with the issue of Nov. 13 (q. v.).

Aug. 25 The common council orders "that the Road Committee enquire into & report on the expediency of continuing the Bloomingdale Road until it intersects the Post Road on Harlem Heights & what the Breadth of it ought to be; to the end that the proprietors of the Land through which the said Road will pass may be applied to as to their willingness to give the Land for the purpose."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 95. See, further, Ap 7, Jl 13, 1795.

26 Mrs. Pownal advertises that "there will be a concert of vocal and instrumental music, at Belvidere house, on Thursday the 4th of September; if the evening should be so serene as to permit the company to hear the concert in the Bowling green, the band will perform in an occasional orchestra erected on the balcony, in the manner of Vauxhall gardens; if the weather should prove less favourable, the Concert will then be held in the ball room."—Daily Adv., Ag 26, 1794. The programme of the concert was published on Sept. 2.—Ibid., S 2, 1794.

Sept. — Dr. Mitchill writes a letter regarding the cost of foods in New York, and states that "The Tontine Coffee-House, under the care of Mr. Hyde, is the best hotel in N. York. . . . There are two places of public entertainment in the environs of the City that are much visited in the summer; one is called Belvedere (or Bunker's Hill) and the other Broudling's Garden."—Mag. of Am. Hist., IV: 387.

1 The street committee, reporting on a petition of May 5 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 74) for regulating Grand St. in the Seventh Ward, expresses the opinion "that a permanent Regulation cannot yet be made," and recommends that orders be given for "filling up the Ditch & levelling the Ground in the said Street & the adjoining Lots." The board thereupon orders "that the Proprietors of the Lots on Grand Street be required without delay to level the Ground thrown up for Works during the late War in the said Street so as to make the said Street passable & convenient."—Ibid., II: 97.

3 A list of the proprietors and tenants on the "South side of Water St. from Wall St. to Robert Bruces House" (including the Tontine Coffee House), and on the north and south sides of Water St. "from the pump at Gov. Lane to Wall Street," bearing this date, is in the Bancker Coll., N. Y. P. L. (box R-W, folder V-W).

5 There is published the advertisement of a bathing-house, for both men and women, at the foot of Liberty St.—Daily Adv., S 5, 1794.

8 An ordinance is passed to prevent hucksters forestalling in the public markets, by forbidding anyone to purchase anything in the public markets and selling it before 11 a. m. on the day of purchase (except flour or meal).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 100.

10 The committee appointed by the governor, to take measures to preserve the city from the danger of contagious diseases, represents to the common council "the necessity of providing some safe Place for the reception & accommodation of such Persons as might be found afflicted with any such Complaint;" that "the most eligible place appears to be that of Brockholst Livingston ['Bellevue'] situate on the Bank of the East River opposite the three Mile Stone and now held under Lease from him by Nicholas Denise," for the term of six years at an annual rental of £90, and with proviso that before the expiration of that time Denise may acquire full title on payment of £1,800. The committee finds that the city can obtain an assignment of the lease for £2,000, and recommends the purchase.

The common council thereupon determines "that from the exposed situation of this City and in order to quiet the Minds of the Inhabitants it is indispensably necessary that a proper place should be provided;" that the Livingston place appears to be the most suitable; and that Robert Lenox, a member of the committee, be authorized on behalf of the board "to purchase the Lease of the said Premisses on the Terms above mentioned and that on his obtaining an Assignment of the said Lease to this Corporation and delivering the same to M^{r} Mayor that M^{r} Mayor issue his Warr^{t} on the Treasurer to pay the said Consideration Money accordingly." The board further orders "that the Treasurer negociate a Loan with the Bank of the said Money on behalf of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 100–1. Livingston held the property under lease from Lindley Murray, and the city did not acquire full title until 1798.—See L. M. R. K., III: 953.

On Sept. 20, under the title "Hospital at Belle Vue," a notice was published that a steward and matron were wanted at this institution.—Daily Adv., S 20, 1794. On March 16, 1795, pay-

1794 Sept. 10 ment of £10:15:9 was made "for repairs to the Pest House at Belle vue."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 132. Full payment on the purchase price was not made until April 16, 1798 (q. v.).

11 Valentine Seaman, M.D., in a communication to "The Committee for preventing the introduction of contagious diseases," recommends the suspension of the operation of the "Mud-Turtle," which has been "performing its pestiferous purgations on this filthy slip,"—where yellow fever is supposed to have originated.—Medical Repository (1798), I: 315–25.

15 The common council orders "that the Corporation of the Hospital be permitted to bury their Dead in the triangular Piece of Ground near the three Mile stone" (see Ag 4).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 102. Cf. O 16. For change of locality for the potter's field, see Ap 10, 1797.

" The common council gives permission to James Watson "to make a Gate on the Battery opposite to his House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 102. For illustrations showing the fence at the Battery, see Pls. 56 and 59, Vol. I.

17 No cases of yellow fever in New York City have come to the notice of the committee of health at this time, but three deaths have recently occurred from fever contracted on shipboard.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., S 20, 1794.

20 Volunteers of the "uniform companies" meet at "Citizen Hunter's Hotel, Broad Way," to drink patriotic toasts "in commemoration of the Decree of the French Nation, in which they abolish[ed] Monarchy."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., S 22, 1794.

24 A petition is being handed around for signatures, asking the common council to order the removal of the hay scale "from where it now stands [in State St.], to White Hall Slip."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., S 24, 1794. It was ordered removed on Dec. 8.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 116–17.

29 The common council refers to a committee a petition from Joseph Corre, "proposing to erect & light a number of Lamps on the Battery for the accommodation of the Citizens in their Evenᵍ Walks; and praying the Privilege of erecting a small Buildᵍ on the north End for vending small Drinks & Fruits."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 104.

" Gardiner Baker advertises his "Menage of living Animals and Birds," the collection of which was begun in May last, and which is at "the corner of Pearl Street, fronting the Battery" (see Mr 31).—Herald, S 29, 1794. See, further, Je 13, 1796. He also advertises a "New Museum," "in the Front Rooms of the Exchange, opposite the entrance of the Museum and Wax Work."—Ibid., O 13, 1794; Am. Minerva, O 14; Daily Adv., O 17, 1794.

Oct. 8 Notice is published that proposals will be received for the digging out and filling in of Augustus St. (City Hall Place), according to survey.—Daily Adv., O 8, 1794; L. M. R. K., III: 993.

15 William Sing, president of the society recently established to assist immigrants (see My 22), publishes a notice demanding that masters of vessels and other persons treat immigrants with suitable kindness and attention. This notice is made necessary because of the ill usage which they have suffered.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., O 15, 1794. See O 21.

16 "The corporation, we hear, have appropriated for the burial of strangers, a lot without the bounds of this city, instead of the Potter's-field [see Ag 4 and S 15] now used for that purpose. The new ground is to be planted with trees. It would be desireable that the measure should lead to a general removal of burial grounds from the center of the city."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., O 16, 1794.

20 The common council orders "that the Committee for improvements in the Fields [the Park] direct the Bridewell Fence to be made."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 111.

" The common council appoints Benjamin Taylor a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 111.

21 Thomas Dunn delivers at the Middle Dutch Church an address, published soon after in a pamphlet having the following title: A Discourse delivered in the New Dutch Church Nassau Street, Oct. 21, 1794, before the New York Society for the Information and Assistance of Persons Emigrating from Foreign Countries (L. Wayland, N. Y., (1794). See My 22.

27 "Messrs. Lewis Gaultier and Co. No. 68 William street, inform the public, they have built a new large and elegant assembly room, for the accommodation of public and private assemblies; they have also, either rooms for the accommodation of large or small companies—dinners, suppers, tea, coffee, &c. both in the English and French taste, and all sorts of liquors."—Daily Adv., O 27, 1794. Oct. 27

" Mr. Hunter, the public storekeeper, hands to the common council "The Copy of a Declaration in Ejectment in a Suit brought by Edward Livingston for the Strip of Ground at the Battery whereon the public Artillery Store is erected adjoining the Lot at the Corner of Pearl Street lately purchased by him of Edward Griswould." The board orders that the paper be delivered to the recorder, "as Atty & Council for this Corporation," to be defended.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 112. Cf. Ag 18.

" The common council refers to a committee "A Petition from sundry black Men in this City praying the Aid of this Board in purchasing a Piece of Ground for the interment of their dead."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 112. See, further, Ap 7, 1795.

Nov. — "The present time may be considered as an æra in the history of the New-York stage. The management is changed; and a new house is to be built by the present Managers, with the assistance, and under the patronage of men of the first fortune and taste in the city. The company we may expect to be newly organized, and new performers have joined it since it was here. The next month is the time fixed for commencing the first campaign in New York, under the new arrangements, and the last which is to take place in the Old House."—N. Y. Mag. (1794), 655–56. The management of the company was now vested in Hodgkinson and Hallam, Henry having sold his share.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre, I: 216–17, citing a letter written by Hodgkinson describing the transaction. See D 15.

10 Trinity vestry appoints a committee, of whom Mr. Stuyvesant is one, "to procure plans of a Church Intended to be erected on the Ground to be granted to this Corporation by Mr P. Stuyversandt."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See L. M. R. K., III: 933 (St. Mark's Church).

11 John Avery informs the public "that the obstacles which in some measure impeded their frequenting Belvidere, are now removed, that the huge hill, in Division street, called Jone's hill, or mount pit, is now cut down and the hollow below filled up—that he has with great pains and expence repaired the street leading from that hill between the trees to his house, by filling up the ditch, and widening the street without the trees, sufficient for three carriages abreast—that he has also erected lamp posts, from one end to the other, and lamps will be lighted at his own expence on Notice of any public or private party assembling there at Night.

"For the accommodation and amusement of such parties, Belvidere Ball rooms is now opened, and decorated—there are also four other neat rooms on the same floor, and a Ladies Room on the next floor above—which altogether furnishes conveniences unequaled in this city, and the terms for Balls or Assemblies shall be made reasonable."—Daily Adv., N 11, 1794. 19 The "Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation," negotiated by John Jay with the British ministry (see Ap 19), and commonly called the Jay Treaty, is completed and signed in London. Jay sends it to Edmund Randolph, secretary of state, by packet, with letters to Washington, Hamilton, and others. He himself was detained in England until spring by the state of his health and the severity of the winter.—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 133–44.

"The chief features of the treaty may be briefly summed up: Pay for the negroes carried off by Carleton was not provided for; the right of search was not renounced; the claim of Americans to a fair share of the British West Indian trade was not allowed; no American trader could enter a port of Bermuda, or St. Kitts, or St. Eustatia, or of an island of the Caribbean sea, subject to the 1794 Nov. 19 British crown, on a ship of more than seventy tons. He could not go to any of the harbors, nor sail up any of the rivers, nor trade at any of the ports of Canada, or Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, or of the territory owned by the company of Hudson's Bay; yet British ships were free to come into any haven of the United States and sail up any river to the highest entry port. One board of commissioners was to determine the eastern boundary-line of Maine; another was to determine the amount of British debts. These damages the United States was to pay. A third was to estimate the losses inflicted on American merchants by the illegal capture of their ships by English privateers and men-of-war. These damages England was to pay. On the first of June, 1796, the frontier posts on Lake Champlain, at Oswegatchie and Oswego, Niagara, Detroit, and Michilimackinac, were all to be surrendered. Murderers and forgers were mutually to be given up, the rights of privateers were prescribed, a list of contraband goods was given, and the treatment of armed ships clearly laid down. It was provided that debts should be sequestered; that the merchants of one nation should be suffered to hold lands and houses in the domain of the other; and that the first ten articles of the treaty should last forever. The remaining eighteen, the twelfth alone excepted, were to be in force for twelve years. The twelfth was to expire in two years from the day on which the war with France should end. It related to the West Indian trade."—McMaster, Hist of People of U. S., II: 245–46. For the full text of the treaty, see Am. State Papers, Foreign Relations, I: 520.

The original and a duplicate of the treaty were sent by two different packets to the United States. "But so slow were the ships in making port that Congress had risen and the members gone back to their counting-houses and their farms before the treaty arrived. At last, on the evening of the seventh of March, a copy was placed by Randolph in Washington's hands. A proclamation was then sent out for a special session of the Sentate, and on the eighth of June twenty-four members were in their seats. The treaty was laid before them. But neither the treaty nor the debate was made public. This the Republicans at once declared was an insult to the people."—McMaster, II: 212–13. McMaster gives a graphic account, citing local, contemporary newspaper authorities, of the effect the treaty's terms had upon the people of the United States, the debates regarding it in and out of congress, the excitement produced by the outpourings of the partisan press, the official transactions concerning it, the personal relations of Washington with his cabinet, advisers, and foreign representatives when the treaty's terms were being considered, and other contemporary events which transpired in New York and elsewhere while the debates were in progress. See, for example, My 18, 20, Jl 2, 18, 20, 21. McMaster says, in part:

". . . The treaty had been ratified by a vote of twenty to ten. But the twelfth article seemed so objectionable that it had been suspended. It forbade American vessels carrying, either from English ports or from the United States, to Europe, any coffee, any cocoa, any sugar, any molasses, any cotton; for Jay does not seem to have known that thousands of bales of cotton were even then each year being shipped in the South. With this reservation and a recommendation of further friendly negotiation on the matter of impressment, the Senate, by a strict party vote, advised the President to sign. . . . On the twenty-sixth [of June] the Senate enjoined the members not to allow any copy of the treaty to be made public, and adjourned." It leaked out, however, and was eventually printed in the N. Y. Daily Advertiser on July 3, after the substance of it, in imperfect form, had been made known in New York the day before (see Jl 2).—McMaster, II: 212–16. Finally, on Aug. 14 (q. v.), Washington ratified the treaty.

24 A "new Amphitheatre . . . in Broadway," which Mr. Ricketts has "erected at great expense to render it commodious for the season," and which is "superbly illuminated" for "candle-light exhibitions," opens with his equestrian performance. A "Brilliant Company of Ladies and Gentlemen, upwards of 1000," is present; the building "will hold about 1500 spectators." It is illuminated with "upwards of 200 wax Candles and Patent Lamps," and "convenient Stoves" are "dispersed in the Theatre."—Diary, N 18 and 25, 1794. It is also called "Rickett's New Equestrian Amphitheatre."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., N 18 and 26, 1794. A complete programme was published in Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., D 13, 1794. Greenwood gives the location of this amphitheatre at the southwest corner of "Oyster Pasty" or Exchange Alley, on some vacant lots belonging to Col. Wm. Smith.—The Circus (1909), 82–83. 25 The common council gives a public dinner on this anniversary of the evacuation of the city by the British. John Hyde was paid £46:11 for it on Dec. 8.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 117.

" "Mr Cressin Informs the public he has opened a New Theatre at the Military Academy, in Ann street, where he will perform on Thursday and Saturday; and on the other days at the Little Theatre, Broadway, above St. Paul's opposite the Park."—Diary, N 25, 1794.

26 A notice, addressed "To the Sportsmen of New York," is published, announcing that, "A person having arrived from Kentucky, has brought a large Buffaloe, [and] intends to divert the gentlemen with a general hunt on Saturday the 29th, to start at the hour of one o'clock, from Mr. Lambert's Tavern at Greenwich."—Diary, N 26, 1794.

28 Baron Steuben dies, and is buried on his estate in Oneida Co. This news, in a report from Albany dated Dec. 15, was published in New York, with a sketch of his life, on Dec. 26.—Am. Minerva, D 26, 1794; Kapp, Life of Steuben, 600–4. He usually spent his winters in New York.

Dec. 1 Work on the fortifications on the different islands adjacent to New York is stopped. Gen. Ebenezer Stevens publishes a notice asking that demands against him be presented.—Am. Minerva, D 2, 1794. The work was not completed until about Jan. 28, 1796.

" "We announce, that the steeple of St. Paul's church [see Mr 24] is finished. The last scaffolding was struck on Saturday. This truly beautiful fabric, though constructed wholly of timber, exhibits an appearance of compactness and solidity equal to any stone structure of the kind; and while it displays the skill of the architect, it evinces the good taste of the Gentlemen of the Vestry."—Dunlap & Claypole's Am. Daily Adv., D 6, 1794. See descrip. of Pl. 54-b, Vol. I, which shows the church shortly after the erection of the teeple. See Ap 11, 1796.

15 "Hallam and Hodgkinson, respectfully acquaint the Citizens in general, the Theatre will open This Evening, the 15th of December, with the Opera called Love in a Village . . . To which will be added, a Comedy, in two acts, Called, The Lyar."—Daily Adv., D 15, 1794.

17 "It is with admiration that strangers, and with the most agreeable sensations that the citizens of New-York must view the daily improvements of this place;—the years 1791 and '92 have compleated one of the most pleasant walks and prospccts in America (perhaps in the world) and this season has nearly finished an elegant steeple, and other ornaments, to St. Paul's Church, which does honor to the designer and executors: But among all these improvements, it has been matter of surprize, that this city has been so long without a chime of bells; and numbers are not without their hopes, that the tower of St. Paul's is destined as the repository of so great an aquisition: It is true, some have observed, that so great an expence ought not to be borne by one society—granted; yet no person (I am persuaded) will a moment doubt, but that, should a subscription be set on foot for the express purpose, at the Tontine Coffee-house, it would be filled in one month, with a sum adequate to the accomplishment of it."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., D 17, 1794. See also I: 452.

" Another buffalo hunt is announced (see N 26). It is to be held on this day, "at the Sign of the Huntsman and Hounds, five miles from town, on the Kingsbridge Road." The notice states that, "As the Buffalo is to be hunted with Hounds, no Bull Dog or large Cur will be admitted; It is requested no gentleman will bring with him any Dog of that description."—N. Y. Daily Gaz., D 17, 1794.

22 "A Petition of John Ramsay for a further Privilege [see My 27, 1793] of erecting a Mill Dam on Harlem River at Devoes" is referred by the common council "to the Committee on the Petition of John B. Coles."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 118.

29 The common council permits Bartholomew Skaats "to occupy the N° East Room in the third Story of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 120. The record does not state in what capacity he secured this permit, but a clue to his position at this time may be found in the fact that, on July 22, 1802 (q. v.), he succeeded Rinier Skaats as doorkeeper and messenger of the common council, and was made keeper of the city hall. As late as 1806, he was a

— At the beginning of 1795, Washington was deprived of the services of two men whom he "really loved,"—Hamilton who ceased to be secretary of the treasury on Jan. 31, 1795, and Knox who resigned the place of secretary of war on Dec. 31, 1794. The treasury portfolio was bestowed upon Oliver Wolcott on Feb. 3; and Timothy Pickering was made secretary of war on Jan. 2.—McMaster, II: 212.

— The events transpiring in Paris, in which the United States, through its ministers, was directly interested in 1794–7, are told by McMaster in his usual graphic style, all the facts being drawn from original sources of information, in his Hist. of the People of the U. S., Vol. II, pp. 256 et seq. These were largely the affairs in which James Monroe was concerned as minister to France, which continued into 1797, when he published a vindication of his conduct in the famous View of the Conduct of the Executive in the Foreign Affairs of the United States.—Ibid., II: 260–335. These events were reflected in many happenings in New York and other cities.

— W. Winterbotham, an English traveller, writes of New York: ". . . The plan of the city is not perfectly regular, but is laid out with reference to the situation of the ground. The ground which was unoccupied before the peace of 1783, was laid out in parallel streets of convenient width, which has had a good effect upon the parts of the city lately built. The principal streets run nearly parallel with the rivers; these are intersected, though not at right angles, by streets running from river to river. In the width of the streets there is a great diversity. Water-street and Pearl-street, (ci-devant Queen-street) which occupy the banks of East river, are very conveniently situated for business, but they are low and too narrow, not admitting, in some places, of walks on the sides for foot passengers. Broad-street, extending from the Exchange to City-hall, is sufficiently wide; this was originally built on each side of the creek, which penetrated almost to the City-hall; this street is low but pleasant. But the most convenient and agreeable part of the city is the Broadway; it begins at a point which is formed by the junction of the Hudson and East rivers, occupies the height of land between them upon a true meridional line, rises gently to the northward, is near seventy feet wide, adorned, where the fort formerly stood, (which has been lately levelled) with an elegant brick edifice for the accommodation of the governor of the State, and a public walk from the extremity of the point, occupying the ground of the lower battery, which is now demolished; also with two episcopal churches, and a number of elegant private buildings. It terminates, to the northward, in a triangular area, fronting the bridewell and alms-house, and commands from any point, a view of the bay and narrows.

"Since the year 1788, that part of the city which was buried in ruins during the war has been rapidly rebuilding; the streets widened, straightened, raised in the middle under an angle sufficient to carry off the water to the side gutters, and foot-ways of brick made on each side. At this time, the part that was distroyed by fire is almost wholly covered with elegant brick houses.

"Wall-street is generally fifty feet wide and elevated, and the buildings elegant. Hanover-square and Dock-street are conveniently situated for business, and the houses well built. William-street is also elevated and convenient, and is the principal market for retailing dry goods. Many of the other streets are pleasant, but most of them are irregular and narrow.

"The houses are generally built of brick and the roofs tiled; there are remaining a few houses built after the old Dutch manner, but the English taste has prevailed almost a century.

"The most magnificent edifice in this city is Federal-hall." Winterbotham's description of this is taken verbatim from the Mass. Mag. of June, 1789, which is already entered in the Chronology under that date. Continuing, he says:

"The city is esteemed the most eligible situation for commerce in the United States. . . .

"A want of good water is at present a great inconvenience to the citizens, there being few wells in the city; most of the people are supplied every day with fresh water, conveyed to their doors in casks, from a pump near the head of Pearl-street, which receives it from a spring almost a mile from the center of the city. This well is about twenty feet deep, and four feet diameter. The average quantity drawn daily from this remarkable well is one hundred and ten hogsheads of one hundred and thirty gallons each. In some hot summer-days two hundred and sixteen hogsheads have been drawn from it, and what is very singular, there are never more or less than three feet of water in the well. The water is sold commonly at three pence a hogshead at the pump. Several proposals have been made by individuals to supply the citizens by pipes, but none have yet been accepted. 1795 —

"New York is the gayest place in America; the ladies, in the richness and brilliancy of their dress, are not equalled in any city in the United States, not even in Charleston, South-Carolina, which has heretofore been called the center of the beau monde."—An Historical, Geographical, Commercial and Philosophical View of the American United States, by W. Winterbotham (London, 1795), II: 315–20. See also the description written at about this time by P. J. B. Nougaret in Beautés de L'Histoire des Etats-Unis de L'Amérique septentrionale (Paris, 1817), 213–15.

— John Harriott, writing of this period of his career, said: "I took my departure from New York. For the first 160 miles, to Albany, there is a choice to go by either land or water. I took a place in the mail-coach, or coachee, (as these vehicles are termed,) which set off at three in the afternoon, passing between the ruins of Washington and Lee Forts, on York-island, over King's Bridge."—Struggles through Life (1808), II: 98.

Referring to the "pioneer-settlers" who have "squatted" in the "back country," he writes: "A great proportion of them are the wild Irish, who emigrate by ship-loads to America; and, if I mistake not, will in time prove a more formidable enemy to the states on the sea-coast, than the Indians. In New York, I have seen five or six hundred of them landing at a time, nine out of ten of whom refused employ at any wages, saying they were going westward, where they have friends who had advised them."—Ibid., II: 127.

— Peter Gassner, writing to David T. Valentine in 1859, gave the following recollections of New York in the year 1795: "New York then contained about 40,000 inhabitants, and the city did not extend in Broadway much beyond the Hospital. On both sides of Broadway, as far as the eye could reach north, hills full 50 feet high occupied the ground now replaced with princely stores—it was a common country road, unpaved, with lofty clay banks skirting it on each side, and crossed at Canal street by a stone bridge, the outlet of the Collect pond to the Hudson river.

"An actor named John Young, had shot an officer in the Park, who was about to arrest him for debt (we imprisoned debtors at that day in the old jail, now Hall of Records). Young was convicted of murder, and was executed upon the rising ground spoken of, about where the Carlton House stood, corner of Broadway and Leonard street.

"This was at the end of 1795. I distinctly remember the military in the streets and the departure of my father in his military costume to guard the execution. We then lived at the corner of Chatham and Pearl streets, . . . and from the roof . . . I saw the gallows and the crowds of people surrounding it, as at that time there was no house of any height to obstruct the view from Chatham street to Broadway."—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 588.

— In 1795, the old Dutch church erected more than a century before on the Stuyvesant Bowery had fallen into decay, and was removed to give place to St. Mark's Church.—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 580.

— In this year, William Winstanley came into prominence as a painter in New York by painting and exhibiting, in Greenwich Street, a panorama of London.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), II: 77. For a short account of Winstanley's career, see ibid., II: 77–78. Alex. Jan. — The government house as it appeared at this time is thus referred to in a printed description of the view mentioned above under 1793 (see Pl. 55-b, Vol. I): ". . . Its situation, in point of pleasantness, is perhaps exceeded by few in the United States, having a beautiful prospect of the harbour, of Long-Island, Staten-Island, Governor's-Island, the Jersey shore, etc. . . . the whole of the building appears to be executed in a stile which reflects much credit on the professional ability of those who had the direction of it, Messrs. Robinson, Moore and Smith.

" Mr. Ricketts announces that, on Jan. 3, at the "New Amphitheatre, Broadway," after his feats of horsemanship he will present Mons. 12 A motion is made in the Lutheran council "that the Church in Broadway should not be leased [see Ja 5] but Built up, for the use of this Congregation," but the motion is lost, "after further Debates and Explanations, of the Smallness of our funds and otherwise Doubtfull siduation of gaining a Majority of Members in Our Congregation in favour of Building this present time." It is resolved, however, to ask for subscriptions for the purpose.—Lutheran Min. (MS.). Although £880 had been raised by Jan. 19, the board did not have courage enough to go ahead, and on Jan. 22 resolved to lease the church to Mr. Campbell, for not more than five years, at the rate of £60 per annum on condition that he "put the Church Yard in a good fence."—Ibid. On Feb. 2, it was found that Campbell's plans for alterations differed materially from those he first proposed (see Ja 5), and the matter was dropped.—Ibid. See also Vol. I, p. 450. "Hallam and Hodgkinson, anxious to preserve not only the peace of the house [John St. Theatre], but perfect approbation of every part of their audience, respectfully acquaint the citizens and public in general, that in future they wish to recommend, no side Box to be taken for a less number than 8; the Boxes to be kept locked and a screw-key to them all deposited with the Box keeper, who will shew the proprietor of any Box for the night, to his number the moment he arrives and unlock it for him: a bolt will also be made inside of each door, to prevent any interruption; and all those boxes not taken, will be left entirely open for such ladies and gentlemen as do not take seats, or who honor the Theatre casually.—The mistakes that have unfortunately happened recently make some resolution necessary that may tend to prevent the like in future. Gentlemen not perfectly acquainted with the rules of the Theatre, may be guilty of indecorum, not from intention, but want of information. "

"The managers hope the above method will be found adequate to the removal of so disagreeable a circumstance it is their wish to act in the most open and unbiassed manner to every one, and should it happen that the rules, peace or good order of the house should at any time be interrupted, they deem themselves compelled to point out such measures as shall if possible restore its tranquility. They wish the Theater to be esteemed a moral, rational and instructive amusement, free from the least riot or disorder. . . .

The Tammany Society, meeting at "Tammanial Hall," adopts the following resolutions: "Whereas in consequence of a resolution of Tammany Society, passed at their meeting on the 19th Jan. last [q. v.], there has been published a Political Address to the Citizens of the United States, signed by the Grand Sachem and countersigned by the Secretary. 2

"And whereas this Society acknowledges neither political principles for its establishment, nor political object for its pursuit, but is founded on the broad basis of natural rights, and is solely designed to 'Connect American Brethren in the indissoluble bonds of Patriotic Friendship.'

"And whereas, if it be not strictly against the Tammanial Con-

1795 Feb. 2 stitution, it at least militates against the spirit and tenor of that Constitution for this society to intermeddle in political questions either by their actions, or the publication of their sentiments as a society, and tends directly to defeat its object, by interrupting Harmony, and destroying Friendship.

"And whereas, the meeting before mentioned, considering the importance of its object was very thinly attended, . . . and still notwithstanding the objections of a respectable minority, order'd the address to be immediately published, without waiting for the decision of a full meeting, which might easily have been called.

"And whereas the authors of the Address among many other exceptionable things, decidedly approved of the Denunciation of the President of the United States against self constituted societies,—thereby not only condemning this society, and rousing against it the resentment of all other self created societies; But also becoming a party against the House of Representatives in Congress, the best friends and firmest supporters of the rights of the People.

"And whereas the address in question conceived in a hurry so mysterious, and ushered in the world with a precipitation so unprecedented, cannot in reason, and does not in fact express the candid opinion and deliberate sentiments of this Society, and is therefore condemned as officious, inconsiderate, impolitic and unconstitutional.

"Be it therefore Resolved, as the sense of this Society, that the Address to the People of the United States, under the name ot the Tammany Society, published on Wednesday the 21st Jan. 1795 [q. v.], does not express the candid opinion and deliberate sentiments of the Columbian Order." The resolutions are signed by "Coertland Van Beuren, Grand Sachem, pro. tem.," and by "John S. Sears, Secretary pro. tem."—Daily Adv., F 4, 1795.

" In a report of the commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell, a classified census of the paupers in the almshouse shows a total of 622, of whom 363 are adults and 259 children. The cost of maintaining each of these per day is 10 pence. The average number of vagrants and criminals supported in the bridewell in 1794 was 73. The common council orders that the report be published in handbills.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 124–26.

7 A. L. Bleecker & Sons advertise 22 lots for sale, at the Tontine Coffee House, on Feb. 26. They are "between Broadway and Greenwich-street, next to Mr. M'Combs's range of buildings, and on which Mr Ricketts's Circus is erected, viz. 5 lots fronting Broadway, 26 feet 3 inches front and rear, and 100 feet in length; 5 lots directly in rear of the above, same breadth, and 93 feet in length, fronting Lombard-street; 6 lots in Greenwich-street, and 6 lots that adjoin in rear and front on Lombard-street, of considerable length and breadth. The continuation of Lombard-street by a late regulation through the rear lots, and the communication opened to Greenwich-street, by a passage of 12 feet, adds greatly to the convenience and advantage of the whole. . . ."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., F 7, 1795. See, further, O 7, 1796.

16 The committee appointed on Nov. 3, 1794, and Jan. 26, 1795, to report on the danger arising from the storing of sulphur and hemp in this city recommends two amendments to "the Law for regulating of Buildings." One is that not more than 1,000 lbs. of sulphur, and not more than 2,000 lbs. of hemp or flax, be stored in any one place south and west of a certain point. The other is "that no Building (excepting those of Stone or Brick & covered with Slate or Tile) should be of any greater height from the Surface or level of the Ground to the Eve or lower part of the Roof than twenty eight feet and that the Rise or Pitch of the Roof ought not to exceed ten Inches on each foot." The common council refers the report to the recorder to draft a petition to the legislature and a law to be passed on the subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 128.

24 "The Committee appointed to superintend the building a New Theatre [see Jl 8 and Ag 19, 1794], inform the public, that the Managers now agreed, that subscriptions be received for Twenty additional shares. The terms may be known by applying at Mr. Gaines Book Store."—Daily Adv., F 24, 1795. The corner-stone of the theatre was laid on My 5 (q. v.).

25 In a report to the legislature the regents state: "Columbia College consists of two faculties; a faculty of Arts and a faculty of Physic. The first has a President and seven Professors, and the second a Dean and seven Professors. . . . The students attending the professors of both the faculties, and the professor of law [see D 24, 1793], are one hundred and forty.

Feb. 25 "The annual revenue arising from the estate belonging to Columbia College, exclusive of some bonds which are not at present productive, amounts to fifteen hundred and thirty five pounds. . . . The price of labor and materials for building were so high at the time of receiving the £1200 for erecting a wall about the College ground, and the £5000 for adding a hall and wing to the College [see Ap 11, 1792], that the trustees did not immediately apply these sums to their respective objects, but vested them in the funded debt, and waited a more favourable opportunity. Though the expence of building continued to increase, yet there was a necessity for undertaking the wall last summer, on which £655:11 have been expended, and it is not near half finished. So great is become the want of lecture rooms for the professors, and a hall for public exhibitions and commencements, that the trustees intend, without delay, to convert their stock into cash and undertake the hall and wings; relying on the known generosity of the legislature to afford farther aid if circumstances require it."—Assemb. Jour., 18th sess., 85–86. See Je, 1797.

27 The Chamber of Commerce gives "a Splendid Dinner" to Alexander Hamilton, "the late Secretary of the Treasury," at its hall in the Tontine Coffee House. See also Mr 16.

Mar. 5 The legislature passes an act authorising the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York to raise a sum, not exceeding £14,000, by taxation, for the support of the poor of the city, "and for purchasing further materials to build a new almshouse in the said city; for making repairs and improvements in the goal and bridewell of the said city. . . ."—Laws N. Y. (1795), chap. 12. Cf. Mr 9.

C. C.* (1784–1831), II: 131. This yielded an income amounting to £185:12.—Ibid., II: 179–80.

10 James Harrison & G. Parkyns advertise proposals for publishing 24 American views "in Aquatinta" by Parkyns. The advertisement, headed "American Landscapes," reads in full as follows: "Proposals, By James Harrison & G. Parkyns, For Publishing in Aquatinta, Twenty-Four Views; Selected from some of the most striking and interesting prospects in the United States; each of which Views will be accompanied with a descriptive account of its Local, Historical, and other incidental Peculiarities. By Mr. Parkyns, Author of the 'Monastic Remains and Ancient Castles in Great-Britain.' Conditions: I. That the work shall be published by Subscription: and that each Subscriber shall engage to take the whole set of Views, and pay for each engraving, if black or brown, 3 dollars; and if coloured, 5 dollars. II. That the dimensions of each engraving shall be 24 by 17 inches, executed in aquatinta, and published upon paper of a superior quality. The publication to commence immediately: and one engraving to be delivered to the Subscribers, on the first Monday of each succeeding month, until the proposed series shall be finally completed. III. That with the last View of the series, shall be delivered an engraved Title Page; an elegant characteristic Vignette; a Map of the Route, connected with the prospects exhibited in the course of the work; and an Alphabetical List of the Subscribers. Subscriptions are received by James Harrison, at his Warehouse, Maidenlane, New-York; and by all the principal Booksellers in the United States."—Am. Minerva, Mr 10, 1795. Most unfortunately, this publication evidently fell through. The only view in the proposed series known to have been engraved is the one of Georgetown and Washington of which only two impressions are 16 As "a Testimony of the high Sense this Board entertain of the public Services of Alexander Hamilton especially in the administration of the Office of Secretary of the Treasury of the United States," the common council resolves to present him with the freedom of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 132. Hamilton acknowledged the honour on April 12 (q. v.).

" Wm. Furman and Theodosius Hunt petition the common council for leave to establish a ferry "from the new market at Catharine Slip across to the opposite shore on Long Island," with "a suitable number of good Boats."—From the original petition, in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 132, 135. On June 1, the common council ordered that Hunt and Furman be licensed "to keep a ferry from Catharine Slip to any part of Brooklyn for five Years to keep two large Boats & two small Boats & to pay into the Treasury four Pounds per month."—Ibid., II: 150.

" The common council orders payment of £60:8:8 "for the erection of a Fence at the Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 132.

20 Samuel Osgood and others, trustees of creditors of John Ireland (see Mr 5, 1794), convey to Effingham Embree the house and land formerly of Anthony Rutgers, and for some years known as Ranelagh Garden.—Liber Deeds, LI: 30. This instrument recites a pretended sale to one Knox (see Je 8, 1793), and sale at public auction to highest bidder on Nov. 14, 1794. Between this time and the date of the sale of the eight lots on Church St., south of Leonard St., to Nicholas Oliver (Liber Deeds, LIV: 320), the deed in this transaction not mentioning any house, the Anthony Rutgers mansion must have been demolished. It cannot be found on the Taylor-Roberts Plan (Pl. 64, Vol. I), which, published in 1797, was compiled in 1796. The house was on the site of present Nos. 232 to 236 Church St. See F 3, 1723; Je 3, 1765; N 2, 1790; Je 8, 1793; and L. M. R. K., III: 952.

23 The common council rejects a petition of Christopher Duyckinck to lease the Common Lands.—U. C. C. (1784-1831), II: 133.

24 The legislature passes "An Act to enable John B. Coles to raise a Dam across Haerlem-River." It recites the fact that, by "An act for building a bridge across Haerlem-river," which was passed March 31, 1790 (q. v.), "Lewis Morris, his heirs and assigns, were authorised at his and their own expence, to build a bridge across Haerlem-river, agreeably to the directions and dimensions therein specified, and for the term of sixty years, to ask, demand, and take for the use of the said bridge, a toll not exceeding the rates in the said act mentioned." The present act further recites that "the said Lewis Morris, hath assigned his right to build the said bridge, and proposals have been made by John B. Coles, to the assignees of the said Lewis Morris, to raise a dam of stone for the purpose of erecting mills thereon, and to be the foundation of the bridge aforesaid." Coles, his heirs and assigns, are authorised to build such dam "at such place as is or shall be determined on by the assignees of the said Lewis Morris." There shall be in it a lock for boats, and a person to attend it; its width shall be eight feet and its length forty feet, and it shall be so constructed that a vessel drawing two feet of water may enter it at low tide. The bridge shall not be less than 24 feet wide. Coles, his heirs and assigns, are to give security to complete the bridge within four years, and to keep it in good repair for sixty years after its completion, at the expiration of which term it shall become the property of the state.—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 31 (Webster, III: 93). See also the Daily Adv., My 2, 1794; Ja 26, 1795. Mar. 24

Coles executed a bond providing for a payment of $10,000 to the state treasurer on failure to erect the bridge and keep it in repair as provided in the act. He did erect the bridge (the first Third Ave. bridge over the Harlem River) soon after this date (see N 24, 1795, Je 13, Ag 10, S 27, 1796), but he evidently failed to keep it in repair, as on March 26, 1807, the legislature resolved to bring suit against him under his bond.—Assemb. Jour., 30th sess., 279; L. M. R. K., III: 926.

The common council files in the clerk's office "A Release of a parcel of Ground to continue Lumber Street to the Lot of Wm Edgar & thence into Greenwich Street," made to the city by James Greenleaf.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 134–35. Lumber St. was part of the modern Church St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 1005. It joins Greenwich St. at its southern end.—Pl. 174, Vol. III. 30

Proposals of Amos Porter "to supply the City with fresh Water" and of Sayrs Crane "to lead Water from the Tea Water Pump through Roosevelt Street" are read in common council and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 135. Another plan was presented on April 7 (q. v.). "

The legislature passes an act "for the better support of the public hospital in the city of New York." This appropriates to the hospital society the annual sum of £4,000 for the next five years and repeals the act of April 11, 1792 (q. v.), in respect to any future payments to that society.—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 37. The legislature, on Apr. 9, ordered payments to be made to the hospital quarterly.—Ibid., 76: 636. 31

The first building erected by the N. Y. Society Library, for which ground was broken in 1793, is occupied by the society. The location was on Nassau St. opposite the Middle Dutch Church, on the present site of the National Bank of Commerce, 33 Nassau St. —Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Society Library, 222, 224–26. When built, it was next to No. 18 Nassau St.—Daily Adv., Jl 18, 1795. For view of the building, see engraving by Anderson in Goodrich's Picture of N. Y. (1818), opp. p. 129. It was described as "a plain brick edifice, of two stories in height, with a basement, and a colonnade in front of the second story."—Ibid. (1828), 237; see also Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 578. See, further, Je 6. This building was sold in 1836.—Keep, op. cit., 381. —

A bill "for erecting a State prison" is introduced into the senate and read twice. It was passed the next day and ordered to be sent to the assembly.—Senate Jour. (1795), 72, 75. On April 9, Messrs. L'Hommedieu and Myers were appointed to inform the assembly "that the bill entitled 'An act for the more effectual prevention of Crimes' [see Mr 17] was received by the Senate and read the first time, on the 18th day of March last, and the next day was read a second time and committed to a committee of the whole; and that the Senate have several times been in a committee on the said bill, but being of opinion that it would be improper to alter the punishment for crimes before a building is erected for the reception of convicts, the Senate postponed the consideration of the said bill, and passed a bill for erecting a State Prison for the purpose aforesaid, and sent it to the Hon. the Assembly for their concurrence on the 2d day of April, instant."—Ibid. (1795), 88. Neither bill became a law during 1795.—Laws of N. Y. (1795). See Ja 6, 1796. 1

The legislature passes "An act for continuing and extending Bancker-street in the fifth ward of the city of New-York, into Pearl-street, and for widening Beaver-lane in the first ward of the said city."—Assemb. Jour., 18th session, 159; Daily Adv., Ap 16, 1795; Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 55 (Webster, III: 197). 2

A fire "in the tan-yard of Messrs. Livingston, Stockholm, Brooke's, etc., near the fresh water pond," destroys the bark-house and causes "immense" damage to the hides.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ap 4, 1795. 3

The legislature passes "An Act making further Provision for Fortifications within this State." It recites the fact that fortifications have been commenced in conformity with the act of March 26, 1794 (q. v.); "and, unless the prosecution of the same be continued, the works already begun, but not compleated, will go to ruin." The sum of £20,000 is appropriated for "compleating, making and repairing the fortifications on Governor's island, Bed- 6 1795 Ap 6 low's island and Oyster island, in the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 43 (Webster, III: 106).

" The legislature passes an act to enable the city of New York to raise by a lottery a sum not exceeding £10,000 for building an almshouse. It states that this city "from its situation is necessarily the recepticle of a greater proportion of paupers than any other city or county within this State." The common council, in its petition to the legislature (see Mr 9), had stated "that the buildings appropriated for the reception of the poor and indigent inhabitants . . . are so decayed" that the poor cannot be accommodated "with any degree of comfort." With money already raised by taxation, the city has "provided a considerable quantity of materials for the purpose of erecting a new building," but "by reason of the expensive and necessary annual improvements in the said city since the late war which have been borne by the inhabitants thereof with great cheerfulness it would be too great a burden on them to raise the monies which will be required for the erection of this necessary building by an immediate tax." Hence the common council have asked the privilege of operating a lottery.—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 51; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 131. See Ap 7.

" Dr. Alex. Anderson records in his diary: ". . . Rejoicing for the successes of the French in Holland—early in the morning a discharge of Cannon—& the Ships dress'd in Flags.

"At noon, after another discharge of Cannon from the French ships, the Marseilles Hymn ['The Marseillaise'] was echoed from them—Towards evening, another discharge. . . ."—A. Anderson's Journal for 1795 (MS.), 61, in Columbia Univ. Library; Pasko's Old New York, O, 1889.

7 The common council appoints managers for the almshouse lottery (see Ap 6), and directs that they report a "Scheme" for it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 136. See Ap 13.

" A plan submitted by Benjamin Taylor "to convey Fresh Water throughout this City" is read in common council and referred to the committee which is considering the proposals of Porter and Crane (see Mr 30).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 137. Nothing seems to have come of these proposals. The subject was revived on Feb. 1, 1796 (q. v.).

" The common council agrees to a report of a committee, appointed on Oct. 27, 1794 (q. v.), which states that it has attended to the petition of the "black People," having found "a Piece of Ground containing four Lots of 100 by 25 feet each which can be purchased for £450." These lots lie "in the seventh Ward near where the Mansion House of James Delancey stood" (see Ap 27, 1791); the committee believes that they are "in a proper Place," and that the city "should contribute £100 towards the purchase on condition that the said Lots be vested in the Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty of the City of New York in trust for a burying Ground for the black People."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 137. The burying-ground was the site of the present Nos. 195 to 197 Christie St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 927. See, and cf. Je 1 and 22.

" The common council deposits in the clerk's office a release from various grantors to the city of lands owned by them "to continue the Bloomingdale Road through the same of the breadth of four Rods."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 137.

" The common council refers to the street committee a petition of "the Proprietors of Water Lots between White Hall & Coenties Slips" for permission "to run out Piers for Harbours for the trading Vessels;" also a petition from "the proprietors of Lots between Moore Street & the Exchange" praying that "the completion of the outer Street may be enforced."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 137.

" A permanent line is established on the East River. The common council records the fact that "the unlimited extension of this City into the East River, by making further Grants to the Proprietors of Water Lots," has "long been conceived injurious if not ruinous to the internal and low parts of this City through want of the necessary Descent for carrying off the Water out of the Streets into the River;" and that the board has judged "that a Wide and spacious Street along the front of this City would tend very much to it's ornament, convenience & safety." It therefore has directed the street committee "to cause a Survey & Chart of the front of this City along the East River with the line of such Street marked there on, to be made and reported to the Board." (See, however, regarding such map, Feb. 12, 1798.)

This committee has reported such chart, "with the Lines of the said Street which is to be of the Breadth of seventy feet and beyond which no further Grants into the River are to be made or any Buildings or Wharfs erected or made excepting such Piers as the Board from time to time shall hereafter deem necessary for the safety of Shipping & the convenience of Trade & Navigation." Having frequently had this chart under consideration, and made alterations in the lines, the board now agrees upon the course of these lines, and enters a description of them in the minutes. They are "the inner side of the intended Street of 70 feet Wide."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 138–39. Cf. Ap 14, 1794. This regulation was altered on Feb. 10, 1796 (q. v.), the street referred to being South St. See, further, Jl 18, 1796. Apr. 7

The "New York Dispensary" is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 61. The dispensary was at the corner of Nassau and Beekman Sts.—See F 7 and 24, 1791. For a description of it in later years, see Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 295. 8

The legislature passes an act for the encouragement of schools. The city and county of New York are together given annually £1,888 for this purpose, the amount to be raised by taxation.—Laws of N. Y. (1795), chap. 75; see also ibid. (1801), chap. 77. See, further, S 23 and O 17, 1796. 9

" Geo. Gray, tavern-keeper, advertises that, after April 11, the "New York Gardens," on Greenwich Road, lately kept by C. F. Brannon, will be reopened.—Daily Adv., Ap 9, 1795; City Directory. This place was formerly known as "Brannon's Garden," and was situated at what is now the south-west corner of Spring and Hudson Sts. In 1798, Joseph Tyler kept it, and called it "Washington Gardens."—Com. Adv., D 12, 1798; L. M. R. K., III: 977. See D 22, 1801.

Alexander Hamilton writes from Albany to Mayor Varick acknowledging receipt of his certificate of the freedom of the city of New York (see Mr 16). He says: "Among the precious testimonies, I have received, of the approbation of my immediate fellow Citizens, none is more acceptable or more flattering to me than that which I now acknowledge," etc.—From the original letter, in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "read & filed May 18th: 1795;" see M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 148. The letter is reproduced as the frontispiece of ibid., Vol. I. 12

The managers of the almshouse lottery present several "schemes" to the common council (see Ap 7), and one is adopted and entered in detail in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 139. 13

Federal Republicans hold a meeting at the "City Assembly Room" in William St. to nominate candidates for the state assembly.—Daily Adv., Ap 15, 1795. Public sales were also held here as well as at the Tontine Coffee House, Wall and Water Sts. After the completion of the Tontine City Hotel at 115 Broadway, the City Assembly held its meetings there. 15

"The Lombardy Poplar Tree has lately made its appearance in the streets of New York [see Je, 1790]. Those who have planted it have made a bad choice. If shade is the object of street planting, it affords none. It's a mere May pole; . . ."—N. Y. Mag. (1795), 256. For further account of the tree, see D 31, 1799. See also "Notable Trees in New York City," in 18*th Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 191–99, where the trees referred to are the "giant tulip of Inwood," the "Livingston Cedar of Lebanon," near Throgg's Neck, and the "De Lancey Pine." 18

The common council accepts an offer from Mr. Ricketts of "the Profits of an Evenings Exhibition at his Amphitheatre for the purpose of purchasing Fuel for poor families in the Winter Season."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 140. The sum of $340 was collected and paid to the city from this exhibition.—Ibid., II: 142. 20

" Because persons have set fences in the river below low water mark on the Jersey shore, on the south side of Paulus Hook, where the drawing of seines is thereby obstructed, the N. Y. City common council passes "A Law to prevent the setting of Fences or other Obstructions in the River, within the limits and Jurisdiction of the City of New York." The board orders that Mr. Sloo, who is employed to take fish for the use of the almshouse and bridewell, cause all such fences, stakes, and other things which may obstruct his casting or drawing his seine, to be removed.—M. C. C. (1784–

1795 1831), II: 141–42. Certain inhabitants of Bergen wrote to Mayor
Apr. Varick relative to a dispute with Mr. Sloo which this order pro-

25 The corner-stone of St. Mark's Church is laid by the Rt. Rev. Samuel Provoost, bishop of New York. The building was completed and opened for worship on May 9, 1799 (q. v.). Its situation was the site of Gov. Stuyvesant's old "Bouwery Chapel," the land having been given to the vestry of Trinity Church by his descendant, Petrus Stuyvesant, in 1793. The building was at first without fence, and without steeple, balustrade, or portico. In 1800, a fence around the church was erected, which, in 1803, was extended around the burial-ground. A tower or belfry was built in 1807; the steeple in 1826–9, and in 1835 the vane and clock were added. In 1838 the old wooden fence was replaced by an iron railing.—Memorial of St. Mark's Church (1899), 50, 54–55, 110–11, 120–21, 124, 139, 150. The Davis view of 1836 (see Pl. 119, Vol. III) shows a stone portico, and the Memorial says (p. 55) it was erected that year; but the Davis design was never carried out. The present portico was built in 1858.—Ibid.

The news report of the event is as follows: "At 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon . . ., a number of republican citizens assembled at the Tontine Coffee House, and erected a suberbly executed Liberty Cap of carved workmanship, suspended upon a Tommahawk, between the thirteen stripes and the tricoloured flag, under which is scrolled the following emphatical inscription —'Sacred to Liberty,' the ensemble forming a handsome decoration for the Hall of the Tontine.

"As soon as the Cap was fixed, three cheers were given, and the Marseilles Hymn sung by the American and French citizens present.

"The following toasts were then given, attended with 3 cheers each.

"1. He who dares to insult this Cap will incur the detestation of every true republican.

"2. The three Republics, America, France, and Holland.

"The company then repaired to the upper hall, where they partook of some refreshment, danced the Carmagnotte, and withdrew.

"Five uniformed companies made a public parade . . . on passing the Tontine they gave three rolls. . . ."—Ibid., My 19; Minerva, My 19; Daily Adv., My 19, 1795; N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., My 20, 1795. See also Daily Adv., Ag 13, 1793.

22 Thomas Twining, sojourning in New York, writes in his diary: "I walked to the Museum, . . . It was an older and more extensive collection than the similar one at Philadelphia. It consisted principally of shells and fossils, and arms and dresses of the Indian tribes. There was also a machine, said to exhibit perpetual motion. It consisted of a number of small glass tubes, filled with a red fluid, which ran down some of the tubes, and ascended others, with an activity that seemed likely to hold out for the time a spectator would stop to observe it. . . .

28 ". . . at one o'clock, our beloved and much respected Citizen John Jay, arrived in the Ship Severn, Capt. Goodrich, in 42 days from Bristol. An immense concourse of Citizens were in a few minutes assembled on the wharfs, who received and conducted him amidst repeated acclamations to his house in Broad Way; when Mr. Jay addressed them, as nearly as we recollect, in the following words:

" 'Fellow Citizens, these marks of your attention to me are highly grateful—I can never forget them—and the recollection of them will give a new motive to do, what shall be agreeable to you, and conducive to the general welfare. I thank you for your kind reception, and am happy to be again in my own country, and in the midst of you, my friends, and fellow citizens.'

"Acclamations of cordial applause answered the address; and the Assembly separated with mutual congratulations.

"At six o'clock a joyful peal was rung from the bells of the city; and at seven a federal salute was fired from the Battery, which was returned from the fort on Governors Island."—Daily Adv., My 29, 1795. " The common council orders payment of £100 "towards paving in the Fields."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 151. On Je 22, another payment of £256:0:2 was made.—Ibid., II: 159. On May 16, 1796, £100 more.—Ibid., II: 240. This probably refers to footwalks.

" The common council orders payment of £100 to Mangel Minthorn "towards the Lot of Ground purchase[d] for a burial place for the Black people" (see Ap 7).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 151. See, further, Je 22.

3 A letter from Philadelphia to a New Jersey paper states that "A gentleman in New-York, who owned a farm of 300 acres of land adjoining the Bowry road, was offered for the same £800,000 in York currency, which he refused to accept. The offer was upwards of £2,666 per acre."—N. J. State Gaz., Je 9, 1795.

K., III: 994–95.

15 The common council orders that the managers of the almshouse lottery (see Ap 6, 7, 13, 28) "pay to the City Treasurer such Monies as they shall from time to time receive for Lottery Tickets & take his Receipt."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 155. See Jl 27.

The cost of erecting a fire-engine house at the Fly Market is £25:3:11.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 156.

18 The horses of the "Northern Stage," descending the Harlem hills, start at a full gallop. The driver and a passenger, on trying to get out, are thrown out and killed.—N. Y. Jour., Je 20, 1795. Thos. F. DeVoe, in his MS. notes on events in Harlem (in N. Y. H. S.), says that Benson McGowan told him that, because of this fatality, the name "Break-neck Hill" was thereafter applied to the spot.

22 The committee on the subject of a ferry from New York to Governor's Island (see Ap 21, 1794) makes an oral report to the common council, which orders that it be referred to the commissioners for directing the public works on the island "to make such Arrangement for the establishing of a safe & convenient Ferry . . . as they shall judge most proper." It is also ordered that the keeper of the ferry be permitted to demand six pence each way, from every one excepting those employed at the public works and the troops in garrison there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 157.

" Isaac Fortune and others, "free People of colour," who have recently formed the African Society, make petition to the common council for a permit to use certain lands, that they have acquired, for burial purposes. They state that their society is for the purpose "of improving their Morals, by promoting a spirit of brotherly Love and a strict Regard to the Laws of the State; and also with intent to procure a place for the erection of a building for divine worship and the interment of People of Colour." The city, Trinity Church, and various individuals, have aided the 1795 June 22 society by contributing money to buy land for these purposes. Two lots (cf. Ap 7) in the West Ward have been purchased with this fund (to which the Negroes have added); and "a Deed hath been executed by Sam[l] Delaplaine & his Wife to the Corporation of the said City for the said two Lots in trust for the purposes aforesaid." The lots are described by bounds. First street bounds them on the east. Together they measure 50 ft. in width by 200 ft. in depth. The petitioners "are not at present able to become incorporated as a religious Society agreably to a Law of this State;" they are therefore compelled "to request the further humane Assistance of the Corporation." They ask that the common council authorise six of the Negroes (whose names are given) to be "Managers of the Business of the said Association or Society, to improve & use the said Land for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and to demand sue for receive & enjoy the Fees & Privileges usually taken & had by the Proprietors of burial Grounds in the said City and that in case of the Death or other removal of the said Managers, such others as shall be chosen by the said Association may be so authorized And that whenever an Incorporation can be effected agreably to Law the said Land may be conveyed to the Trustees for the purposes aforesaid." The board grants the request.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 159. See O 27, 1794. See, further, Jl 6.

23 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church appoint a committee to obtain an estimate of the cost of building a church "upon the Ground given for that Purpose by Col. Rutgers," to be 40 by 60 ft., of wood and without galleries.—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. On Dec. 19, 1796, the trustees issued proposals showing the intended height and length to be "the same as the new brick Church, and the width four feet less."—Ibid. This was the Rutgers Presbyterian Church, at the north-west corner of Rutgers and Henry Sts. 25 The members of the Tammany Society "relinquish and assign all their right in the Museum to Gardiner Baker, upon the following conditions: That the same shall forever hereafter continue to be known by the name of the Tammany Museum, in honour of its original Founders and Patrons; that Gardiner Baker shall continue the Museum, one and indivisible, which shall be kept together in some convenient place within the city of New-York; and that each member of the Tammany Society shall, with their wives and children forever hereafter, have free access to the said Museum, free from any expence; and that this privilege be considered as an equivalent for the society's having assigned or relinquished all their rights of the said Museum to Gardiner Baker."—N. Y. Directory (1795), 313; descrip. of Pl. 95-b, III: 584. In 1796, Baker stated that these resolutions were passed on March 16, 1795.—Am. Minerva, Ja 29, 1796. See Ag 22.

1 The secretary of state waits upon John Jay at his home in Broadway, and administers to him the oath of office as governor of the state, after which congratulations are extended to him by a number of citizens. Stephen Van Rensselaer is sworn in as lieutenant-governor.—N. Y. Mag. (1795), 447.

2 The substance of the Jay treaty with England (see N 19, 1794) is made public in New York.

Notwithstanding that Jay had been inaugurated governor on July 1 (q.v.), the excitement against the treaty, and the denunciation of Jay as the one responsible for it, are intense. At a public meeting in Broad St., Hamilton while defending Jay's work, was struck in the face with a stone thrown by a member of a mob which had burned copies of the treaty before the house of the British minister. The portrait of Jay was burned, and chalked in large white letters on the walls of a big building were the words: "Damn John Jay! Damn every one that won't damn John Jay! Damn everyone that won't put lights in the windows and sit up all night damning John Jay." An effigy displays Jay supporting a pair of scales which has the treaty on one side and a bag of gold on the other, and saying: "Come up to my price and I will sell you my country."—Political Hist. of the State of N. Y., by DeAlva Stanwood Alexander (N. Y., 1906), I: 65, citing John Jay's Second Letter on Dawson's Federalist (N. Y., 1864), 19; Daily Adv., Jl 3, 1795. July 4 The city celebrates the Fourth in the usual manner. An expense of £12 for constables and marshals, and of £7:4 for ringing of bells, is incurred (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 162); also £25 "for the Expences of illuminating the Gov[t] House & City Hall," and something under £40 at Simmons' tavern (ibid., II: 165).

" A number of citizens petition the common council for "the use of the large room in the city hall usually occupied by the Legislature to hear preach therein the celebrated and Rev[d] Ed. Winchester."—From original petition (in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read July 6[th] 1795 & rejected;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 161. Rev. Elkanah Winchester was a preacher of the Universalist faith. As payments were still going on for alterations in this room (see My 18), which is referred to in the Minutes (II: 161) as "the great Court Room," it is likely it was not yet ready for use.

" "A Release from Samuel Delaplaine & Wife to this Corporation of two Lots of Ground near where the old dwelling House of James Delancey stood in the 7th Ward in trust for the use of the black people as a burial Ground" (see Je 22) is read and approved by the common council, which orders that it be recorded and deposited among the "Corporation Deeds."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 161. See also L. M. R. K., III: 927. This ground should be distinguished from the old "Negroes' Burying Ground," just north of the Park, which was formerly Van Borsum's land. See O 4/14, 1673; Je 27, 1796.

13 The common council adopts a report of the road committee on a plan or survey for continuing the Bloomingdale Road (see My 30, 1791) "from the place where the antient Road terminated at the Barn of Nich[s] De Peyster which is the place where the dwelling House of Adrian Hooglandt formerly stood. . . ." The details of the survey are entered in the Minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 164.

16 A notice is published that "A meeting is to be held on the 18th [Saturday] at the City Hall to express the detestation of the people against the treaty made with Great Britain."—Daily Adv., Jl 18, 1795; McMaster, II: 218.

18 "Last Thursday evening and Friday morning [July 16 and 17], notices appeared in all the public papers, requesting a meeting of the citizens, at 12 o'clock on Saturday, for the purpose of joining with our fellow citizens of Boston, who last Monday unanimously adopted resolutions expressive of their detestation of the treaty with Great Britain—a hand-bill was also circulated to the same effect, conjuring them to come forward like freemen, and declare the treaty a disgraceful one, ruinous to our commerce etc. On Friday evening there was a small meeting of merchants at the Tontine hall, with M[r]. Hamilton and M[r]. Rufus King at their head, who harrangued them, M[r]. James Watson in the chair; a plan of opposition was there devised, and, on Saturday morning, an address appeared in the papers, and the city was filled with hand-bills of the same composition, signed by the Chairman. This address condemned the mode, declared the treaty not quite so bad as was supposed, challenged discussion, and pressed a full attendance upon the principles of the opposition. In consequence of these various notices, a very numerous body of citizens collected at 12 o'clock on Saturday, at the Federal Hall. At the moment the clock struck twelve, M[r]. Hamilton, who was mounted upon a stoop in Broad-street, attempted to harrangue the people; he was interrupted by a call 'Let us have a chairman,' on which Col. William S. Smith was nominated, appointed, and took his stand upon the balcony of the Federal Hall. . . . M[r]. Peter R. Livingston moved 'That those who disapproved of the treaty, should go to the right, and those who approved should go to the left.' which motion was but partly carried into effect; a large body marched up to the church [the First Presbyterian Church on the north side of Wall St. near Broadway], a large body still remained on the ground, and none, upon the question being reversed, moved to the left. . . . Finding it impossible to effect a division, those who had drawn off now returned; but finding 1795 July 18 a great tumult, about 500 of them drew off again, proceeded to the battery, formed a circle and there burnt the treaty, opposite the government house."—Argus, Jl 20; see also Alexander Anderson's Jour. for 1795 (MS.), 149–50, in Columbia Univ. Library; Pasko's Old New York, II: 102–3; Grant Thorburn's Fifty Years' Reminiscences of N. Y. (1845), 148–50. The chief objections to the treaty were: "It was non-reciprocal; it gave up the right of search; it called for no indemnity for the injury done by holding the posts; it yielded advantages no American ought to yield but with his life; it settled principles dangerous to the lives and liberties of the people."—McMaster, *Hist. of People of U. In the afternoon, "a body of war-worn soldiers of the late American army" paraded, bearing a French and American flag, with the British flag reversed beneath them. "They proceeded to Bunker hill where they burnt a portrait of John Jay, holding a balance containing American independence and British gold, the latter preponderating. . . ."—*Greenleaf's N. Y. 21 Resolutions are passed by the Chamber of Commerce of New York approving the Jay Treaty (see N 19, 1794).—Daily Adv., Jl 25, 1795. See Ag 14.

27 The managers of the almshouse lottery (see Je 15) report that, from the slow sale of tickets, the drawing cannot commence on the day assigned. 11 Gardiner Baker offers for sale at the museum "Two thousand most elegant French and English Prints . . . in colours and black. The prices are from Two shillings to 8 dollars."—Argus, Ag 11, 1795.

The grand jury publishes the statement: "From a minute examination they are sorry to be able to assert, with truth, that they find the markets loaded with filth and garbage to a degree that excited the mingled emotion of fear and disgust; . . .

13 "The grand jury also found the streets and wharves in a very neglected and offensive state, . . . are of opinion that if a regular set of scavengers were appointed to each ward the evil complained of would be considerably removed. . . .

"The Grand Jury also present as a nuisance of the worst sort, the unlimited permission of so many petty Taverns and Grog Shops in the city and its vicinity; these, instead of being an accommodation to the people are considered (at least a proportion of them) as nothing better than haunts of debauchery and nests of vice, and they become the more obnoxious to the peace and good order of the city, their being so generally resorted to on the sabbath day. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ag 13, 1795.

" Gardiner Baker publishes the Tammany Society's resolutions of June 25 (q. v.), which give him possession of the museum, and adds: "The Museum has, in the course of this summer, undergone an entire new arrangement much for the better, and is daily becoming more useful and pleasing; and there has lately been added to it many valuable pieces of nature and art. The literary part has increased with astonishment, and the Library consists of upwards of five hundred volumes, most of which respect the history of this country, and the Proprietor is adding to it daily. Catalogues of this Library is preparing, and when done will be printed, by which it will be found, that it contains the best history of our country that is collected together. The Proprietor, in order to make this Library really useful to his country, requests and privileges every person, who is 21 years of age or upwards, without any expence, to resort to it every day, and read any of the books, or take any abstracts that may suit his purpose, (for this purpose a room is set apart particularly having no connection with the Museum.). . . .

"The Corporation of this city, ever disposed to encourage patriotic undertakings, and favourably impressed with the importance of the present, (as being useful and ornamental to the city) have generously granted the Exchange in Broad-street, for the use of the Museum.

"N. B. Any article which it may be wished to present or deposit, will be most thankfully received by the Proprietor."—N. Y. Directory (1795), 313–15. Essentially the same announcement was printed in the Am. Minerva, Ja 29, 1796. See Ja 25, 1796.

24 Dr. Alexander Anderson becomes physician at Bellevue, to take care of patients suffering from the epidemic (yellow fever).—From his diary, pub. in Pasko's Old N. Y., II: 189, the original MS. being in Columbia Univ. Library. "In 1795, that part of the town that bore the Chief burthen of our calamity, was remarkably distinguished by peculiarity of circumstances and situation (aided by the singular regularity of our rains), seemingly well calculated for the accumulation and decomposition of all kinds of perishable animal and vegetable substances."—Medical Repository (1798), I: 315–25. On Oct. 10 (q. v.), Anderson made a report of the deaths and cures at Bellevue. See also the entries in his diary under Jl 17, S 9 and 12, 1796; S 23 and 26, 1797; Ja 11, 1798. For another contemporary account of the epidemic, see Ag 26. See also Hist. of the Yellow Fever, as it Appeared in the City of New York in 1795, by Alex. Hosack, Jr., M.D. of N. Y. (Phila., 1797).

" The common council approves a temporary regulation of Cherry St., part of Water St., and Crown Point St., "to make a good & passable Road to Corlaers Hook."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 172.

1795 Aug. 26 Writing to Noah Webster, Dr. E. H. Smith of this city gives this account of the yellow fever epidemic: "The prevailing fever still continues in the neighborhood where it first broke out. And except in one single instance, I believe, has not been below Beekman slip; that instance was in Burling Slip—or rather in John St. near Burling Slip. . . . The fear of contagion has been so great, that the bodies of persons dying of fever of any kind, have been immediately removed, after death.—Alarm in the City seems to have pretty nearly subsided. The disease is hardly to be termed contagious—there not being more than four instances in which there is suspicion of contagion."—Letter from E. H. Smith to Noah Webster, among Noah Webster MSS., in N. Y. P. L. A later letter of the same writer (see S 29) shows that he was unduly optimistic when writing to Webster. See Ag 28.

28 The "Committee of Health" reports that 20 persons have died of "the present epidemic" since Aug. 24. They are "so fully persuaded that the disorder which exists, principally, if not altogether along the eastern shore of this city, is a local malady; that they have directed various measures to be pursued for the removal of its most probable sources." They further report that the number of sick has "considerably decreased," and that two only have died "in the last 24 hours."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 29, 1795. A letter of the same date received in Philadelphia from a New York correspondent expresses a different view: "The fever rages chiefly in Water-street; my family and myself are unfortunately in the midst of it. There are buried from our neighbourhood eight or ten every night.—God only knows what will become of us."—Ibid., S 5, 1795. See S 4.

31 Gov. Mifflin of Pennsylvania issues a proclamation prohibiting all intercourse between Philadelphia and New York for one month, or until the prohibition shall be revoked, on account of "an infectious disease" (yellow fever), existing in New York. In consequence, Gov. Jay of N. Y. State made an investigation through the Medical Society, the College of Physicians, and the common council, of New York [see S 8], and on Sept. 9 was able to write to Gov. Mifflin an authoritative report. This report, covering extensive correspondence, was published in the Herald, S 30, 1795.

The reason for Gov. Jay's prompt and thorough investigation was that Gov. Mifflin's proclamation, "by exciting alarm throughout this and the neighboring states, and in foreign countries, naturally tends to produce embarrassments to the commerce of this city; and to interrupt that intercourse with the country which is at all times necessary to the convenience and intercourse of both."—Ibid. These reports show that, from July 30 to Sept. 8, 89 deaths were reported to the health committee. From Sept. 25 to 28, from 14 to 27 died daily, the number gradually decreasing.—Ibid. See also ibid., S 2 and 9. See, further, S 4.

By the end of October, the epidemic had about disappeared.—Ibid., O 31; N. Y. Jour., O 31. A new building was erected at Bellevue during the sickness.—Herald, N 7, 1795. See also N. Y. Jour., Jl 1, 1796.

Sept. 4 The editor of the Commercial Advertiser contends that the governor of Pennsylvania displays a "most unfriendly disposition" in his proclamation "prohibiting all intercourse by land or water with N. York and Norfolk for the space of one month, or until the order shall be revoked, under the penalty of 300 dollars." This action was taken, it is claimed, "on the authority of private letters, without ever writing to our health committee for a state of facts." The disease "has not proved contagious enough to occasion any general alarm in New-York." The editor adds: "Is this a generous return for 5000 dollars raised in New York to assist the suffering poor of Philadelphia, during their calamity?" (see O 11, 1793).—Com. Adv., S 4, 1795. Under the same date, the chairman of the health committee writes to the chairman of the board of health of Philadelphia expressing the belief that the proclamation has been made on information that is unfounded, and requesting copies of letters of information received by them, "together with the names of the gentlemen who wrote them." The hope is also expressed that in the future the Philadelphia board "will do them the justice to believe them full as capable, and equally disposed with any individual of this city to give every necessary information on a subject so interesting to the happiness and interest of both places."

The reply from Philadelphia (dated Sept. 8) is one of noncompliance with the request, on the ground that a "breach of confidence" would be involved. "The Inspectors of Health here," they say, "did not form their opinion wholly from information by letters received from New-York, but partly from the reports of your Committee published from time to time." The hope is expressed that "in a few days the intercourse between the two cities will be reinstated."—Ibid., S 18, 1795. For another communication from Philadelphia that completely dispelled any hard feeling, see O 6. See, further, S 8. Sept. 4

5 A treaty of peace and amity is signed by the United States and Algiers. The United States promises to make an annual payment of 12,000 "Algerine sequins" (about $21,600) in maritime stores.—U. S. Treaties, Conventions, etc. (1776–1909), 1–6. "The cost of the treaty, including the redemption of prisoners, presents to the Algerine government, and gratuities or bribes to officials, was stated by the Secretary of the Treasury as $992,463.25." To have completed the six frigates ordered under the act of March 27, 1794, would have cost $1,142,160.—Winsor, VII: 361; McMaster, II: 170.

8 Complaints having been made of "great Damage being done by Goats going at large, to the Trees & Shrubs as well in private Gardens as in the Places set apart as public Walks for the Inhabitants," the common council ordains "that it shall not be lawful for any Goats to go at large in any part of this City." Goats found at large "shall be thereby forfeited to and become the property of any Person who shall sieze & take such Goats." It is made lawful for such person "to kill or destroy or seize & take & appropriate such Goat to his or their own use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 176.

" Mayor Varick lays before the common council a letter of Sept. 6 from Gov. Jay on the subject of the proclamation issued by Gov. Mifflin (see Ag 31) suspending all intercourse between New York and Philadelphia. The common council considers this, together with "a Report made to his Excellency on the 5th Instant by the Medical Society in this City And also a Report made to his Excellency by the Health Committee in this City on this day;" and thereupon resolves that the mayor be requested to inform Gov. Jay, in answer to his letter, that this board believes the reports correct, and "that a much greater Degree of general Health prevails in this City at present than is usual at this Season of the Year."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 177.

14 A society, just formed, "for the purpose of aiding & assisting the Magistrates in the due execution of the Law against the profanation of the Lords Day," is commended by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 178. At the next meeting, it was ordered that the law "for the suppression of Immorality," and the ordinance "for the due observance of the Lord's Day called Sunday," be published in the newspapers.—Ibid., II: 179.

15 Ricketts reopens his "Amphitheatre" on Broadway, the place having "undergone a thorough alteration, with scenery, machinery, decoration, &c."—Greenwood, The Circus (1909), 85. See also N 24, 1794.

" An advertisement, published in New York, calls the attention of "Sportsmen" to the "Beaver Pond Races," which are to begin Oct. 14. The course is around the pond, which is at Jamaica, L. I.—Daily Adv., S 15, 1795.

16 Cornelius and Alexander Tiebout advertise proposals to publish portraits of George Clinton and John Jay, "Engraved by Cornelius Tiebout, Citizen of New-York, now resident in London," and "Taken from original paintings of our celebrated countrymen, Gabriel [sic] Stewart and the late Joseph Wright."—Argus, S 16, 1795.

17 Aaron Burr writes from Philadelphia to his daughter Theodosia: "By this post I received a letter from Colonel Ward, requesting leave to remove his family into my house, Richmond Hill [see Ja 5]. He lives, you may recollect, in the part of the town which is said to be sickly. I could not therefore refuse."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, I: 387.

29 Dr. E. H. Smith writes to Mason Fitch Cogswell, a physician and surgeon of Hartford, Conn., an account of the yellow fever epidemic in New York (for an earlier letter, see Ag 26). He gives probable causes, the parts of the city affected, the aspect of the disease, the mode of treatment, and the number of deaths. He says: ". . . The north-eastern part [of the city] is almost wholly deserted, by the well. Not less than 20,000 have fled."—From the original MS., filed with Miscellaneous MSS. at N. Y. H. S. See also An Account of the Epidemic Fever, which prevailed in the City of

1795 New-York, during part of the Summer and Fall of 1795, by Richard

" The common council orders that the city treasurer "settle with & pay Brockholst Livingston the arrears of Rent due on the Lease of Belle Vue Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 179.

" The common council orders that the Bowling Green be appropriated for the temporary use of the governor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 180. See Ap 20, 1798.

" The common council orders payment of £100 to the commissioners of the almshouse for the relief of families "distressed & necessitous by reason of the present epidemic Fever in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 180.

" The common council appoints a committee "for the erection of a new Stable at the Alms House for the public Horses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 180. The old one was pulled down on or about Nov. 5, 1792 (q. v.). On Oct. 19, payment of £50 on account of the new stable was made (ibid., II: 191), and on Nov. 23 a balance of £95:14:11 (ibid., II: 201). Cf. Je 26, 1788.

Oct. 6 Mayor Varick reports to the common council the receipt of a letter from Mayor Clarkson of Philadelphia, enclosing a donation of $7,000 from the citizens of that city "to be applied to the use of the Poor and distressed of your City." The letter recalls the "generous Assistance" of New York (see O 11, 1793) at the time of "our Affliction" two years ago—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 181. Mayor Clarkson's letter appears also in N. Y. Com. Adv., O 8, 1795, together with a letter of thanks from Mayor Varick. For the first applications of the fund, see M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 192, 197, 212.

" The common council requires the preparation of an ordinance "for the Regulation of the Tea Water Men in order that they may be compelled to assist in supplying the Engines with Water in case of Fire."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 185.

9 The effect of the yellow fever epidemic on the city is thus described to Noah Webster by a New York correspondent: "The City is entirely deserted, no business of any kind going on, every day has the appearance of Sunday, the fall ships are arriving every day which I suppose will bring the Merchants to town. . . . I am afraid that your return [to town] would be attended with danger as the Physicians here say that the infected air would have a greater effect on a person coming from the Country than on those who have remained in town."—Letter of Joseph Dudley Webb to Noah Webster, among Noah Webster MSS., in N. Y. P. L.

10 Anderson gives the following "List of Deaths & Cures this season" at Bellevue:

	Dead	Cured
"From Aug. 5 to 31	12	5
September	71	39
From Oct. 1 to 10	32	18
	115	62

29 remaining under care."—A. Anderson's Jour. for 1795 (MS.), 217. On Aug. 24 (q. v.), Anderson had been appointed physician at Bellevue.

19 On account of the crowded condition of the bridewell, which is partly occupied by paupers from the almshouse, the common council orders that the ground-floor of the jail be fitted up for the confinement of vagrants.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 185, 191. On Jan. 11, the balance of the city's account for repairs to the jail, to the amount of £177:7:10, was paid.—Ibid., II: 208.

20 Anderson says: "the City begins to look more lively—numbers are flocking in."—A. Anderson's Jour. for 1795 (MS.), 225. On Oct. 24, he recorded: "The City begins to resume its usual appearance and a revival of business accompanies the return of health."—Ibid., 228. For a condensed account of the epidemic in New York, see Ag 31.

26 The common council orders that the pavement of Greenwich St. be completed "to the Fence at the Battery;" also that the pavement "of the South side of the Street between Kennedy's House & the Battery" be completed, and made to meet that of Greenwich St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 192.

" "By reason of the great sickness in this City and the absence of many of the Inhabitants the collection of Monies, on the Tax for supporting the Poor & other contingencies, has not been equal to the Sums required for defraying the current Expences." The common council therefore orders that the city treasurer negotiate a loan of $3,000 at the Bank of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 192–93, 196. It should be observed that, at this period, both the pound and the dollar are used in the various financial records of the city. Regarding the introduction of the dollar, see Jl 6, 1785. See, further, N 23. Oct. 26

R. Taylor makes "A Map of a parcel of Land belonging to the Estate of the late Sir Peter Warren lying at Greenwich in the Outward of the City of New York, plotted to a scale of 200 feet to an Inch." It shows "Abbington Road or Love Lane," "The Bowry Road," "Warren Road," "Southampton Road," "Fitz-Roy Road," "Great Kill Road," "Union Road," "Old Greenwich Lane," and "Skinner Road." The original map is preserved with the Warren papers in the N. Y. H. S. See also A. Pl. 5-b, Vol. III. Nov. 4

Mayor Varick informs the common council of his intention to purchase "about twenty Acres of the Common Lands (situate on the North side of the Land on which the House commonly called the Dove Tavern near the five Mile stone) whenever the Board shall be disposed to sell those Lands." The application is referred to the land committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 196. 9

" The mayor lays before the board a letter of Nov. 9 from the inhabitants of Southwark (Philadelphia), expressing sympathy for the sufferings of the citizens of New York. While rejoicing to hear "of the restoration of Health to the Inhabitants" of this city, they have collected, and send to the mayor, the sum of $505.25 "for the use of the indigent Sufferers . . . from the late malignant Fever."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 196–97.

16 The health committee having applied for an advance of £1,000 to defray the expenses of Bellevue Hospital, £400 is so advanced "out of the Revenue fund to be charged to the State of New York."—M. C. C., II: 198.

" Isaac Stoutenburgh, "late Chairman of the Committee for purchasing Materials for the erection of a new Alms House," renders an accounting of the expenditure of part of the moneys put into his hands. Referred to committee of accounts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 198, 200. See, further, F 1, My 16, 1796.

" Because his lot is not "new made Ground agreable to the Words of the Law," the common council refuses to permit Jas. W. Lent "to erect his Building over the Water on Piles and to fill in the Lot at a future Day."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 196, 198.

" The common council having referred to a committee, on Oct. 26, a petition from Haines & Thompson "to erect Stairs at the White Hall Slip for the accommodation of the Staten Island & Elizth Town Boats," the committee reports that proposals have been made "by Persons interested in the Passage Boats from Staten Island & Elizth Town, to erect a Pier at the South East point of the Battery for a landing Place, and to erect a Bridge to extend from the said Pier along the Battery on the West side of Whitehall Slip to the Street in front of the Slip, as a Passage to and from the said landing place." The board, however, is of the opinion "that it would be improper to order or consent to the erection of any Wharf or other Building on the West side of Whitehall Slip lest it might be construed to interfere with the Reservation in the Charter respecting the Soil in the River round the Battery." It is also determined "that a convenient Stairs ought to have been made in the Wharf or Pier on the East side of the said Slip opposite to front Street as a landing Place for the passage Boats." It is ordered that the committee attend to "the making of a Stairs in the body of the Wharf on the East side of that Slip and to be forever kept up & maintained in good Order at the Expence of the Grantee or his Assigns of the Lot adjoining to the Slip. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 192, 198–99.

23 The common council, "being under the necessity of making large advances of Money for discharging the Expences of the Health Committee & Bellevue Hospital incurred during the late Epidemic Fever in this City," orders that the treasurer negotiate a further loan with the Bank of New York (see O 26) of $5,000, to be covered by city bond.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 200. See, further, N 30.

" The common council orders that the committee on repairs to the city hall "take order for compleating the lower Room, for the use of the Clerk of the Supreme Court, . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 200.

1795 Nov. 23 The city surveyors, Casimir Th. Goerck, Evert Baucker, Jr., and B. Taylor, petition the common council for larger fees, claiming that the legal rate of eight shillings "for laying out a House Lott" is insufficient for their subsistence. They also state "That the Duties of their Office, in consequence of the extention of the City, requiring much more Thought and Attention than heretofore, they are prevented thereby from embarking in any other Concern . . . whereby they might improve their Circumstances and provide better for their Families."—From the original petition (in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "The Committee are of Opinion that the Pay of Surveying a Lott augt to be Twelve Shillings—Jan^{y} 11, 1796."

24 John B. Coles presents a petition to the common council, showing that the legislature at its last session vested in him "the Right to build a Dam across Harlem River [see Mr 24] for the purpose of collecting the waters thereof, for the use of Mills and that such Dam should be the foundation of the Bridge to be built across the said River." He "is desirous to commence the building of the said Mill Dam & Bridge early in the approaching Spring." He therefore solicits "the Corporation to confirm the Grant, so that he may legally go on to dam & pond the Waters of that River and of course cover with water the Shore upon this Island between high & low water mark and as it would be of consequence to the early prosecution of this undertaking that the Contracts for the necessary Timber should be made this Fall, before the Hudson River is shut with Ice, & the communication stopped, he hopes the Corporation will come to as speedy a determination upon this subject as their convenience will admit of."—From MS. copy of the Coles petition in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room.

On Nov. 30, this representation was referred to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 202. On March 7, 1796, the common council approved the committee's report favouring the petition.—Ibid., II: 223. See, further, Je 13, 1796.

25 A public dinner is given at the city's expense in celebration of the evacuation of the city by the British. John Hyde's account for this (£40) was paid Dec. 10.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 204.

26 This day had been designated by Gov. Jay as a day of prayer and thanksgiving, particularly for the cessation of the plague of yellow fever. The proclamation was issued on his own authority, without legislative provision, and was the first so issued by a governor of the state. It was immediately assailed by Democratic newspapers, although he gave ample reasons for issuing it. His recommendation that there be a prayer for the preservation "of the valuable life and usefulness of the President of the United States" was represented as an insult to those who differed from the governor as to the value of Washington's life and the extent of his usefulness.—Life of John Jay, by his son William Jay (1833), I: 385–86. See also Daily Adv., N 11, 1795.

30 On application of the health committee, the common council orders that the treasurer negotiate with the Bank of New York for a further loan (see N 23) of £4,000, to be applied "towards discharging the Debts incurred by the said Committee during the late epidemic Fever in this City," and orders that a bond to the bank for that amount be prepared.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 201.

" The common council appoints a committee "to treat with M^{r} Brockholst Livingston as to the purchasing of him the fee of Bellevue Hospital & Land" (see S 10, 1794).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 202.

" Repairs to the "Mud Drudge" cost the city £200.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 202. On Dec. 10, a payment of £75:19:6 was made "for Wages &^{c} in working the Mud Drudge."—Ibid., II: 204. A marginal note in the latter record reads: "Whole am^{t} of all the Mud Drudge Acc^{ts} £357:18:8." On Feb. 15, £17:17 was paid for repairs.—Ibid., II: 218. On Sept. 3, 1798, an account of £439:17:3 was paid "For Work^{g} the Mud Drudge in clean^{g} the public Slips."—Ibid., II: 467.

Dec. 7 The common council orders that Abm. Van Gelder, chairman of the lamp committee, "continue in the use of the Room in the Barracks for convening the lamp Lighters."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 203. He died in April, 1796, and his son Abm., Jr., succeeded him in this office.—Ibid., II: 234.

" Specifications are prepared under direction of the street committee for the regulation "of Broadway from Barley Street to the Arched Bridge," and of various other streets. These were not entered in the minutes until June 26, 1797. They include the statement that "the arched Bridge will remain at it's present heighth being 10 feet 7 Inches above the surface of the Meadow."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 360. Dec. 7

Five British vessels of war "ride, opposite our Fort." They are the "Thetis," of 38 guns; "Cleopatra," 26; "Hussar," 28; "Spencer," 22; and "Esperance," 18 guns. "The city is now well guarded from the Algerines."—Argus, D 10, 1795. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 421. Regarding the relations of the U. S. and other nations with Algiers, see Dict. of U. S. Hist., by Jameson, title "Algerine War." See also Mr 27, 1794. 10

The common council orders "that the Clerk make the usual Publication in the News Papers against the firing of Guns &^{c} on the approach^{g} season of New Year."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 205. 28

During the year 1795, the vessels entering this port from foreign ports numbered 941.—See Am. Gazetteer (1797), article "New-York City." 31

1796

In this year, The Monthly Military Repository, edited by Chas. Smith, and pub. by W. A. Davis, New York, appeared. It ran for two volumes, and contained a résumé of the battles of the Revolution, illustrated with copper-plates (portraits and maps).—Ford, Check-List of Am. Magazines Printed in the Eighteenth Cent. (1889), 11. See also Sabin, item No. 50185. —

In this year, John Bull started to publish The New-York Weekly Magazine; or, Miscellaneous Repository.—Sabin, item No. 54866; Ford, Check-List, op. cit., 10 —

Early in this year, publication of The New-York Prices Current began. The earliest issue found is that of Jan. 2, 1797, No. 54. It was a weekly journal of quarto size published by James Oram.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 481. See Je 3, 1797. —

Col. Nicholas Fish, supervisor of the revenue of the state in 1796, transmitted to Gov. Morgan Lewis, on Feb. 28, 1807, a document containing the return of the number of carriages here in 1796. In the city of New York there were 33 coaches, 62 chariots, 4 post chaises, 43 phaetons, 37 coachees, and 45 other than wheeled carriages; also 282 curricles, chaises, top-chairs, steel spring chairs, sulkies, and wooden spring chairs.—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 163. —

In this year, the French Church (Eglise du St. Esprit), on Pine St., unoccupied since it was used as a British store-house (see Mr 15, 1780), was rebuilt.—Wittemeyer, Hist. Sketch of the Eglise Française; Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 143; L. M. R. K., III: 932; descrip. of Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I), I: 245. The author's collection contains a drawing of this church made by A. J. Davis, probably about 1840. —

In this year, the coloured members of the Methodist churches of the city obtained permission from Bishop Asbury to hold meetings during the intervals between the regular preaching hours of the white ministers. A house was hired and fitted up for such services in Cross St., between Mulberry and Orange Sts.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches of N. Y., 321. —

About this year, the First Universalist Church was erected on Vandewater St., between Frankfort and Pearl Sts. For this and later churches of this denomination, see L. M. R. K., III: 937; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches in the City of N. Y., 344–51. —

A very rare and interesting view of New York from the North River, carefully drawn, and showing in detail every building from the Battery to the Tontine Hotel, dates from this period, and is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 56. —

The Taylor-Roberts Plan, published in 1797, and reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 64, shows the city as it existed in 1796. —

On this plan, Burling Slip is shown partly open and partly filled as a street, but on the Goerck-Mangin Plan (Pl. 70, Vol. I), depicting the city in 1799, the slip is shown entirely filled to the water's edge. See Ag 9, 1692; 1730; My 5, 1736; Mr 2, 1744; 1755; Ag 13, 1761; L. M. R. K., III: 988; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

In this year, Charles-Balthazar Julien Févret de Saint Mémin drew, etched, and probably coloured, the beautiful general "View of the City of New York taken from Long Island" which is reproduced and described as Pl. 61, Vol. I. In the same or the following year, Archibald Robertson made a drawing of the city from a slightly different point of view, showing Washington's headquarters in the foreground. This drawing is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 65. —

A view of the lower end of Wall Street, showing the Tontine Coffee House, etc., painted at about this time by Francis Guy, and —

1796 owned by the N. Y. H. S., is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 69.

— The city directory for 1796 contains a view of the "New City Tavern," at the present 115 Broadway.

— The New York directory of this year contains the name of "Peter Verger, engraver on fine stone." The only known work of Verger is "The Triumph of Liberty," a fine folio plate in the French manner, signed "Engraved by P. C. Verger, Nov. 1796." Stauffer is doubtless right in contending that Verger was not a copperplate engraver, that this plate was engraved in France for the American market, and that it was brought over here by Verger and published by him in New York.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 281. The author's collection contains an impression of this rare, ambitious, and beautiful print.

Jan. 6 In an address to the senate and assembly, Gov. Jay says: "It continues to be worthy of consideration how far the severe penalties prescribed by our laws in particular cases admit of mitigation; and whether certain establishments for confining, employing and reforming criminals will not immediately become indispensable."—Senate Jour. (1796), 6. On Jan. 7, a committee was appointed by the senate "to consider and report upon that part of his Excellency's Speech relating to establishments for confining, employing and reforming Criminals."—Ibid. (1796), 7. See Ja 28.

11 The common council appoints a committee "to report a Regulation for the Burial Ground commonly called the Potters field" (see Ag 4 and O 16, 1794).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 207. On Jan. 25, this committee, "appointed to agree with a suitable Person as Grave Digger at and to have the Charge of the Potters field," reported that they had agreed with David Marshall.—Ibid., II: 210.

18 A New York advertisement of this date reads: "History of New-York. A Continuation of Smith's History of the late Province now State of New-York, containing all the interesting events that took place between the years 1732 and 1762—will be published in this city in the course of the year."—Am. Minerva, Ja 18, 1796. It was not published, however, until 1829 (q. v.).

23 An advertisement informs the public that on Jan. 25 at Belvedere House there "will be performed an Evening's Entertainment, of Vocal and Instrumental Music, under the direction of the Managers of the Old City Concert The Vocal parts by Miss Broadhurst. After the Musical Performance, Will commence a Ball, Where the city band will attend Between the Musical performance and the ball, tea and coffee will be given gratis. Tickets of admission, only one dollar each. . . ."—Am. Minerva, Ja 23, 1796.

25 The city treasurer presents to the common council an estimate of the expected public expenses (the budget), of the city and county of New York for 1796, amounting to £30,000, to be raised by tax.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 208–9. Cf. Ja 5, 1795; Ja 9, 1797.

" Gardiner Baker invites the common council to visit his museum, promising "to shew a very pleasing Philosophical Experiment with Electrical Fluid united with Inflammable air, the Effect will be Shewn with a brass Cannon." He adds: "I have the pleasing satisfaction to inform You, that the Museum has lately become entirely my owne property. The Tammany Society having giving [sic] me the whole of their property under certain Conditions [see Je 25, 1795], and I hope from this Circumstance that the same will under the Patronage of your Board, and an Interrested Public, become ornimental, to our City, our Country, and myself."—Miscell. MSS. (Box B), in N. Y. H. S.

28 The committee appointed to consider Gov. Jay's recommendation regarding criminals (see Ja 6) reports to the senate that in its opinion "bills ought to be brought in for reforming the Criminal Code, of this state, and erecting state prisons for the reception of convicts." This being agreed to, a bill "for erecting State Prisons," and another "for the more effectual prevention of crimes," are introduced.—Senate Jour. (1796), 23. On Feb. 15, the bills were consolidated into one.—Ibid. (1796), 39. This was passed by the legislature on March 26 (q. v.). Bills having the same titles as those introduced on Jan. 28 had been under discussion in 1795 (q. v., Mr 17 and Ap 1), but failed to pass.

" A report from the department of war, regarding the fortifications of the ports and harbours of the United States, shows that "Governor's Island has been fortified with a fort made of earth and two batteries under its protection, partly lined with brick masonry, two air-furnaces, a large powder magazine, and a barrack for the garrison; the whole Completed."—Gaz. of the U. S. (Phila.), Ja 28, 1796. This became Fort Jay.— See O 19, 1798.

Feb. 1 The common council appoints a committee "on the subject of supplying this City with fresh Water," and orders that it advertise for proposals.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 212. See F 20.

" At a meeting of the commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell, a report is adopted showing that in 1784 there were about 40 persons in the almshouse who were natives of Ireland; now there are 148, the expense of whose support is over $6,000 a year. They express alarm at the growing expense of the department, "arising, not so much from the increase of our own poor, as from the prodigious influx of indigent foreigners into this city." As the department is caring for 770 paupers, at an annual expense of $31,570, they advise that the city ask the help of the legislature to support the poor. This report being read in common council on Feb. 8, it was ordered that 200 copies be printed in handbills. One of these is now preserved in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room; see reproduction in M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 212–13.

On Jan. 15, 1798, the commissioners presented to the common council a report of a similar condition, when it was ordered that another handbill be printed and sent with a petition to the legislature, asking for relief.—Ibid., II: 416.

" The Diary, & Universal Advertiser (see My 1795) becomes The Diary.—Early Newspapers, II: 419; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 407.

8 Trinity vestry resolves to determine "at their next Meeting . . . the propriety of procuring a Clock and Bell for S[t] Paul's Chapel and a Ring of Bells for Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). A similar resolution had been passed on April 11, 1790 (q. v.). See also Ap 11, 1796.

" A newspaper advertisement reads: "Theater. The Public, are respectfully informed, that the entertainments for the season will commence on Wednesday, Feb. 10, with the favorite Comedy, of the Provok'd Husband, or, The Journey to London. . . . To which will be added The Spoil'd Child. . . .

"N. B. The house has been new ornamented, and thoroughly aired."—Am. Minerva, F 8, 1796.

9 A map of the property of Trinity Church Corporation from Broadway to the Hudson River and between Rector and Thames Sts., bears this date. It is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as map No. 111.

10 The street committee reports to the common council "a Description, from an actual Survey made, of the outer [West] Street, along the West side of this City, which is to be of the breadth of seventy feet and beyond which no Grants ought to be made nor Buildings erected." It is entered in full in the minutes: "Beginning at the center of the arched Bridge over the Run of Water called the Bestavers Killitie or Rivulet . . .," etc.

The same committee also reports "an alteration in the permanent Line of the outer [South] Street in front of the City on the East River, as was agreed to on the 7th of April 1795" (q. v.). The description of this alteration is also entered in full.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 214–15.

" The committee on the Common Lands reports "That they have had a Survey made of the Commons contemplating that the same may hereafter be improved as part of the City, to which end they have had Streets regularly laid down. They are unanimously of Opinion that the best Mode of improving the same is to sell at public Vendue the one half and to lease the other for the Term of twenty one Years." The reasons for this belief are stated, and terms of sale indicated. One of these terms is that the part sold shall "be subject to an annual Rent of one bushel of Wheat per Acre." This was amended at the next meeting of the board to read "four Bushels for each Block or Square per Annum." It is the committee's opinion that the contemplated sale and lease should be made as soon as convenient, "that those who may be induced to buy may have it in their Power to improve the same before the next Summer when the Committee believe the alarm occasioned by the late Epidemic will induce many to buy and improve and thereby tend to encrease the value of the public property." The board agrees to the report, and requires that the committee take order for carrying it into effect, and "that the Sale commence at the City Hall on the 15[th] March next" (see, however, changes of date on Mar. 7, etc.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 216. See also ibid., II: 218, 242, 247, 249–50; and A. Pl. 9, Vol. III.

The board also orders that the same committee "direct that the middle Road be laid out of the breadth of one hundred feet."—

1796 Feb. 10 Ibid., II: 216, 218. This was Manhattan Ave., now effaced from the city plan; it extended north from the present 23d St.—L. M. R. K., III: 1005.

15 The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the Proprietors of the Ground through which the contemplated Canal is to pass from the fresh Water Pond into Hudson River, and to report the Result."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 217; descrips. of Frontispiece II, Vol. III, p. 540, and of Pl. 83-b, III: 560. This was Jay's suggestion of March 12, 1792 (q.v.). See, further, Mr 14.

" The commissioners of the almshouse lottery report that at least 6,000 tickets remain in their hands unsold (see also Jl 27), and that John Rogers and his associates have made an offer to purchase all of them at $10 each, on certain terms, provided the drawing of the lottery be postponed to the first Monday in April. The board agrees, provided the tickets continue to be sold to the inhabitants at $10 each to March first.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 217.

" Joseph Delacroix buys from the ministers, et al., of the Dutch Reformed Church, for £3,950, a plot of ground on the east side of Broadway (No. 112), between Pine and Cedar Sts. (now covered by the Equitable building).—Liber Deeds, LXXXIV: 63. Here he established a garden restaurant, and engaged in the business of a caterer for many years. For a history of the ground and Delacroix's enterprise, see N. Y. Times, N 29, 1912; L. M. R. K., III: 981. He sold the plot on April 28, 1836, for $100,000.—Liber Deeds, CCCL: 604. See, further, F 22, 1797.

20 The following advertisement appears in a paper under the heading "Tea Water Works:" "The Corporation of the city of New York, having determined that it would be expedient to supply the city with good water, by means of water works and having appointed a committee of their body [see F 1], to report the proper plan for carrying their intentions into immediate effect. The committee do hereby give public notice that they are ready and will be happy to communicate with any person or persons on the subject and to confer with them on the best plan for promoting so desirable an improvement as the one contemplated."—Am. Minerva, F 21, 1796. See Mr 18 and D 5.

22 "A Project or Proposal of Monsr Mainshin [Mangin] & Brother Enginiers for making a Dock or Bason in the low Grounds at the fresh Water Pond as a safe Harbor for Shipping & to drain and carry off the Water from that Quarter into the Rivers" being read, the common council orders that it "be taken into consideration with the subject of the contemplated Canal from the fresh Water Pond into Hudsons River" (see Mr 12, 1792).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 218. The text of the original document, hitherto unpublished, is given herewith in full:

"Sketch of a project to construct Docks in the interior of the town, in new york

"When a nation is enlightened, sickness grows a-pace, and wise men are appointed to provide for the public happiness, then great projects are to Be Executed.

"under the influence of heaven born Liberty, artists unfolding their ideas, enjoy themselves in presenting them to the knowing men, who do not fail to forward and protect such projects, as calculated to increase the happiness of Society.

"the city of new york appears to Be designed as the future center and metropolis of commercial world; as lying at the mouth of two large and Beautiful rivers, on which are imported from the remotest interior parts the productions of fertile and daily improved countryes, and commanding an extensive Bay the Safest and most strongly defended in the union.

"the author of nature in Bestowing so many advantages on the same spot, should perhaps have left his work imperfect, if it were without a place fit to receive the shipping and shelter them against wind and ice.

"Eager to cooperate in as much as it stands in our power, to the splendour of so an interesting city, we have Conceived a project corresponding to many useful ends, and therefore deserving the most serious attention of the ruling men. the aim of it, is to multiply the commercial means, to facilitate the manufacturing intercourse, to make the air purer and more salubrious, and not only clean an infectious spot that Begets yearly distempers, But convert it to public uses so that it should encrease the richess, and salubrity of the town.

"that project is to dig, in the place in the rear of the rope-yard where lies now a stagnant and mephitical pond, a Basin large enough to contain the whole of the Merchantmen, to give to it such form as make it useful to many purposes, and to open canals Between, the north and east river, so that the ebb and flow should make that place very healthy,—that Basin would Contribute to the enlargement of the town By Carrying the trade in the center, and the ships would Be sheltered against the too frequent damages and losses which happen on Both River[s]. Feb. 22

"that project would Be of an immense Benefit to the town By vastly enhancing the price of surrounding land, making every point fit for commercial Businesses, and affording the most convenient place to suit stores upon.

"By a strict examen, and some operations on the ground we are thoroughly convinced of the possibility of that great project.

"We will not now draw But the sketch of the work, the particulars of which shall Be given when the project will have Been agreed to, and settled.

"it should Be dug a large dock in the Back part of the tea-water pump, and smaller one on the side of north River. the former for the ships to lie in sheltered, the latter to construct, Repair, and careen them.

"these docks should Be disposed in such way as, By means of gates, to Be shut and open at will, to Receive much or less water, and what would Be Vastly commodious, the small dock wanting chiefly But Litle water would have it, when the large one would have its water levelled with the highest tide.

"as it is essential to such projects to be as profitable as possible, the waters of Both Basins should not only Be daily Refreshed and in their flowing wash away the sinks of that part of the town, But the upward and retrograde motion of the tide, could set a going civil, or military manufactoryes established on mechanical ways, and consequently encrease By so much the opulence of the town.

"although it should Be necessary that the town in that part should be intersected with canals, the facility of communications would By no means Be obstructed, on the contrary the construction of them in the same time when they would be a fine prospect, should afford proper sewers the town generaly wants of.

"the earth extracted By digging, could Be applyed to raise the ground of some streets, to level some other; and to many useful purposes, But to Be shore now we think that the proposed establishment is not only good in itself, But absolutely necessary, in order to Make the town salubrious, which is not liable to contagious distempers But Because it is not sufficiently ordained.

"such advantages as we have shortly Related are deserving of the most serious attention; and the expenses the project will occasion, can not counterpoise its immense utility for in that hippothesis, new york could Boast to unite all conveniencyes for an immense trade, private manufactoryes to carry it on, other public and military to afford whatever is necessary for navy, war, and fortification; a pure and salubrious air; elegant Buildings and constructions, and shortly everything Requisited to contend, nay outvie any chief city in the world.

"it would Be no doubt a trifling objection to say that By putting this project in to execution, the tea water pump should Be destroyd, such an inconveniency could not withstand the more momentous advantages Resulting from the docks; and Besides that loss can be made up By a torrent of fresh water that can Be directed in the town, upon what we shall enter in some explanation if thought necessary.

"if By that sketch our project is considered as useful one, we shall explain the peculiars of it, and geometrically demonstrate that it can Be effected. if on the contrary the circumstances prevent to put it in actual execution, we shall Remain comforted By thinking that in our endeavours to Be useful to the public good, we have conceived it and found the Reasons of its possibility.

A few years later, John McComb, Jr., in collaboration with one of the Mangin brothers, won the competition for the design of the present city hall.—See Ap 24, 1800.

The "Gates of the Enclosed Ground in front of the Alms Hs" are out of order, and "the Ground & Trees" are injured "by 29 1796 Feb. 29 Cows & other Creatures getting in." The common council takes steps to correct this, advancing £100 "towards Repairs to the Gates & filling in the Enclosed Ground in front of the Alms Hs." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 220–21.

Mar. 1 A federal proclamation is issued ratifying the Jay treaty of Nov. 19, 1794 (q. v.).—Winsor, VII: 470.

" Casimir Th. Goerck makes a "Map of the Common Lands," laying down on it streets 60 ft. wide and 200 ft. apart, commencing near our present 42d St. and ending at 93d St., and between Second and Seventh Aves. It is reproduced as A. Pl. 9-b, Vol. III, from the original in the real estate bureau of the comptroller's office, and described on p. 869, Vol. III.

2 The last folio issue of the Gazette Française et Américaine appears. With the succeeding issue the size was reduced to quarto, the title changed to Gazette Française, and the paper printed wholly in French.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 430–31. See My 5, 1797.

" "Some French Performers, lately arrived in this city, respectfully inform the public, they mean to give Two Performances, the first to take place on Thursday Evening, March 3d—The Entertainments will consist of—One small French Peice, two Ballet Pantomines, and several Dances. . . . Messrs. Hallam and Hodgkinson, respectfully inform the public in general, that having received application for the use of the Theatre for two nights, on behalf of some French Comedians . . . and being assured they possess talents of the first rate, they have agreed to two performances, on non-regular play nights."—Am. Minerva, Mr 2, 1796.

7 The common council refers to a committee a petition of Benj. S. Judah and others, proprietors of water-lots between Whitehall and Exchange Slips, "on the Subject of the Grants to be made to them to the outer Street on the River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 222. When making its report, March 31, the committee stated that the petition set forth that the petitioners had "nearly finished the seventy foot or outer Street [South St.] on the River between White Hall & Coenties Slips," and requested "that they may be permitted to lay the Piers, which are intended to be nearly opposite to Moore Street & the Exchange Slip, directly opposite to & in front of the said Street & Slip." The board decided to make the grants when "the said Street of 70 feet" should be completed; also that they be permitted "to sink one of the said Piers opposite to Moore Street," but "that the Pier near the Exchange Slip" be sunk as directed by the board (see My 4, 1795).—Ibid., II: 228. See Ap 5.

" A committee appointed to report upon the repairs needed by the Fly Market informs the common council "that the upper & middle Market require new Floors and the latter a new Roof . . . and . . . the Drain under the upper Market requires enlarging & new paving." As these repairs would afford only temporary relief, the committee suggests "that the upper Market should be raised & widened and the present Roof which is in good Condition be supported by Brick Pillars & cielled with Lath & Plaister and that the Pavement should be raised along the Market so as to give descent for the Water towards the Houses instead of the Market and that these Alterations should be made as soon as the Season will admit." The middle market "should have a very temporary Repair 'till next Season when it should be rebuilt in a corresponding manner." The committee is directed to carry out the repairs suggested.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 222–23. See My 16 and 30, Jl 25, Ag 22.

" The street committee reports that they "have viewed the Place where John B. Coles purposes to erect the Bridge or Dam" (see N 24, 1795), and favour the grant to him on reasonable terms.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 223. For the board's terms, see Je 13.

" The common council orders "that the Sale of the Common Lands (see F 10) be postponed 'till Tuesday the 19th day of April next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 223. On April 11, it was further postponed to May 10, a longer time than was expected being required to stake out the lots "agreable to the numbers on the Map of the Common Lands" (see A. Pl. 9, Vol. III).—Ibid., II: 229. On Nov. 22, the land committee reported the sale, in June, of 58 lots for £17,600.—Ibid., II: 304–5.

10 Wm. Keteltas, having published in the Argus of Feb. 22 and March 5 articles arraigning the justice and impartiality of the assembly, claiming that the representatives of the people had failed to impeach certain state officials on the clearest evidence of malfeasance in office, refuses to ask the pardon of the house on being arraigned, and is committed to the jail. He is carried there in "a handsome arm chair, borne and supported by eight citizens, as a testimony of their approbation of his spirited conduct, amidst loud acclamations, and repeated cries of 'The Spirit of Seventy Six,' &c." Addressing the people from this chair he promises in time to seek the redress provided by the constitution of the state, and is then lodged in the jail.—N. Y. Jour., Mr 11, 1796; Alex. Anderson's Diary (MS.), 1796. Mar. 10

"A Letter from Benjamin Taylor one of the City Surveyors on the subject of the contemplated Canal from the fresh Water Pond to the North River" is referred to the committee on that subject (see F 15).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 224. See, further, S 26. 14

"The Petition of the Agricultural Society praying a Grant of Land for a botanic Garden, subject to such Rent as may be thought proper," is presented to Trinity vestry and referred.—Trin. Min. (MS.). "

On or about this day, Francis Baily, president of the Royal Astronomical Soc. of Gt. Britain, on a tour of America, writes of New York, among other things: "On the point of land at the junction of the North and East rivers was formerly a battery, now converted into a public walk, planted with a double row of trees along the water side. This is the only public walk the New Yorkers can boast of; of course, it is very much frequented, particularly on a summer's evening; it may then be compared to Temple Gardens in the City [London]. . . . 15

". . . The governor's house, which is situated near the battery, is a large brick building, with stone columns before the door, but has neither taste nor elegance to set it off. The Federal Hall is the most clumsy uncouth building I ever saw; it cannot lay claim to any pretensions for taste or style. There are also a poorhouse, a workhouse, and two gaols, which are neat, plain brick buildings, well adapted to the purposes for which they are severally intended.

"Columbia College, . . . is a handsome though a plain building. . . .

"The inhabitants of New York are very fond of music, dancing and plays; an attainment to excellence in the former has been considerably promoted by the frequent musical societies and concerts which are held in the city, many of the inhabitants being very good performers. As to dancing, there are two assembly-rooms in the city, which are pretty well frequented during the winter season; private halls are likewise not uncommon. They have two theatres, one of which is lately erected, and is capable of containing a great number of persons; there is an excellent company of comedians, who perform here in the winter. But the amusement of which they seem most passionately fond is that of sleighing, which is riding on the snow in what you call a sledge, drawn by two horses. . . . Parties of twenty or thirty will sometimes go out of town in these vehicles towards evening, about six or eight miles, when, having sent for a fiddler, and danced till they are tired, they will return home again by moonlight, or, perhaps more often, by daylight. Whilst the snow is on the ground no other carriages are made use of, either for pleasure or service. The productions of the earth are brought to market in sleighs; merchandise is draughted about in sleighs; coaches are laid by, and the ladies and gentlemen mount the silent car, and nothing is heard in the streets but the tinkling of bells."

"As to the state of society, you will find more English men and English manners in this place than in any other on the continent, yet divested of that reserve and haut ton so prevalent in the old country. There is a society of merchants that meet every Saturday at the Belvidere—a house most pleasantly situated on a hill a little way out of the city, and commanding a fine view of the adjacent country. . . ."—Jour. of a Tour in Unsettled Parts of No. Am. in 1796 and 1797 (London, 1861), 120–23.

Thomas Marshall writes from Paterson, N. J. to Mayor Varick: 18

"An Advertisement in the New York papers Announcing the Intention of the Corporation to adopt some more Eligible Plan of Supplying the City with Tea Water [see F 20], has induced me to take the Liberty of addressing you in the present Instance. If I Understand the Advertisement right, the Committee are only delegated with the powers of Enquiry or Investigation, and of 1796 Mar. 18 Course cannot come to any Conclusion that may be decisive either as to the person to be charged with the Superintendance of the Undertaking or the precise System to be adopted to Accomplish the Object Contemplated. However Sir from the Views I have been able to take of the Matter, I am induced to Conclude that the Aid of a Steam Engine will be deem'd Essentially Necessary, under this Impression (I beg leave to assure you Sir with the Utmost diffidence of my own Merits) I ground a part of my pretentions to your Notice, in England I have conducted large & extensive Undertakings, and in some of them Steam Engines have been used, the Construction and Management of which I flatter myself equal to—I have been about five years in America & Plan'd, Constructed and Directed the Cotton Mill and its Complicated Machinery & Water Works for the Manufactury at Paterson—for fourteen Years past I have been in the Constant habit of Superintending, Blacksmiths, Turners, Millwrights, Labourers &c &c and am tolerably well Acquainted with what is done by the respective Tradesmen and Labourers in this Country for a Days Work—the Method of Making Models for both Iron and brass Castings I am perfectly familiar with, and my Conduct and Capacity for what I undertook for the Society can be easily known from Mr Hamilton, Mr Low, Mr Harrison or any other of our Old Directors in New York. My time will expire with this Company next Month, when I flatter myself I shall be able to procure from the Board of Directors when duly Convened, an honorable testimonial of my Services, thus Sir I have taken the Liberty of troubling you, and respectfully Soliciting your Vote in my favour, if upon further Investigation I may be deem'd proper for the Undertaking."—From original letter in Tomlinson Coll., deposited by Mercantile Library Ass'n in N. Y. P. L. No action appears to have been taken on Marshall's proposal.

21 John Minshull presents to the common council "his Remarks in writing on the subjects of cleansing this City and supplying it with fresh Water." Referred.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 225.

" The mayor issues warrants for £986:14:2 (out of the revenue fund to be charged to the state of New York), to be applied towards discharging the expenses of the health committee, and £248:15:8 (out of the fund received from Philadelphia), "towards the Relief of Persons who became necessitous by the Epidemic Fever last Summer."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 226.

" A large lock and key for the jail cost £10.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 226. The collection of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. contains the key of one of the jail locks.

24 Announcement is published that a fox hunt will be held "on this Island" on Saturday, March 26. "The dogs will be cast off at Kissing bridge at day break." On the 28th, the hunt will take place at Jamaica, L. I., where the dogs will be "cast off at Rhodes Swamp at sunrise."—Am. Minerva, Mr 24, 1796.

26 The legislature passes "An Act making alterations in the Criminal law of this State, and for erecting State Prisons." This provides that crimes of treason and murder shall be punishable by death, and all others by imprisonment or fine. It also stipulates that two state prisons shall be erected, one in New York City and the other in Albany, and appoints commissioners for supervising the work. The prison in New York is not to cost more than £25,000, and the one in Albany not more than £20,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 30. The plan of a prison at Albany was later abandoned (see F 3, 1797), and more money was appropriated for the one at New York (see Mr 17, 1797, and Mr 30, 1798).

Apr. 1 The legislature passes "An Act more effectually to regulate the Port of New-York." A harbour-master is to be appointed, whose duties are defined in the act.—Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 41 (Webster, III: 182).

5 The British sloops of war "Jean Bart" (28 guns) and "Spencer" arrive at New York. On April 7, the frigate "Hussar" came in.—N. Y. Jour., Ap 8, 1796; Argus, Ap 5, 1796.

" The common council appoints a committee to examine the lots "lately filled in on the East River between the Exchange & Coenties Slips & to determine whether they will bear foundations for Buildings of Stone or Brick."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 229.

" The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer to pay the commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell £1,000 on account for the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 229. See also Je, 1794. A summary of subsequent payments is as follows: In 1796: Je 27, £1,000; Jl 11, £2,000; Jl 25, £3,000; Ag 10, £3,000; Ag 22, £2,000; Ag 29, £2,000; S 5, £1,000; S 12, £1,000; S 19, £1,000; O 3, £2,000; O 24, £1,000; N 9, £2,000; D 5, £1,000.—Ibid., II: 253, 258, 266, 270, 272, 274, 276, 278, 279, 286, 297, 300, 308. In 1797: Ja 13, £1,000; Mr 13, £1,000; My 29, £1,200; Jl 12, £600; D 27, £94:5:3.—Ibid., II: 319, 330, 353, 368, 414. In 1799: My 13, £569:15:9.—Ibid., II: 545. Apr. 5

An act of the legislature is passed "for the more effectual Prevention of Fires, and to regulate Buildings in the City of New York." It repeals certain former acts for the same purpose; and provides that all buildings more than 25 feet high (two stories) shall be built of stone or brick, with a party or fire wall rising 12 inches above the roof, and "shall be covered, except the flat roof thereof, with tile or slate, or other safe material against fire, and not with boards or shingles, and that the flat of any roof may be covered with boards or shingles, Provided such flat do not exceed two equal fifth parts of the space of such roof, and there be erected around the same flat a substantial balcony or ballustrade." The law does not apply to roofs, spires, and cupolas of churches and other public buildings; nor to buildings erected since March 31 and before Sept. 1, 1796, not exceeding 28 feet in height; nor to buildings situated north of a line drawn from the outlet of Lispenard's Meadow eastward along the north side of Nicholas Bayard's, John R. Livingston's and Abraham Carman's houses.—Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 55. The original petition to the legislature for the passage of a law against the erection of wooden buildings within certain limits is preserved in the Emmet Coll. (item No. 11637–8–9), in N. Y. P. L. These laws are among the earliest forerunners of the modern building law. 8

The treasurer of the state is ordered to pay to the society of the hospital "the sum of one thousand pounds annually for the term of four years in addition to the sum directed to be paid to . . . the said society for the term of five years [see March 31, 1795] . . . the first annual payment of the said sum of one thousand pounds to be immediately advanced by the treasurer of this State to enable the said society to discharge their debts and make necessary repairs to the said hospital."—Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 57. The provision was renewed for an additional five years on March 7, 1800.—Ibid. (1800), chap. 21. 11

The five-year grant of £750 per annum to Columbia College for the payment of salaries (see Ap 11, 1792) is extended by the legislature for two more years.—Laws of N. Y. (1796), chap. 57. "

Trinity vestry again resolves "that a Clock and Bell be procured for S[t] Pauls Chapel and a Ring of Bells for Trinity Church," and a committee is appointed to procure them.—Trin. Min. (MS.). The clock and the bells did not arrive until Jan. 31, 1799 (q. v.). "

Owners of lots "on front Street between the Crane Wharf & Pecks Slip" petition "that the said Street may be opened to Pecks Slip." Referred to street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 229. The board also appoints the usual committee of five to examine the lots lately filled in there, to determine "whether they will bear foundations for Buildings of Brick or Stone."—Ibid., II: 230.

For the purpose of widening Beaver Lane, the city buys lots of John Delafield, and one of Henry King which is at the corner of Broadway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 230, 232, 238, 243, 269, 273. "

The committee on the North River ferries reports that it has "sold" them at public auction. The Paulus Hook ferry went to John Holdron for 3 years at an annual rental of £300; and the "Hoboock" ferry to Joseph Smith for 3 years at £120. The "Purchasors" were put under bonds. The conditions require that each ferry "be provided with two large Boats for the conveyance of Horses Cattle Carriages & other heavy Articles and two Row Boats for the conveyance of Passengers." The ferries are to operate "from Sunrise 'till 9 OClock at Night from the 1[st] May to the 1[st] October, and are not to be excluded from double Ferriage after Sunset." The lessees are to keep the stairs at the landing-places in repair.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 231. "

At a meeting of the commissioners appointed to build a state prison, it is ordered that Isaac Stoutenburg inquire of the common council whether they will dispose of the bridewell and about two acres of land adjoining, and at what price. He wrote to the mayor, etc., on April 18, as directed, and added that, should the board "not incline to sell the Bridewell, will they sell us the Water Works Lot."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room. On April 20, the common council rejected the proposal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 231–32. See, further, Je 20. 14

The $10,000 prize in the almshouse lottery (see Mr 9, Ap 6, 7, 15

1796 13, 28, Je 15, Jl 27, 1795; F 15, 1796) is drawn by a free negro Apr. named Derry, who is the sole support (to the extent of £30 per 15 annum) of the aged widow of Geo. Burns, who kept the City Tavern on Broadway. When he was informed of his good fortune, he replied: "Well, now I will be able to maintain my old mistress genteely."—N. Y. Jour., Ap 19, 1796. See O 24.

19 Doubtless, the first elephant ever seen in America is one brought at this time to New York from Bengal on board the "America."—N. Y. Jour., Ap 19, 1796.

20 The common council orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the state treasurer to pay to the city treasurer the sum of £3,311:16:2, as directed by the legislature at its last session, "for defraying the necessary Expences incurred by . . . the Sickness . . . in this City the last Summer & Fall."—*M. 6 Under the title "Lazaretto In the Bay of New York," the report of a committee of the Medical Society to Gov. Jay is published, with recommendations regarding the erection of buildings, etc. The governor is engaged in making arrangements for carrying into effect the law passed by the last session of the legislature "for the more effectual prevention of infectious distempers from abroad," for which purpose an infirmary is to be erected on one of the islands in the harbour. Among the specifications contained in the committee's report is one providing that there shall be separate buildings:—the infirmary building, near the shore; a building for cooking, some distance away, and a wash-house, having no connection with either; all the buildings to be erected "upon pillars or arches, and not closely underpinned with stone and mortar." It is the opinion "That slight and temporary buildings [should] be erected with moderate expence, and which before they become thoroughly foul, may be torn down or consumed by fire every few years, though not ornamental or showy, are perhaps better calculated to guard our city from pestilential attacks, from abroad, and at a smaller charge, than would be incurred by building and supporting a grand and magnificent Lazaretto."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 6, 1796. See, further, Je 7.

9 Joseph François Mangin, engineer, is admitted and sworn as a freeman of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 236. See F 22 and My 16. It was this Mangin who a few years later became associated with John McComb, Jr. in the design of the new city hall (see My 26, 1803).

Wm. Alexander Duer, in his reminiscences (pp. 46–49), describes in detail Fitch's experiments on the Collect with his steamboat, in the summer of this year. This description opens as follows: —"Passing on one occasion with a companion across the fields near the 'Kolck,' we were startled by a sound which, for the moment, I mistook for the blowing of a shoal of porpoises which had found their way from the river. But on proceeding to the bank overlooking the pond in the rear of Broadway, we descried a boat, which I supposed at first to be on fire, but soon perceived that not to be the case, as her movements were regular, and produced by paddle-wheels at her sides, which, in my wisdom, I supposed to be driven by the smoke issuing in a thick volume from her pipe, after the manner of the Jack for roasting, in my father's kitchen." A more complete extract from the reminiscences will be found in Vol. I, in the description of Pl. 58-b, where a map of the Collect and its surroundings and a drawing of Fitch's boat are reproduced and described. Gov. Jay writes to Mayor Varick: "Considering the works erected on Governor's Island, and the obvious objections to having a lazaretto near a garrison, I am solicitous to procure some other place for that purpose. . . . As Bedloe's Island, which belongs to the Corporation, has heretofore been used and considered as a proper place for the purpose I think it would be agreeable both to the State and to the citizens of New York that it should be purchased by the State, and the intended lazaretto built there in preference to Governor's Island, in case the French intend soon to remove from it as I have understood they propose to do; for I have no desire to interfere with any arrangements between the Corporations and them relative to it. . . ."—*Corresp. and Pub. Gov. Jay's letter of June 7 (q.v.), "proposing to purchase" 13

1796 June 13 Bedlow's Island from the city, "as a place whereon to erect a Lazaretto for the reception of Persons inflicted with contagious Fevers," is read in common council, and the board decides "that a Grant be made of the said Island to the People of the State of New York (for the consideration of five Shillings) for the purpose of erecting such Lazaretto & for such other purposes as the Legislature shall from time to time direct."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 248. See, further, Ag 10, N 1, and D —.

" The common council decides that John B. Coles shall pay £5 annually "for the privilege of erecting his Dam & Bridge [see N 24, 1795] on the Corporation Right of Soil between High & Low Waters Mark in Harlem River and also for the Injury which may arise by overflowing the said Soil between High & Low Water Mark provided always . . . that Mr Coles and his Assigns do make and keep in Repair at their own proper Cost & charge the Road leading across the said Soil between High & Low Water to the said Dam or Bridge."—*M. " "The Corner Lot on Pearl Street and State Street belonging to this Corporation & occupied by Gardiner Baker as a Menage for keeping Wild Animals [see Mr 31, Ap 1, and S 29, 1794] being complained of as a Nuisance," the common council orders "that he remove those Animals and deliver up the said Lot in clean & good Order by the 15th July next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 248. On June 20, the order was suspended.—Ibid., II: 250.

" The common council hears a petition for filling up the Exchange Slip. It is referred to a committee to enquire and report "what proportion of the Expence the Neighborhood will bear."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 248. The original petition (in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read June 13th 1796," bears date of April 12, and shows that the proprietors and inhabitants residing near the Exchange Slip complained that, as this slip remains open, and "it is generally filled with boats Loaded with hay, which from being surrounded by a number of large Stores to which any fire that might happen on board a hay boat must unavoidably communicate," creates a serious hazard. They also state that, in summer, filth gathers in the slip and cannot be carried off, and this is offensive and dangerous to health. They ask that the slip "be filled in to the Extent of the permanent Line." See Je 20.

20 "A Request of the Commissioners appointed for the erection of the State Prison for a Grant of the Soil between High & low Waters Mark on Hudsons River opposite to two acres of Land by them purchased of Abijah Hammond to erect the said State Prison on, was read & granted for the consideration of five Shillings."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 250. The land on which the state prison was built is shown on two surveys, dated June 21 and 23, 1796, in Bancker Coll. (box G-M, folder "Greenwich Village"), in N. Y. P. L.

" The board orders "that the Committee on the new Alms House be authorized to employ a Person to superintend the Workmen & to keep a Check and that in all Contracts they take security."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 250. Two were appointed at the next meeting.—Ibid., II: 251. See, further, Je 27.

" The common council receives two petitions opposing that of June 13 (q. v.) which sought the closing of the Exchange Slip. These are dated June 15, one being the petition of Peter Goelet. These ask that the slip be cleaned instead of being filled up. Goelet states that he has made "a wharf along the Exchange slip from the Arch to the permanent line (being about 316 feet)," and has leased the land to several persons who derive their support from "the trade carried on with the Market and other boats that come in the slip." The other petitioners state that this slip "has always been as healthy as any other part of the City," and that they "have formerly at great expense erected a market," etc.—From the originals in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room. See O 24.

" The common council grants permission to fill up "the Old Slip to the south side of Front Street," on condition "that the neighborhood fill it up at their private Expence—the Bulkhead or Wharf to be at the public Expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 250.

24 Archibald Robertson makes a sketch of "New York from Hobuck Ferry House New Jersey." This sketch, which was owned by the late Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, was engraved (with slight modifications) and published by Francis Jukes in 1800. This print is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 73. Through a slip, the authorship is there erroneously attributed to Alexander, instead of Archibald, Robertson. The following note is found on the original: "New York from Hobuck 24 June '96—New York from Hobuck N Jersey shore—drawn by Archibald Robertson my father.—A. J. Robertson 19 W. 35th St." June 24

The common council agrees to the report of a committee to which had been referred a memorial of Henry Kip and others, who offered proposals "to settle and adjust the boundary Lines between the Corporation and the Claimants of the Land called the Negroes Burying Ground." This was the land first owned under a patent by Cornelis Van Borsum, Oct. 14, 1673 (q. v.), and which was used for a potter's field for negroes.—L. M. R. K., III: 927. 27

One of the principal features of this report is "That a Street sixty five feet wide to remain a public Street forever be laid out & opened opposite to Chambers Street and to extend from the Broad Way to the East side of George Street as the same is delineated on the Map herewith delivered and from thence to the West side of Augustus Street to the Place there marked x on the said Map."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 252–53, 264, 327–28. The original report is in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room. The street referred to was an extension of Chambers St. eastward from Broadway, and marked the northern boundary of the Park.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 568. The old "Negroes' Burying Ground" here mentioned is to be distinguished, of course, from the new one at Christie St.—See Jl 6, 1795. See, further, Mr 17, 1800.

The common council orders payment of £10 "for the Workman on laying the first Corner Stone" of the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 253. The building was completed on or about May 1, 1797 (q. v.). "

A printed circular of this date is issued from the supervisor's office, District of New York, containing the act of the legislature of May 28, fixing taxes on various kinds of carriages and abolishing the carriage taxes of 1794.—See one of these circulars in N. Y. P. L. 30

Isaac Weld, Jr., describing New York among other places mentioned in his book of travels, says, in part: ". . . The streets are narrow and inconvenient, and, as but too commonly is the case in seaport towns, very dirty, and, consequently, during the summer season, dreadfully unhealthy. . . . The streets near the North River are much more airy; but the most agreeable part of the town is in the neighbourhood of the battery, on the southern point of the island, . . . and affords a most charming walk, and, on a summer's evening, is crowded with people, . . . July —

"From the battery a handsome street, about seventy feet wide, called Broadway, runs due north through the town; between it and the North River run several streets at right angles, as you pass which you catch a view of the water, and boats plying up and down; the distant shore of the river also is seen to great advantage. . . . if . . . a spacious quay had been formed the entire length of the city, on either side, instead of having the borders of the rivers crowded with confused heaps of wooden store houses, built upon wharfs projecting one beyond another in every direction, New York would have been one of the most beautiful seaports in the world. All the sea-ports in America appear to great disadvantage from the water, when you approach near to them, from the shores being crowded in this manner with irregular masses of wooden houses, standing as it were in the water. The federal city [Washington], where they have already begun to erect the same kind of wooden wharfs and store-houses without any regularity, will be just the same. It is astonishing, that in laying out that city a grand quay was not thought of in the plan; it would certainly have afforded equal, if not greater accommodation for the shipping, and it would have added wonderfully to the embellishment of the city.

"Many of the private houses in New York are very good, particularly those in Broadway. Of the public buildings there are none which are very striking. The churches and houses for public worship amount to no less than twenty-two; four of them are for Presbyterians, three for Episcopalians of the Church of England, three for Dutch Reformists, two for German Lutherans and Calvinists, two for Quakers, two for Baptists, two for Methodists, one for French Protestants, one for Moravians, one for Roman Catholics, and one for Jews."—Travels through the States of North Am., and the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, during the years 1795, 1796, and 1797 (London, 1799), I: 264–66.

1796 July 4 for the expenses of constables and marshals, and for sextons ringing the bells; and £61 to Cortlandt Van Buren for gunpowder for the militia.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 258.

" 11 The common council orders "that the Ground in the 6th Ward formerly used or intended as a Reservoir for the Water Works be appropriated as a Place to deposit the Dirt & Filth taken out of the Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 254.

" The common council having been informed "that the french Republic stood in no further need of the use of Bedlows Island," the governor having represented to the board (see Je 7) "that the Commissioners of the Health Office had determined the same to be the most proper Place for the erection of a Lazaretto," and the board having agreed (see Je 13) to "grant & surrender the said Island to the People of the State of New York for those Purposes," it now orders "that the Consul of the french Republic be respectfully informed that the Season renders it necessary that immediate preparation should be made by the Commissioners of the Health Office for the comfortable Reception & accommodation of such sick Persons as they may find it necessary to send there," and that he be requested to give the necessary orders "for the speedy removal of the Buildings & Materials erected & placed there at the Expence of the french Republic."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 257.

" The mayor mentions to the common council "a Proposal of Mr Mangin to make a general Survey & Plan of all the Streets in this City." It is referred to the street committee with instructions to confer with him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 257. See, further, Ap 11, 1797.

12 By this time, South St. (see Ap 7, 1795), in the neighbourhood of "the Whitehall," had been filled in. The material used, however, contained filth, and this, it is believed, caused the sickness which now prevails in that section. In consequence, the common council passes four ordinances for filling up sunken lots there. The first is: "A Law for raising the new Street of 70 feet wide [South St.] lately laid out & made fronting on the East River between Whitehall Slip & Moore Street in the 1st Ward."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 258–59. Another ordinance was passed on Oct. 24.—Ibid., II: 295. See, further, Jl 18.

17 "The report of the Yellow Fever spreads much alarm throughout the city—I believe it is a fact that there are several cases of it, at present."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1796 (MS.), 173. See later entries in his diary under S 9 and 12. See, further, S 23, 1797.

18 The common council passes an ordinance for raising and making South St. from the west side of Moore St. to the Exchange Slip (Broad St.) and between De Peyster St. and the Fly Market Slip (Maiden Lane).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 260.

On Oct. 23, 1797 (q. v.), an order was issued that the proprietors of water lots between Coenties Slip and Catherine Slip be required to make and finish South St. by Oct. 1, 1798.—Ibid., II: 399. A regulation of South St. was reported and approved on June 3, 1799 (q. v.).—Ibid., II: 551. The permanent line of South St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts. was fixed in 1809.—Ibid., V: 668–69; the street was surveyed between Beekman St. and Burling Slip in 1809.—Ibid., V: 712. Cf. Ap 7, 1795.

" The common council approves of the street committee's specifications for regulating Bayard St. "from the Bowery Road to the proposed Canal" (see F 15, Mr 14); also Mulberry and Mott Sts., and parts of Chatham Sq., Catharine, Winne, and Pell Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 262.

19 A ship arriving with 450 Irish immigrants, the common council grants $800 "towards subsisting the said passengers during the time of their Quarentine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 263, 264–65.

25 The common council refers to the road committee a petition of John B. Coles "for a Road to be laid out to the Bridge erecting across Harlem River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 265, 274. For the act enabling him to build this bridge, see Mr 24, 1795. On Sept. 5, the committee submitted a sketch or survey of several roads, and the board adopted one of these, described as follows: "the Road of four Rods wide to commence at the South West Corner of the field, near the School House, belonging to the Dutch Church at Harlem and thence on a direct Line through the said field and through the Land of John S Sickels to the said Bridge."—Ibid., II: 275, 277, 279, 315.

" The common council orders payment of £600 more (see My 16) "towards the rebuilding of the Fly Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 266.

— In consequence of the recommendation of the medical faculty of Columbia College, the governors of the New York Hospital appropriate $500 towards the purchase of a medical library. The members of the college faculty "contributed books from their private libraries and part of their fees of public instruction. An Hospital Library was thus established, which was further augmented by the purchase of the medical library of the late Dr. Romayne, in 1800, and by the accession, in 1805, of the library of a private association of physicians, under the name of the Medical Society of New-York, who gave their books on condition, that they and such of their sons as should become practitioners of medicine in the city of New-York should have the free use of the Hospital Library." In 1805, the governors appropriated $250 annually out of the funds of the establishment for the purchase of books.—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1820), 6; Blunt, Stranger's Guide to City of N. Y. (1817), 70. The New York Academy of Medicine has a brass tablet on the wall of the library with this inscription, "The Library of the Society of the New York Hospital Founded 1796 consisting of twenty three thousand volumes was presented to the New York Academy of Medicine by the Board of Governors of the Society 1898."

— The alterations and repairs in the buildings on Bedloe's Island, to render them fit to receive the sick, are completed.—See D, 1796.

8 Trinity vestry resolves "that the Plan reported by the Committee of Leases [of the vestry] for streightening and widening Greenwich Street, meets the Approbation of the Board and they do consent that the same be carried into Effect."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

10 The common council approves "A Grant & surrender of Bedlows Island to the People of the State of New York for the purpose of erecting thereon a Lazaretto and for such other purposes as the Legislature shall from time to time direct; with a provisoe that when ever it shall no longer [be] used for those Purpose[s] it shall revert to & revest in this Corporation." The board orders that the grant be sealed, and signed by the mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 268–69; Liber E of City Grants, p. 23 (in comptroller's office). See Je 13, Jl 11, N 1.

15 The common council orders "that the Aldn of the respective Wards direct the number of the Ward to be painted on Scavengers Carts in like manner as those of the Cartmen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 270.

16 "The commissioners in the southern District, appointed to superintend the erection of a State Prison, at New-York, have purchased a piece of land, of three acres, for this purpose, situated on the North river, at a small distance north, from Gray's Gardens. The commissioners, it is said, have consulted and advised with the philanthropic Caleb Lowndes, of Philadelphia, on the eligibility of this spot, for the State Prison, who has highly approved it, as being, in many respects, particularly as to elevation and contiguousness to water, the best of any in the vicinity of the city."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour. & Patriotic Reg., Ag 16, 1796.

Among the Philip Schuyler papers in the N. Y. P. L. is a folder containing a manuscript ground-floor plan and an elevation of the New York State prison, together with a number of descriptive notes and estimates, dated Philadelphia, April 19, 1796, and addressed by Caleb Lowndes, the "Institutor of the Penitentiary System of Prison Discipline," to Thomas Eddy, one of the New York commissioners. These were evidently sent by Lowndes in answer to an inquiry for information regarding prison design and administration. The plan and elevation correspond closely to those reproduced in Eddy's Account of the N. Y. State Prison (N. Y., 1801), and were evidently the architect's drawings. See also descrip. of Pl. 71, I: 455–57. See, further, N 28, 1797.

James C. Lawrence having written a letter demanding $100 "for a Plan or Elevation of the new Alms Hs" (see My 30), the common council decides that this sum is extravagant, but agrees that he be paid $50, and orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer for that amount.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 272.

29 The common council orders payment of £600 more "towards Fly Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 274. See My 16, Jl 25. See, further, S 12.

Sept. — A map of the road to the bridge over Harlem River at Third Ave. was made at this time. It is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as map No. 134.

5 A letter from the commissioners of the health office is read at the common council meeting, "informing that the Lazarette on Bedlows Isle is now prepared for the Reception of Persons with Infectious Disorders" (see Ag), and that therefore "they have no longer use for the Hospital at Belle Vue." The board appoints a committee "to report on the future Disposition of Belle Vue."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 275. On Sept. 12, the board ordered that the committee "make a Settlement with the Commissrs of the Health Office for the Rent of Belle Vue as also with respect to the furniture & other Things there."—Ibid., II: 278. 8 The "Thetis" and "Thisbe," British frigates, part of Admiral Murray's squadron, arrive at Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Jour., S 9, 1796. They were here again in 1797 (q. v., O 11 and 16, 1797).

12 The common council decides to grant £800 "towards the running out of a Pier in the middle of Coenties Slip from the L to & beyond the new Street of 70 feet wide whenever the said Pier shall be compleated."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 277. See, further, D 5.

" The common council orders payment of £192:8:1 "to compleat the Fly Market," and £400 "towards rebuilding the Fly Market between Water & front Streets" (see Ag 29).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 278. On Oct. 17, £200 more was appropriated "towards the Fly Market."—Ibid., II: 295. On Oct. 24, £600.—Ibid., II: 297. On Dec. 12, £400.—Ibid., II: 310.

" The committee of leases of Trinity Church is instructed to "take into consideration the Ground called the Fort."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Action was taken Jan. 9, 1797 (q. v.)

19 Washington's farewell address, bearing date of Sept. 17, is published in Claypoole's Am. Daily Adv. (Phila.), under the title: "To the People of the United States." Addressing "Friends and Fellow Citizens," he declines "being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made" for president, and states the principles which he conceives proper for the guidance of the Union. The MS. had been handed by Washington in person to the printer, David C. Claypoole, and, after publication, Washington again handed it to Claypoole with permission to keep it. Its first reprinting in New York was on Sept. 21, in the Argus, The Herald, etc. It was reprinted in many places, both here and in England, in this year, and innumerable times thereafter. In 1850, James Lenox had it privately printed in a limited edition from the original MS., which he had purchased in that year (q. v.). His edition shows it dated Sept. 19, and an examination of the original, now in the N. Y. Pub. Library, proves this to be correct. An appendix by Claypoole in the Lenox volume explains the circumstances of his acquiring the MS. See also Inquiry into the Formation of Washington's Farewell Address, by Horace Binney (1859); Winsor, VII: 332–34.

23 The common council votes to distribute among the charity schools and religious societies of the city the sum of £944 out of the money granted by the legislature on April 9, 1795 (q. v.), and out of that raised by tax in the city for the encouragement of schools. A committee is appointed to report to the board the sums to be granted to each of the charity schools.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 281. The committee reported on Oct. 24.—Ibid., 296. See, further, N 6, 1797.

The board also resolves to apply to the next legislature "for legal provision to establish public Schools in this City."—Ibid., II: 281, 296.

26 The common council orders that the committee on the subject of a canal from the Collect to Hudson River "be instructed to confer with the Proprietors of the Swamp for the obtaining such Parts thereof as may be required to make the said Canal of the Breadth of 40 feet and a Street on each side of the Breadth of 30 feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1834), II: 282. Sept. 26

" An engraved postal-route map of the United States bears this date. For description, see Addenda.

27 John B. Coles grants to Gen. Lewis Morris, of Morrisania, "the Right of passing the Bridge over the Harlem River [see Je 13], from Harlem to Morrissania, free from any Toll, Imposition or Molestation whatsoever" from him or from his heirs, etc. He adds that "the said Right of passing and using the aforesaid Bridge shall extend to his Carriage when he is in it, or when employed in his actual Service, and also to his Horses, Cattle and Teams of every kind. . . ." This grant means that Coles relinquishes all claim for Morris's tolls, amounting to about $50 a year. It is given in consideration of 5 shillings.—From the original MS. in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Oct. 1 Valentine Seaman, M.D. (citing Dr. Bayley's letters), reviewed in 1798 the causes of yellow fever in New York. "The chief prevalence of the disease [yellow fever] in 1796," he said, "seemed evidently fixed where, from our former experience, we ought reasonably to have expected it. For no doubt, at that time, the neighbourhood of Whitehall, from the nature of materials wherewith a large dock was there filling up, aided by the noisome exhalations, from the exposed bottom of the Exchange-slip at low water, must certainly have been rendered the most noxious part of the city." Other neighbourhoods were also affected that year; for example, around the place "where Roosevelt-street drain empties itself into an inlet which was then open quite up to the southerly side of Water-street. . . ." Dr. Seaman observed that nearly half the deaths from this disease in 1796 originated "in a small part of East George-street," and that the greater part of the remainder originated "around and just below the Fly-market." The southerly part of East George Street, much of which was sunken, muddy, and filthy from neglect, is described. The same condition prevails near the Market. "The slips . . . on each side of this central spot, have been left, during the summer, to be fortuitously filled up by the free contributions of the neighbourhood. Hence they have become the common receptacles of rubbish and filth of every description."—Medical Repository (1798), I: 315–25. Two copper-plate engravings, in the same work, show the docks and streets north and south of Wall St. See also Dr. Bayley's report to Gov. Jay, Dec., 1796.

2 "Our great buildings make good progress. The [City] Hotel will soon be partly in use and has the finest room I ever saw, large enough to accommodate four setts of dancers or three hundred covers at Dinner. The Alms House of two hundred and fifty feet front and three stories is now slating. The Play House [Park Theatre] is roofed and the States Prison has three hundred men at work on it. The wharves project everywhere in the North and East Rivers as far as Lispenard and Rutgers Sts."—Letter in Rutherfurd's Family Records and Events, 171–72. See also descrips. of Pls. 61, 65 and 71, I: 443, 455.

3 The common council appoints a committee "to examine & report whether the Senate & Assembly Chambers in the City Hall cannot be so altered as to make more Room for the accommodation of the Members of the Legislature whose numbers are considerably encreased."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 286. The committee reported next day that the alterations could be made without much expense, and the board ordered that this be done.—Ibid., II: 287. See N 9.

7 "Mr. Ricketts has purchased a lot in the rear of the present circus [see Je 6, 1793; N 25, 1794], to front Greenwich street, on which he has planned to erect a most superb edifice, for the purpose of his exhibitions the next season."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., O 7, 1796. The new circus opened on March 16, 1797 (q. v.). The lot was evidently one of those advertised on Feb. 7, 1795 (q. v.), for sale on Feb. 26, 1795. In anticipation of the opening, it was mentioned often in the press.—See N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 25, Mr 3, 4, 6, 8; Diary, Mr 7, 11; Minerva, Mr 11, 14, 1797, and other current newspapers.

17 The common council orders that the city treasurer receive from the state treasurer the money which the city is entitled to under the "Act for the encouragement of Schools" (see Ap 9, 1795).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 294.

" A committee of the common council reports favourably on a petition for an additional watch-house in the Seventh Ward, and states that in their opinion "the most eligible Situation for the 1796 Building is at the Head of Catharine Street & Chatham Square."

Oct. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 294. On Oct. 31, the board appointed
17 a superintendent for "the erection of the new Watch House in Chatham Square."—Ibid., II: 298. On Nov. 9, £200 was paid toward this object.—Ibid., II: 300. See also ibid., II: 301. See D 19.

24 Another petition, dated Oct. 22, to the same effect as those of June 20 (q. v.), is presented to the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 295. This one adds that, if the Exchange Slip is filled up, the small boats supplying the market would be deprived of a safe and commodious harbour.—From the original in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room. See N 9.

" The common council passes an ordinance prohibiting every boat and vessel, except the Paulus Hook ferry-boats, from coming into Cortlandt Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 295–96.

" The common council orders that the clerk prepare a report to the legislature "on the subject of the late Alms House Lottery" (see Ap 15).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 296, 298.

Nov. Gov. Jay, in a message read before the senate and assembly,
1 says in part: "Difficulties were experienced in executing the benevolent intentions of the Legislature respecting a Lazaretto in the vicinity of this city. Ground conveniently situated could not be purchased; and the placing it on Governor's Island, where it could not have been erected at a proper distance from the garrison, was liable to strong objections. These difficulties have been removed by the liberality of the Corporation of the city. They have gratuitously conveyed Bedlow's Island to the State [see Ag 10] for this and such other public uses as the Legislature may from time to time direct. Certain buildings, erected there by the French Republic, have been purchased, and prepared to Serve the purpose of a Lazaretto for the present—But as additions and alterations will be necessary; and as precautions should be taken to prevent that island from being further diminished, by encroachments of the water, the appropriation of some money for these objects, will be requisite. . . ."—Assemb. Jour., 20th sess., 5. For description of the establishment, see Dec. Regarding further title to Bedloe's Island, see F 15, 1800.

" A number of the clergy and laity of the "Presbyterian, reformed Dutch, Associate Reformed, and Baptist Churches" form the New York Missionary Society.—Argus, N 5, 1796.

4 An encounter takes place in Cortlandt St. "between the honourable John Rutherford, Esq. a Senator of the United States, and Sir John Temple, Vice Counsel of his Britannic Majesty." Rutherford "attacked Sir John with an huge bludgeon on suspicion of his being the author of a publication in which he supposes himself called 'young Gripe-all,' and charged with being a tory during the war." Sir John "defended himself with a small horse-whip." The report further states that, notwithstanding disparity of age and weapons (Sir John being about 70, and Mr. Rutherford about 30), the latter was knocked down and "most terribly beaten."—Centinel of Freedom (Newark, N. J.), N 9, 1796. Sir John Temple's death occurred in 1798 (q.v.). See also Rutherfurd's Family Records and Events (1894), 220–21.

" "The inhabitants of Morisania and West-Chester have petitioned the Legislature for aid in opening the new road from Harlem Bridge [see Je 13 and S 27] through those towns. It is said this road will shorten the distance to New-Haven 4 miles. . . ."—Minerva, N 4, 1796. See, further, Mr 30, 1797.

9 The common council receives another petition (see Je 20, O 24) against filling up the Exchange Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 299. The original (in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room) is endorsed "read 9th Novr 1796 & referred to the Comte on the former Petition on that subject." Dated Nov. 4, it urges that the slip be filled up instead of being merely cleaned. These petitioners state that "Many good Citizens in that part of the City have in the last few months fallen a sacrifice to a violent disorder," but "whether their Deaths may be attributed to that nauseous Slip, or not, is a Question perhaps not easily decided." Nevertheless, a "large part of the Citizens attribute the fatal Fever to that Cause," and "many of the Faculty hold the same opinion." They advise that, "If the Slip in question was filled up to within forty feet of the North side of South Street, and a Bridge placed across the mouth of the Slip, the width of, and to form a part of, South Street, it would leave a free access for small Craft under the Bridge, make a convenient span of forty feet for a landing above it," etc.

" The common council orders payment of £29:14 to John DeWitt "for Windsor Chairs for Senate & Assembly Rooms."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 300. On Dec. 5, £42:10:1 was paid "for alterations in the Senate Chamber" (see O 3).—Ibid., II: 308. Nov. 9

On Feb. 20, 1797, another such permit was given, this time to a woman.—Ibid., II: 324. On June 18, 1798, the board referred to a committee a petition "against the Indulgence to Hucksters and drawers of Coffee in the Street at the Fly Market."—Ibid., II: 450.

Walter Rutherfurd writes to his son John: "Our Assembly has adjourned to meet at Albany and never more sit here. It all depended on Jacob Morris's vote which the Yorkers were in strong hopes of, this made the Senate equal and the Patroon gave the casting vote. . . ."—Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 173. Dr. Richard Bayley reports to Gov. Jay the condition of the hospital established on Bedloe's Island, and of the docks where "the late malignant fever" is supposed to have originated. He states in part: ". . . The necessary Buildings for the sick on the Island are First. A large and well ventilated House to contain the patients during their sickness. Secondly. A small building to receive the sick, on their first arrival, where they are to undergo a proper cleansing: This might be provided with Bathing-tub, the means of warm-bathing, and necessary cloathing of every kind, Thirdly—a separate building for convalescents, which may be the means not only of saving many lives, but also, in the event, prove highly economical, by greatly expediting the recovery of the sick—Fourthly. A separate building to which the dead should be immediately conveyed.—Fifthly. A wash House to which all the dirty linnen bedding &c. &c. may be immediately sent, . . ." Dec. —

In describing the causes of the fever in different parts of the town the following account is given: . . . "The Docks spoken of in the South Eastern part of the City, which were in so loathsome a state, have been compleated, and generally covered with a sufficient quantity of good Earth, Gravel, or Sand: the grounds have been drained, or where that has not been practicable, the surface has been rendered uniform, with clean earth. The Vacancies under the Stores which were built on piles, have been filled up in a proper manner; . . . Wharves have been kept free from rubbish and filth. In short so much care and industry has been bestowed here, to remove the nuisances which so generally abounded, that where a person was before almost suffocated with intolerable Stenches one may now pass without experiencing the least offensive smell.

"Secondly, let us see what has happened at the South West part of the Town. Between the White Hall and exchange slips, a new Dock has been made, running on an average sixty feet in the river—extending 458 feet in front, and nine feet in depth. If nine square feet are calculated to be equal to a Cart load, it will be found that 24-000 loads were necessary to fill up this Dock, which were accumulating from July 1795 to July 1796. And what has been the nature of the materials employed for this purpose? It is difficult to answer the question, except in very general terms, namely, every thing subject to decay and corruption. . . .

"In the month of April of this year I had frequent occasions to visit White Hall. The stench which already issued from the Docks was highly offensive, and on enquiry I found that the matter which had been employed to make the new ground, consisting principally of the dirt which had been accumulating in the streets during the 1796 Dec. — winter season, and that besides Dogs, Cats, Hogs etc. there had been actually, two Horses buried in the rubbish, which had died in the Spring, in a Small hovel, erected on the margin of this Nuisance. . . .

"I must take notice, also, of some other circumstances relative to many of the Houses about white-hall, . . . namely the state of the ground in the rear of the houses, which, in consequence of the streets being raised, is, in many places, considerably below the ordinary level, and therefore liable to accumulate matters, which in the process of decay, produce vapours which render the air impure, and in confined situations are often the cause of fever—Also, the old and decayed state of many of the houses and the inattention to cleanliness, which is always neglected when people of the poorer kind are much crowded together; . . .

"Before I conclude I must take the liberty of mentioning to your Excellency what has hitherto been the condition of the Hospital, lately established upon Bedlow Island; I am induced to do this in order, . . . that measures will, in consequence, be taken to provide for that Hospital in such manner, as may be necessary, to compleat the establishment, and give it extensive utility.—The necessary alteration and repairs which the Buildings on Bedlows Island required, to render them fit to receive the sick, were not compleated untill the beginning of August. As soon as those was done, application was made to the commissioners of Health, for a supply of necessaries to accommodate the sick; which at this period were sent to the Hospital from White hall, and from several Vessels just arrived from sea. The Commissioners directed the Beds and bedding, which had been used the year before at Bellvue, to be sent to the new Hospital upon Bedlows Island: But unfortunately those articles were in a very filthy state and altogether improper for present use. But as the sick were already at the Hospital, we had no alternative but to select the cleanest of those articles, and use them in that state. . . .

"Under these circumstances, the consequences were such as might naturally be expected, for within eight days from the time, that those articles were brought to the Hospital, those people who had been employed in transporting the bedding from Bele Vue, the nurses who had attended the sick, and the steward of the Home were attacked with fever. The attending Physician Monsieur Bouvier, was also much indisposed for several days. From this distressing situation, however, the Hospital was soon happily relieved by a supply of Beds—bedding, and such clothes as were necessary for frequent changes, and placing the sick in a state of the greatest cleanliness. From the period that this was done, neither nurse, visitor, nor any kind of attendant, were known to be attacked with fever."—Report of Dr. Richard Bayley to Gov. Jay (MS.), preserved with "The Jay Papers," (box No. 2, item No. 9,) N. Y. H. S. See also Minerva, Mr 16, 1797.

5 "Proposals of certain Persons to supply this City with Water by Means of Pipes" (see F 20) are read in common council and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 307. See also D 28.

" The common council contracts with John Morton, proprietor of the Daily Adv., to do the city's printing, at an annual allowance of £35.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 307–8. Morton's contract did not give him a monopoly, as we find that both on Feb. 1, 1796 (q.v.), and in Feb., 1798, Geo. Forman (ibid., II: 419) was doing special printing for the city. On April 2, 1798, Hopkins & Co., also, were paid for printing.—Ibid., II: 430.

" The common council adds £150 to the £800 formerly granted (see S 12) "towards the new Pier in Coenties Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 308.

6 "A report having been in cerculation that the water of the Tea-Water Pump begins to fail, and also, that the proprietor will not allow any more water to be drawn from it than is absolutely necessary for the use of the citizens for tea and drinking; the subscriber begs leave to contradict the said report, and inform the citizens that notwithstanding the extremely dry season, the source of the Tea-Water has not in the least diminished; and so far from his refusing any demand for Water, he hereby offers the citizens a plentiful supply for washing or other family uses. Any order for one or more hogsheads of water, directing the place where to be delivered, sent to the pump, will be immediately attended to. The price of the water is 4s. per hogshead, containing 140 gallons. William C. Thompson."—Minerva, D 6, 1796; De Voe, Market Book, 267.

9 A fire breaks out in one of the stores "on Murray's Wharf, Coffee-house Slip," at the lower end of Wall St. The whole block between the slip and the Fly Market, on the east side of Front St., is consumed.—Minerva, D 9, 1796; Argus, D 9 and 19, 1796. About 40 stores, warehouses, and dwellings were burned, with a loss of about $1,000,000. The progress of the fire was arrested by pulling down the Fish Market.—N. Y. Jour., D 13, 1796; Gaz. of the U. S., D 12, 1796; Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 173. See F 27, 1797. Dec. 9

14 A paragraph headed "Serious Cause of Alarm!" appears in one of the daily papers. It reads: "Citizens of New-York, you are once more called upon to attend to your safety. It is no longer a doubt—it is a fact, that there is a combination of incendiaries in this city, aiming to wrap the whole of it in flames!—The house of Mr. Lewis Ogden, in Pearl-street, has been twice set on fire—the evidence of malicious intention is indubitable—and he has sent his black man, suspected, to prison. Last night an attempt was made to set fire to Mr. Lindsay's house in Greenwich street—The combustibles left for the purpose are preserved as evidence of the fact. Another attempt, we learn, was made last night in Beekman-street. A bed was set on fire under a child, and his cries alarmed his family.

"Rouse, fellow citizens and magistrates—your lives and property are at stake. Double your night-watch—and confine your servants."—Minerva, D 14, 1796.

15 The common council offers a reward of $500 for the discovery of the incendiaries who have been causing numerous fires in the city. It also recommends that the citizens form themselves into companies for a night-watch.—Minerva, D 16, 1796.

16 "Mr. Little's Porter-House in Pine-street" is designated as the meeting-place, on this evening, of the "young gentlemen of this city, who are willing to contribute to the preservation of the Public Safety, at this critical juncture," the object of the meeting being to form an association for the purpose.—*N. 3 The senate and assembly convene at Albany in accordance with resolutions adopted at their previous sessions (see Ja 20, 1795; N 11 and 21, 1796).—Assemb. Jour. (1797), 3; Senate Jour. (1797), 3. See Mr 10.

Presumably, Gov. Jay also took up his residence in Albany at this time (see F 28).

The office of secretary of state, however, was maintained in New York until 1798, when it was transferred to Albany.—Pub. Papers of Geo. Clinton (1899), I: 11.

" The legislature passes "An Act concerning the Appointment and Election of the Charter Officers of the Cities of New-York, Albany, and Hudson, and concerning the Mayor's Court of the City of New-York." It provides that the mayor and other charter officers of N. Y. City shall be appointed annually by "the person administering the government of this state, by and with the advice and consent of the council of appointment." The mayor and recorder of the city of New York, or either of them, is given power "to hold the court of common pleas, called the mayor's court, . . . without the presence of any of the aldermen." But the aldermen are not thereby prevented "from sitting as judges in the said court."—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 1 (Webster, III: 208).

9 The common council approves an estimate of public expenses for the coming year, amounting to £45,077, and directs that a petition be presented to the legislature for permission to raise the money by tax.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 317–18. Cf. Ja 25, 1796; D 22, 1797.

" Mr. Gaine proposes, at a meeting of Trinity vestry, that "the Lotts where the old Fort lately stood" be sold. The subject is referred to the committee of leases; and a resolution is passed "that Mr. Barrow be authorised to have the earth removed from the old Fort to such Place as may be most expedient, and that the Committee of Leases be authorised to let the remaining Lots of the late Negro Burial Ground."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

14 An account is published regarding the character of the lotteries of the United States. While not referring to particular ones in New York City, the general observations do explain their character: ". . . Cities, churches, canals, piers, bridges, academies, Jan. and alms-houses have been raised and supported by this species 14 of taxation. . . . Unfortunately many of those who have undertaken the management of Lotteries in this country, have been either incompetent or indifferent to the completion of the object, or have basely turned them to their own personal emolument, which has cast a shade on one of the easiest, and in our opinion, one of the best modes of promoting a public institution, whilst thousands and tens of thousands of dollars are going yearly out of this state to the Lotteries of other states, and even to those of Europe— . . . Our Lotteries have been distinguished for their punctuality, and resorted to with confidence, by our neighbours! Was one set on foot, for the purpose of erecting a suit of public offices, including a commodious exchange, custom house, post office etc. etc. which would strikingly contribute to its ornament in the eyes of foreigners or strangers, and the conveniency of the inhabitants in general of this oppulent and prospering city, there can be no doubt, but it would meet with particular and merited encouragement."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ja 14, 1797.

Thomas Howard publishes his plans for "Floating Engines," 18 to pump water from the river and convey it in leather hose, the engines to be made by John Bristow, the inventor, of Ratcliff Highway, London.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 18, 1797. The plan is intended as "the most effectual means of extinguishing fire." The hydraulics and hydrostatics of this plan, its operation and cost, were discussed by a correspondent in the Phila. Gaz., referring to an article by Howard in the N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv. of Ja 5; this writer's letter is copied in ibid., Ja 14. Such engines, according to Howard, had been in use in London.—Diary, F 17, citing the Daily Adv.

Gov. Jay, in a message to the assembly, lays before them a 21 report made to him by the commissioners for erecting state prisons in New York and Albany, with their plans and a statement of expenses to Nov. 30 last. He recommends that ground be allotted for the buildings.—Diary, F 7, 1797; Messages from the Governors, II: 387. See F 3.

At this time, the Tontine Coffee House was kept by John Avery. "
—Daily Adv., Ja 21, 1797. It was advertised to let.—Ibid., Ja 24, 1797. In May, it was taken by the proprietor who first occupied it, John Hyde. For the auction terms, see My 31, 1797. It was closed later, for, on Oct. 22, 1799, it was advertised to "reopen" on Oct. 31.—Greenleaf's New Daily Adv., O 22, 1799.

both houses of congress; the result shows that John Adams is the choice for president, and Thomas Jefferson for vice-president.—Gaz. of the U. S., F 9, 1797; McMaster, 307; Winsor, 269, 334.

An act is passed by the legislature "to prevent the bringing in 10 and spreading of Infectious diseases in this State." It provides for the appointment of three "Commissioners of the Health Office of the City of New-York," with power to make and execute orders for cleaning the streets, sewers, cellars, vaults, etc. in this city, and remove all putrid and offensive substances, at the city's expense. They may examine coasting-vessels coming to New York, even if 1797 Feb. 10 not subject to quarantine. After the first of July next, "no person shall dress sheep or lamb skins, or manufacture glue, nor shall any soap-boiler, or tallow-chandler, or starch-maker, or maker or dresser of vellum, carry on any of their processes or operations of their said trades, which produce impure air, or offensive smells, such as trying or melting of fat or tallow, boiling soap, fermenting grain, or other substances for starch, washing, fermenting, or oiling skins, or vellum, at any place within the city of New-York, south of the south side of Grant [Grand] street, and of the south side of the said street continued until it intersects the easterly side of Mulberry-street, and south of the west line, from the intersection aforesaid, continued to Hudson's river. . . ." It is made lawful for the common council "to treat and agree with" such manufacturers for the removal of the fixtures used in their trades.—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 16.

At the solicitation of certain manufacturers of soap and candles, whose works were so situated and carefully managed as neither to endanger health nor be offensive to their neighbours, the act was amended on March 6, exempting them on certain conditions.—See The Case of the Manufacturers of Soap & Candles (pub. by the association of tallow chandlers and soap makers, N. Y., 1797), in N. Y. H. S.

13 Trinity vestry resolves to put "a new Roof on S[t] Pauls Church."—Trin. Min. (MS).

It also resolves "that the Committee of Leases sell at public Auction not more than thirty four Lotts of Ground lying in Barclay, Duane and Greenwich Streets and Jay Street. . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

15 The common council agrees to ask John Halsey "to import from Hamburgh two fire Engines with long Hoses, to convey Water from the River into the interior of the City, of superior Quality and on cheaper Terms than those made in this Country."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 323. See My 20, 1799.

20 The committee on Bellevue Hospital (see S 5, 1796) recommends that it should "be let for one Year from the first day of May next with Condition that if it should be wanted at any time in the course of the Year as an Hospital the same or such part thereof as may be required to be immediately surrendered up to the Corporation for that purpose." The board directs the clerk to advertise for sealed proposals.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 324. It was so advertised the next day.—Daily Adv., F 21, 1797. See, further, Ap 10.

22 Washington's sixty-fifth birthday is celebrated. The Battery guns are fired and several "festive boards" are spread. A ball takes place "at the new spacious and elegant Assembly-Room in the Tontine City Tavern, Broadway." Gardiner Baker exhibits illuminated paintings "from the Museum." The ball was the first held in the new building which later was known as the City Hotel. Delacroix used five rooms at his new restaurant at 112 Broadway (see F 15, 1796) for a dinner which, "for taste, and elegance, we presume, has never been surpassed, if ever equalled in this city." The news report describes the elaborate decorations.—N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., Mr 1, 1797. See My 2.

Commenting on the observance of the day, a newspaper a few days later published the Republican (or anti-Federalist) observation that Washington's birthday was "noticed" in New York this year, "particularly by those who are attached to the ancient Colony system of servility and adulation."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., F 25, 1797.

27 "Venders of Fish" petition the common council "that the Fish Market House, which was pulled down at the time [of the] late Fire [see D 9, 1796], may be rebuilt."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 325. See Mr 27.

28 Among the letters now comprised in the printed collection of Gov. Jay's correspondence and public papers, the first from Albany after that city became the state capital (see Ja 20, 1795; Ja 3, 1797) bears this date.

This letter, addressed to the Rev. Jedediah Morse, thanking him for a copy of his Geography, and expressing pleasure to learn that he will at least endeavor to prepare a history of the American Revolution, presents in general terms a résumé of the documentary and printed sources that should be consulted in the preparation of such a history. He says, among other things:

Feb. 28 "So much of our colonial history as casts light on the Revolution, viewed under its different aspects, and considered in all its anterior relations, will be essential. I think our colonial history is strongly marked by discriminating circumstances relative to our political situation and feelings, at three different periods: 1st, down to the revolution under King William; 2d, from thence to the year 1763; and 3d, from that year to the union of the colonies in 1774. . . .

"As to documents—public and private journals of Congress; the papers mentioned or alluded to in them, such as certain reports of committees; letters to and from civil and military officers, ministers, agents, State governors, etc.; the proceedings of the standing committees for marine, commercial, fiscal, political, and foreign affairs,—all merit attention." Other source material is referred to in the same general way.—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 223–25.

" "Ten proof prints from a painting of Gen. Washington, by John Trumbull, and 40 second rate do. to be sold at the store of Messrs. Todd and Seymour, corner of Pine and Water streets."—Daily Adv., F 28, 1797.

Mar. 3 The plan for "Ricketts's New Theatre," on Greenwich St., usually referred to as a "Circus" (see Mr 16, 1797), which is now under construction, "far surpasses any other of the same description in the United States. Every box commands a full view of the Stage; . . . It is decorated in a style of peculiar neatness, and . . . the patent lamps are to be numerous. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 3, 1797. The building is also referred to as "a New Amphitheatre."—Ibid., Mr 6, 1797. It was circular in form.—Diary, Mr 20, 1797. The location was at Nos. 82–84 Greenwich St. (L. M. R. K., III: 986), as is indicated by an advertisement referring to it as opposite No. 83.—Daily Adv., Jl 21, 1798. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 423. For further descrip., after alterations, see F 19, 1799. The opening of "Ricketts's New Circus" was on March 16, 1797 (q. v.).

4 The administration of John Adams begins.—Winsor, VII: 269, 334. See F 8.

" The following item of news is published regarding a "Philosophical Experiment of a Parachute":—"Mr. Blanchard has just now made a new solid Air Balloon, which neither stones nor snow balls can destroy, as they did the former, at the moment of departure. This tri-coloured Balloon, loaded with a parachute and several quadrupeds, will ascend from the Ball Alley [see Ag 19, 1796] the Day 4th March. . . . This large Balloon with 1200 ells of taffety, destined to the 46th ascension of Mr. Blanchard, is likewise finished and will be exposed to public view in a few days."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 4, 1797. "Mr. Blanchard's miniature balloon had a beautiful ascension, but the parachute, in its descension, did not prove sufficiently strong to let the quadrupeds down with safety, for one of them was killed."—Ibid., Mr 6, 1797.

9 "We hear that the model of a machine for supplying this city with water, now building by Messrs Newton and Taylor [see Mr 18] in the city-hall, will in a few days be ready for inspection."—Minerva, Mr 9, 1797; N. Y. Jour., Mr 11, 1797.

10 The legislature passes an act for erecting at Albany a building for the safe keeping of the state records. This also provides that if the governor does not convene the legislature, by proclamation, between the first Monday in July and the first Tuesday in January, in any year, it shall meet on the latter date at the place to which it has adjourned or, if no place has been chosen, at Albany.—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 31. See Ja 2, 1798.

13 Philip Freneau and Alexander Menut establish a tri-weekly paper called The Time Piece; and Literary Companion.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 500; Early Newspapers, II: 429. For the simplified title, see S 15.

" The common council orders "that the Committee on the erection of the new Watch House at the head of Chatham Street [see O 17, 1796] take order for procuring a small alarm Bell for that Building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 329.

16 "Ricketts's New Circus, Greenwich-street" (see Mr 3), is opened with "A Grand Display of Horsemanship, By Messrs. J. B. Ricketts, F. Ricketts, Masters Hutchins & Franklin—Clown by Mr. Franklin, lately from the Royal Circus, London." The programme included also songs, duets, a "new Comic Dance, called the Peasant of the Alps," and a pantomime called "The Old Soldier, or the Two Thieves." Admission: "Lower Boxes 8s.—Upper Boxes 6s—Pitt 4s."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv.. Mr 16 and 1797 Mar. 16 17, 1797. It was advertised to open March 8, but could not, owing to the inclemency of the weather, "which prevented the arrival of his horses."—Ibid., Mr 8, 1797. The nights of performance were Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.—Time-Piece, Ap 5, 1797. The character of the performance is best described in the advertisement of one given in June for Mr. Ricketts's benefit.—Ibid., Je 28, 1797.

17 The legislature passes "An Act making further provision for building the State Prison in the city of New-York." This authorises the commissioners "to purchase one acre of land on the south side and another acre of land on the north side of the land already purchased by them," and appropriates for their use $75,000 to pay for the additional land and "to compleat the said building so far at least as to be fit for the reception of prisoners as soon as possible."—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 41. The prison was opened on Nov. 28 (q.v.). See also Ap 17.

A survey of the state prison lots, made in this year, is in the Bancker collection (box G-M, folder "Greenwich Village"), in N. Y. P. L.

18 Joseph Newton and B. Taylor advertise that "Having completed their Model of a Set of Works for supplying this City with fresh Water" (see Mr 9), they will, "towards reimbursing the expence they have been at, commence exhibiting them on Tuesday next [Mr 21], in the great Court Room in the City Hall, which will be open every day from ten till one, and from three till six, to companies of not more than ten persons, at once, at half-a-dollar each."—Daily Adv., Mr 18, 1797; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 18, 1797. See My 15.

20 The legislature having provided that the appointment of charter officers for New York, Albany, and Hudson should be made annually at any time during the sessions of the legislature, and Gov. Jay, by consent of the council of appointment, having reappointed the mayor, sheriff, and coroner of New York during the present session of the legislature which is now convened at Albany, the mayor, sheriff, and coroner now take their oaths of office in the presence of the common council at the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 330. In the previous year, this ceremony was performed before the governor at the government house on Oct. 14.—Ibid., II: 292.

" Casimir Th. Goerck, city surveyor, writes to the mayor that, "Having some Reason to believe that a general Map of this City would be useful to the Corporation," he submits a statement of a plan which he requests the mayor to present to the common council. His proposal is as follows:

"A general and accurate Map of the City of New York, from the Battery easterly as fare as the City is laid out into Streets and Lots; Westerly and Southerly to the permanent Line of the extremity of the Grants, and designating the several public Slips open in as fare as the Corporation will direct. The said Map, to ascertain the different Hights from high Water Mark to the present Wall Plates at every Slip and Street, at both Rivers, and from thence at every Intersection of the different Streets.

"The Ascents and Descents will apear into said Map not allone by shadowing, but likewise in Cyphers, at the different Intersections of the Streets.

"A compleat Field Book to be made of the difference of the Levels of each Street, distances, etc.

"It is estimated that the above Work, cannot be performed in a Satisfactory manner for less than £600.

"Casimir Th. Goerck City Surveyor"

—From original letter and enclosure (in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read 20th March 1797 & referred to the Street Comtee;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 331. See, further, Ap 11 and O 16.

27 The common council resolves that a new fish market be built on the site of the old (see F 27), and that it shall "be extended from the south side of Front Street to the Door of the House occupied by John C. Frecke that a proper Drain be laid the distance just mentioned and that the Market be built of Brick & covered in the same manner as the Upper Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 332–33. On June 5, payment of £500 was made "towards the erection of a New Fish Market."—Ibid., II: 355. On Aug. 14, £600 more.—Ibid., II: 376. On Sept. 29, £266:6:6.

Mar. 30 The legislature passes "An Act for the relief of John B. Coles and to provide for the laying out of new roads." This recites that, although Coles "hath erected a bridge across Harlem river" (see S 27 and N 4, 1796), and a road has been laid out from said bridge to East Chester, yet the damages to the persons through whose land the road is laid are not paid, part of it is not opened, and Coles has expended a considerable sum in making, clearing, and repairing the said road. The law directs that the road be immediately declared a public highway even though the damages are not paid, that Coles and his assigns at their own expense cause the road to be cleared and properly made, and that they may hereafter, for 30 years, charge an additional toll for passing over the bridge, not exceeding 50% above the present toll.—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 63. See N 19, 1798 and Jl 8, 1799.

" The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishment and Support of a Lazaretto."—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 67 (Webster, III: 295). This was repealed by "An Act to provide against infectious and pestilential Diseases," passed March 30, 1798.—Ibid. (1798), chap. 65 (Webster, III: 388).

" The legislature grants £500 to Columbia College for the preservation and care of its anatomical museum.—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 65.

31 "The Play-House shut up, in Consequence of a Dispute among the Managers. It began the 29th, and much Confusion that Night, occasioned by Reason of an agreement that Mrs. Hallam should not be introduced on the Stage owing to her bad Conduct."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 164. See Ap 1.

Apr. 1 "The Managers of the Theatre ordered the Bills for Monday, leaving out Mr. Hodgkenson's Name."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 164. This dispute led to the issue of Narrative of his Connection with the Old American Company from September, 1792, to March, 1797, by John Hodgkinson, New York, 1797.—Ibid., II: 164 (footnote). Dunlap says: "After long disputes between Hallam and Hodgkinson, matters were finally settled in May, and [William] Dunlap entered upon his managerial duties."—Dunlap, op. cit., I: 287–90.

3 The legislature amends "An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Fires, and to regulate Buildings in the City of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1797), chap. 99 (Webster, III: 312).

4 The common council refers to the street committee "An Application of the Corporation of Trinity Church for a Regulation of a Street lately laid out of 90 feet wide in the vicinity of Mr Lispenards."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 333. ("Hudson Street.")

5 A list is prepared of the proprietors, etc., on Old Slip from Water to Front St., showing measurements of lots.—From the original MS., item No. 1805 from Holden sale, filed with "N. Y. MSS. 1761–1800," N. Y. H. S.

6 "The gentlemen subscribers to the new Balloon," to the number of 169, are informed by a published notice that "from this day Aerostatic Experiments will be exhibited in the enclosed ground of the Ball Alley, No. 247 Broadway."—Diary, Ap 6, 1797.

10 No persons having offered to lease Bellevue Hospital and the land around it, the committee (see F 20) informs the common council "that Smith Fisher the present Occupant would continue thereon on such reasonable Rent as the Board should set," and keep it in good order for a year from May 1; also "that if it should be wanted at any time in the Course of the Year as an Hospital the same or such part thereof as may be required for that purpose to be immediately surrendered when required." The board agrees to his continuing for a year from April 1, at a rental of £40.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 335–36. On May 1, the city paid for work and supplies at Bellevue.—Ibid., II: 343. See My 30.

" The common council decides (see My 16, 1796) to purchase for £1,800 "A Piece of Ground containing about 90 Lots parcel of the Land of Willm S Smith bounded on the Road leading from the Bowery Lane at the two Mile Stone to Greenwich," and to set it apart "for a public buryal Ground." (This was the "Potters-field.")—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 336, 351. The road here described was the Sand Hill Road, or Greenwich Lane, the eastern end of which was later known as Art St. and then Astor Place, and the part of which west of Broadway was closed in 1825–6.—See L. M. R. K., III: 1001, under "Greenwich Lane." The land above described became the site of Washington Square (see Je 19, 1826).—L. M. R. K., III: 972. See Ap 24; My 29, 1797.

11 Joseph Fr. Mangin, in response to an application from "a member of the Corporation" asking him to state the conditions

1797 Apr. 11 on which he will "deliver the regulating plan of the city," replies as follows in a letter to the common council:

"I shall make a particular map of the city with the position of all the houses, and lots, the number marked on, a field boock containing the names of the owners and of the Streets, Squares, warfs and wards, the levelling of the whole city will be added to the map and included in the field boock; the wrong levels which exist and the way to correct them in the future; the exact calculation of the moving of the Terreins [terrains] in the part of the city which is not still built, to avoid useless expences and the means to supply the city with waters, as equally as possible in all the Streets, by the Shortest and less expensif directions.

"The Map which shall be laid before the Corporation shall not be less than Six feets Square.

"Each member shall have a map about three feet Square.

"in order to make this map I cannot use of the plans already made to avoid the errors and mistakes

"I shall warrant the precision and exactness in all the work which may be then Verified by inspectors

"In order of executing this work with all the care possible, It requires at least two years. according to this I will demand Three Thousand dollars as much for myself as for the workmen wanted. . . . I demand only this sum because I reserve for myself the right of raising a Subscription in which I shall give a Share to the corporation for indemnifying it of the Three Thousand dollars which shall be advanced to me for my expenses.

"I shall furnish each of the Subscribers with a map Three feet Square with the field boock containing all the explainations wanted. . . .

C. C.* (1784–1831), II: 337. He was succeeded by Richard Harison on March 12, 1798 (q.v.).

" "On the application of the Inspectors of the State Prison," the common council orders "that the western Moiety of the Bridewell be assigned for the confinemt of the State Prisoners until the State Prison be erected & ready to receive them."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 338.

In their report to the legislature on Jan. 17, 1798 (q.v.), the inspectors stated that they had expended $2,780.47 in fitting up the bridewell, "so as to make it in their opinion, sufficiently secure," and that in June, 1797, "the convicts were removed, nearly all of whom were in want of clothes, which were supplied them, their rooms, &c. were kept clean, and their provision served them in as decent and regular manner, as circumstances would admit."—Assemb. Jour. (1798), 83; N. Y. Jour. & Patriotic Reg., F 7, 1798. On Jan. 15, 1799, the inspectors reported that, after all accounts for repairing the bridewell had been settled, they found the total amount was $3,316.25 instead of $2,780.47.—Assemb. Jour. (1799), 84.

" The common council orders "that the Common Council Chamber be assigned for holding the Courts for the trial of Causes of Ten Pounds & under."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 338. See, further, Ag 28, O 16, O 30. The expenses of this court were paid by the city.—See ibid., II: 408, 419.

18 The committee of repairs of Trinity is asked to "take Order for painting the Fences adjoining to the Cemetery of Trinity Church and the Cornish [sic] of said Church—and that they provide 500 Plank and 500 Boards. . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

20 Jacob Adams, in a petition to the common council, states that he "hath established two Packets between the Ports of Boston and New York," which have "frequented the Coffee House Slip ever since the month of August last." Being informed that "the Corporation have prohibited all vessels, excepting Market Boats and Wood Boats, from frequenting said Slip," he asks that he may continue to bring his packets into the slip, as the most convenient place for the public.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. No action on this petition appears in the minutes. Apr. 20

Political meetings are held at Gautier's Assembly Room in William St., at Richard Varian's in the Bowery (the Bull's Head Tavern), and at Hunter's Hotel (69 Broadway).—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., Ap 22, 1797; Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 347. By Nov. 13, 1799, Hunter had been succeeded by John Lovett as proprietor of the popular tavern at 69 Broadway.—Daily Adv., N 13, 1799. See also Com. Adv., F 6, 1801. 22

"On a representation by the Inspectors of the State Prison," the common council orders "that four additional Watchmen be employed two of them every Night at the Goal 'till the State Prisoners can be removed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 339. 24

The common council refers to a committee "A Memorial of the Proprietors of Ground in the vicinity of the Ground lately purchased [see Ap 10] by the Bd for a public burying Ground, praying that it may not be appropriated to that use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 339. This protest is made by inhabitants of the Seventh Ward, whose objection is that the ground is "so near the City and is so contiguous to the publick roads leading from the East to the West part of the Town;" also that the field "lies in the neighborhood of a number of Citizens who have at great expense erected dwellings on the adjacent lots for the health and accommodation of their families during the summer season, and who, if the above design be carried into execution, must either abandon their seats or submit to the disagreeable sensations arising from an unavoidable view of and close situation to a burial place of this description destined for the victims of contagion." They also point out "that, from the rapid Increase of Building that is daily taking place both in the suburbs of the City and on the Ground surrounding the field alluded to, it is certain that in the course of a few years the afore-mentioned field will be drawn within the precincts of the City." Among the 57 signers of this memorial are the names of Tredwell Jackson, Nich. Low, Alexander Hamilton, Richard Harison, Ph. Livingston, Henry Rogers, Egbt Benson, Arch. Gracie, Chas. Ludlow, Isaac L. Kip, Thos. Ludlow, Gulian Verplanck, John Wilkes, James Cumming, Cary Ludlow, Leon. Bleecker, etc.—From the original MS., in file No. 5, in city clerk's record-room. On May 15, the committee's report described another piece of ground which the petitioners were willing to buy and present to the city, but the mayor's casting-vote decided against it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 348–49. On June 26, Jacob Blackwell offered "to give in exchange a greater [amount] of Land for that lately purchased for a burying Ground." Consideration postponed.—Ibid., II: 359. See also ibid., II: 368. Another petition for substituting other land was rejected on Aug. 28.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 380. See, further, My 29. "

The board also appoints a committee "to report Regulations for the Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 343. For regulations at the first almshouse, see Mr 3, 1736.

Trinity Church leases the Richmond Hill estate to Aaron Burr for 69 years.—Liber Deeds (register's office), LXV: 512. The property had previously been leased to Abraham Mortier (see My 1, 1767). The fee always remained in Trinity Church. See a description of Mortier's lease of the Richmond Hill property (which for 99 years was part of "Old John's land," comprising 26 acres, 3 roods, and 36 perches), among the Bancker papers, in N. Y. P. L.; mentioned in Vol. I, p. 359 (q.v.). See also descrip. of Pl 55-a, I: 416–17. "

My 1 Bergh."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 343. See Ag 21.

2 Joseph Dellinger, proprietor of a "Portable Camera Obscura," who has been "repeatedly applied to by persons to place the same upon the Battery for the purpose of taking the Views of the Country adjacent thereto," has not thought proper to do so without permission from the common council. He now petitions for it. —From original petition in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "May 10th 1797 rejected." The petition is not entered in the M. C. C.

" Joseph Delacroix (see F 22) advertises his "Ice-House, No. 112 Broadway," where he furnishes ice cream. "The House and Garden will be open from 10 o'clock in the morning till 10 at night. . . ."—Daily Adv., My 3, 1797. In 1798 (q.v., Ag 2), he named this house the "Ice House Garden," after first calling it "Vauxhall" (see My 20).

3 The 9¼ acres of land on the east side of Greenwich Lane, "commonly called the Race ground," are advertised for sale. It is within "a few hundred yards of the flats of Messrs Hammond, Turnbull and Hart." The ground has Greenwich Lane in front, Union Road in the rear, and the land of Mr. Rogers on each side.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 3, 1797.

8 James Rivington, in a private letter to Mr. Banyan, writes from New York: "Doom'd as I am, at an advanced age of life, to a close confinement for debts of large amount on behalf of others, I have many times applied for payment of a small debt due to me from the worthy gentlemen composing the Albany Library Society. . . . Little did I apprehend I should be obliged to address you in a state of great exigence from the common Jail of a City in which I have passed upwards of six and thirty happy years and am now reduced to real penury."—From printed transcript of the original in Henkels' catalogue (Phila.) of a sale of autograph letters, etc., on Jl 1, 1920.

10 The "United States" (see Mr 27, 1794), the first naval vessel built under the Constitution, is launched at Philadelphia before a large assembly.—McMaster, Hist. of People of the U. S., II: 323–24, citing New World, My 11, 1797.

" The common council rejects a petition asking "for the use of part of the Lot whereon the Laboratory is erected at the Battery on the Corner of Pearl & State Streets," and directs that the ground "be put in fence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 346. Just prior to and soon after the British capture of New York (see Jl 13 and O 28, 1776), there was a laboratory near the liberty-pole. The uses to which this building was put are not revealed in the records. See also Je 29, 1798.

" The "Widow Dunlap & Robt Simmons," in a petition to the common council, state that they "have lost in the front of John Street formerly Golden hill forty one feet fronting on said John street with six feet deep in order to widin said street that they have not received any compensation what ever for the same altho their Neighbers have been paid for their ground they have lost on said street . . . that they are heavily assessed and taxed for the payment of said compensation to their neighbors." They ask relief.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "rejected;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 346. See also My 29.

11 The following "Communication" is published: "Blanchard [the balloonist] has at last taken his flight—not in the air, as he had proposed, but on dry land. He made his exit with his family about the first instant; whither, we cannot tell. All hopes of an ascension, however, are at an end; and this circumstance is a proof that his conduct towards Mr. Baker lost him the confidence of the citizens."—Diary, My 11, 1797.

15 The common council opens "the sealed Proposals delivered into the Clerks Office agreable to notification in the News Papers for supplying this City with Water." They are from Taylor & Newton (see Mr 18), Hugh S. McClennan, Peter Banner, William Harris, Nicholas J. Roosevelt (see D 3, 1798), John Page, and Christopher Colles. Consideration of them is referred to the committee "on the Proposals of Joseph Brown & his Associates" (see D 28, 1796). —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 347. See F 12, 1798.

" Sebastian Bauman, lieut.-colonel commandant of the "Regiment of Artillery," resigns his commission, because of the appointment of a junior officer, Hughes, as brigadier-general. On April 22, all the other officers of the regiment had resigned because they saw no prospect of rising beyond lieut.-colonel. The entire correspondence, general orders, memorials to Gov. Jay and his replies, and other papers in the case since Dec., 1795, were pub'd in a pamphlet entitled A Statement Explanatory of the Resignation of the Officers of the Regiment of Artillery, of the City & County of New-York (1797). On June 12, 1798, Edward Bardin announced his intention of keeping a "Boarding and Lodging House" there.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 12, 1798. The next year, Michael Little moved from Pine St. into it.—Daily Adv., My 14, 1799. He called it "Little's Hotel." His advertisement, dated June 19, said that "a Book" was kept there "for taking seats in the Swift Sure."—Porcupine's Gaz., Je 21, 1799. It was the meeting-place of the "New York Rangers."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 18, 1799. On Aug. 31, 1802, Mrs. Little became its proprietor.—Am. Citizen, S 1, 1802. On Oct. 11 of this year (q.v.), the long-room of this tavern was destroyed by fire. In December, it was advertised for rent from May 1, 1803.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 21, 1802. David Ross became the lessee.—Ibid., My 6, 1803. Little then became manager of Mechanic Hall, at n. w. cor. of Broadway and Park Place.—City Directory. In 1806, P. L. Duport opened in the Broad St. house a school for dancing, limited to forty pupils. He refers to the house as "Ross' Hotel."—People's Friend, O 10, 1806. In 1809, it was called Kent's Hotel.—N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1841), 462.

See also Mag. of Am. Hist. (1879), III: 262, citing a mention of Little's Coffee House by Brillât-Savarin, the gastronome, author of La Physiologie du Gout, in which an account is given of this "Café-taverne," where turtle soup and "welch-rabbit" were served.

On this day, Dr. Anderson went "to Bellevue, now converted into a house of Entertainment."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 76. See My 30. 25

Another "Vauxhall" is opened, the third resort of that name in different parts of the city up to this time. For the former ones, see L. M. R. K., III: 981. It is advertised as follows: "New Vauxhall Gardens. Pearl-street, no 5, opposite the Menage, two doors from the Battery. Peter Thorn . . . begs . . . patronage, for a house and garden he has just set up in the above mentioned place, under the name of Apollo's Garden, . . . Ice Cream, Cakes, Punch, and any Liquors; as also warm milk from the cow every morning. There are several rooms in the house for separate apartments. 26

"The Garden is elegantly set up with a quantity of boxes lighted with lamps in a fine & new stile, will be opened on Thursday evening next, 25th May."—Daily Adv., My 26, 1797. For the Fourth of July, Thorn (or Thorin) announced that he would have "a regular Band of Music and Fire Works."—Ibid., Jl 3, 1797. On July 25, he advertised it for sale, with an ice-house nearly full of ice.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 25, 1797. See Je 12, 1798.

29 "The Panorama, in this city, is to be opened this evening, for the first time. This beautiful invention in optical philosophy has been so far improved by M^r Baker as now to exhibit views by artificial light, the result of his own experience.—Among other views in the Panorama, is one of an original painting of the city and harbour of Charleston (S. C.) with James & Sullivan's Islands."—Time-Piece, My 29, 1797. The panorama was at 222 Greenwich St.—Daily Adv., S 27, 1797. A panorama had been exhibited in New York in 1795 (q. v.).

" The common council resolves that "the Ground commonly called the Potters field" (see Ag 4, S 15, and O 16, 1794; and Ja 11, 1796) be abandoned as a cemetery, and directs the land committee "to take order for preparing the Ground lately purchased as a burying Ground [see Ap 10 and 24] & for the erection of a House for the Superintend^t."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 351. The old pottersfield was at Madison Sq.; the new one at Washington Sq.—L. M. R. K., III: 970, 972. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 465, and 23*d Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 166–73. See N 6. The pottersfield at Washington Sq. was abandoned in 1825 (q. v., Ja 31).

" The common council grants a petition of Geo. Doolett (architect—see Je 22) who says: "In commencing the building of a new York Banking house, I feel a very great necessity to obtain as considerable a part of Wall Street, & William St., oposite to the lot of ground intended for said Bank, with privilege to erect a pale fence round the same; as to you may appear right."—From the original letter in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room. A marginal note next to the entry in the minutes reads: "Bank of New York & Branck Bank of United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 351. Doubtless the use of the streets was desired for the storing of building materials. See Je 13 and 22. See also Pl. 72-b, Vol. I.

" Steps are taken to install a sewage system in the Park area. The common council orders that the street committee "cause a Survey to be made of Chambers Street and a Plan of the intended Common Sewer from the Alms House Gaol & Bridewell to Hudsons River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 352, 370. A plan was approved on July 31, and orders given for building the sewer by contract.—Ibid., II: 373. On Aug. 5, proposals were advertised for.—Daily Adv., Ag 5, 1797. Thomas Whytlaw was the lowest bidder, and on Aug. 21 the board ordered that the committee agree with him, taking a bond with good security.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 378, 379. On Sept. 4, when the work was begun, an inspector was appointed, and the board advanced $1,000 "towards the new Alms House Drain."—Ibid., II: 382. On Oct. 11, $1,000 more; Oct. 17, $1,000; Oct. 23, $500.—Ibid., II: 395, 398, 400. On Oct. 23, the board ordered that two carts be employed "to fill up the Street over the Sewer from the Alms House to the River."—Ibid., II: 400. On Oct. 30, $1,000 more was paid.—Ibid., II: 402. On Nov. 9, the sewer was nearing completion, the board then ordering that the committee contract for constructing necessary drains from the three buildings.—Ibid., II: 405. On Nov. 27, $1,000 was paid towards the sewer, and on Dec. 22, £208:10:9 towards "the Sewers & Drains at the Alms H^s."—Ibid., II: 409, 414.

" Wm. Bowne, in a petition to the common council dated May 18, 1796, relates that, in 1791, he contributed $150 "toward the expense of purchasing a House & Lot in Cliff Street in order to lay open said street. . . ." He is now taxed over £20 "toward defraying the expence of encreasing the width of Golden Hill," and this he "cannot view as of any material advantage to him." He asks "reasonable" relief.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Petition of W^m Bowne ag^t the assessm^t of John Street.—read May 29^th 1797 & rejected." The common council decides that it can give "no Relief in the Premisses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 352. See also My 10.

" The common council passes favourably upon a petition from purchasers of lots in the Common Lands regarding making passable those roads which are "most necessary & immediately required."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 349, 353.

30 Abel S. Fisher announces that he has rented "Belle-vue," and opened it as a "Tea Garden and Bathing House." The bathing-house furnishes warm and cold, salt and fresh, baths.—Daily Adv., My 30, 1797. See also My 25.

June — As the money granted by the legislature for the erection of a new wing to Columbia College (see Ap 11, 1792 and F 25, 1795) has all been spent, and as no further aid has been granted for the completion of the work, the trustees are obliged to suspend building operations and a committee is directed to sell the perishable building materials which remain on hand.—Moore, Hist. Sketch of Columbia College, 73–74.

1 Moses Oakley, formerly of the "Bloomingdale Inn and Farm" (see Ap 12), adveritses that he will open on June 2, at "his new and pleasant situation," at Bloomingdale, "five and a half miles from New York."—Daily Adv., Je 1, 1797; see, further, N. Y. Gaz., My 26, 1802. On Feb. 26, 1805, the "Sun Tavern" (apparently the same place), "formerly the property of David Oakley, about five miles from the city . . ., now occupied by Abraham G. Hammond," was advertised for sale.—Morn. Chron., F 26, 1805.

13 The foundation-stone of the "United States Branch Bank" is laid by the president, Cornelius Ray, at No. 38 Wall St. Moore and Robinson are the master-builders.—Daily Adv., Je 15, 1797. The site was the present 52 Wall St.—Hardenbrook, Financial N. Y., 143. See A. Pl. 12-b, Vol. III.

" The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church pass a resolution that the new church (see Je 23, 1795) have "the front of 60 feet on Rutgers Street, the side of 80 feet on Henry Street, and 15 feet back from both streets."—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. The corner-stone was laid soon after this, on the land donated by Henry Rutgers. The church was opened May 13, 1798 (q. v.).—Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers, 268.

19 Complaint having been made on May 29 that the tan-yard of John R. Livingston and others, near the Fresh Water Pond, "lies open with the Fats [vats] exposed to the great Danger of the Children & others passing through the same," an ordinance is adopted requiring Livingston "to cause the said Tan Yard to be enclosed with a good Fence & the Tan Vats to be filled up with good wholesome Earth (unless immediate Use is made thereof in the tanning Business) by the first day of Aug^t next under the Penalty of £100."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 352, 356. In compliance with this resolution, a written order, signed by Robt. Benson, clerk, was served on Livingston the same day. From this it appears that "all the Fence" there had been removed, and that the vats were "full of stagnant Water."—See the original order (a copy of which was served) in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room.

" A petition is presented to the common council from inhabitants of the Sixth Ward, most of whom "live Adjacent to a pond at the foot of what is Commonly Called pot-baker's hill" (see L. M. R. K., III: 967). The stagnant waters of this pond make it a public nuisance, and dangerous to health. "The Drean that formerly led from it into the Fresh-water-pond being filled up a number of Dead animals being thrown into it now in a State of putrefaction together with a pernicious matter runing from a Glue Manufactory Causes your petitioners to be Apprehensive that if left as at present during the hot Season it may prove fatal to the Health of the Inhabitance that live near the Same. . . ."—From the original MS., in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Ord^ce passed Jun. 19^th 1797." The ordinance is "for filling all the low & sunken Lots on the southwest side of Magazine Street by the first day of Sept^r next under the penalty of £50 each Lot."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 356.

President of said Bank, and Mr. George Doolett, the architect, in presence of the Directors and a number of citizens. It is said the Banks will be inclosed by the ensuing fall—They go on with spirit and rapidity."—Minerva, Je 24, 1797. The location was the north-east corner.—See Pl. 72, Vol. I. There was previously a dwelling-house on this corner, which Nathaniel Marston left to his son John on Feb. 8, 1776. It was sold to Wm. Constable, who in turn sold it to the Bank in 1796.—Abstracts of Wills, IX: 50, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1900). For earlier history of the Bank of N. Y., see Je 9, 1784. 25 The first English Lutheran church in America is organized by the Lutheran minister, George Strebeck. A church was erected for this congregation on Pearl St., opposite City Hall Place. Within four years, these quarters became too small, and a large stone church was built on the corner of Mott and Park Sts., and called "English Lutheran Church Zion."—Kretzmann, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 31; cf. Greenleaf, 81. 26 The following petition is made to the common council: "We the undersigned Inhabitants for ourselves and others of our fellow Citizens who are desirous of hearing a public Oration in commemoration of our National Independence delivered by Mr Elihu Palmer on the ensuing Anniversary request that the Common Council will be pleased to consent to the large Court Room in the City hall being made use of on that occasion." It carries ten signatures, including those of Philip Freneau, John Lamb, Jr., and Peter R. Maverick.—From the original in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "read June 26th 1797 & rejected." The brief entry in the minutes in reference to this petition has a marginal note, next to Palmer's name, which reads: "An Infidel."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 359. The oration which Palmer desired to deliver in the city hall was given elsewhere, for it was published in 1797, as delivered on July 4, its title being An Enquiry relative to the moral & political improvement of the human species. Palmer was a rationalistic philosopher, a graduate of Dartmouth College (1787), and head of the "Columbian Illuminati," a deistical company in N. Y., established in 1801, the aim of which was to promote "moral science" against religious and political imposture.—M'Clintock & Strong, Cyc. of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Lit. (1891), VII: 596. He was an enthusiastic advocate of the doctrines of Paine, Volney, Barlow, Condorcet, and Godwin. His thought was noble, and his diction classic. His learning and style of address were the more remarkable in that he was totally blind. Recollections of him are given by Dr. Francis in Old New York (1866), 134–37.

28 A fire, back of the new Lutheran church in Magazine St., destroys Arcularius's tannery, the dwelling house of Mr. Lorillard, and the brewery of Isaac Coulthard.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 30, 1797.

July — T. Kirk begins to publish the American Moral and Sentimental Magazine. The publication continued until May, 1798.—Sabin, item No. 1160; Ford, Check-List of Am. Mag. Printed in the 18th Cent., 11. This magazine is now extremely scarce.

July 3 A riot occurs "at a place called Topsail Town, near the Exchange." With the assistance of the civil officers, "a fair fleet of about 20 sail . . . got under way . . . and . . . arrived safe into their destined harbour—Bridewell."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 3, 1797. This appears to have been the location formerly known as "Canvass Town."—See Ag 26, 1785.

" The mayor lays before the common council a letter received from the governor, which states "that the Commissioners appointed to procure Arms Ammunition & other military Stores" have "fixed on a Piece of the Common Lands at the junction of the Post & Blooming Dale Roads part of which hath been for some time used as a public burying Ground," and that the governor has "signified to the Commissioners his approbation of their erecting the necessary Buildings at that Place for military Stores provided this Board should consent to grant to the State as much of the said Ground as might be requisite." The board decides at once to grant this piece of ground to the people of the state "for the purpose afores[d] reserving such part as hath been used for the interment of the Dead & a convenient Piece for a Passage thereto from the Post Road," and orders that the clerk prepare the grant.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 365. On July 12, the board ordered that the grant be sealed, and signed by the mayor.—Ibid., II: 367.

13 Pres. Adams appoints three envoys "to proceed to France and endeavor to renew the relations which had been so rudely broken by the Directory."—Treaties and conventions concluded between U. S. and other powers (1873), 996. The Directory had recalled the French minister to this country, and would not receive our new minister, Pinckney, when he arrived to succeed Monroe. Other acts of the Directory served to make every American ship "a good prize" for the French.—Ibid., 993–95. The treatment of these envoys, as revealed in the "X Y Z" dispatches (see Ap 3, 1798), well nigh led to war with France (see Ap 30, Je 8, 13, and 28, 1798).

14 In a petition to the legislature for the grant of a water-lot opposite his farm, to build a dock, Philip J. Livingston, of Throgs Neck, Westchester Co., states that he has planted on his farm a nursery of fruit-trees, more than 20 acres in extent, to supply the city of New York with fruit.—Cal. Land Papers, 1002.

15 E. Tisdale writes to the mayor and aldermen stating that he has it "in contemplation to publish an Engraved Portrait of Columbus," and requesting permission "to make a Copy of the Picture in Federal Hall," which he believes "is the only Likeness extant of that great man."—From the original letter in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room. This was the picture presented to "the house of assembly" of this state by Mrs. Farmer on March 12, 1784 (q.v.).

18 "The thoughts of Engraving have occupied my mind today; I could not help looking back to the pleasures of that art, like the Israelites to the flesh-pots of Egypt.—I had even resolv'd to indulge myself now and then in engraving on wood, and cut several patterns for tools which I propos'd to have made, but the dread of being 'unstable as water' deterred me, and I laid by the patterns."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1797 (MS.), 107.

26 Brig. Gen. Hughes, having been notified that the president of the United States would be in the city on Jl 27, gives orders for the uniform companies of grenadiers, infantry, horse, and artillery, to assemble at 9 o'clock in the morning opposite Trinity Church to be in readiness to receive him. Officers of militia who are not on duty are to assemble in uniform at Hunter's Hotel. Lt. Col. Morton is directed "to wait on the President at or near Paules Hook, and attend him to the city."—Porcupine's Gaz. (Phila.), Jl 28, 1797.

29 Dr. Anderson writes: "I have now but little business of the 1797 July 29 medical kind to attend, and have therefore devoted some of my time to engraving—this latter kind of employment has not as yet yielded any profit, for I have only been making experiments and practicing.—The beautifull specimens of Bewick's work have been the means of stimulating me to improve in the art of Engraving on wood."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1797 (MS.), 112.

31 Mulberry St. is extended, so that the whole street from Chatham (Park Row) to Bayard St. is now named Mulberry St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 372. The northern part had hitherto been called Ryndert St.—L. M. R. K., III: 1009.

" The inhabitants near the corporation dock, in a petition to the common council, complain of "the number of Hay-Boats landing collectively" there, "discommoding the Market, and Wood-Boats and other Vessels, which resort in great Numbers to said Wharf and Bason, (being adjacent to the Market)." The masters and owners of these vessels "cannot unload across said hay-Boats." The petitioners recommend "the spacious Wharf and Bason near Mr Tenbrook's, for the more convenient accommodation of said Hay-Boats, it being a place of little resort, and suitable for that purpose."—From the original petition, in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Ordce passed." The ordinance prohibits the landing of hay at the corporation dock after Aug 15.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 373.

July and Aug. Robert Gilmor, of Baltimore, visits New York, and makes notes and pen sketches of places and events. He refers to the Battery as "the grand public promenade of the ladies," and to the Tontine Coffee House as "the house where the merchants & indeed every body almost assemble at night and noon to hear what is going on, and see each other." Gilmor's journey extended to Boston, and included New York and Philadelphia on his way home. His notes, with 19 pen-and-ink drawings of places visited, are in the Boston Public Library. The drawings of New York interest are:

"View of New York taken on the road to Utrecht baths, that leads through the narrows."

"View of Broadway (New York) from the Battery."

"View of the Governors house at New York."

The manuscript is printed, and the drawings are reproduced, in the Boston Pub. Library Bulletin for April, 1892, Vol. XI, No. 1 (whole No. 88), with biographical notes.

Aug. — The Duc de la Rochefoucault Liancourt thus describes the city: "New York is, next to Philadelphia, the largest and best town in the United States. These two cities rival each other almost in every respect. Philadelphia has hitherto had the advantage, but from the fine situation of New York there is reason to expect that sooner or later it will gain the superiority. [See 1790.]

"It is calculated that this city contains at present upwards of fifty thousand inhabitants. There have been no less than four hundred and fifty new houses built here in this present year. It is increased and beautified with unheard of quickness; a circumstance owing, no doubt, in a great measure, to the immense benefit its trade has derived for these two or three years from the present state of Europe. . . .

"This quarter of the city [the burnt section] has been rebuilt since the peace, and is now one of the handsomest parts in it. The town had formerly been built without any regular plan, whence every where almost, except what has been rebuilt in consequence of the fire, the streets are small and crooked; the foot-paths, where there are any, narrow, and interrupted by the stairs from the houses, which makes the walking on them extremely inconvenient. Some good brick houses are situated in these narrow streets; but in general the houses are mean, small, and low, built of wood, and a great many of them yet bear marks of Dutch taste. The new part of the city built adjoining to Hudson's River, and parallel with its course, is infinitely more handsome; the streets there being generally straight, broad, intersecting each other at right angles, and the houses much better built. There is not in any city in the world a finer street than Broadway [!]; it is near a mile in length, and is meant to be still farther extended: it is more than a hundred feet wide from one end to the other. Most part of the houses are of brick, and a number of them extremely handsome. From its elevated situation, its position on the river, and the elegance of the buildings, it is naturally the place of residence of the most opulent inhabitants. Broadway is terminated, at one end, by a handsome square, in the front of which is the governor's house, built in a very good stile of architecture, upon the spot where the fort stood before the revolution. The demolition of this fort has also left between the governor's house and the river a large space, which has been formed into a public walk, upon the banks of Hudson's River, and from thence round to East River, commands a view as far as the narrows at the entrance of the roadstead. Thus, in this promenade, the eye embraces at once all the outlets of this great port, and sees all its shipping come in and go out. This walk, which is called the Battery, might undoubtedly be kept in better order, and be made more agreeable to the use it is intended for, by planting some trees, &c, but as it is, its situation makes it incomparably the most delightful public walk any where to be found. Aug. —

"The fortifications erected upon Governor's Island, to defend the entrance of the harbour, are partly of brick and partly of earth; they are in a respectable state of defence. The works were begun three years ago, upon a very good plan, by M. Vincent, a French engineer, and eighty thousand dollars granted by congress have been already expended upon them; but it will take a great deal more to complete them. . . .

"New York was, till last year, the seat of the legislature of the state, which has been since that time transferred to Albany. The building in which the legislature held its sittings, and which contains also the courts of justice, is one of the most elegant, or at least, the most spacious in the city. It is, however, much inferior to the descriptions given of it in all the American Gazetteers.

"There are here nineteen places of worship, belonging to different religions. . . .

"There are three markets at New York, but all of them small and narrow, very much inferior to those of Philadelphia, both in size, and in neatness and regularity. . . .

"The water is, in general, bad at New York, . . . There is a pump placed at the [northern] extremity of the city, where those families that are not satisfied with the wells and common pumps, get their water. The spring which supplies this pump belongs to one of the inhabitants, and is by him let for twelve hundred dollars, to a person who is said to sell daily from fifteen to twenty thousand gallons, and sometimes more. This water is known in the town by the name of tea water."

He describes the hospitals and public charities, and the "poor's house." Of the latter he says: ". . . it is seldom a good institution either in a political or charitable point of view. According to the acknowledgment of the inspectors of the poor at New York, the poor-house of New York produces paupers." He advocates the establishing of "benefit clubs, where the working class might, by contributing a small part of their earnings, secure for themselves, in their old age, a support arising from their economy. . . ." He also describes the city dispensary.

"At New York, as in all the great trading towns on the continent, there are a great number of prisoners for debt." He mentions the society for their relief; and other charitable societies, including "the relief granted by the state and city of New York to the unfortunate colonists who escaped from St. Domingo, and which has been continued ever since the year 1793, when it was begun. . . . The distributors of these succours have been Lawrence Ewery and Richard Laræner, both Quakers . . .

"There are two banks established at New York; one of these is a branch of the bank of the United States . . .; the other is the bank known by the name of the New York Bank. . . ."

Prisons and criminal jurisdiction are described. "The new prison at New York is already nearly finished, and it is upon a very complete plan. Its walls inclose four acres, and nothing is wanting in respect of security, extent, good air, division of the different classes of prisoners. . . ." This is the state prison.

He describes the country around New York; also "the manners of New York," and mentions several persons of note whom he has met,—Jay, Hamilton, Burr, ex-Gov. Clinton, Edmund Livingston, Kosciusko and Niemcewicz.—Travels through the U. S. of North Am., . . ., in the years 1795, 1796, and 1797 (London, 1799), IV: 227–47.

2 "A complete set of bells for Trinity Church has been received . . . from London. The bells are eight in number, with the fixtures complete of frames, wheels, ropes, &c. The largest weighs upward of 2400 lb. being much heavier than any other in the city." —N. Y. Mag. (1797), 446. An "elegant clock" is also received.—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Ag 5, 1797. See also descrip. of Pl. 68-b, I: 452.

7 A stage line is established between New York and Bennington, Vt.—Daily Adv., Ag 7, 1797.

1797 Aug. 7 The common council orders that the almshouse committee "direct such of the Materials of the old Alms House as may [be] useful to be taken [for] the purpose of putting the Ground lately purchased for a burying Ground [see Ap 10] in order & the erection of a small Building for the Superintendant."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 374.

14 Trinity vestry orders "That the Committee of Repairs have a neat substantial Railing put around the Roof of Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 421.

18 "The inhabitants of the city of New York . . . are . . . informed that a company of Comedians . . . are arrived in town on their way to Philadelphia, and having permission of Messrs Hodgkinson and Dunlap mean to open the Theatre, John street, in this city for two nights only. The first performance will be this evening, the 18th of August."—Daily Adv., Ag 18, 1797.

21 The common council appoints John McLean "Keeper of the public Magazine for Gun Powder at Inchlambergh [see My 1 and cf. Jl 3] provided that all the Gun Powder stored there be at his Risque."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 377. See Ag 28.

23 Ricketts's new circus, on Greenwich St., is opened as a summer theatre by Wignell and Reinagle of Philadelphia (see Mr 14, 1795), who have postponed the opening from Aug. 21 out of deference to Mr. Hodgkinson of the John Street Theatre.—Daily Adv., Ag 18, 21, 24, and S 8, 12, 1797. Wignell advertised a performance of plays on Sept. 8 for the benefit of sufferers from "the late dreadful fire at Albany."—Ibid., S 8, 1797. On that night, an "anonymous and scandalous publication" was "handed from the John-street Theatre," charging Wignell and Reinagle with opposing Hodgkinson, and with filling their "coffers" under "the plausible pretext of charity." Wignell then obtained publication of a letter "To the Public," exposing Hodgkinson's mistaken hostility.—Ibid., S 12, 1797.

28 The common council grants permission to the Harmonical Society to use "the lower back Room" in the city hall, "provided they can incommodate with [!] the Court for the Trial of Causes of Ten Pounds & under" (see Ap 17).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 379. Cf. O 16. The original petition, dated Aug. 23, preserved in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room, shows that this society had been established nearly two years, "on principles similar to St. Cecilia's Society," and had been compelled to meet at a public house, contrary to the wishes of its members and against the advancement of the society. It therefore petitioned the common council "for the Use of the Room occupied by St Cecilia's Society in the City Hall on Thursday evenings, or any other Room in the said Building."

" John Deitz, a leather dresser and manufacturer of glue, having petitioned on July 3 for relief on account of having to remove the implements of his business out of the city, the common council, on advice of its committee, allows him £84:12.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 366, 379.

" The common council orders that the ground belonging to the city in the vicinity of the old powder magazine be surveyed, staked out, and filled up.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 379. By April 2, 1798 (q. v.), this powder magazine had been removed.

" A list is prepared of the proprietors and lessees who are occupants on White Hall St. to Exchange Slip.—From the original MS. (item No. 1833 in Holden sale) in N. Y. H. S., filed with "N. Y. MSS. 1761–1800."

Sept. 4 In the evening the new bells of Trinity Church are rung, "the sound of which is charming and exceeds anything of the kind in America."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Gaz., S 5, 1797.

11 The common council passes an ordinance for digging out and filling in Broadway from Murray St. to "the Arched Bridge."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 384. See also D 4. For the same sort of work on Broadway above the bridge, see N 29, 1802.

" A petition, read in common council, for filling up sunken lots on Delancey's ground near the Bowery Lane, shows that a pond has formed here (at or near First and Grand Sts.), and as there are five slaughter-houses in this vicinity the health of the inhabitants is endangered.—From original petition (in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Septr 11th 1797 & referred to Street Committee;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 384.

" The common council agrees to a "Regulation" (grading, etc.) of Front St. from Burling Slip to Peck's Slip. The specifications are recorded in three sections: Burling Slip to Beekman Slip, Beekman Slip to Crane Wharf, and Crane Wharf to Peck's Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 384–85.

Sept. 12 An announcement of the marriage at Richmond Hill of Miss Augusta Temple to Capt. Wm. Palmer shows that the British consul-general and his family were at this time occupying this famous mansion.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 13, 1797. See also Prime, Some Account of the Temple Family (1887), 59–60.

15 With this issue, the name of The Time-Piece; and Literary Companion becomes The Time Piece.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 500; Early Newspapers, II: 429.

18 "I spent this day in surveying the city, which, as well as the manners of the inhabitants, is more like England than any other part of America. New York is a London in Miniature, populous streets, hum of business, busy faces, shops in style, &c."—Travels in Am., by William Priest, 151.

" The common council directs a committee to "take order" for making "an Enclosure to the Common Sewer of Roosevelt Street to prevent the nautius effluvia in the Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 386. This serves to indicate the existence at this time of open sewers in the streets.

" The common council passes an ordinance "for digging out & filling in Greenwich Street from Reade Street to Lispenards Gate."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 386.

" The common council pays £5:2 "for Lime in the Privy at City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 387.

20 "The State Prison is going on with as much expedition as the nature of the work will admit. Being necessarily extensive and massy, for the purposes of security & convenience, its completion cannot [sic] in so short a time as that of an ordinary building. Part of it is expected to be ready for the reception of prisoners in the month of December next; and the whole is in great forwardness, under the inspection of worthy and attentive citizens, from whom the State can apprehend no injury, either by unnecessary delay, superfluous labor, or ill-timed economy."—N. Y. Jour., S 20, 1797. The prison was opened on Nov. 28 (q. v.).

23 "Mr. Samuel Suydam died of the bad Fever, and Mr. Onderdonk lyes very ill; and we believe the Contagion is got in amongst us. . . ."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 176.

"An alarm about the Yellow-fever begins to arise in town—I have seen but one whose case any way resembles it."—Alex. Anderson's Diary (MS.), 147. On Sept. 26, however, he recorded that "several have been carried off by it."—Ibid., 148.

30 A weekly called The Youth's News Paper appears. The last issue found is that of Nov. 4, 1797.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 513.

" With their issues of this date, The Minerva, & Mercantile Evening Advertiser and The Herald; a Gazette for the Country cease publication.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 436, 461.

Oct. 2 George F. Hopkins establishes the Commercial Advertiser as a successor to The Minerva, & Mercantile Evening Advertiser. Although Hopkins's name appeared alone in the imprint, Noah Webster was associated in the management.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 392; Early Newspapers, II: 418.

" The common council passes ordinances for paving with brick or flagging all such parts of the foot or side-walks as are not so paved on each side of Broadway, from Wall to Marketfield St. on the east side, and from Rector St. to Beaver Lane on the west side, and such of the foot or side walks in Beaver St. as are not so paved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 392, 401.

4 The Spectator is established as the semi-weekly edition of the Commercial Advertiser (see O 2), and as a successor to The Herald; a Gazette for the Country (see S 30).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 494; Early Newspapers, II: 429.

9 Robert Liston (the British ambassador), Mrs. Liston, and suite arrive in New York from Philadelphia. They stay at the Belvedere House.—Mass. Merc. (Boston), O 17, 1797.

11 The British frigate "Thetis" is "seen at anchor about 7 miles to the southward of the Hook."—N. Y. Jour., O 14, 1797.

14 The "New Circus, Greenwich-Street," and the "Theater, Greenwich-Street," are both advertised in the same newspaper, the former to "open for the first time" on Oct. 17, and the latter to open Oct. 16. One of the performances to be given at the theatre is "A Comic Opera (compressed into an after-piece) called Robin-Hood; or, Sherwood Forest." This was doubtless the opening of the regular autumn and winter theatre season. That there were two separate buildings on Greenwich St. employed for theatrical purposes at this time is questionable; although no record appears to show what disposition was made of the temporary structures opened 1797 Oct. 14 as a circus or amphitheatre by Ricketts on Aug. 8, 1793 (q. v.), and Nov. 24, 1794 (q. v.), and superseded by the new circus which he opened on a new site March 16, 1797 (q. v.). It is observed in the advertisements of Oct. 14, 1797, that the performances were to occur on alternate nights (see also Com. Adv., O 25, 1797); and it has been shown that the new circus was transformable into a theatre (Mr 3 and Ag 23, 1797). From this it might be inferred that only one edifice was now employed. The following year the advertisements made a special feature of the interchangeable character of this playhouse.—See N 9, 1798; and F 19, 1799.

The excellent standing this place of entertainment had in popular favour is evidenced by the fact that, on Oct. 24, Pres. John Adams intended "honoring" it "with his presence."—Com. Adv., O 24, 1797.

Contrary to the theory that there was only one circus building on Greenwich St., Greenwood states that "In 1797 our French manager, Lailson, had, in a spirit of rivalry to Ricketts, built a similar establishment on the opposite side of the same street in New York. An old deed [he cites 'Lib. LXIII. f. 465, N. Y. Deeds'] locates its exact position as 100 feet south from the southwest corner of Rector and Greenwich streets, with a frontage of 81 feet and a depth of 175 feet, running down to high-water line, where is now Washington street: it was called the Pantheon."—The Circus (1909), 92. That this statement (that the "Pantheon" was new) is incorrect, is evidenced by Delacroix's advertisements of Nov. 9, 1798 (q. v.), and Nov. 24, 1798 (q. v.), when the Pantheon is first mentioned, and in which he refers to it as "the New Circus, now Pantheon." The "New Circus" was the name of Ricketts's circus which was opened March 16, 1797 (q. v.). It was called the "New Circus" in many of the subsequent advertisements.—See Ag 23, O 17, D 5, 1797; Jl 18, 1798.

16 President Adams comes to New York from Boston on his way to Philadelphia. He is received with "great Pomp."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 178. He is met at Harlem by the officers of brigade, headed by Brig.-Gen. Hughes, by Capt. Lamb's troops of horse, and by a large concourse of citizens on horseback and in carriages. They are joined, on the way to town, by "the legion commanded by Col. Morton." The president's arrival was announced by salutes of cannon from the battery and fortifications on Governor's Island, and from a British frigate (the "Thisbe") which fired a salute of nineteen guns. The chimes of Trinity "proclaimed the event till some time in the evening."—N. Y. Mag. (1797), 559. He was conducted to "Mr. Avery's in Broad-street," his "place of residence" while here.—N. Y. Jour., O 18, 1797. He remained until Nov. 7 (q. v.).

" The common council permits "some young Students at Law" to use the "lower Room in the City Hall" one evening a week, provided it does not "incommode the sitting & Business of the Court for trying Causes to the value of Ten Pounds" (see Ap 17).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 397. Cf. Ag 28.

" The common council orders "that the Street Committee report as soon as possible on the several Proposals [see Mr 20 and Ap 11] delivered in by the Surveyors & others for making a Survey & Plan of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 397. See N 8.

17 The common council convenes "for the purpose of waiting upon His Excellency the President of the United States [John Adams] who is now in this City on his way from Boston to the Seat of Govt at Phila." The mayor and members of the board, with "their proper Officers," proceed "to wait upon him accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 398.

" At the "New Circus," on Greenwich St., a company of French players open the season with a pantomime during the usual performance of feats of horsemanship; also, an aria from a French opera is sung.—Com. Adv., O 17, 1797. Afterwards, this playhouse was called "the French Theatre."—Time Piece, My 4, 1798.

18 A "very grand Dinner" is given to President Adams.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 178. It was "one of the most splendid Dinners . . . that ever was provided in this city, and perhaps never exceeded in America."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., O 21, 1797. It was held at the new "City Assembly Room," on Broadway. Over 300 citizens were seated at the tables. The entertainment was prepared by Joseph Delacroix.—Daily Adv., O 19; Centinel of Freedom (Newark), O 25, 1797.

21 The frigate "Constitution" is launched at the Boston Navy Yard.—N. Y. Jour., N 1, 1797.

23 Prompted by letters from the "Commissioners of the Health Office," the common council orders "that the Proprietors of Water Lots between Coenties Slip & Catharine Slip be & they are hereby required to cause the Street of seventy feet in breadth on the East River called South Street [see Jl 18, 1796] in front of their respective Lots to be made & finished by the first day of October in the year 1798 And also that they cause their respective Lots to be extended out to the said Street & compleatly filled in with wholesome Materials to a proper heighth by that Day."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 399. Oct. 23

The board also orders that the street committee examine Peck's Slip, James's Slip, and Catharine Slip, and report what improvements are necessary.—Ibid. Plans for such improvements at James and Catharine Slips were approved on Oct. 30.—Ibid., II: 402. Regarding Peck's Slip the board approved the committee's report on Nov. 6, which required extending the piers into the river "so far as to make suitable Accommodations for the Market Boats beyond front Street."—Ibid., II: 403.

Pres. Adams is to visit the Greenwich St. circus.—See O 14. 24

The publication of a weekly paper called The Tablet; and Weekly Advertiser begins.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 499. See Ap, 1798. 25

James Morris and William Johnson, justices of the court for trying causes to the value of £10 (see Ap 17), petition the common council "for the necessary Fuel for the Chamber appropriated to the public use in which they sit; and hope as they are members of a public Court they will be furnished with fuel at the public Expence."—From original petition in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. Granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 401. 30

" "The Grand Jurors at the last Supreme Court having presented as a Nuisance a certain Lot of Ground at the Corner of Pearl & State Streets belonging to this Board & occupied by Gardiner Baker as a Menage or Place for the keeping of wild Animals" (see Mr 31 and S 29, 1794), the common council orders that Baker "be notified to provide another Place for his Menage & that he remove from & surrender the said Lot by the first day of May next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 401.

Nov. 1 An advertisement reads: "For Sale. That valuable property on which the Old Theatre now stands containing three lots in front on John-street, together with three lots in the rear of said ground, also an alley, as will appear by the Map. The building to be valued and taken down. For terms of sale, enquire of Dr. Gamage, 20 John street."—Daily Adv., N 1, 1797. See D 8, 1797.

6 The committee of the common council appointed Sept. 23, 1796 (q. v.), for the distribution of funds to encourage and maintain schools in the city and county of New York reports "that the annual Sum appropriated by Law and the annual Sum directed to be raised by Tax for that purpose amount together for this present Year to £2832." A schedule is presented for the proper distribution of one-sixth of this (£472), as the law provides, to the several charity schools in the city. The report adds: "that the other five sixth Parts of the said Sum amounting to £2360 ought to be applied towards the erection support & maintenance of one or more free Schools in the said City & which Schools ought to be established under the direction of Commissioners to be appointed for that purpose by the Corporation." To this the board agrees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 404.

7 Pres. Adams leaves N. Y. for Phila.—N. Y. Jour., N 11, 1797.

8 Casimir Th. Goerck addresses a letter to the common council in which he states: "The proposing of making a Map of this City by Mr Mangin, is confined to the Limits of the present improvements of this City, without having any reference to the new and unimproved Ground; since this will not answer the expectation, and use of the Map, to your Board; We therefore do come forward, as Joint Partners with the following Proposels. For furnishing the Corporation, with a general and accurate Map of the City of New York, from the Battery easterly to Sandy Hill Road at the two Mile Stone, Westerly and Southerly to the extremity of the Grants, as likewise the present Siduation of the Dock, Slips and Peers; Into the Said Map, to ascertain the different Hights from high Water Mark, to the present Wall Plates at every Slip and Street at both Rivers, and from thence at every Intersection of the different Streets; The Ascents and Descents, will apear into said Map, not allone by Shadowing, but likewise in Cyfers at the different Intersection of the Streets;

"A compleat Field Book to be made of the difference of the Levels of each Street, Distances, etc.

"The Map layd before the Corporation shall be about six feet

1797 Nov. 8 square, for being a Record into the Office, and an other of about three feet Square for common use to the Corporation.

"It is estimated, that the above Work as Joint Partners can not be performed in a satisfactory manner for less then three thousand Dallors. . . .

"The right of raising a Subscription for having the Map of about three feet Square engraved; of which we propose to give an equal share with each of us to the Corporation, after eighteen or twenty Maps have been struck of, for the different Members, of the present Corporation and our selfs, and the expenses for engraving the Plate and operations is payd.

"We do engage our selfs to finnish this Work in eighteen Months at the longest 9 On account of the excessive rates charged by cartmen, and because some of them operate without license or number, the law regulating them is revised. All licenses are revoked, and they are to be newly licensed under the new regulations. They are arranged in classes or companies, each class having 49 cartmen and one foreman. The foremen are given power and authority to see that the regulations are complied with, and to report vacanies. No cartman is permitted to have in his employ more than one cart. No person under 21 years of age is permitted to drive a cart, without special permission from the mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 405–6.

13 The street committee, to whom were referred the proposals of Mangin and Goerck, city surveyors, for making "a Survey of all the Streets of this City" (see Jl 11, Mr 20, Ap 11, O 16, N 8), reports that these surveyors will "undertake the Business on certain Terms mentioned by the Committee." The board accedes to this arrangement, and requests the recorder "to aid the Committee in drawing the Articles of Contract."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 407. See, further, D 4 and 11.

" Trinity vestry orders "That the Committee of Leases cause a correct Map to be made of the whole Estate of this Corporation."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

20 The British sloop of war "Hunter" arrives at New York.—N. Y. Jour., N 22, 1797.

" The ferry to Brooklyn is leased to Gilbert Van Mater for three years from Nov. 15, at a rental of $2,000 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 408. For the terms of the agreement, see ibid., II: 383.

25 Evacuation Day is celebrated. The militia parades.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 181. John Hyde is paid £53:17 for a public dinner; and John Ten Eyck $57.87 for gunpowder.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 410, 411.

28 "The new State Prison, beautifully situated on the banks of the Hudson, about one mile from the upper western suburbs of this city," is opened for the reception of criminals, and about 70 are conveyed there from the old jail. "By the governor's proclamation, all criminals, under the laws of this state, are in future to be committed to the State Prison."—Time Piece, D 4, 1797; N. Y. Jour. & Patriotic Reg., D 2, 1797.

In their report to the legislature in Jan., 1798, the inspectors of the prison stated that 68 prisoners were removed to the state prison on Nov. 28, 1797, and that "The Board of Inspectors attended in person at the prison during their removal, which was conducted with the aid of the City-Watch, with much quietness and good order."—Assemb. Jour. (1798), 83; N. Y. Jour. & Patriotic Reg., F 7, 1798.

The prison was bounded by Washington and Christopher Sts., a line parallel to and south of Perry St., and the North River.—L. M. R. K., III: 973; and descrip. of Pl. 71, I: 455. Thomas Eddy, describing it in 1801, said: "The buildings and courts comprise four acres of ground. A more pleasant, airy, and salubrious spot could not have been selected in the vicinity of New-York. The west front overlooks the river, into which a spacious and convenient wharf has been extended beyond the prison wall. The upper apartments command an extensive view of the city, harbour, islands, and the adjacent country. The principal front is on Greenwich-Street, the centre of which is projected and surmounted by a pediment: there is a corresponding projection and pediment in the west front. The whole length of the front is 204 feet, from each end of which projects a wing extending towards the river, and from them spring two other wings in the same direction, of less extent. There are two stories above the basement, each fifteen feet high. The roof is covered with slate, and the pediment is crowned with a handsome cupola. The walls are composed of free-stone. The whole fabric is of the Doric order, and contains fifty-four rooms, twelve feet by eighteen, for prisoners, sufficient for the accommodation of eight persons in each. In the north wing is a large room with galleries, neatly finished for a place of worship. The apartments in the centre of the edifice are appropriated to the use of the keeper and his family. Nov. 28

"The women are confined in the north wing of the prison, on the ground floor, and have a courtyard entirely distinct from that of the men. . . .

"At the end of each wing, and adjoining them, is a building of stone for solitary cells. Each building contains seven cells. The cells are eight feet long, six feet wide, and fourteen feet high: the windows are eight feet from the floor. . . .

"Parallel to the front, along the rear of the yard, is a building of brick, two hundred feet in length, and twenty feet in breadth, two stories high, which contains all the work-shops. In the interior court are two pumps with excellent water, and a large bason supplied with water from the river, in which the prisoners frequently bathe during the warm season, for the purpose of cleanliness and health.

"The whole is surrounded by a wall of stone twenty-three feet high on the river side, and fourteen feet high in front, extending in length on one side five hundred feet, and in breadth two hundred and seventy-nine feet.

"The north side of this enclosure is allotted to keep fuel, and materials for the use of the prison. The area on the south side is appropriated to a garden, which is in excellent order, and produces all the vegetables wanted for the use of the prison, the keeper and his family.

". . . The whole expense of the ground, buildings, and wharf was two hundred and eight thousand, eight hundred and forty-six dollars. . . .

"The distance of the prison from the thickly inhabited parts of the city, is a circumstance which at present renders escapes more easily to be effected. Considering the rapid increase of New-York for the last ten years, it is probable that in double that portion of time, the State-Prison will be the middle point of the western part of the city, and be environed with well-built streets. . . ."—Eddy, Account of N. Y. State Prison (N. Y., 1801), 17–29, 30. Eddy's book also contains a plan and an elevation of the prison, both signed by Joseph F. Mangin, who was probably the architect (see descrip. of Pl. 75, I: 467). For a view of the building, see Pl. 71, Vol. I. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 461.

James Striker and Samuel Stilwell, "the trustees of the School at Bloomingdale," in a petition to the common council, state that, eight months ago, they renewed their contract with the teacher at £120 per annum. They have been able to raise only £80 by subscription, which only pays for eight months, "the situation of this place being Such, that the Greatest part of those who support the School in Summer, remove to town in Winter." A number of children remain, however, whose parents are not able to pay for tuition; and in consequence the petitioners ask the common council for assistance "out of the moneys Granted by the Legislature of this State for the support of Schools."—From original petition, in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. 30

The common council ratifies an estimate and assessment "for digging out & filling in the Broad Way from Scott L Clarks House to the arched Bridge & the other Streets in connection," the work to be done by Philip Ruckle by Oct. 1, 1798.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 410, 693–94. This was the well-known "stone bridge."—See Pl. 83-b, Vol. III. Dec. 4

The first payment, $200, is made to Mangin & Goerck, "on acct of their Contract to make a new Survey of all the Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 410. On Jan. 15, 1798, $300.—Ibid., II: 417. On May 21, 1798, $500.—Ibid., II: 443. See, further, F 4 and Ap 10, 1799; also D 11, infra; and S 26, 1802. "

The common council permits Col. Bauman, the postmaster, "to erect a Portico to cover the Door of the Post Office from the weather."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 410. Sebastian Bauman, the postmaster, resided at 30 Wall St.—City Directory, 1797. No other address for the post-office is given at this time. "

The "New Circus" on Greenwich St. takes the name of "Lailson 5

1797 Dec. 5 and Jaymond's Circus." To make it more comfortable, "stoves have been deposited in different parts of the house."—Daily Adv., D 5, 1797.

11 The managers of the Old American Company being compelled to hold performances again in the John Street Theatre, "they beg leave to give an assurance that every careful examination of the building has been attended to, and the House newly decorated, so as to make it an object worthy general patronage, until the New Theatre [Park] is ready for their reception."—N. Y. Gaz., D 8, 1797. This reopening of the old playhouse, however, was of short duration; in about a month, the last performance to be held there was advertised as such, and this notice or prediction proved to be correct.—See Ja 13, 1798.

" The recorder presents to the common council a draft of articles of agreement between the board and Goerck & Mangin, "for the making of a Survey & Map of this City with all the Streets & Water Lots." The board approves of it, and orders that it be sealed and executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 411. The original rough draft of the articles of agreement is preserved in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room. See also descrip. of Pl. 70, I: 454.

In a report of the corporation counsel on April 15, 1807, giving his opinion as to whether Stuyvesant St. is a public street, he stated that Goerck & Mangin contracted "to make a New Map of the City from the Battery to the Sandy Hill road at the two Mile Stone and Easterly including the Street on which the New Episcopal Church stands on Stuyvesants Grounds to the East River, and Westerly to the North River so as to include the Sandy Hill Road and the State Prison. By the Contract the Map was to contain certain specific Descriptions, and a Field Book to accompany the same and they were to deliver another Map upon a smaller Scale which was intended for Sale to indemnify the Common Council, &c[a]."—Ibid., IV: 398–99. About a year later, Goerck died.—See N 19, 1798.

18 Mr. Winstanley, in a letter to the mayor, states that he has painted an altar-piece, in the expectation of its being purchased by the vestry of Trinity Church; but that there is no private room in the city large enough to exhibit it (it being 16 feet high), and he asks permission to put it up for a few days in the large court-room.—From the original letter in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room.

22 The common council approves an "Estimate of the Monies which will be required to be raised by Tax for defraying the public Expences of this City the Ensuing Year." For the city alone, and the city and county jointly, this totals £39,933:6.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 412–13. In his "Financial Hist. of the City," Valentine said that about $90,000 was required to be raised by taxation in 1798, in addition to the ordinary revenue.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 514.

23 There is "a little Confusion on the Dock with the Capt. of the British S. of War Hunter, about impressing American Seamen."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 185.

25 There is so much ice in the East River that many people pass over it to Brooklyn.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 184.

— The governors of the New York Hospital for the first time publish a report of the administration and operation of that institution. The N. Y. H. S. has a copy of this report which is now extremely scarce. See also N. Y. Times, My 14, 1869.

— A chart of New York Harbour was drawn in this year from a survey made under direction of the corporation and a military committee. It is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 112.

— The mayor's office this year was at No. 1 Pine St. There were two watch-houses, one at No. 1 Broad St., and the other at No. 1 Division St.—City Directories.

— An interesting water-colour drawing of Broadway and Chatham Row, made in this year, by John Joseph Holland, showing St. Paul's Chapel, the house of Mr. Walter Rutherfurd, etc., is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 68-b.

— Francis Kearny, a pupil of Peter R. Maverick (see Mr 16, 1786), practised as an engraver in New York from 1798 to 1801. "Kearny founded his fame as an engraver upon a faithful copy of 'The Last Supper' after Raphael Morghen, and he engraved some other capital work of a large size. He did considerable work in line, stipple, and aquatint for the magazines, Annuals, and book publishers." In 1801, he moved to Philadelphia.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 148–49. For a list of his plates, see ibid., II: 261–65, and Fielding, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 154–62.

From 1798 to 1810, Archibald and Robert Kennedy occupied the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway. See descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590. —

Pursuant to the act of March 10, 1797 (q.v.), the legislature opens its twenty-first session, at Albany.—Assemb. Jour. (1798), 3; Senate Jour. (1798), 3. Jan. 2

Gov. Jay, in a speech read before the assembly, says, in part: "At least two arsenals for the reception and safe keeping of military stores, are thought to be necessary—one at New-York, and another at this place [Albany]. For the one at New-York the corporation of that city have liberally and gratuitously granted to the people of the State, a large and valuable lot of ground, and the commissioners have my approbation to erect an arsenal on it."—Assemb. Jour., 21st sess., 6–7. See Mr 30. "

"New Theatre, opposite the Park.—This immense pile, we are informed, is to be opened on Monday the 2d [error for 29th?] instant. It will be the most commodious, as well as the most elegant Theatre in America. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 5, 1798. See Ja 19. 5

"Those Ladies and Gentlemen who wish to bid an Adieu To the John-Street Theatre, Are respectfully informed this is the Last Night of ever performing in it. This Evening will be presented, A Comedy, interspersed with songs, called, The Comet: Or, He would be a Philosopher. To which will be added, A Musical Burletta, called, The Tragedy of Tragedies, with the Life and Death of Tom Thumb the Great."—Weekly Museum, Ja 13, 1798. There is some doubt as to what finally happened to the John Street Theatre. Smith, N. Y. in 1789, 167, says it was demolished in the following year, and Wilson, Mem. Hist. of the City of N. Y., IV: 469, states that it was converted into a carriage factory. In 1845, the site was occupied by Grant Thorburn's seed-store.—Thorburn's Reminiscences (1845), 168. On April 16, 1921, the site was marked by a tablet.—N. Y. Times, Ap 17, 1921. 13

On reading a report of the commissioners of the almshouse, the common council approves the draft of a petition to the legislature, asking relief from "the heavy burthen imposed on this City in the maintenance & support of Emigrant Paupers who have gained no legal settlement in any particular Place." The board also orders that the report be printed in handbills to be sent to the legislature with the petition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 416. Geo Forman did the printing for £4.—Ibid., II: 419. Cf. the similar situation on Feb. 1, 1796. 15

The inspectors of the state prison make a report to the legislature. After mentioning the temporary use of the bridewell (see Ap 17, 1797) and the opening of the prison (see N 28, 1797), they state: "Since the State-Prison has been occupied numbers of prisoners have been received from the different counties, and the number now in confinement is, One Hundred and Twenty-Nine, Men and Women. . . . 17

"The unfinished state of the Prison, prevents the Inspectors from employing the whole of the prisoners at present, a number however are employed at making shoes, matts, straw-hats, &c.

"The plan of the building appears judicious, and well calculated for the intended purpose, and the Inspectors anticipate the pleasing satisfaction they will derive, when the walls around the premises, the work-shops, &c. are completed, and all the prisoners employed at nail-making, spinning, weaving, sawing marble, grinding paint and plaister of Paris, and other useful occupations.

"The diet served daily to the prisoners is, mush, made of Indian meal and molasses, for breakfast; soup, from ox heads and beef, with potatoes and rye bread, for dinner; and the same kind of provision for supper as for breakfast. The expence of this diet is, as nearly as can be calculated, six cents per day, for each prisoner. . . ."—Assemb. Jour. (1798), 83–85; N. Y. Jour., F 7, 1798. See Ja 23.

The legislature passes "An Act to encourage the writing a History of this State." It recites that "Samuel Miller of the city of New-York, minister of the Gospel, hath in his memorial to the Legislature, set forth that he is now engaged in collecting materials for a History of the State of New York." Permission is given to him to search the records, etc., in the secretary's office, and to make abstracts, etc., without payment of fees; also the supreme 19

1798 court and county records.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 11 (An-Ja 19 drews, 1798, p. 244). See Ja 22, 1800.

" "The Committee appointed to superintend the building of a new Theatre, inform the subscribers that the House will be opened in the course of the present month [see Ja 29]. They regret very much the necessity that has compelled them to consent to its being exhibited in an imperfect & unfinished state; but circumstances impossible for them to controul has rendered it unavoidable. They have made a temporary agreement with the managers of the Old American Company, by which the subscribers will, for the present, be entitled to an untransferable right of free admission, benefit nights excepted."—Daily Adv., Ja 19, 1798.

23 Gov. Jay lays before the assembly a report from the commissioners of the state prison, and adds, "That the late benevolent alterations in the criminal law of this State [see Mr 26, 1796] may have a fair and full trial, it appears to me indispensable that the State Prison be speedily and completely finished."—Assemb. Jour. (1798), 64. In their report the commissioners stated that they needed $71,346 to finish the prison building.—Ibid. (1798), 107. The sum was granted to them by an act of March 30 (q.v.).

26 An act of the legislature authorises a new great seal of the state.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 6. It was recorded Jan. 22, 1799. It is reproduced and described by Wilde in The Civic Ancestry of N. Y., Pl. 23, and p. 59.

29 The Park Theatre opens with "As You Like It."—Daily Adv., Ja 29, 1798; Brown's Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 11. See also Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), and descrip. of Pl. 91, III: 577. A newspaper account of the opening states: "The public expectation, which has been long excited, in relation to the New Theater, was gratified on Monday evening last [Jan. 29]; when the dramatic exhibition commenced in it. Immense numbers of people crowded in, on the opening of the doors, and continued to resort to the house, long after the representation had begun. . . .

"The audience part of the New Theater is a segment of a large circle—and of course the spectators, even in the front boxes, are brot within a very convenient distance, both for seeing and hearing. The Pit is remarkably commodious. The Boxes are disposed in three semi-circular rows, from one side to the other of the stage—and the Gallery is thrown back of the upper front boxes. The total omission of pillars, as supports to boxes, avoids a common and great obstacle (in Theaters) to the view—and when the house is filled, presents an unbroken line of spectators, which forms no uninteresting part of the spectacle.

"The stage is remarkably commodious—and no language will give the reader an adequate idea of the scenery, which is universally spoken of as surpassing for elegance and effect, everything of the kind heretofore seen in America."—Spectator, F 3, 1798. Another paper adds: "The house is made to contain about 2000 persons. . . .

"Great credit is due to the Messrs. Mangins, who were the architects of the house, for their skilful and commodious arrangements; and too much cannot be said for the science of Mr. Ciceri, as the machinist, and for his taste as scene-painter. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ja 31, 1798; Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., F 3, 1798. At first the theatre was called simply the "New Theatre;" later it became known as the Park. The receipts on the opening night were $1,232.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1832), 218. See F 21.

" The common council orders "that the Committee on Schools enquire into the subject & report their Opinion as to the establishing of the School in the Alms House & the Affrican School as free Schools under the Statute for the encouragement of Schools."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 418.

" The common council allows the same pay to the "upper Watch" as to the "lower Watch."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 418.

" The common council permits Furman Cheesman "to dig across Cherry Street for the launching of a Vessel." This is on condition that he "do without delay put the Street in the same Condition that he found it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 418.

30 Richmond Hill is the scene of a daring robbery, amounting to $2,000, during which Mrs. Grenville Temple is present.—Columbian Centinel (Boston), F 7, 1798. See also ibid., Ja 24, 1798. Mrs. Temple was the daughter-in-law of the British consul-general.—Prime, Some account of the Temple Family (1887), 28.

Feb. Stuart's full-length portrait of Washington delivering his fare-
1 well address to congress is exhibited by Gardiner Baker at the "New City Tavern, Broadway" (see Ja 24, 1793).—Daily Adv., F 3, 1798. For Alex. Anderson's opinion of it, see F 6.

The common council provides for having the lamps lighted Feb.
24 nights in a month, instead of 21 nights as heretofore.—M. C. C. 5
(1784–1831), II: 419.

"This morning I went to the Tontine Tavern and regaled 6 myself with a view of Mr. Bakers painting of Gen[l] Washington, by Stuart—allowed to be a masterpiece."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1798 (MS.), 21.

"A Proposal of Jonathan Hunt to supply the City with fresh 12 Water" is read in common council and referred to the committee on that subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 420.

The common council permits William King for 12 days to place " in the Fields "his Timber for the Frame of a House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 420. Permits to use space in streets and other public places, for storing building materials during the erection of buildings, were granted as exceptions to city ordinances against street incumbrances, which were enforced even in colonial times. On Feb. 19, likewise, Geo. Gasman was permitted to place in Cortlandt St. bricks for a house he intended to build there.—Ibid., II: 424. It was not permitted, however, to lay timber in the streets in front of any of the public slips.—Ibid., II: 440.

In a petition to the legislature, approved on this day for pres- " entation, the common council states that, "as well for the Ornament & Improvement of the City as for the encouragement of the Trade and commerce of the State and the Safety of the Shipping at the Wharves of this City," the petitioners "have lately directed [see Ap 7, 1795; F 10, 1796] a permanent Street of seventy feet wide to be laid out and compleated [South St. and West St.] at and on the extremity of their Grants already made and hereafter to be made to Individuals . . . South and West of which Streets no buildings of any description are to be permitted to be erected, so that Vessels lying at the Wharfs may be secured from Fires.

"That by reason of the curving and otherwise irregular State of the Shore at low Water Mark in the East and North Rivers, at the time of the making of the Grants by the predecessors of your Petitioners, a General Map of which, if ever made, cannot now be found, the Grants heretofore made are deemed to extend to unequal Distances into both Rivers, which occasions difficulties in making the permanent Streets aforesaid regular; And that in many instances, altho Your Petitioners are willing gratuitously to give the Soil under the Water on which those Streets of seventy feet Wide are to be made, Yet doubts are entertained, whether your Petitioners can compel any of the proprietors of the Lots fronting thereon and who may be unwilling, to make those Streets for public Use, in any given reasonable time to be appointed by the Common Council.

"And Your Petitioners further shew that part of their plan aforesaid was to extend piers at right Angles from the said permanent Streets into the Rivers, at proper distances from each other to be determined by the Corporation with suitable Bridges for the Accommodation of Sea Vessels, and so constructed as to admit the Currents at both Ebb and Flood in both Rivers to wash away all Dirt and Filth from the Wha[r]ves and thereby render the health of the Inhabitants of the City more safe and secure: but Doubts have also arisen whether Your Petitioners can compel the individual proprietors of the Wharves to sink and lay out those piers; or if they shall refuse, whether Your Petitioners will be authorized to sink and build those piers at the Expence of the City and receive the Wharfage without incurring a Breach of the Conditions and Covenants contained in their Grants to Individuals."

They therefore ask that the legislature "will confer such power and authority to your petitioners as shall be proper to remove the difficulties and Doubts above stated, . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 420–21. A law to the desired effect was passed on April 3 (q.v.). See also Je 10, 1794.

The common council receives a petition from Isaac Man 19
"for payment of a quantity of Pine Logs procured on a Contract with the Corporation in the year 1775 [see N 8, 1774] for Pipes of the Works to lead Fresh Water through the streets." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 423. Man petitioned again on Feb. 25, 1799 (q.v.).

The common council refers to the street committee a petition " of the inhabitants of Roosevelt Street "for an alteration in the Regulation of Chatham Street to lead [carry off?] the Water at the Tea Water Pump."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 423.

The common council orders "that the Company of the fire "

1798 Feb. 19 Engine N° 15 at the City Hall take Charge of the new Engine imported from Phil[a] & that the same be deposited in the Engine House at the City Hall. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 424.

21 The members of the committee appointed to build the New Theatre report that they have spent all the money subscribed and that they are still in debt to the amount of $85,000. "The waste, mistakes, and mismanagement in erecting this building are perhaps unexampled."—Dunlap, Hist. of Am. Theatre (1832), 221. See F 27.

22 Washington's birthday is celebrated by a federal salute and a "grand" ball at the Tontine Assembly Room. "Mr. Baker exhibited the inimitable portrait of this great man [see F 1]. . . . The museum was handsomely illuminated."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 21, 1798; Spectator, F 24, 1798.

26 The common council orders "that the Clerk advertise for receiving Proposals to rent Bell Vue Hospital for one Year from the 1[st] April next; on Condition that if the whole or any part of the Buildings or Land should in the course of the Year be wanted as an Hospital or Lazaretto the same or such part thereof as may be required to be immediately surrendered up."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 425. See, further, Mr 12.

27 "The Committee appointed to make reports of the best mode for extricating the affairs of the New Theatre from their present embarrasments [see F 21]; request the attendance of all persons concerned, at the Tontine Coffee House, at 12 o'clock, on Friday next, to receive and consider of said report.

"It is expected that universal and punctual attendance will then be given, as the concerns of the Theatre have come to a crisis which admit of no further delay."—N. Y. Gaz. and Gen. Adv., Mr 1, 1798.

Mar. 2 "A Subscriber" writes to the printers of one of the newspapers: "I have, for a long time past, heard our Corporation have received several proposals, and plans, for supplying our city with Water through the streets, by works, etc. But as I have heard nothing of late, about it, I conclude they have given it up.—I pay for Tea Water Only about Six Pounds Per Annum; which, I think a great tax for one small family: for I am of opinion, that such works were erected (which there is no difficulty in doing) and each house was taxed, from two to six pounds per year, calculating 4000 houses in the city, it would produce forty thousand dollars per annum, which, in my opinion, would, in a very few years, pay for All the possible expences such an undertaking would amount to, as well as do that body of City Guardians much honor—and preserve the city from the great danger of fire, etc."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 2, 1798. See S 5.

12 Following the order to advertise for proposals (see F 26), the clerk presents to the board "sealed Proposals from George Shonnard, Thomas Palmer & Charlotte Johnson for the farming of Belle Vue Hospital & Land." Before opening them, the board determines "that it should not be let for the purpose of keeping a public House." On opening them, it appears "that Shonnard offered £80—Palmer £50 & Johnson £50." These proposals are referred to the land committee, "to enquire into," and to ascertain if the writers intend "to use it as a public House." It is ordered that the committee "dispose of it in such manner as best to answer the Purposes for which the Place was purchased."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 426.

Shonnard's letter (dated F 26 and preserved in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room) states that he understands "the occupier of the Belvue may be removed;" nevertheless he applies "for the House and privilege thereunto belonging." He asks what it will rent for, and "whether the Corporation would keep it as an Hospital in case of the malignant Fever raging in the City again; or to let it as an Inn," for which purpose he believes "the Belvue formerly was kept." He offers to lease it for one or more years. See, however, Ap 2.

20 The legislature passes "An Act to incorporate the Firemen of the City of New-York." The object is "the more effectually to enable them to provide adequate funds, for the relief of disabled and indigent firemen, and for the purpose of extinguishing fires." Their corporate name is to be the "Fire Department of the City of New-York," and the incorporation is to extend until the first Tuesday in April, 1818.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 40 (Webster, III: 361); Costello, Our Firemen, 59.

" The United Insurance Company, which was founded in 1795 or early in 1796, is incorporated, with a capital of $500,000. The charter allows it to insure against fire as well as marine risks. This was the first marine insurance company founded after the Revolution, the first one being in 1759, and the next in 1778–9.—Progress of N. Y. in a Century, by Stevens (1876), 42; Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 41. See Mr 23, 1798. Mar. 20

The legislature incorporates the "Mutual Assurance Company of the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 46. 23

The common council orders "that it be recommended to the Proprietors of Water Lots between Coenties Slip & Catharine Slip to cause the new street of seventy feet in breadth called South Street & lately laid out on the East River to be made in front of their respective Water Lots by the first day of January next." The order to these proprietors requires that the water lots be filled "with good wholesome Earth [so] as to prevent their being receptacles for Filth or Dirt of any kind."—From the original order in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 428. 26

The state legislature repeals the act passed on March 19, 1787 (q.v.), "granting and securing to John Fitch the sole right and advantage of making and employing the steam boat by him lately invented," and grants similar privileges to Robert R. Livingston for 20 years, providing he builds within 12 months a steamboat that will move at the rate of at least 4 miles an hour, and that he "at no time omit for the space of one year to have a boat of such construction plying between the cities of New-York and Albany."—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 55. 27

The legislature passes "An Act to amend the act making alterations in the Criminal Law of this State, and for erecting State Prisons." This new law states more specifically the powers of the courts in respect to imprisonment in the state prison for certain offences, the various officials authorised to visit the prison, the powers of the inspectors, etc. It also appropriates a further sum of $71,346 for finishing the prison.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 56. 30

" The legislature passes "An Act to provide against infectious and pestilential Diseases." Three persons are to be appointed commissioners of the health office at the city of New York, who shall make rules for cleaning the streets, etc. Nuisances, like factories which are offensive to health, are to be removed if found harmful, by warrant of the mayor or recorder directed to the sheriff, on the representation of the commissioners. Vessels, in certain cases, are subject to quarantine. The duties of commanders and pilots and of the health officer of the port, are defined. Moneys are appropriated for repairing the buildings for the reception of the sick on Bedlow's Island.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 65.

" The legislature passes an act appropriating a sum not exceeding $3,000 for the erection of a "proper building sufficient to secure and preserve the field artillery and small arms belonging to this state" in the city of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 66. See, further, Jl 9 and Ag 10.

" A tragedy in five acts by William Dunlap, entitled "André," is performed by the Old American Company, at the New (Park) Theatre.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 30, 1798. It was published this year by T. & J. Swords, N. Y.

The Tablet; and Weekly Advertiser becomes the Tablet. The last issue found is that of June 27, 1798.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 499. See O 25, 1797. Apr. —

The legislature incorporates the "New York Insurance Company," in which are associated Archibald Gracie and others, to carry on the business of "maritime insurance," and insurance upon "houses, goods and lives."—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 71. 2

" In a letter to the common council, the commissioners of the health office show "that if Government should proceed to compleat the Fortifications on Bedlows Island & more especially if Troops should be placed there in the course of the ensuing Summer it will in their Opinion become improper to continue the Lazaretto there." They ask if the board "will indulge them with the use of Belle Vue which appears to them to be the only proper Place they at present know of to accommodate the Sick from Sea & such from the City as may be attacked with pestilential or infectious disorders for the ensuing Summer." The board decides that the commissioners "may have the use of Belle Vue for the purpose aforesaid."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 429.

" Messrs. Pearsall, Bowne, and Stillwell, in a petition to the common council, propose "to open a Road through their Land at Blooming Dale to the Commons," and ask "that it may be continued through the Commons." The board determines "that on the Petitioners laying out a Road of sixty feet in breadth through 1798 their Land this Bd will continue it through the Common Lands."

Apr. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 429.

2 The common council rejects a petition of the English Lutheran Church "to purchase or Lease the Piece of Ground on Magazine Street whereon the old Powder House [see Ag 28, 1797] formerly stood."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 429. For the new position of the powder-house, see Jl 3, 1797.

3 Pres. Adams transmits to congress the "X Y Z" dispatches from France.—Annals of Cong. (1797–99), 3322–23. These relate to an attempt by certain Frenchmen to exact a private "douceur" from the American envoys who sought to negotiate a treaty with the French directory.—McMaster, II: 368–408.

" The legislature passes "An Act concerning certain Streets, Wharfs and Piers, and the Alms-house and Bridewell in the City of New York." It makes it lawful for the common council to lay out and extend streets and wharves adjoining the rivers to the width of seventy feet. This would "conduce to the improvement and health of the said city, as well as to the safety of such ships or vessels as may be employed in the trade and commerce thereof." These streets and wharfs shall be made "at the expense of the proprietors of land adjoining or nearest and opposite to the said streets or wharfs, in proportion to the breadth of their several lots." Such proprietors "shall also fill up and level at their own expence . . . the spaces lying between their said several lots and the said streets and wharfs." When these spaces are filled, these proprietors shall become, respectively, the "owners of the said intermediate spaces of ground in fee simple."

The act also gives the common council power to appoint five overseers of the poor, who shall be known as "The Commissioners of the Alms-House and Bridewell."—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 80 (Webster, III: 406). The names of the five commissioners so appointed were recorded on April 30.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 432–33, 436. See also Je 13.

" The city pays Brockholst Livingston £180 "in full for Rent of Belle Vue to 1st May next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 430. See, however, Ap 16.

5 By a vote of 59 to 21, the assembly resolves "That the Comptroller is hereby directed and required to lease from year to year until other Legislative provision be made in the premises, upon the best terms he can get for the same, the house belonging to the people of this State called the Government House, situate in the city of New-York, with its appurtenances." The resolution had been passed by the senate.—Assembl. Jour. (1798), 323–24. This did not become a law. See, instead, Ap 2; also My 2 and 5.

6 The legislature passes "An Act regulating the future Meetings of the Legislature." It provides that the legislature shall convene each year on the last Tuesday of January, at Albany, unless some other place is designated by the governor's proclamation, or unless the legislature shall designate some other place.—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 104 (Webster, III: 426).

9 "The Opinion of Messrs [Alexander] Hamilton and Harison with Respect to the Possibility and Mode of forming a distinct Corporation for Saint Mark's Church" (see N 14, 1796) is read by Trinity vestry.

It is resolved "That the said Church be so far finished as to be fitted for the Celebration of Divine Service, viz., the lower Part of the Church the Front of the Gallery to be finished and the Floor of the Gallery rough laid and that the Comittee for building St. Marks be authorized to enquire on what Terms the said Church can be so far finished by Contract. . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

16 The common council orders "that the Treasurer provide for the payment of [to] Brockholst Livingston the consideration Money vizt £1800 for Belle Vue" (see S 10, 1794; N 3, 1795; S 5, 1796). —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 431. See, further, Ap 23.

" The common council orders "that the Street in front of the Bridewell & where the Alms House formerly stood [see Je 19, 1797] be assigned as a Place for exposing Horses for sale at public Auction And that an Ordinance be prepared prohibiting the same in any other place in this City except in the seventh Ward."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 431. Such sales were already prohibited, by ordinance, in Wall St.—See My 23, 1796; Mr 28, 1803.

" On condition that the Society of Mechanics, etc. will release to the common council a piece of their ground on which the new watch-house at Chatham Sq. has been erected (see D 19, 1796), the board permits the society to extend the south line of their land at the head of Chatham Sq.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 431.

Apr. In view of the unsettled state of international relations, a committee of the Chamber of Commerce, consisting of William 23 Neilson, Ebenezer Stevens, and John Delafield, presents a memorial to the common council "representing the defenceless State of this City against the Attacks of a few inferior Vessels of War," and praying for "an indemnification of this Board to the amount of about 40,000 Dollars for defraying the expence of providing & mounting on field Carriages 18 or 20 heavy Cannon." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 433. See, further, Ap 30, Je 29.

" For £1,800, Brockholst Livingston conveys to the city the plot of ground, containing six acres, known as the Lindley Murray or Bellevue estate.—Liber Deeds, CDLII: 248; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 433–34. See Ap 1, 1793; and L. M. R. K., III: 953 ("Bellevue Hospital"). This conveyance included the north-west corner of the present Ave. A and 24th St., which, added to land already owned by charter grant, comprised the area afterwards used for a corporation storage-yard. This area was farther increased under the Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 115.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing liber of conveyances. See also Ap 16.

" Nicholas Gouverneur and others release to the city "a certain Street at Corlears Hook." The common council accepts it, and orders that it be called Gouverneur St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 434. In view of the resolution of July 15, 1799 (q. v.), it became necessary, on March 24, 1800, to confirm the establishment of Gouverneur St. by a new resolution.—Ibid., II: 616.

26 Peter Augustus Jay, writing from New York to his father, Gov. Jay, describes a meeting on this evening of a society for free debate, in which a lively discussion occurred between Democrats and Federalists on the question: "Is it most expedient under existing Circumstances to lay an Embargo, or to arm our Vessels in defence of our carrying trade?" It was carried in favour of arming, and a committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. Cozine, Col. Morton, Mr. Evertson, Col. Stevens, and Mr. Hoffman, "to form an Address from the Meeting to the President and Congress of the U. S. approving of the Measures which have been pursued with respect to France and expressing a determination to support them." He expects, from this, that the whole Federal ticket will be carried in this city at the coming state election. In a letter of May 6, he described another meeting as very disorderly, although "Many of our most respectable people were present," in which the Democrats attempted to pass "a Vote of Censure on those proceedings" of April 26. He added: "Betts to a great Amount have been laid on your Election at the odds of ten to one in your favor." Gov. Jay was re-elected by a large Federal majority over Chancellor Livingston.—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 238–40, with footnote by Henry P. Johnston.

27 John Hodgkinson having withdrawn from the management of the New (Park) Theatre (see Je 24, 1797), it is leased to William Dunlap for one year for $5,000.—Dunlap, Hist. of Am. Theatre (1832), 226. See N 28.

30 The "Department of the Navy" is created by act of congress.— Annals of Cong. (1797–99), III: 3723–24. Popular indignation has been so thoroughly aroused by the revelations of the "X Y Z" dispatches (see Ap 3) that this act is followed by appropriations "for the further defence of the ports and harbors" (ibid., III: 3726); also "to procure cannon, arms, and ammunition" (ibid., III: 3726–27), by a measure of reprisal against the depredations of French vessels (ibid., III: 3734), and finally by an act suspending commercial intercourse with the French Republic (see Je 13).

" On considering the Chamber of Commerce memorial of April 23 (q. v.), the common council resolves that the governor be requested "to make an Application to the President of the United States for sixteen long eighteen Pounders of those now at West Point mounted upon travelling Carriages or as many of them as can be spared with the proper Apparatus & Ammunition to be used in the Defence of this City, if necessary, until other competent Provision shall be made for that purpose either by the United States or the Legislature of this State. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 435–36, 439.

The board also orders that the mayor issue his warrant on the treasurer to pay Col. Stevens $1,000 on account "towards providing proper Timber for Carriages & other Apparatus for the said Carriages in case the same should be necessary."—Ibid., II: 436. See, further, Je 13.

" The common council grants the use of the Bowling Green in 1798 Apr. 30 front of the government house to John Rogers on condition that he keep it in good order and allow "no creatures to run on it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 436. See Je 12, 1799.

" The common council appoints a committee "to direct a Survey to be made of the Ground which it will be proper to assign as Liberties of the Gaol."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 436–37. The original bill of Jos. F. Mangin for making a survey of the jail "liberties," when an alteration in their boundaries became necessary on digging for the foundation of the city hall, in 1803, is on file in the record-room, dept. of finance, Hall of Records.

" The common council orders that stone be procured "to secure the outside of the Battery," and that persons be employed "to collect those lying on the South side."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 437. See also My 13, 1799.

May — Judge Henry Brockholst Livingston, having written a humorous political skit in the Argus, was assaulted on the Battery by one "Jemmy" Jones, and in a duel which resulted Jones was killed. —Hunt, Life of Edw. Livingston; see also Argus, My 12, 1798.

1 Jacques Madelaine Joseph Delacroix occupies, under a 7-year lease at $1,000 a year (Liber Deeds, LIII: 437), the Bayard mansion and grounds near Bunker's Hill (see 1735), forming the block now included between Grand, Broome, Crosby, and Lafayette Sts. He establishes here another pleasure resort, and calls it Vauxhall Garden. It is to be opened to the public on May 7.—Daily Adv., My 4, 1798.

He already occupied a "Vauxhall" at 112 Broadway (see F 22, 1797), which he and his sons for several years continued to keep, as well as the up-town garden. The city directories show that the Bayard property was occupied by Delacroix as Vauxhall until 1805, although by 1803 he had established a third Vauxhall, at Fourth Ave. and Astor Pl. See L. M. R. K., III: 948 (Bayard mansion); and ibid., III: 981 (the several Vauxhalls); also Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 611, 627.

After opening his new "Vauxhall Garden" on the Bayard estate, he advertised that, four times a week, there would be "Harmonical Music;" but that, "In case of uncertain weather, the music will attend at his House, No. 112, Broadway."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 22, 1798. See also ibid., Je 25, 1798.

Meanwhile, his place at 112 Broadway was probably open only part of the time; for, on July 25, Delacroix's two sons, Louis and Joseph, Jr., advertised that they would open it on July 30, and be its managers.—Daily Adv., Jl 25, 1798. See Ja 9, 1799.

2 "It is reported (but we hope without foundation) that the superb edifice lately occupied by the Governor of this state is Let, & is soon to be converted into a tavern! ! ! Good God."—Spectator, My 2, 1798. See My 5.

" "The American Pantheon, or, Peale's Collection of Portraits of American Patriots, will be exhibited, for a few days only at no. 126 Broadway, corner of Cedar street, and nearly opposite the City Tavern."—Com. Adv., My 2, 1798.

4 "Mr. Palmer" advertises to deliver "two public discourses" (on moral questions) on Sunday, May 6, at "the French Theatre in Greenwich street."—Time Piece, My 4, 1798. This was Ricketts's circus building.—See O 17, 1797. For E. Palmer.—See Je, 26, 1797.

5 John Avery (see My 2) advertises that he "has removed to that superb mansion, next the Battery, known by the name of the Government House, which is opened as a Boarding House."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 5, 1798. See My 18.

" Joseph Corre opens the Columbian Garden, a place of resort and refreshment, situated near the junction of State and Pearl Sts., "adjoining his house facing the Battery."—Daily Adv., My 5, 1798; Ap 27, 1799; Com. Adv., Jl 4, 1799. As shown by the city directories, the place was discontinued about 1810.

7 The common council orders that cells be made "for the confinement of disorderly Persons in the Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 439.

" The common council permits William Allen "to occupy the Gun Powder Magazine" at a reasonable rental.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 439.

13 The new Presbyterian church at the corner of Henry and East Rutgers Sts. (see Je 23, 1795; Je 13, 1797) is opened for worship.—Com. Adv., My 12, 1798. It was a frame building, 86 by 64 ft.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches in N. Y., 132; Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers, 268. This was the fourth church of this denomination erected in New York.—Goodrich, The Picture of N. Y. (1828), 219. See, further, My 24, 1799.

May 14 The common council permits Joseph Corre "to make a Gate to the fence of the Battery in State Street opposite to his Garden, leaving the one in front of his House to remain."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 439.

17 An advertisement reads: "Richmond Hill, Formerly Abraham Mortier's adjoining the City, will be Let for one or more years, and immediate possession given; any quantity of land from one to one hundred acres may be had with the premises. Furniture suited to the house will be let with it or sold to the tenant. The garden is in compleat order and great forwardness; the ice house well filled."—Com. Adv., My 17, 1798. In the following year (see My 22, 1799), Richmond Hill was again advertised for lease.

" Cornelius Smock and Elizabeth Fraunces advertise that "they have opened a House of Entertainment at No. 12 Water Street, . . . (Mrs. Fraunces having followed that business for many years . . . during the life time of her late husband Samuel Fraunces)."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 17, 1798. 18 John Avery announces that "The Elysian Boarding and Lodging House, known by the name of the Government House, near the Battery, New York, Is now open for the reception of Ladies and Gentlemen."—Daily Adv., My 24, 1798.

21 The common council permits the Society of Friends "to strew Bark in Pearl Street opposite their Meeting House to prevent interruption from the Noise of Carriages during their General Meeting; on Condition that they afterwards remove it & clean the Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 442, 547, 736. The original petition of May 20, 1799, is filed in the city clerk's record-room (file No. 18).

" It is reported to the common council that someone has "sunk a Wharf at Corlaers Hook at the Place contemplated to be reserved as a public Bason or Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 442.

28 The common council appoints a committee to work in conjunction with Col. Stevens "to attend to the Measures that have already been taken or which it may be proper to take for the Defence of the City & Harbor of New York" (see Ap 23 and 30), and to report to the board as occasion may require.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 444.

" The common council permits Anthony L. Bleecker and others to sink a well, at their own expense, "in the Broad Way nearly two Miles from the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 444.

June — In this month, congress passed three acts relative to aliens.—Acts of Congress. These alien laws and the sedition laws of July (q.v.) together created a ferment of opposition.

2 The Battery is being used as a military drill-ground, for the training of young men, three days a week, from 5 to 8 o'clock, p. m.—Com. Adv., Je 2, 1798.

4 A patent spiral tide-wheel is in use "at the Saw-Mill at Corlear's Hook, on the East River, owned by Messrs. Hallett and others." Its mechanism is described in an advertisement offering it for sale. —N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 4, 1798.

6 William North, U. S. senator from New York, writes from Philadelphia to Gov. Jay: "The bill for prohibiting all intercourse with France is now before us, and will probably pass." He reviews the military strength of the United States, adding: "The spirit of the people of New York seems to be exerting itself for the safety of the City. I have sent to Col. Hamilton Baron Steuben's ideas on the subject and also have given them to Mr. McHenry, who is to go to New York next week, and fortunately is in possession of certain plans and maps, made by a Mr. Smith, and approved by Montressor and a board of engineers, intended to point out the proper place and the best method of fortifying the harbour of New York."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 242–43.

Jay replied on June 25: "In my opinion it would be both just and proper to declare the treaty with France to be void, but I think it would be more advisable to direct reprisals than to declare war at present, for the public mind does not appear to me to be quite prepared for it. . . . Should it be the case, the Jacobin leaders will continue to persuade their deluded followers that the Government is chargeable not only with participation, but with a desire to prevent an accommodation, which they affect to believe practicable notwithstanding the treatment of our Envoys, etc., etc.

"When the mass of our people are convinced that war would be just, necessary and unavoidable, they will be content that it should be declared, and will support it vigorously. . . ."—Ibid., IV: 244. For the action of congress, see Je 13.

1798 June 9 The semi-circular brick building, two storeys high, in the yard of the new jail, used for workshops for prisoners, is burned. Here "almost every trade and business" had been carried on during the year since the building was erected. Each criminal "was forced to work at the occupation to which he was brought up, or else obliged to pick oakum." The nails produced here sold for about $600 a week. The fire was supposed to have been started by prisoners igniting the moss and curled hair stored in the garret. —N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 13, 1798.

12 The "New York Grenadiers," commanded by Capt. Duryee, one of the oldest companies in the state, advertises for recruits to enroll in the first company. Citizens of reputable character, and grenadier size—5 ft. 9 in. to 6 ft. 4 in. in height,—are wanted. The call says: "At a crisis like the present, when the political horizon of our country is dark and gloomy, and war seems inevitable, it becomes the duty of every member of society, who professes to have the welfare of his country at heart, and is able to bear arms, to step forward with alacrity, and learn to use them for their country's good."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 12, 1798.

" B. Isherwood advertises the opening, on this evening, of "Ranelaigh [error for Ranelagh] Garden, near the Battery (lately known by Vauxhall)," where he will have a "band of vocal & instrumental music."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 12, 1798. This was the "Vauxhall" at No. 5 Pearl St.—See My 26, 1797. On Aug. 14, another lessee, I. Thomas, advertised it.—Com. Adv., Ag 30, 1798. But, on June 1, 1799, Isherwood again advertised the place with certain improvements, and with a concert in the garden, which will be "handsomely lighted with variegated lamps." —N. Y. Jour. & Pat. Reg., Je 1, 1799. On March 24, 1800, it was advertised to be let or sold. The lot was 40 ft. front and 134 ft. deep.—Daily Adv., Ap 3, 1800.

13 Congress suspends all commercial intercourse between France and the United States.—Laws of U. S., 5th cong., chap. 70. See Je 28 and Jl 7.

" A subscription paper is being circulated among New York merchants, "and considerable sums of money are already subscribed, which are intended to be applied to the purchase, arming and equipping of several vessels, to cruise on our coasts for the protection of commerce."—Spectator, No. 76, cited by Ford in Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 199.

" A joint meeting of several committees—one from the officers of "the late Army & Navy of the United States," one from the Chamber of Commerce, and one from each ward of the city—having been held in the city hall on June 8, and a resolution having been passed that application be made to the common council "to interpose their Credit for obtaining a Loan of fifty thousand Dollars to be applied toward the Defence of this Port and City, in confidence that the same will be reimbursed by the General Government, or provided for by the Legislature of this State," the board now resolves to advance a sum not exceeding $50,000 for this object, "And that an Application shall be made to Congress and, if necessary, to our State Legislature for the Reimbursement thereof." The board appoints a committee to direct the expenditures of this sum in conjunction with such persons as may be appointed by the several committees. The $1,000 already advanced for this purpose (see Ap 30) is to be considered as part of the $50,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 446–47. A certified copy of this resolution is preserved in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room. See Jl 5; and descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 429. See, further, Je 25, 29.

" The common council agrees to a committee report prescribing the duties of the street commissioners. One of these is "to see that the Gutters are bottomed with hard Brick or cut Stone."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 448. See Ap 3.

16 Martling's Tavern (see Je 3, 1796) becomes the meeting-place of the "New York Patriotic Blues," attached to the First Regiment.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 16, 1798. In 1807, there was a military meeting at Martling's to form an Artillery Company.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 8, 1807.

22 War with France being imminent, Pres. Adams, with the advice and consent of the senate, appoints Gen. Washington lieutenant-general and commander-in-chief of the armies of the U. S.—See letters of Adams to Washington and the secretary of war, in Works of John Adams, VIII: 572–74. For causes of the war, see Jl 7.

25 "A Letter from the Mayor & Aldermen of Philadelphia recommending Mr [Chas. Wilson] Peale's new con[s]tructed & improved fire Places as highly beneficial," is read in the common council. The board orders "that the Committee on Repairs direct an experiment to be made on six of the fire Places in the Alms House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 451. That is, the old ones are to be altered.—See the original letter and draft of the answer, in metal file No. 16, city clerk's record-room. See, further, D 3. June 25

" The common council passes an ordinance extending to May 1, 1799, the time within which South St., "lately laid out on the East River from Coenties Slip to the old Slip" (see Ap 7, 1795; Jl 18, 1796; F 12, 1798), is to be completed, and the water lots filled up "out to the said Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 451.

" The common council, having resolved on June 13 (q. v.) to provide a sum not exceeding $50,000 "towards the erection of Works & providing Cannon & military Stores for the defence of this City & Harbor," now authorises Ald. Furman, one of the committee then appointed, to draw $10,000 from the Bank of New York, to be applied to that purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 452. The same amount was ordered to be drawn for the same purpose on July 31, Aug. 20, Sept. 10, Oct. 2, and Dec. 31.—Ibid., II: 458, 462, 467, 473, 491. This made a total of $60,000. Regarding the city's reimbursement, see Ja 21, 1799.

27 Work is begun "on the Battery near the Flag Staff."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 199. See Jl 5.

28 The citizens break ground for fortifying the Battery (see Ap 23 and 30). Regret is expressed at this destruction of "the finest walk in the world;" but the undertaking is "to save our liberties and violated Independence." The citizens have been asked to contribute their labour, or to pay ten shillings per day, for the purpose of raising fortifications. "It is said the Mayor, Col. Hamilton, and several of our principal characters have enrolled themselves to work personally."—Com. Adv., Jl 2, 1798. See Je 30.

29 Correspondence between the governor and Maj.-Gen. Clarkson concerning "the defenceless State of this Port & City" (see also Ap 23), and "the expediency of immediately convening the Legislature," is submitted to the common council by the governor, and the board passes a resolution deferring to the wisdom of the legislature which, it is hoped, may soon consider the subject of giving financial assistance in fortifying the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 452–53. See, further, Ag 10, D 31.

" The common council orders "that one of the City Watchmen be stationed to guard the Laboratory at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 453. On July 23, it was ordered that a watchman be placed "at Colº Stevens's Labaratory."—Ibid., II: 457. See My 10, 1797.

" "On reading a Petition of a number of Inhabitants in the Bowery Lane complaining of the Dangerous Practice of running or racing Horses in the public Road or Highway," the common council passes an ordinance against this practice "in any public Street or Road within this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 453–54. See also Ag 30, 1783.

30 Work is begun on the fortifications (see Je 28).—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 30, 1798. See, further, Jl 27.

July — Congress passes an act defining treason, and to punish sedition. Regarding the effect of the alien and sedition laws, see Winsor, VII: 252, 269, 334; McMaster, Vol. II.

2 Dr. Joseph Browne (see D 28, 1796) addresses to the corporation of the city a "Memoir on the utility and means of furnishing the City with Water from the river Bronx." In this he sets forth the city's imperative need of fresh water, the manner in which the principal European cities are supplied, and the inadequacy of all the sources on Manhattan Island, including the Collect Pond. After praising the quality of the water of the Bronx, he explains how the river could be diverted from its course and "thrown into Haerlem river, at about 8 miles distant from the City-Hall," and then continues: "let us suppose it now at Morrisania, and emptying itself into Haerlem River, out of the little creek that divides the land of Colonel Lewis Morris, from that of Mr. Gouverneur Morris; it will then be about 40 feet below the height of the Park, in front of the Goal, &c.—it will therefore become necessary to elevate it at least as high as this spot; probably it might be still better to give it a greater elevation, (for instance) as high as the Corporation Land in the vicinity of the Dove, about five miles from town, which is about 40 feet above the Park, or 80 feet from high water mark." With much detail Browne next proves that the power of the Bronx itself "may be made use of, as the only agent 1798 July 2 requisite to deliver at a reservoir near the Dove, all the water necessary for the daily consumption of New York. From the reservoir at the Dove, a pipe of conduit of six inches diameter, will be requisite to deliver the water to a principal reservoir in, or near the City." He estimates the expense to be about $200,000.—Proc. of the Corporation of N. Y. on Supplying the City with Pure and Wholesome Water: With a Memoir of Joseph Browne, M.D. on the same subject (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799). This appears to be the first suggestion that New York City be supplied with water from a source off Manhattan Island. For the common council's action on this "Memoir," see D 17.

4 Plans are formed for celebrating the "Fourth" with parades, a review on "Delancey's ground," an oration in St. Paul's Church, etc.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 8 and Jl 4, 1798. The city's expenses for the celebration, paid on July 16, were $120 "for 8 Cask Gun Powder" and £7:4 "for the Sextons ringing the Bells."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 457. The public dinner was served this year by Edw. Bardin, whose bill amounted to £39:5.—Ibid., II: 464.

" The Society of the Cincinnati, after holding a business meeting at "Federal-Hall," adjourns to Belvedere House to celebrate "the Anniversary of American Independence." Many patriotic toasts are drunk.—Spectator, Jl 7, 1798.

" The "officers of the Brigade of New-York" dine together at "Avery's, late the Government House."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 13, 1798.

" Jos. Delacroix advertised that, on the Fourth of July, there would be "Grand Fireworks in the evening, accompanied by Several Transparent Paintings executed by Mr. Snyder" at his Vauxhall Garden, near Bunker's Hill (see My 1). He provided "two neat Carriages," which would "ply between his house, No. 112 Broadway [see F 22, 1797], and his Garden, at one shilling each person."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 25 and 29, 1798. The last fireworks of the season there were advertised to be held on Aug. 2, having been postponed from July 27 "on account of the arrival of the president, which retained a great number of citizens in town."—Daily Adv., Jl 25, 1798. See, Jl 4, 1799.

" Corre holds a "Grand Concert," and exhibits his "Transparent Paintings."—Am. Museum, Jl 2, 1800. See My 14, 1800; Ag 12, 1801. Transparent paintings have been mentioned heretofore, when shown in front of the John St. Theatre (see Jl 4, 1786), and when displayed at Washington's inauguration (see Ap 30, 1789). For an explanation of the art, see Jl 4, 1807, where the only authoritative work on the subject, published in that year, is cited.

5 "The intended fortifications on the battery of New-York are begun. The plan and extent of them are not particularly known."—The Genius of Liberty (Morristown, N. J.), Jl 5, 1798. See, however, Je 27; Jl 21.

7 As "the treaties concluded between the United States and France have been repeatedly violated on the part of the French government; and the just claims of the United States for reparation of the injuries committed have been refused, and their attempts to negociate an amicable adjustment of all complaints between the two nations, have been repelled with indignity: and whereas, under authority of the French government, there is yet pursued against the United States, a system of predatory violence, infracting the said treaties, and hostile to the rights of a free and independent nation," congress declares the treaties no longer binding on the United States.—Laws of U. S., 5th cong., chap. 84.

9 The defence committee represents to the common council "that a Piece of Ground would be wanted to erect a Building on [see Mr 30] for the deposit of Artillery with its Apparatus," and, on examination, thinks "the Triangular Piece of Ground lying on the North East side of the Gaol and bounded by the Gaol Fence, Chatham Street & Tryon Row, to be the most proper for the purpose." The board determines that this ground "may be taken & used for the purpose aforesaid leaving the Street along Tryon Row at least forty feet wide."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 455. For further history of this site, see L. M. R. K., III: 923.

" The common council rejects a petition "complaining of the Building called the Exchange as a great Interruption to Broad Street & Water Street & praying that it be taken down & removed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 455.

16 Congress adjourns, to meet on the first Monday in Dec., the day fixed by the constitution for the annual meeting. An account of the transactions of the session just closed, regarding the relations between the United States and France, is contained in an open letter, dated at Phila., July 23, written by Robt. G. Harper, a delegate from So. Carolina, to his constituents, and pub'd as a pamphlet in Phila., in Aug. It is entitled A Short Account of the Principal Proceedings of Congress, in the late session, and a sketch of the state of affairs between the U. S. and France In July, 1798: . . . It reviews briefly the casus belli, the naval and financial situation in the U. S., and conditions in France. An earlier account of this sort was written by Harper at greater length in May, 1797, entitled Observations on the Dispute between the U. S. and France. . . . The 3d ed. of this was reprinted for circulation in Ireland, and bears a Dublin imprint. July 16

"We hear the new troop of horse under Colonel Giles has assumed the name of the 'Washington troop.' They have their regular periods of meeting for exercise, at 5 in the morning; and from the emulation that prevails among them, it is expected their evolutions and movements will in no shape be inferior to the elegance and martial appearance of their dress. Altho many of the gentlemen composing this troop are foreigners of ample fortunes, they are determined, if necessary, in common with native citizens, to defend the country and its laws with their lives.—The worthy commander of this inimitable troop has the honor to know his duty; and while he unites in his character as well the prudence as the bravery of a soldier, it cannot fail to inspire his followers with respect and confidence."—Spectator, Jl 18, 1798. The "Washington Greys," which acquired distinction in later years were organized in 1833 (q.v.). 18

The "New Circus" on Greenwich St. is advertised for sale.—Com. Adv., Jl 18, 1798. It continued, however, to serve as a theatre, for, on Aug. 21, a comedy was advertised to be given there as a benefit.—Daily Adv., Ag 21, 1798. See also N 9. " 21 Political animosity is the cause of local disturbances in New York. On the evening of July 21, there was "some Confusion at the House of Com. Nicholson where Mr. Gallatin lodged; also at the House where Mr. Lyon, a Member from Vermont (of Congress) [lodged]; likewise at Mr. Edward Livingston's Dwelling."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 200. This led to the following protest, sent by "A Citizen of the Sixth Ward" to Mr. Greenleaf: "A number of 'unfledged, would be soldiers,' who, from their behavior, it is presumed, received a billingsgate education, preambulate [sic] the streets from 10 o'clock till midnight, vociferating God save the King, Hail Columbia, &c, using epithets and expressions which would disgrace a Porcupine—damning Livingston for a Jacobin, Democrat, Frenchman, &c., with several other phrases too indecent for publication. Those embryo heroes who designate themselves the friends of order and good government are cautioned to refrain from offering any further insults to the Representatives of the People; their parents, masters, and guardians, are responsible for their conduct, for should any serious consequences ensue from a repetition of the nefarious proceedings of this nocturnal banditti, they, and they only, are accountable.

"Mr. Edward Livingston, the true and faithful friend of liberty, and the upright guardian of the public weal, has several thousand friends in this city, a number of whom have fought for the independence and liberty of this country, while the parents of the majority of this dastardly Fry, were basking in the sunshine of Royal favour. The majority of the citizens of New-York approve the principles and conduct of Mr. Livingston, and are ready to defend him, if requisite, against any reptile Tory Faction . . ."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Jl 25, 1798.

" An open letter is written to Col. Ebenezer Stevens, "Chief Engineer of the works on New York Island," urging that floating batteries and gunboats be built. Without them, the writer thinks, "any works whatever would not be competent to secure that part of the city exposed to the Bay." He suggests where they might be placed to advantage.—Com. Adv., Jl 21, 1798. See also Mr 19, 1807.

" The building of fortifications (see Jl 5) progresses rapidly.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 200.

22 ". . . in the Evening on the Battery there was a little Confusion about Cockades."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 201. See Jl 27.

27 Pres. Adams comes to New York from Philadelphia on his way to Braintree, Mass., his home. Maj.-Gen. Clarkson and Brig.-Gen. Hughes met him at Powles Hook, and escorted him across the river in the custom-house barge. A boat from the British frigate "La Topaz" was also sent to accompany him, and the frigate fired a 1798 July 27 salute when he embarked. "After landing, the President was joined by a large number of civil and military officers. The several military corps, under command of Col. Morton, . . . moved from Courtland street down Broadway, when federal salutes were fired from the Battery and Governor's island. The President and officers followed in the rear of the troops, and were greeted with incessant acclamations of joy from the sidewalks, windows, and even house tops. He walked uncovered, and bowed politely to the numerous spectators . . . the simplicity of his dress and equipage is no inconsiderable evidence of those 'stern republican virtues' for which he always has been so deservedly celebrated. . . . The President retired to his son's house in Beaver street, where all the troops passed in review before him, and thence passed up Broadway to Trinity Church and were there dismissed. The bells of Trinity were rung for a considerable time."—Russell's Gaz. (Boston), Ag 6; N. Y. Gaz. & Adv., Jl 28, 1798.

" The citizens of New York are exerting themselves to raise fortifications on the Battery. Although the work was started only a few days ago (see Je 28 and 30), "strong ramparts of protection and defence, are in great forwardness—heavy cannon have been brought to the city, and, in a few days, will show their terrific muzzles from their intended situation."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 27, 1798. See Ag 24.

" In the evening, five young Americans, including Pres. Adams's secretary, Samuel Malcolm, while walking on the Battery, were attacked by ruffians. The published report of this incident, which brings American and French patriotic sentiment into conflict, shows the spirit of the times: "Animated by the presence of our illustrious President, who had that day entered the city, under the display of our flags, and the thunder of our cannon, amidst the glitter of swords, a forest of bristling bayonets, and the shouts and acclamations of assembled thousands, they were singing, as was very common throughout the town, the Federal song—'Hail Columbia.' A much larger number of boatmen and low fellows, from the wharves and docks, immediately collected; and, instigated by the deluding demon of French Jacobinism, and no doubt by some of its mad or corrupted votaries, here approached our young men, singing in opposition to them—what song do you think, my countrymen?—the infamous French song 'Ca Ira!' Heavens, what a contrast! How honorable to those who wore the badge of Americanism—How degrading and traiterous in the others. Both parties quickly met each other, and it was not long before the alien crew, conscious of their superior numbers, began the dastardly attack, and first insulted, and then beat and bruised them in a most shameful manner. Mr. Samuel Malcolm, one of the young men, seemed to be particularly singled out as the object of their infernal hatred. It was asked if he was the secretary to the President, and on being answered in the affirmative, three or four ruffians grasped him, and altho' he defended himself with great courage, yet he received considerable injury. . . ."

The next evening, "the young men who wore the cockade" (the Americans) went to the Battery again, to "meet in a body any attack that should be made on the mark [the cockade] they had assumed to evince their disposition to support our government against the insolence, perfidy, ambition and rapacity of France." A large number of opposite opinion collected; no attack, however, was made, or insult given.—Claypoole's Adv. (Phila.), Ag 1, 1798.

28 Pres. Adams, "his Lady," and niece, leave New York, and go to "the seat of his son-in-law Col. Smith," in Westchester, where he is to remain a few days on his way to Braintree, Mass. He is escorted by "the Washington troop, commanded by Col. Giles," and accompanied in carriages by Maj.-Gen. Clarkson, Brig.-Gen. Hughes, and others.—Porcupine's Gaz. (Phila.), Jl 31, 1798; Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1798 (MS.), 98.

— E. H. Smith, M.D., in a letter to Dr. Cogswell of Hartford, dated Sept. 2, 1798, said:

"As early as the last of July, some cases of fever occurred at Coenties Slip, Exchange Slip, More [Moore] Street, & that vicinity. The complaint was principally, if not entirely confined there. I do not know how many sickened or died: perhaps 40 of the first & 4 of the last: not more. . . .

"As the fever was declining at the south end, & while it had excited no alarm, the disease suddenly appeared at New Slip, at the other end of the City. This was still more circumscribed, affecting only a few houses (not more than 10) near a very filthy spot, which has been more or less visited by fever every year since my residence in N. York . . . (. . . I do not suppose that the whole number up to this time exceeds 35) nine died. The rest removed, & the houses were mostly deserted. July —

"This occasioned very little alarm, and that little was rapidly subsiding, when many people, & several very respectable citizens, were suddenly, & nearly at the same time, seized with fever, on the west side of Pearl St. above Burling Slip, up John St. as far as Wm St. & in Elbow lane (now Cliff St.) & in Gold St. . . .

"In about a week several deaths had happened, & the alarm began. It is now scarcely a fortnight since the first of these last cases happened. Within the last week the greater part of Pearl St. from Wall to Cherry Sts. & the eastern part of the town, has been evacuated. This is certainly disproportionate to the cause. Of the extent of that cause it is difficult to pronounce decisively.

"If, however, I say that 600 people have been & are sick, & about one in ten have died, I imagine that I quite equal, & perhaps exceed the truth. . . . The desertion of that part of the town, which is most affected, renders the number of new cases comparatively small. . . ."—From the original letter, filed with "Miscellaneous MSS." in the N. Y. H. S. See also The Spectator, Jl 7, 1798; and An Account of the Malignant Fever, lately prevalent in the City of New York, by James Hardie (1799).

An interesting drawing of "Haerlem Town" was made at this time by Archibald Robertson, and is now in the Emmet collection, N. Y. Pub. Library. This drawing shows the third Dutch church, which was built in 1788 and demolished in 1825. The drawing is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 60-b. Aug. —

The common council refers to the committee on fortifications a proposal of Wm. Child "to provide reflecting Tellescopes to discern Shipping at a great distance."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 460. 6

The common council permits George Peck "to make a passage from the River, under Cherry Street to draw Timber &c for the building of a Ship of War in his Yard," on his agreeing to restore the street and wharf in good order as soon as the ship is launched.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 460. "

In a message to the legislature, Gov. Jay says that he finds it impossible to build a useful arsenal for the $3,000 appropriated at the last session (see Mr 30), and that it does not appear advisable to begin one "on a plan that would require a larger sum, under an expectation that further and further appropriations would be made to carry it on and finish it."—Messages from the Governors, II: 425. 10

". . . three ships of war are building at New York—a 44, a 36, and a 32, are in various stages of forwardness . . ."—From Boston correspondence in The Centinel of Freedom (Newark), Ag 21, 1798. 15

One of the city physicians complains to Mayor Varick of the venders of fruits and vegetables who "Make a Costom, When the Butchers is Gon, to Move in the [Bear or Hudson] Markett with their Coffee & Frute, and by that Means Collect Numbers of Idol, Drunken, & Durty Men Seting and Lying on the Stalls, So that the Butchers with Difficulty Can Scarcely make them Even Look Deasent, as the Huxsters, more or less of them, Stays until 9 or 10 O'clock at night, & their Frute Draws Large Gangs of unruly Boys, Disturbing the Peasable Inhabitants."—De Voe, Market Book, 322–23. On Aug. 20, the common council ordered the deputy clerks of the markets to "cause all the Hucksters & Vendors of Fruit & Vegitables to be removed from the public Market Places & Streets adjacent at Sun Set every Day except Vendors of Vegitables on Saturday."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 462–63. "

The health commissioners notify the common council "that the Swamp or Meadow between the fresh Water Pond & Hudsons River is overflowed with standing Water & requires immediate Measures to be taken for draining it." The board so orders.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 462. On Nov. 5, payment of £65:11:8 was made "for opening the Drain at Lispinards Swamp."—Ibid., II: 478. 20

Mr. Brearcisen is erecting "a very extensive building" at the corner of Warren St. and Broadway, "for the sole purpose of military exercise." The undertaking has been aided by the "Washington Military Society."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 22, 1798, 22

The volunteer companies are ordered to hold themselves in readiness "to march at a minute's notice." In the evening there is "some Confusion" at the old Coffee House "between Mr. 23

1798 Ag 23 McDougall, and Mr. Burk the Editor of the Time Piece."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 283.

24 Cannon had by this time been placed on the Battery, as is evidenced by a recorded recent attempt to spike one of them. It is recommended that guards be placed every night to protect the cannon and fortifications.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 24, 1798. See N 8.

25 "'Tis said, at least 10 People died this Day, and that the City grows very Sickly."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 203.

26 "It becomes very sickly especially in John Street and Cliff Street and several have been taken off lately."—Alex. Anderson's Diary, 1798 (MS.), 114.

27 The legislature passes an act "for the further Defence of this State." It states that "the fortifications already constructed in the city of New-York and its vicinity, are still greatly inadequate to the defence of the said city and its port." The sum of $150,000 is appropriated for completing fortifications, to be expended under the direction of the president. The sum of $165,000 is appropriated for the purchase of arms, etc., and for building an arsenal (see Mr 30).—Laws of N. Y. (1798), chap. 5 (Webster, 436). See, further, S 26.

" The common council orders that the "Sedan & Bedstead at the City Hall, & the public Hearse" be placed at the disposal of the commissioners of health.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 464.

30 Gov. Jay writes from Albany to Alexander Hamilton regarding military arrangements at New York. (Hamilton has lately been appointed inspector-general of the U. S. Army with the rank of major-general.) He says, in part: ". . . The rifle corps and a few of the new light-infantry companies are established. . . . The defence of the port, etc., in my opinion, should be under your direction. The measures will be concerted between us. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 249. In a letter to Pres. Adams on Sept. 26 (q.v.), Jay recommended such an arrangement relative to the use of public funds for the city's defence.—Ibid., IV: 251.

" "The Town full of Trouble. People moving out very fast."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 204.

Sept. 1 The custom-house is removed from Mill St. (see Mr 10, 1790) to the City Tavern on Broadway.—Spectator, S 1, 1798. It remained here until its occupancy of the government house, May 1, 1799 (q.v.).

3 ". . . about the beginning of August, upwards of twenty persons between Coenties and the Old Slip, were attacked with what appeared to be common colds; . . . about the 12th, a number of persons in the neighbourhood of the New Slip died, but . . . at present [Sept. 3] there appears to be no cause for alarm in that quarter. . . ." This account, taken from the "postcript" of the N. Y. Gaz. of Sept. 3, mentions other places also, and the causes of the yellow fever at this period.—Porcupine's Gaz. (Phila.), S 4, 1798.

" The common council receives and files a report from the health commissioners "of the number of Death's & of Persons sick with the prevailing Fever at Belle Vue." It advances $200 toward the relief of indigent families who are or shall become distressed "during the present prevailing sickness."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 466.

" The common council passes an ordinance for the first paving of South St. from Exchange Slip to Coenties Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 466. See, however, Ap 29, 1799.

4 Avery assures the public that there is "No yellow fever at the Gov't House."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 4, 1798.

5 The following appears in a daily paper under the heading "Machinery for getting clean cool uncontaminated Water into New-York:" "The New-Yorkers are like the rich man told of in the Parable, they have no clean cool water to slack their thirst, when the flames of the plague are devouring their vitals. Yet they pretend their city-water is very pure and nice. It is no such thing. The Collect behind the Tea-water Pump is a shocking hole, where all impure things center together and engender the worst of unwholesome productions; foul with excrement, frog-spawn, and reptiles, that delicate pump is supplied. The water has grown worse manifestly within a few years. It is time to look out some other supply, and discontinue the use of a water growing less and less wholesome every day. Some affect to say the water is very cool and refreshing. Every body knows the contrary of this. . . . Sept. 5 Can you bear to drink it on Sundays in the Summer time? It is so bad before Monday morning as to be very sickly and nauseating; and the larger the city grows, the worse this evil will be.

"Begin therefore in time to provide against the awful and solemn accidents arising from a carelessness on this subject. Already it has been whispered by some vigilant travellers thro our city, that the New-Yorkers are like the Dog in the Manger, they will not provide aqueducts themselves nor let anybody else do it. This is a reproachful saying, and there can be little doubt the public spirit, for which our city is justly celebrated, will shew the reproach cast upon them is unmerited and unjust.

"Our civil and criminal police is equal to any on the continent. In science and politics New-York affords as eminent characters as any in the land . . .; and in their contributions to their suffering fellow citizens or distressed strangers, and in their payment of taxes for public purposes, no class of men launch out their money more liberally or freely, than the New-Yorkers. And yet with all this nobleness of character and zeal in doing good, they can reconcile themselves to drink the nasty wash and slops carted about from the Collect: . . . Take the matter into consideration, and resolve every man for himself, to leave no stone unturned to have this grand object of watering carried thro. Stick to it, until you do it.—Work every mother's Son, until the noble job is done.—For plague will make a yearly slaughter until you furnish better water.—Then New-York will be as famous as old Rome was, and the other cities may learn from us how to do clean things."—Com. Adv., S 5, 1798. See also De Voe, Market Book, 268.

The common council appoints a committee to assist the health 10 commissioners "during the present sickness in the City." They are authorised "to take such Measures for the Relief of the sick & indigent and also to employ such Persons under them in the execution of the Business and also to direct such Physicians to attend the indigent sick as to them shall appear necessary & proper & to make the necessary arrangements with the Health Commiss^rs with respect to the admission of sick Persons at Belle Vue Hospital." The common council will defray all expenses incurred by the committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 467–68. The expenditures of the committee, prior to Dec. 3, totalled $4,600; on that date a payment of £399:8:11 was authorized "for Ball^ce of their Acc^t."—Ibid., II: 469, 473, 476, 483.

Sometime between this date and Nov. 13, the Diary and Mercantile Advertiser (see Mr 20, 1797) became simply the Mercantile Advertiser.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 408. Cf. Early Newspapers, II: 419. 13

"This Day poor Greenleaf died, and Mr. Beache of Philadelphia 14 Sunday last [Sept. 9]. Two Printers gone."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 206.

The yellow fever "now rages, in different degrees, at Newbury- 15 port — Portsmouth — Portland — Providence — Newport — New-London — New-York — Philadelphia — and, reports state, that some of the more southern places have been visited by an epidemic—We hear no more about the sickness in Albany—It is on the decline at Boston."—N. Y. Spectator, S 19, 1798. A writer in the same issue of the Spectator, who subscribes himself "Theorist," treats at length of the causes of yellow fever, as he conceives them. His treatise begins thus: "This dreadful disease baffles all our skill and ingenuity; reason cannot discover its principles, nor account for its operations, no further proof of our ignorance is necessary than the many and various opinions we have about its origin and cure. And its great mortality under our most skilful Physicians."—Ibid., S 19, 1798.

Thomas Greenleaf having died (see S 14), his papers, Argus, 16 Greenleaf's New Daily Advertiser, and Greenleaf's New York Journal & Patriotic Register, are suspended. The Argus was resumed on Nov. 5 (q.v.), and the Journal on Nov. 7 (q.v.), by Ann Greenleaf.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 383, 434; Early Newspapers, II: 418, 424.

Dr. S. L. Mitchill writes from New York to Noah Webster: 17 "New York this time has got a plague indeed. The Scourge is applied severely and cuts deep. I am satisfied more if possible than ever of its local origin. Nobody now talks of importation. It seems to be admitted on all sides to be a home-bred Pestilence. The Inhabitants have really poisoned their City by the accumulation of Excrement, putrid Provisions, and every unclean thing. There is besides this however certainly another cause which is 1798 Sept. 17 the Predisposition to this Disease induced by gross Animal Diet and long use of strong malt liquors, Wines and distilled Spirits. I have witnessed so many instances of it, that I am satisfied, if some of our citizens breathed an Air as pure and balmy as the breezes of Eden, they would engender this Sickness by their way of Life. They would breed it within them. To get the better of these Visitations will therefore require more than municipal Regulations. An alteration and a considerable one too, of Housekeeping and modes of Life will be necessary. . . .

"The daily reports you see in the Advertiser. Three of the Papers have stopped. Among the late deaths are those of Judge Cozine, whose death was published some time before it actually happened; he died however about 8 or 9 hours after the paragraph appeared. of Dr Scandella, the Italian Traveller, who was taken sick the day before his intended departure for Europe. He lodged at the Tontine Coffee-House. The Keeper finding him sick was about to send him away when Dr E. H. Smith entered on a Visit of friendship. He took him home, where he yesterday died, notwithstanding all the assiduities of friendship and the utmost exertion of our professional Skill. of Peter McDougall; John H. Remsen & John B. Jones. The French escape as usual, and I believe the Negroes have a slighter form of it. Poor Smith is sick himself. He was moved from Pine St last night to Mr Seth Johnsons, very unwell—He has been much fatigued. I hope to find him better this Morning." (Dr. Smith died of the fever two days later, an obituary appearing in the Sept. 22 issue of the Spectator.)—Letter of Dr. S. L. Mitchill to Noah Webster, among Noah Webster MSS., in N. Y. P. L. Dr. Mitchill was a professor in Columbia College and, under date of Nov. 4, 1797, had written to Dr. James Haworth, "Radcliffian Travelling Physician from the University of Oxford," emphasizing the value of lime as a purifying agent. In the counties of England and parts of France where calcareous earth abounds the population is healthy, fairly free from plague and if they are beset by pestilence the mortality is very low. In the county of Perth in Scotland the ague used to abound but a lucky accident led to the discovery of the efficacy of lime on that soil not only in "increased productiveness of the land" but also in "greater wholesomeness of the air," the ague disappearing. In America the analogy follows. "The site of New-York is a sandy loam, or gravel, except that part where the plague has usually prevailed hitherto, which is built upon salt meadow, miry swamp, and rotten trash. . . . There are local causes enough to engender the worst forms of distemper, as happened at the famous assizes in Oxford, where the filth, accumulated around the wretched criminals in prison, generated pestilential matter enough to poison a considerable number of the court and attendants."—Medical Repository, Vol. II, No. I, Article X. Perhaps it was Dr. Mitchill who subscribed himself "A Physician" to a "Communication" appearing in the Spectator of Sept. 22. The writer says: "We are sorry to say that many of the streets are particularly offensive at this moment; that the water stagnating in many of them, is highly putrid—examine its color, it is bilious, and of a rancerous appearance, affording every moment a poisonous vapor, which preys on the vital spark of all who are exposed to its atmosphere. . . . Would it not be practicable to have the gutters in our streets frequently strewed with a sufficient quantity of quick lime? This, we presume, would be a powerful source of destruction to the contagion."—N. Y. Spectator, S 22, 1798.

" Through fear of robbers and incendiaries, the common council orders that the city watchmen be doubled, in consequence of so many inhabitants leaving town because of the sickness prevalent in the city.

Persons carrying the dead are not permitted to walk on the sidewalks close to the houses.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 468–69.

19 In a "Communication" to the N. Y. Spectator, "Centinel" says: "This city is now infested by some of the most unfeeling and detestable villains that ever existed. While every virtuous mind is filled with sympathetic sorrow for the general gloom spread over our city, by the pestilence which scourges its inhabitants, there are daemons watching every opportunity to destroy our property by fire and robbery. Those of our inhabitants who have not fled, should be alert and vigilant in detecting and frustrating the nefarious plans which are laid for our destruction. . . . Citizens! be on your guard, and assisted by our faithful and vigilant watchmen, I have no doubt but we shall avoid the pit that has been dug for the ruin of our city."—N. Y. Spectator, S 19, 1798.

Sept. 22 "In consequence of the continuance, and we are sorry to say, increase, of the prevailing Epidemic," the Spectator announces: "We are under the necessity of printing but half a sheet."—N. Y. Spectator, S 22, 1798.

26 Gov. Jay writes to Pres. Adams, with reference to the law of Aug. 27 (q. v.), which appropriates not more than $150,000 towards the defence of the city and port of New York, to be expended under the direction of the president, that he has "lately obtained on loan 100,000 dollars of the above-mentioned sum," and submits to the president "whether, as Major General Hamilton [see Ag 30] is a national officer in whom great confidence may be reposed, it would not be expedient to authorize him to concert with me the plan of laying out this money to the best advantage and to appoint him to superintend the execution of it. I think it would be best that I should leave the money in the Bank of New York, and appoint a proper person to audit and keep the accounts of the expenditures directed from time to time by General Hamilton relative to the works, and pay them as they become due by checks on the bank."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 250.

" The inmates of the debtors' jail issue an address to the public. At a time when a "mortal contagion" is raging and when "the destroying angel hovers over the city, with his sword unsheathed, and a pestilence walks in darkness and at noonday, levelling all distinctions of men: We, the prisoners, beg leave to present you our unhappy and deplorable situation, not doubting but we shall meet that humanity and attention of which the citizens of New-York are on all occasions, so liberal. Confined within the walls of an unhealthy and loathsome prison—deprived of the necessaries of life—our wives and children daily falling victims to the epidemic or starving for want of our aid—The fever already among us, which in some instances, has proved mortal, and threatens instant death to all—The principal part of our Creditors and Attorneys dispersed thro the country—The Sheriff's office shut, and all public business at an end; and We left alone to starve or die with the yellow fever—are calamities which we presume calls loudly on humanity for relief!"—N. Y. Spectator, S 26, 1798.

29 Bellevue has been enlarged to accommodate the numerous yellow fever patients. The newspapers have frequently referred to the hot and wet summer and bad drainage as the probable causes. —N. Y. Spectator, S 29, 1798.

" In connection with the epidemic of yellow fever, Noah Webster contributes to the Spectator an article on pestilential diseases. He lays down the general principles that "Pestilential diseases of all kinds usually originate where they exist;" they are "progressive in their malignity, and several of them usually follow in a series or order;" there are certain periods when the diseases "invade whole quarters of the globe nearly at the same time, and sometimes both hemispheres;" and the duration of these periods "is various, from five to ten, fifteen and even twenty years." After tracing the history of the yellow fever scourges in America, Webster declares that "it is rare for cities between the latitudes of 32 and 45 to escape malignant pestilential diseases for 30 years, at any one time," but adds: "Great good effects however may be brot by introducing different modes of constructing our houses—by changes in diet and habits of bathing, and by the use of fresh running water in cities. The water beneath a city should never be used for drink. . . . Our present mode of building cities, and our present habits of living, will not suffer us to escape pestilence. We are precisely in the latitude most obnoxious to autumnal pestilence; and if New-York, Philadelphia, Boston and Baltimore continue to increase on the present mode of construction till they equal cities of the first or second rate in Europe, it is their inevitable doom to be ravaged with the plague, as often as Cairo or Constantinople. . . .

"There is nothing new in the horrors of the present plague. The same scenes have happened in every period of a few years, from the days of Homer. . . . The present sickness will subside and soon be forgotten, and men will proceed in the same round of folly and vice. All our habits will continue—and the same practice of piling together buildings, accumulating filth, and destroying fresh air, and preparing new and more abundant materials for pestilence, which will continue to assume greater virulence and to prove more destructive to human life, in proportion to the magnitude of our cities. If more wisdom should be exerted in America, it will be a glorious but an unexpected event."—Spectator, S 29.

1798 Sept. 29 1798. In 1799, Webster published, in New York, a work entitled: A brief history of epidemic and pestilential diseases; with the principal phenomena of the physical world, which precede and accompany them, and observations deduced from the facts stated. A testimony to the thoroughness with which he prepared himself for this work is the collection of letters on the subject written to him by eminent physicians from many localities. These are preserved among the Noah Webster MSS. in the N. Y. P. L., and they have been frequently quoted in the Chronology.

" That there is an alarm-bell in the cupola of the federal hall is apparent from a news report stating that it is rung on this day for a fire.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 1, 1798.

Oct. 2 There are not so many deaths as yesterday, but the sickness still rages. The deaths are now "mostly in Rutger's and Delancy's Ground."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 207.

" The common council orders payment of $40 for the relief of indigent families from St. Domingo.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 473. On Nov. 5, $80 was paid for the relief of the "St Domingo Refugees."—Ibid., II: 478. See, further, Ja 27, 1800.

7 Trinity, the only church open in the city, contains only about 40 persons. It is hoped the fever is nearly over.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 208.

19 The fort on Governor's Island "has assumed the appellation of 'Fort Jay'," and is in command of Capt. Frye. When Gen. Pinckney, the late envoy to France, recently arrived in the harbour, this fort gave him a federal salute.—Porcupine's Gaz. (Phila.), O 20, 1798.

30 From Aug. 20 to Oct. 30, there were 1,903 deaths in New York, 1,310 being from yellow fever. About 2,400 persons have been fed daily by public and private bounty.—Columbia Centinel (Boston), N 10, 1798.

Nov. 5 Taxes have not been collected during the prevalence of the fever; the city treasury is exhausted; and the watchmen, lamplighters, and others, remain unpaid. The common council, therefore, orders that the treasurer negotiate a further loan (of not over $5,000) from the Bank of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 477.

" The common council orders that Charles Loss and Jas. C. Lawrence be appointed city surveyors as soon as they become naturalized citizens of the United States.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 477. Loss qualified, and was duly appointed on May 13, 1799 (q.v.).

9 Joseph de la Croix (or Delacroix), the confectioner and caterer, of the Vauxhall Garden, 112 Broadway, advertises that "the New Circus, now Pantheon," is fitted out "in a very commodious manner; a floor being fixed of the same height as the stage which is at present 100 feet long, and therefore may serve for the representation of plays and concerts, balls, public entertainments; also horse and foot, military exercise, as the floor can be removed when necessary. . . . Four large stoves are placed to heat the theatre. . . . Shortly a subscription will be opened on the same plan as the city and junior assemblies. . . ." Wines and liquors are to be obtained on the premises.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 9, 1798. See also N 24.

17 Sir John Temple, British consul-general to "the Northern States of America," dies at New York.—Columbian Centinel (Boston), N 24, 1798.

19 "The late improvement on the post road thro West Chester, is an interesting object. The distance from Harlaem to East Chester is shortened 3 or 4 miles by means of the new bridge; but what is of more consequence, the goodness of the new road makes a greater difference. It is without hills or stones, and the finest road in this part of the country. . . ."—Com. Adv., N 19, 1798. Nov. 19

The Medical Society has appointed a committee to investigate the causes, progress, and probable means of preventing a return of the yellow fever. The common council now does the same.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 481. For the city committee's report, see Ja 21, 1799. "

The common council appoints a committee "to obtain from the Representatives of Casimir Th: Gœrick dec[d] late one of the City Surveyors [see D 11, 1797] such Maps Minutes & Papers as may be of public Use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 482. See D 3.

Joseph Delacroix advertises that "the formerly New Circus, now Pantheon," is completed, and will be opened on Nov. 26 (instead of the 25th) in commemoration of the evacuation of New York by the British. "There will be given a Concert and Ball . . .; the room is large enough for five setts of country dances; . . . spectators may take possession of the boxes. . ., and eight small rooms are furnished near the Theatre for the reception of company. . . . The Theatre will represent a view of Broadway, the background of which will be seen transparently; the evacuation of New York; the ancient Fort will fire a salute of 16 guns on the arrival of our well-beloved Washington; the scene will then change. . . . To conclude with a band of warlike music and a discharge of cannon." 24

Delacroix also proposes, for the winter season, to make "the Pantheon, formerly New Circus," convenient for every sort of public entertainment. Subscriptions are opened to "the Merchants Assembly," at $12.00, limited to a membership of 200. Twelve balls will be given during the season, the members themselves to choose the managers. He proposes a similar subscription for "the Young Gentlemen of this city." He adds that "The Pantheon will often vary in its scenery and decorations."—Daily Adv., N 24, 1798.

For the public celebration on this Evacuation Day, the city paid $160.31 for gunpowder and £41:15 (to Bardin) for the public dinner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 484. 25

"We understand that Monday next [D 3, q.v.] is appointed for the [re-]opening of the New [Park] Theatre, new modled, finished and decorated in a style as superb as it is new, and altogether unparallel'd on this continent. The Company, we are told, forms a mass of varied power and excellence, which when directed by a man who can have no personal biass to sway him from the grand object of affording satisfaction to the public, may be expected to produce as much and as excellent Theatric entertainment as we have at any time experienced. . . . The musical department we are pleased to be informed will be conducted by Mr. Hewit, whose abilities are well known to the public and justly appreciated."—N. Y. Spectator, D 1, 1798. 28

"The New [Park] Theater, in this City, was opened last evening [D 3] for the entertainment of the public. The decorations which the interior of this edifice has lately received, have rendered it by far the most superb and stately spectacle to which Americans have been hitherto admitted. The dimensions of the hall, the spaciousness and central situation of the stage, the commodious distributions of the seats, the profusion of light and the magnificent display of painting and architecture in the casements, the columns and the cupola, are adapted to afford the utmost delight to a judicious spectator. Dec. 3

"The stage is supported by double columns on each side; their pedestals and shafts are painted with uncommon delicacy, and exhibit a vivid resemblance of variagated marble. The base is Attic and the capital adorned with the foliage of the Corinthian order. The entablature by which they are surmounted, is enriched with sculpture. . . .

"A continuation of the pedestal, in a semi-eliptical form, constitutes the front of the lower range of boxes, which are sixteen in number. . . .

"The second tier of boxes are twelve in number, a gallery being substituted in place of the four opposite the stage. . . .

"Above these, conforming to the area of the Pit, arises a vaulted cieling or dome. . . . The surface is an azure scene, interspersed with floating clouds, between which celestial forms are visable. In the front, a Medallion of Washington appears, sustained by an Eagle. The bird is grasping the emblems of abundance and is accompanied by Genii, who suspend their wreaths and garlands, over and around the bust.

An ordinance for the appointment of a Comptroller

Passed September 6th 1802

1. Be it ordained by the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of Newyork in Common Council convened, and it is hereby ordained by the authority aforesaid. That a discreet Freeholder shall be appointed by this board to be called and known by the name of the Comptroller of the City of Newyork

2. And be it further ordained that it shall be the duty of the said Comptroller to examine and to liquidate all claims and to audit all accounts against this Corporation in all cases whatever, and to report the same to the board at each subsequent meeting for its order in the premises, and also to countersign all warrants to be drawn on the Chamberlain or Treasurer of the City for the payment of all monies directed by the board, and in cases where the Comptroller cannot adjust the same without the interference of the board, he shall examine such claim and report the facts containing it with his opinion thereon, and to examine adjust and settle the accounts of all persons indebted to this Corporation, and to all public officers, and others entrusted with money or who shall have received any monies for this Corporation, and shall not have accounted for the same as they ought to have done, and to take charge of all the Real Estate of this Corporation

1798 Dec. 3 "Over the stage and each range of boxes hangs a canopy of green and gold. This assemblage of splendid and graceful objects is made to strike the eye with uncommon force by means of a glass chandelier, containing sixteen lights, depending from the centre of the dome and by fifteen lustres, disposed around it. No expense has been spared to render the illumination of this fairy scene compleat. The number of lights, exclusive of those employed on the stage and in the orchestra, amounts to seventy six.

"The curtain is not unworthy to accompany the rest of the embellishments. It is of blue mohair fringed with gold; in the centre is the lyre of the muses, surrounded with the usual symbols; a ribband floats below, in which the scope of the theatrical limitation is conveyed in these words:

" 'To hold the Mirror up to Nature.' "

"On the whole it may safely be asserted that nothing in America or Europe surpasses the interior of this edifice in the fitness of its arrangement, for the purpose for which it [is] designed, and in its power to delight judicious spectators, by the embellishments of painting and architecture."—Com. Adv., D 4, 1798. See D 14. The actual cost of the theatre amounted to more than $179,000.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 12.

" The common council refers to the street committee a letter from Mr. Mangin, one of the city surveyors, "on the Subject of the Contract [see D 11, 1797], entered into by him & Mr Gœrick decd, to make a Survey & Map of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 482–83. See F 4, 1799.

" A letter from Nicholas J. Roosevelt (see My 15, 1797) "on the Subject of supplying this City with Water" is read in common council and referred to the committee on that subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 483. See D 12.

" The common council refers to the health committee a letter from Chas. Wilson Peale (see Je 25), proposing to sell to this board "his patent Right of erecting Chimnies & fire Places according to his newly invented Plan, within the Limits of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 483. On Dec. 17, the board agreed to the committee's report that the city take the assignment of the patent and pay Peale $500.—Ibid., II: 485. This amount was paid on Dec. 17.—Ibid., II: 487.

4 Richard Bayley, the health officer, in a long letter to the common council, gives the history of "the pestilential disease which has lately prevailed in this city." He presents a retrospect of events "which have annually taken place in this city during the warm months since the year 1795." He shows where the yellow fever broke out, the weather conditions, and what ordinances should be in operation to establish cleanliness.—From the original letter (endorsed "read & filed Decr 27th 1798") in metal file No. 15, city clerk's record-room.

5 During the various changes in name and management of Ricketts's New Circus, Ricketts himself had been on tour. A news item was published Nov. 24 contradicting a report that he had broken his neck in Canada, "in taking his surprising leap over 20 soldiers with fixed bayonets;" and stating that he had arrived in Albany on his way to New York—Com. Adv., N 24, 1798. Now he advertises "Ricketts' Circus," which he intends to open on Dec. 6 for the coming season. "Stoves are erected in different parts of the House to render it comfortably warm."—Ibid., D 5, 1798; Daily Adv., D 4, 5, 6, 1798. His advertisement does not appear again, and this is the last record we find of him in New York. His circus in Philadelphia was destroyed by fire Dec. 17, 1799.—Argus, D 23, 1799, citing the Aurora; and see Greenwood, The Circus (1909), 90. It was not his New York circus or pantheon (as stated in Vol. I, p. 385) which burned.

12 The common council receives a letter from Judge Cooper of Otsego County "proposing on a Contract to lay Pipes in the Streets to convey Water through this City," and refers it to the "Committee on that Subject."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 484. See D 17.

14 "Hamlet was last evening [Dec. 14] received at our Theatre with those demonstrations of pleasure which has uniformly attended the representations of it, since the principal character has been in possession of Mr. [Thomas] Cooper. . . .

"It gives pleasure to the friends of literature to observe the Theatre, this season, takes precedence of all other amusements. We hope every exertion will be made to keep alive the favourable impressions which the late exhibitions have made on the public."—N. Y. Spectator, D 19, 1798. See Mr 20, 1799.

Dec. 17 Joseph F. Mangin, in a letter to the common council, explains the circumstances of a demand made upon him by "the gentleman charged to make the plan of the Harbour of New York," who wanted from Mr. Mangin "the map of the City;" and how he refused, because he was busy for the city in completing the map begun by Mr. Goerck. He says, of the map of the city, that "this is not the plan of the City such as it is, but such as it is to be."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 15, city clerk's record-room. Mangin's letter refers to a demand made on him "by Mr. Loss the engineer surveyor" for the use of "the unfinished survey & Plan of this City which he and Mr. Goerck, decd contracted to make. . . ." The board considers the demand improper, and directs that Mr. Loss be allowed "the use of the survey and Maps in the clerks office of the water Lots on the East and Hudsons Rivers."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 485. The Goerck-Mangin Plan is reproduced and described as Pl. 70, Vol. I.

" The members of the committee appointed "to investigate the Subject of supplying the City of New York with Water" report that they "incline to the Opinion that the Bronx River will afford a copious supply of pure and wholesome Water," and that "They incline also to think that the Plan suggested by Doctor Joseph Brown [see Jl 2] for conveying the Waters of that River, is with some few variations, the most eligible that can be adopted." They suggest "that Mr Weston who has been the Engineer for the Canal Companies in this State and whose abilities are well known, be requested to examine that River with the situation of the Grounds to be employed in the Aqueduct and . . . to report his Opinion to the Corporation with the requisite Plans & Estimates." The members also report that they are persuaded that "the Undertaking ought to be pursued by and under the Controul of the Corporation as the immediate Representatives of the Citizens in general." To effect this they recommend "That an Act be prepared & presented to the Legislature, investing the Corporation with the Powers necessary to effect the great End they have in view and granting them the Monies arising from the Tax upon Sales at Auction in the said City with such further Aid as the Legislature may think proper to enable them . . . to defray the expences incident to the Undertaking." After hearing this report the common council orders that the mayor write to Mr. Weston (see Ja 17, 1799) and that the recorder prepare the law mentioned (see D 27).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 486–87; King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct (1843), 90–91. See also D 24.

23 Gouverneur Morris returns to New York on his recall from his post as minister to France, and takes "lodgings in the Government House;" he was entertained by friends for some days before he retired to his home at Morrisania.—Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris (1888), II: 377; Sparks, Life of Morris, I: 476.

24 The common council orders "that 500 Copies of the Proceedings of this Board [see D 17] together with Doctor Browns Memoir [see Jl 2] on the subject of supplying this City with Water, be printed in Pamphlets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 489. Payment of £17:17 for these was made to John Furman.—Ibid., II: 493.

" The budget of expenses for the city and county of N. Y. to be raised by tax in 1799, if authorised by the legislature, amounts to $150,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 488.

27 Recorder Richard Harison presents to the board three bills, one "for raising Monies by Tax to defray the public Expences of this City," another "for amendg the Act for the better settlement & support of the Poor," and a third "for supplying this City with pure & wholesome Water" (see D 17). These are approved and ordered to "be delivered to the Representatives of this City & County in the Legislature with a Request under the Common Seal that they obtain the passing of the said Bills into Laws."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 490. See F 25, 1799.

31 A statement is prepared showing the "Tonnage Employed in the port of New York for the years 1797 & 1798 with a Comparative statement between the 2 years Ending Each the 31st December." It gives the tonnage by countries, and grand totals.—See miscellaneous "N. Y. City MSS., 1761–1800," in N. Y. H. S.

" * The report of the committee on fortifications and the military committee shows a total expense, since June 29 (q. v.), of $57,242.65, for building four batteries, mounting artillery, procuring military stores, building arsenals, and surveying the harbour. The report is signed by Alexander Hamilton, Ebenezer Stevens, John B. Coles, Gabriel Furman, and John Bogert.—See the original statement of accounts, in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room.

— Prior to this year, Watts Street was laid out.—See Pl. 70, Vol. I; L. M. R. K., III: 1012; and Ag 30, 1802.

— Prior to this year, Cherry St. was extended to East St. (the river).—Pl. 70, Vol. I. See 1730; My 28, 1790; and 1797; also L. M. R. K., III: 996; Pls. 174, 175, Vol. III.

— In this year, the legislature appointed commissioners to procure a new site for quarantine. They selected 30 acres, belonging to St. Andrew's Church, at what is now Tompkinsville, Staten Island.—Morris, Mem. Hist. of S. I., II: 375.

— ". . . They have forced the Hudson back about 200 feet by encasements composed of large trunks of trees, sunk with an enormous weight of stones. On all sides new houses are raising and streets extending. . . . The whole number of streets is 137, the principal of which are Front, Water, Pearl, William, Nassau, Greenwich, Wall, Broad street, and Broad Way. Broad Way is the principal street in this city for beauty, it begins at the Battery and runs in a direct line to what is called Sandy Hill, an extent of two miles, crossing 24 streets and 4 lanes. There are also 12 public slips for the accommodation of coasting vessels, . . .—29 Wharves,—and 5 Docks for the accommodation of ships of any burden, a navy yard, and a number of private yards for ship building. That part of the city which in 1788 [evidently error for 1778], was buried in ruins [see Ag 3, 1778], is now wholly covered with elegant brick houses. . . .

"The number of places for public worship, are three for Presbyterians, five for Episcopalians, one of which has lately received the addition of an excellent chime of bells, four for Baptists, two for Scotch Presbyterians, one for the Associate Presbyterians, three for the Dutch reformed, one for German Calvinists, one for German Lutherans, one for English Lutherans, three for Methodists, one for Quakers, one for French Protestants, one for Universalists, one for Independents, one for Moravians, one for Roman Catholics, and one Synagogue. Besides these, there is the college, gaol, New Almshouse, an extensive building, house of Correction . . . : there are also three public clocks, as well regulated as any in Europe. The city is accommodated with five markets in different parts which are furnished with a great plenty and variety of provisions in neat and excellent order. . . .

". . . except that of Rhode-Island and Portland, in the district of Maine, the harbour of New-York, which admits ships of any burthen, is the best in the United States.

"This city is esteemed the most eligible situation for commerce in the United States. . . . But in the staple commodity (flour) Pennsylvania and Maryland have exceeded it—the superfine flour of those States commanding a higher price than that of New-York; not that the quality of the grain in this State is worse, but because greater attention is paid in those States to the inspection and manufacture of that article. . . .

"New York is the gayest place in America; the ladies in the richness and brilliancy of their dress, are not surpassed in any city in the United States, not even in Charleston, South-Carolina, which has heretofore been called the center of the beau monde. . . .

"The number of inhabitants in the city and county of New-York, which in 1756 was 10,821 amounts now to above 70,000. . . .

"Societies for improvement in knowledge or humanity in this state are rapidly increasing: in the city of New York are the following societies. 'The society for promoting useful knowledge.' This society is upon an establishment similar to the philosophical societies in Europe and America, but it is not incorporated. The members meet once a month. Secondly, 'The society for the manumission of slaves and protecting such of them as have been or may be liberated.' This society meets once a quarter. Both of these societies consist of gentlemen of the first character in the city, and of some in other parts of the state. Besides these there is a marine society, a mechanic society, incorporated by law, a society for the relief of poor debtors confined in gaol, a manufacturing society, an agricultural society lately established, of which the members of the legislature are ex officio members, a medical society, a humane society, and a society for the support of a new and beneficial establishment, the lying in hospital, which was lately incorporated by the state legislature. . . .

"The building [the college], which is only one third of the intended structure, consists of an elegant stone edifice, three complete stories high, with four stair cases, twelve apartments in each, a chapel, hall, library, museum, anatomical theatre, and school of experimental philosophy."—From New and Complete System of Universal Geography, by John Payne (1799), IV: 302–4, 309, 314. 1799 —

"In 1798 [error for 1799], when they were digging in Broadway to lay the Manhattan pipes, by the south corner of Wall-street they dug up a large square post." A man born in 1695 (103 years before) said he "remembered seeing one of the city gate-posts stand there, and said this was the bottom of the post."—Grant Thorburn's Reminiscences (1845), 215. —

In this year, there were published, in Phila., the legal papers in a claim for his estate, instituted by the Rt. Rev. Chas. Inglis, D.D. (formerly rector of Trinity Church, New York, and at this time bishop of Nova Scotia), which claim, in 1798–9, he endeavoured to establish before the commissioners for carrying into effect the 6th article of the "Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation" between Gt. Britain and the United States (see N 19, 1794). —

In this year, Peter Maverick engraved from a survey and drawing by Goerck & Mangin, city surveyors, an official plan of the city of New York. See Vol. I, Pl. 70. —

An interesting water-colour drawing of Broadway and Wall St. made in this year, by John Joseph Holland, showing Trinity Church, the City Hotel, etc., and owned by Trinity Corporation, is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 68-a. —

The common council decides that one commissioner of streets and roads is sufficient. His salary is fixed at $500 per year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 492. See, however, Ap 10. Jan. 7

"For Sale or to Let, For 6 years, if not sold before February next. That remarkable Lot and large House, No. 112 Broadway, opposite the City Tavern, being 37½ feet front and 140 deep with a large stone cistern, a very large ice house, a fine garden of fruit trees, handsome water works. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ja 9, 1799. This was Delacroix's "Vauxhall" or "Ice House Garden." It was not sold by Delacroix until 1836.—See F 15, 1796; F 22, My 2 and 20, Jl 4, 1797; My 1, 1798; Ag 8, 1799. 9

Mr. Weston, of Phila., on receiving Mayor Varick's letter requesting him to investigate the Bronx River as a source for supplying the city with water (see D 17, 1798), informs the common council "that he will repair to this City as soon as possible and engage in the Business."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 492–93. Weston was in the city on Feb. 4 (q. v.). 14

The common council permits Dr. Wm. Burrell "to give Lectures in the great Court Room in the City Hall on the subject of Epidemics and Contagion."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 493. "

A rumour that the common council has withdrawn from circulation the notes it has issued as a substitute for small change, has resulted in the refusal by many citizens to receive them in payment. The board orders that the clerk publish in the newspapers a contradiction of the rumour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 493. "

In their annual report to the legislature, the inspectors of the state prison declare that they have established a "manufactory of shoes," and that 62 convicts "are employed in the various branches of this business." They report also: "The clothes for the prisoners have this year been all made in the house; and the women prisoners have been employed at sewing, washing, ironing, &c. &c. 15

"The work-shops in the prison-yards being now erected, and the appropriation made last session of the Legislature [see Mr 30, 1798] being supposed sufficient to finish the building, it is hoped in the spring, the prisoners will be mostly employed in shoe and nail making, &c. &c.

"In order to carry into effect the humane designs of the Legislature, the prisoners have been treated with humanity, in supplying them with wholesome provisions, cloathing, &c. &c. At the same time, rules have been established to promote cleanliness, regularity, industry and sobriety. . . .

"A hospital has been established, and a physician appointed, whose duty it is to attend twice every week, and an assistant resides in the prison, who compounds and administers the medicines under the direction of the physician. . . .

"It being generally from ignorance and corrupt manners that crimes proceed, a mitigation of punishment ought to be accompanied by a diffusion of knowledge . . .; under these impressions the Inspectors have supplied each prison room with a bible and 1799 Jan. 15 school books, by which means many that were quite ignorant on their coming into the prison, are now able to read the scriptures; and they also propose for them to instruct each other in evenings at writing and arithmetic; such indulgence however will depend on their own good behaviour. . . .

"The inspectors are of opinion, that the convictions for petit larceny are much encreased by the number of petty taverns and grog shops throughout the State, but particularly in the city of New-York; and it is much to be lamented that horse racing, cock fighting, and houses of ill fame are not more effectually suppressed, as they only serve to encourage idleness, gaming, drunkenness and many other vices, that engender small crimes, which lead to greater ones. . . ."—Assemb. Jour. (1799), 83–86.

16 A news item reads: "The publication, by order of the Common Council of this city, of Dr. Brown's Memoir of the utility and means of furnishing the city with water from the River Bronx [see Jl 2, 1798] is a proof of the candor of that Body, and must meet the approbation of every citizen. The Doctor has written with considerable ingenuity. It is to be wished that he had taken into consideration the effect of the extreme heat and cold to which the works must be exposed—An acqueduct twelve miles in length is liable to twelve times the accidents of an acqueduct of only one mile. It will demand a long time to execute; and to render the work permanent a much larger sum than he states; but were it to cost three times as much it must be done."—Com. Adv., Ja 16, 1799. See Ja 18.

18 "The citizens of New-York, will learn with Satisfaction that an Engineer [William Weston] of great experience and abilities has been sent for by our corporation, in order to ascertain from actual survey, the practicability of introducing water into the city from Brunx's river. Should the bed of that stream be found to lie higher than the level of the City, we understand it is the determination of the Corporation to proceed to the important undertaking with as little delay as possible. In a measure that must combine such numberless conveniences, and incalculable benefits, as the one in contemplation, we believe every heart that wishes well to the City will cheerfully concur."—Com. Adv., Ja 18, 1799. For a criticism of the plan to introduce water from the Bronx, see Ja 24.

21 The common council orders that a memorial, signed and sealed by the mayor, be presented to the legislature "praying that provision be made for repaying the $60,000 provided by this Board towards the fortifications lately erected for the Defence of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 493. See Je 13 and 25, 1798. On Oct. 14, 1799, the mayor presented to the common council the state comptroller's warrant on the state treasurer for this amount with interest.—Ibid., II: 577.

" "A Letter from John Kortright of Harlem covering a Release of a parcel of Ground purchased by himself & others of Elizabeth Waldron & John Waldron to open a Road of twenty feet wide from the Post Road to Meuttie Davids Vly on Hudsons River," is read in the common council meeting and referred to the road commissioner. The board directs that the parties be informed "that a Road of less than 60 feet wide cannot be accepted & worked at the public Expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 494. On Feb. 4, a letter on the subject from John P. Waldron was read and referred to a committee.—Ibid., II: 510. This road cannot positively be identified. It does not seem to have been opened on these lines; and without doubt one of the streets of the old village of Manhattanville took its place. They were all 60 ft. wide.

" The common council, after a hearing, orders to be printed a report submitted by the joint committees of this board, the Chamber of Commerce, the Medical Society, and the commissioners of the health office, who were appointed (see N 19, 1798) "to investigate the causes of the pestilential disease which has lately prevailed in this City, and to suggest the best means to prevent its return." The causes, which are considered at length, were "Deep Damp Cellars and Filthy Sunken Yards," "Unfinished Water Lots," "Public Slips," "Sinks and Privies," "Burial Grounds," "Narrow Streets," "Sailors Boarding Houses and Tipling Houses," "Digging up Made Ground," "Putrid Substances," "Water," and "Tents" (the scarcity of which compelled the poorer inhabitants to stay in the infected parts of the city). For each of these causes suitable corrective measures are recommended.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 494–99.

This report was supplemented on Jan. 28 by an additional report, more in detail, and stronger and more specific in its recommendations. One recommendation was that "All empty carts, hackney coaches, or sleds for hire, standing in any of the streets, squares, or on wharves, south of Pearl and Cherry streets, or west of Greenwich street, shall . . ., be arranged one behind another, five feet distant from the kennels on each side, . . . so as to make foot passengers on the side-walks safe from vicious horses, leaving the middle part of such street, and the kennels free and open for cleansing." Jan. 21

Another was that "No cartman shall ride shavings, litter or straw, . . . otherwise than in sheaves or bundles without a tight box of four feet high, and six feet long, . . ."

Another: "The open space between Water street and the head of the Old Slip, is recommended as a proper place for the sale of ship's tackle and materials, earthen ware in crates, hogsheads or bulk, and every other place for the sale of those articles at auction, . . ."

Also: "In suggesting the means of removing the causes of pestilential diseases, we consider a plentiful supply of fresh water as one of the most powerful; and earnestly recommend that some plan for its introduction into this city, be carried into execution as soon as possible."

The common council thereupon ordered that the recorder prepare a law to be passed by the legislature granting adequate powers to this board to carry the proposed regulations into effect.—Ibid., II: 500–8, 509. The original draft of the supplemental report, containing 15 folio pages, is preserved in metal file No. 19, city clerk's record-room.

The common council pays £445:14:2 for "an additional Building at Belle Vue Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 499. "

24 "A Citizen" addresses the following open letter to the city corporation: "Having heard that your honorable body have it in contemplation to supply this city with water, by means of diverting the course of Bronx river, I think it my duty to give all the information . . . respecting said river.—The Bronx does not contain a sufficient quantity of water for the supply of this city. From an accurate measurement it is found to contain 28 by 3½ inches in the months of July, August, September and October, when the greatest quantity of water will be necessary for supplying the inhabitants, and cleansing the city the river is often found to be below that estimate. This objection will be constantly increased with the growth of the city and its population. . . . In a pamphlet lately published by Dr. Brown, he asserts that the Bronx river has its principal source in a lake to the northward of the White Plains. I allow that it receives some contributions from the above mentioned lake; but do not grant that it has its principal source there. . . . I have been informed by . . . farmers living on the banks of the Bronx, that the stream twenty and thirty years ago, was almost as large again as it is at present, and if this be true the same causes which have diminished this river heretofore, will of course produce the same effect hereafter. . . . The water of this river has no pernicious qualities so far as I have been able to learn, but yet it is not used for culinary purposes, by those people who live on its banks, unless it is impossible to obtain spring water. . . . All the water in the Bronx river during the four dryest months in the year will not turn a water wheel of 20 feet diameter and 36 inch bucket, with force sufficient to throw the water 80 feet high, exclusive of furnishing a sufficient quantity for the use of the city. Since the Bronx cannot be brought to this city without pumps and engines, could not the same machinery with greater facility and less expence be erected in the vicinity of the Collick. If the water of the Collick itself is objected to wells sufficiently large might be made near its margin, which will remove that objection."—Daily Adv., Ja 24, 1799. This was answered by a "Bronxite" on Jan. 30 (q. v.).

26 Chancellor Robert R. Livingston writes from Clermont to Thomas Jefferson concerning steam navigation or, as he says: "of an invention with which I have a few days past amused my leisure hours." This was two years before he met Robert Fulton in Paris, where the two became associated, two years after he had constructed a steamboat that was a failure, and one year after he had obtained from the legislature of the state of New York a grant of the right to navigate by steam the waters of the state (see Mr 27, 1798). Fulton's biographer refers to "Chancellor Livingston, who had, by his own experiments, approached as near success as any other person who before Fulton had attempted to navigate 1799 Jan. 26 by Steam."—Clarkson, Biographical Hist. of Clermont or Livingston Manor (1869), 121–23; Renwick, "Life of Robert Fulton," in Sparks' Library of Am. Biog. (N. Y., 1854), X: 62–63.

30 A "Bronxite," answering the letter of Jan. 24 (q.v.) concerning the disadvantages of the Bronx River as a source of water supply, says: "Will the citizen be good enough to inform the Corporation where it was that the accurate measurement of the Bronx was taken, when it turned out to be only 28 by three one half inches? . . . Mr Lorrilard has a snuff mill situated on the Bronx just below where Dr Brown recommends it to be diverted from its present channel. The Float Boards of his water wheel are five feet in length, the aperture of the penstock is four inches high and five feet in length—the head and fall of water six feet—during the dryest time of last Summer this mill was able to work twelve hours per day;—the water then that fell on this wheel and was discharged below it, was 34 cubical feet per second, which is 62 one half pounds per foot, is equal to 11,457,000 gallons in 12 hours—which is nearly forty times the quantity that is supposed to be necessary for the supply of New York at 300,000 gallons per day. . . . The Citizen winds up by recommended the City to be supplied out of that stinking mud-puddle the Collect, or as he calls it the Collick. I would advise him to make a little further alteration in the name, and call it Colic—it will then be descriptive of its effects. . . . P. S. Since writing the above I have seen a man who has resided within a few rods of the river Bronx, almost all the days of his life; he is now near sixty years of age, he says that he believes the Bronx to be full as copious now as it ever has been in his time—and that he has never heard it observed by his neighbours that it diminishes in quantity."—Daily Adv., Ja 30, 1799.

31 "A Bell of immense size, together with a large Clock of a superior structure [see Ap 11, 1796], has come out per the Cheeseman, from London, for St. Paul's Church. The weight of the Bell we understand to be 3.3 C. The Church steeple is in readiness to receive them, and the citizens may shortly expect to be gratified with a display of their elegance and usefulness."—Com. Adv., Ja 31, 1799. Feb. 4 Mayor Varick informs the common council that Mr. Weston (see Ja 14) has arrived at New York "to assist this Board with his Opinion & Advice on the subject of supplying this City with wholesome Water." The committee on that subject is thereupon ordered to "wait upon Mr Weston & communicate to him the Intentions of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 509–10. For Weston's report, see Mr 14.

On this day, also, a letter from Mr. Mangin "on the supplying of the City with Water" was read and referred to the committee. —Ibid., II: 510.

Hamilton writes from New York to Gov. Jay: "The survey of this port to the Narrows inclusively has been executed and the expense defrayed out of the funds of the Corporation. But it is interesting to the question of the defence of our port to have a survey of the bay below the Narrows to Sandy Hook. There are sand banks critically situated which merit consideration as proper sites for fortification. Such a survey was made under the direction of the British commanders and a Mr. Hill possesses a draft of that part of the bay. He will not take less for it than 800 dollars; am told the survey of the upper part cost 600 dollars. In proportion, that of the part below will be moderate at 800. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 254. 12

A New Yorker writes a long letter to a friend on the subject of the city's water supply. He says in part: "It seems to be generally allowed, that a greater supply of water is wanted in the city of New-York, than we have hitherto enjoyed, for the common wants of life, and for the purposes of extinguishing fires, and cleansing the streets. . . . 14

"It appears to be a generally adopted opinion, that we must go to some distant place to acquire this desideratum; and Bronx river is the present object of investigation. From this source, if practicable, it is expected the city will be supplied with a necessary quantity of water for drinking and culinary purposes." The writer here declares that it will be useless as well as unnecessary to bring the water from the Bronx into the city, because it is very unhealthy, and the supply from the Tea Water Pump is both pure and sufficient for drinking purposes. He then continues: "When Bronx river was first mentioned, it was generally supposed that the height of its source would enable us to bring it into town, by pipes, or an open canal, without the aid of steam engines; but, it appears now, that they must necessarily be used at Haerlem-river—after the Bronx is brought there—to raise it to a height, at two stations, of 80 feet above the level of the River. What a complicated business this will become, should it ever be adopted!

"The ground near the tea water pump, the vicinity of the white Conduit house, or Bunker's-hill, would give us springs, if wanted, . . . but it is not wanted—the inhabitants of New-York have already as much good water as they can use—when the town doubles its size, if one hundred tea water carts are not enough to supply it, establish two hundred—the spring will never fail us.

"That a copious supply of water is wanted to cleanse the city and extinguish fires, there can be no doubt. The means of acquiring this supply, are plain, simple, and can be put into immediate execution. Sea water is as good for this purpose as fresh; perhaps better. I would advise that a water tower should be erected on the East-River, above Corlear's-Hook, and another above the State-Prison, on the North-River, on the plan of the water tower at Somerset Stairs in London. . . . Two such structures would supply us with abundance of water."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 18, 1799.

"The New Circus, or Pantheon," situated in Greenwich St., is now offered for sale or to let for six years time, from the 25th March next. "Said Circus may be employed for a play house, horsemanship, or assembly room, there being a floor which can be put up and taken down at pleasure; also all sceneries necessary for comedies, tragedies, pantomimes, &c. There are rooms fronting the street in each corner of the house, suitable for families to live in, and having no communication with the other parts of the building. Also a stable that will accommodate twelve horses. . . ."—Daily Adv., F 19, 1799. 19 25 Mayor Varick informs the common council "That on Friday last [Feb. 22] Mr Burr one of the Members from this City in the Assembly of the State together with John Murray Esqr as the President of the Chamber of Commerce, Gulian Verplanck Esqr as the President of the Office of Discount and Deposit of the Bank of the United States in this City, Peter H. Wendover as the President of the Mechanic Society together with Major General Hamilton and John Broome Esqr, . . . called on him and stated to him in the Presence of the Recorder, . . . that great difficulties had arisen in the minds of the Members of the Legislature touching the Powers requested to be vested in this Board, by the Bill for supplying this City with Water [see D 27, 1798] and the Bill for investing this Board with adequate Powers in relation to certain objects of importance to the Health of the City: that it was Problematical whether those Bills would Pass in the form Proposed and He therefore submitted the Propriety of this Board requesting the Legislature that if those Bills respectively should not be deemed Proper in the form by the Board, the Legislature should make such Provisions on the several Subjects thereof as to them should appear most eligible.

"That after some Conversation with Mr Burr and the other Gentlemen accompanying him the Recorder and himself requested that their Propositions might be stated in Writing to be communicated to the Board on this day." After the mayor had made this report, Recorder Harison presented "a paper without Signature which he stated to the Board he had received from Major General Hamilton as the Propositions for their consideration." The common council thereupon passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That before the Board proceed upon the said Propositions they ought to be sanctioned by the Signature of the parties recommending the same; And that the Nature and Circumstances of the Difficulties which have attended the several applications made on the behalf of this Board to the Legislature should also be stated.

"Resolved further that the above Resolution be communicated by Mr Burr and Major General Hamilton [see F 26] without delay; And as the objects above alluded to are of great importance to the welfare of the City, the Mayor be requested to call a special Meeting of this Board as soon as he shall receive the Proper communications in consequence of the above Resolution."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 514–15. So far as the minutes disclose, no bill for supplying the city with water had been introduced into either the senate or the assembly up to this time.—Senate Jour. (1799), 3–57; Assemb. Jour. (1799), 3–144. See F 26, 28; My 1.

" Isaac Man again petitions for payment for "a quantity of Pine Logs, furnished the Corporation on a Contract entered into in 1774 [q.v., N 8], for Pipes to supply the City with Water." The members of the common council to whom his former petition was referred (see F 19, 1798), thereupon report "that from the great lapse of Time & the not being able to have recourse to the Books of Acct & Papers which were taken away by Mr Cruger the then Treasurer of the Corporation who joined the British Army & with them left this Country, they had not been able to obtain satisfactory Evidence of the delivery of the Pine Logs agreable to the said Contract nor of the payments which probably might have been made to Mr Man on acct thereof." After hearing this report the board determines that it is "their Duty as Trustees for the public to leave Mr Man to substantiate his Demand by a Suit at Law."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 515.

26 In reply to Mayor Varick's letter enclosing the resolutions of the common council on Feb. 25 (q.v.), Alexander Hamilton writes: "The Resolutions of the Common Council discover a mistake as to the Characters under which the Gentlemen named in them made their Communication to yourself and the Recorder. They did not pretend to appear in an official Capacity, but intended to be considered merely as private individuals.

"As such they gave information which they thought might be useful to the City. Specific Propositions in Writing were requested from not proposed by them—these were sent in an informal shape, because it was not meant to attach formality to their interposition. Having been digested by me as the Sum of a previous conversation among ourselves, I have no objection to authenticate them by my Signature—and I freely add that the changes in the Plan of the Corporation which they suggest have the full concurrence of my Opinion." In his summary of the "Propositions," Hamilton states Feb.
that in the corporation's plan for supplying the city with water, 26
the expense is to be defrayed by a grant from the legislature of the revenue arising from sales at auction (see D 17, 1798), and that it is very doubtful whether the legislature will grant this, "diminished as are some of the sources of revenue, on which it has for sometime relied." He also declares that even if the grant were made, the sum realized would fall far short of the requisite amount, "if the business be done on a Scale sufficiently extensive." As "it will Promote the Convenience of the Citizens and secure the final Success of the object to let in the aid of a Capital to be created by the voluntary contributions of individuals," the suggestion is made that "a Company be incorporated of all those who shall subscribe to the fund with a Capital not exceeding a Milion of Dollars to be composed of Shares of fifty Dollars each, the affairs of which to be managed by seven directors annually chosen by the Subscribers, except that the Recorder of the City for the time being shall always be one." The plan also includes a provision that the city corporation have the privilege of subscribing for any number of shares not exceeding a third, "to enable them to do which a Grant of the Auction duties to continue to be solicited, and a power to be asked to raise on the City an annual revenue equal to the interest and gradual reimbursement of the Principal of such additional Loans as may be found necessary." As a further argument for the formation of the company, Hamilton and his associates contend "that the Prompt and vigorous execution of what is to be done . . . will be better effected by Commissioners to be appointed for the special Purpose, than by a body whose attention must necessarily be engrossed and distracted by a great multiplicity of other avocations."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 517–19. See F 28.

Alexander Hamilton's letter of Feb. 26 (q.v.) and the plan of 28 having a company supply the city with water instead of its being done by the city corporation are read in common council, and a resolution is passed stating that, "altho' the members of this Board have not been unwilling to subject themselves to great trouble and responsibility from a sense of Duty, Yet having no private Motives to wish for any peculiar Agency in this business, they will be perfectly satisfied if the objects in View are pursued in any Way that the Legislature may think proper by which their fellow Citizens may be benefitted in the most easy, safe and effectual method, and the Charter rights of the City remain inviolate." A copy of this resolution, "together with the Papers and Proceedings of the Board relating to the Subject," is ordered to be sent to "such Members of the Board as are at present in the Legislature."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 520–21. See Mr 27.

a communication regarding "A new Mode of constructing & placing Lamps in the Streets," which was "pre[se]nted by Mr Bitlinger."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 521.

An earlier proposal of this kind was made by one Thomas Whitney, of 40 William St., who wrote to the common council an undated letter regarding an improved method of constructing street lamps so that they would consume about half the quantity of oil then used,—which "by Mr Elsworth's acct amounts to 8 or 9 gallons per Lamp yearly." He offered to supply such lamps, and the board expressed the wish to see one at its next meeting.—See the original letter in metal file No. 5, city clerk's record-room. Wm. Elsworth, mentioned in this letter, was appointed March 29, 1791, to direct the placing of public lamps (ibid., I: 633); and was made superintendent of lamps April 25, 1796 (ibid., II: 233); and resigned Oct. 23, 1797 (ibid., II: 400).

A petition, with about 100 signatures of "Owners and Occu- " pants of Houses and Lots of Ground situate in the first and second Wards and Vicinity," asks for the removal of the "Exchange" (on Broad St.). It states that, when these memorialists presented a former petition for the same purpose, they were given to understand "that the pleasure of the Corporation was against the 1799 Mar. 4 prayer . . ." Now, they explain "That the Exchange, together with the Drain or Common Sewer, over which the Exchange is built, are Recepticales for Filth and Immorality

"That during the past moderate Weather contaminated Air was continually issuing from out of the said Drain, and particularly so, when the wind was to the Southward which Evinces your Memorialists that the most dreadful consequences are to be apprehended, provided it should remain in its present State until the coming of the warmer Season.

"That the public as well as private Interest calls loudly for the removal of the Exchange—for shou'd it take Fire your memorialists deem inevitable destruction and utter Ruin must to the adjacent Buildings ensue—It obstructs the passage of the Streets contiguous thereto, and prevents the free circulation of Air, and in short, to say the most of it, it is visibly a Theatre for Obscenity.

"That your Memorialists having maturely surveyed the premises, are of opinion, that the said public Building called the Exchange, instead of being a benefit, is in every sence of the word a public Nuisance; and your Memorialists verily believe that unless every Nuisance is thoroughly removed a return of the said Malignant or Yellow Fever may be expected. . . ."—From the original MS., in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room, endorsed ". . . consideration postponed till next meeting of the Bd;" *M. " By a vote of seven to five, the common council decides to grant the petition of March 4 (q.v.) "for the taking down & removing the public Building, in the lower part of Broad Street, called the Exchange," and appoints a committee to "take order" to remove it between May 20 and June 20 next, "reserving for the public use the Bell & stone flagging in & about the said Building & such other Articles as they shall judge proper;" it also orders that the clerk "notify Mrs Baker the present Occupant of the determination of the Board on this Subject and that she remove from the said Building by the 20th of May next."—*M. 14 William Weston (see F 4) reports favourably to Mayor Varick "on the practicability of introducing the Water of the River Bronx into the City of New-York." Although he admits that it would take less time and less money to use the Collect as the source, he contends that the supply from the latter would not be as great nor the quality as good.—Report of William Weston, Esquire, on the practicability of introducing the Water of the River Bronx into the City of New-York (printed by John Furman, N. 16 Mr. Weston's report on the subject of supplying the city with water comes before the common council, and the board orders "that it be printed in Pamphlet in like manner as that of Dr Browne on the same subject and that a manuscript Copy be immediately sent to the Members of this Bd in the Legislature at Albany."—*M. The bill is read a first time and, by unanimous consent, a second time also. It is committed to Aaron Burr, J. Lansingh, and Mr. M'Neil.—Assemb. Jour. (1799), 261. The bill was passed on April 2 (q.v.). 27

The legislature passes an act for the gradual abolition of slavery in New York State. It provides that "Any child born of a slave after the 4th of July next shall be deemed to be born free;" with, however, the proviso that such child continue a servant until a certain age, as if it had been bound to service by the overseers of the poor. The owner of a slave was permitted to manumit such slave immediately.—Laws of N. Y. (1799), chap. 62. 29

John Murray, Jr., writes to Alderman Post: "I am desirous of having permission to plant some Trees before my Houses in Pearl Street—being the one I at present reside in, & the New One adjoining—please to mention it to the Common Council on the first of next week. . . ."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. No action appears in the minutes. 30

The Monthly Magazine and American Review, edited by Charles Brockden Brown, and pub. by T. & J. Swords, New York, appears. It ran for 3 vols., ending Dec., 1800. The common council rejects a petition of Messrs. Ellis and Clarkson to plant trees in front of their houses in Liberty St., "because the Street is less than 40 feet Wide;" and orders "that a notification be published informing the Inhabitants that Trees may be planted in any Street of the Wedth of 40 feet & upwards."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 529–30. "

The legislature passes "An Act for supplying the City of New-York with pure and wholesome Water." This act incorporates Daniel Ludlow, John B. Church, John Watts, Joseph Browne, and their present and future associates as "The President and Directors of the Manhattan Company," which company has been formed for the aforesaid purpose. The capital of the corporation is limited to $2,000,000, the price of each share is to be $50, and there are to be 40,000 shares, 2,000 of which may be subscribed for by the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York. The affairs of the company are to be in the hands of the recorder of the city and 12 directors elected annually by the stockholders on the second Tuesday of December. Until that time the following directors are appointed—Daniel Ludlow, John Watts, John B. Church, Brockholst Livingston, William Edgar, William Laight, Paschal N. Smith, Samuel Osgood, John Stevens, John Broome, John B. Coles, and Aaron Burr. Besides being empowered to erect dams, lay pipes, and do other things necessary toward supplying the city with water, the company is authorised "to employ all such surplus capital as may belong or accrue to the said company in the purchase of public or other stock, or in any other monied transactions or operations not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state or of the United States, for the sole benefit of the said company."—Laws of N. Y. (1799), chap. 84. This will correct Vol. I, p. 392, which mentions "David" Ludlow. 2

Under the powers granted by the last-mentioned clause, the Manhattan Company opened an office of discount and deposit (see My 15), and later started a bank. It has been a common 1799 Apr. 2 tradition that the banking privilege contained in the charter, apparently as a subordinate feature, was really the main object of the projectors, and was thus covertly introduced to avoid the opposition which Burr was certain to encounter from Alexander Hamilton and the Federal party. Although his name does not appear prominently in the charter, Burr was the leader in the organization of the company (see My 1 and 22). The first meeting of the directors was held on April 11 (q.v.).

10 The common council grants to the managers of the "State Road Lottery" the use of a room in the city hall to draw the lottery, and of the wheels and apparatus remaining of the former lottery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 531.

" Mayor Varick lays before the common council "the new Map of the City made by Mr Mangin," and the board commits it to a committee "to examine & to correct as to the Names of the Streets; & also to report a Mode for obtaining subscribers to the Work."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 532. See, further, Jl 15; and N 30, 1801.

The mayor represents to the board "that Mr Mangin requested a further advance of Money" (see D 4, 1797), but "as the state of his Acct against the Board could not be immediately known," the mayor suggests lending him $200 "on his Note payable in six Months." The board agrees.—Ibid. See, further, Ag 14; also, regarding the notes, N 28, 1803.

" The common council adopts the recommendations of a committee report on street cleaning, which provides for collecting "Street Dirt and Manure" at the city's expense, and selling it. For convenience in carrying this arrangement into effect, the city is divided into three districts, in which the streets are to be swept and the dirt removed in daily rotation. Carts are to be hired to remove the dirt and manure "either to Vessels or to some place to be provided in or near to the City for the Temporary deposit of such parts as may not be taken away dailey by Vessels;" and, to avoid too long a stay or too large an accumulation at the place of temporary deposit, "two Pettit Augers" (pettiaugers or periaguas) are to be employed occasionally to remove the manure from the first place of deposit to one more distant, and "when not engaged in doing this they may be employed in delivering Manure at such Landings as may Suit the Convenience of purchasers." The new regulation also provides "That two Men with Carts and Bells be employed to go daily through the two Districts that are not Sweeping for the purpose of Collecting the Garbage and Offals from Yards and Kitchens for which purpose they shall Ring the Bell at Suitable Distances to Notify the Inhabitants to bring out the same and put it into the Carts." It further provides for the appointment of two street commissioners, whose duty shall be "to Examine all Lots, Cellars, Sewers, Sinks and Yards," and report when they need to be filled up, altered or cleansed, employing a superintendent or other persons to accomplish this work, sell the manure, keep accounts, etc.

The board at once appointed a second street commissioner—John Bogert— in addition to Richard Furman; made them city surveyors, and ordered that the "Drudge" for cleaning out the docks and slips be put under their direction.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 532–54.

" The common council receives a letter from Daniel Ludlow, president of the Manhattan Company, together with a copy of the company's charter (see Ap 2).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 534–35. See Ap 11.

" The common council refuses to grant a request of Wm. Neilson "to plant a Row of Forest Trees in front of his Lot at the upper end of the Broad Way adjoining the Sandy Hill & to erect a temporary Fence about eight Feet from his Line for their protection;" but does permit him to "plant his Trees on the outer Edge of what will in time be the foot Walk of the Street & secure them with Boxes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 535. The land of William Neilson was at the south-west corner of the road leading from Greenwich to Bowery Lane (the Sand-hill Road) and Elbert St. (now Greene St.).—Liber Deeds, LVII: 108. On the present map of the city, it lay on the west side of Greene St., north and south of Waverly Place, which was cut through the property.

" James L. Smith, vendue master, in a petition to the common council, recites the fact that the city "has been pleased to establish a Horse-Market opposite the Bridewell;" that, "from the great concourse of people that attend the Sales," he "experiences many inconveniences," and asks that posts "be erected bordering on the foot-path, in order to make fast thereto the Horses intended for Sale." He also "requests permission to have a Rostrum erected on the spot, Something similar to a Sentry Box," in order that he "may not mix with the croud at the time of Sale," and that he "may have a better opportunity of noticing the bidders by being exalted in the course of business."—From the original petition, in metal file No. 15, city clerk's record-room. Apr. 10

11 The first meeting of the president and directors of the Manhattan Company (see Ap 2) is held at the Tontine City Hotel, and Samuel Osgood, John B. Coles, and John Stevens are appointed a committee "to report with all convenient speed, the best means to be pursued to obtain a supply of pure and wholesome water for the city of New-York."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 22, 1799. See Ap 17.

15 The corporation pays £2,000, the first requisition on its subscription to 2,000 shares of the Manhattan Society.—Journal B, 135, chamberlain's office.

17 The Manhattan Company resolves that a sum not exceeding $1,000 be appropriated to defray the expenses of the committee, appointed on April 11 (q.v.), for securing information as to the best mode of supplying the city with water.—Greenleaf's N.Y. Jour., My 22, 1799. The committee advertised for advice on April 20 (q.v.).

18 Walter Rutherfurd writes: "Hammond has sold his fine house to Vandenheuvel for £13,000 and taken a house in Liberty St. . . . He sold two acres at Greenwich for five hundred dollars each for the two banks that build immediately."—Rutherfurd. Family Records and Events, 188.

19 Aaron Burr, Wm. Laight, and John Watts advertise on behalf of the Manhattan Company that "a book for receiving subscriptions is opened, and that they will attend at the Tontine City Tavern in Broadway, on Monday the 22d inst, and thenceforth daily until further notice, from 11 to 2, and from 5 till sunset, each day; at which times and place all citizens disposed to encourage the institution may attend for the purpose of subscribing."—N. Y. Jour., Ap 20, 1799. See Ap 27.

" "Souci" addresses the following open letter to the president and directors of the Manhattan Company: "Having understood that it is contemplated as a temporary measure, to erect a Steam Engine on the margin of the Collect, to force its waters thro the streets, as a means of cleansing them and the common sewers of the city, thro which its filth is principally discharged—I take the liberty of laying before you a few observations on the probable effects of such a measure.

"From information I have received from old inhabitants, it appears that the Collect has within a few years been surprisingly diminished in depth, from a great accumulation of every species of filth; its bottom is a black, slymy fetid mud—into which a pole may be thrust many feet before you arrive at hard bottom. The whole area of the pond is about five acres, its greatest depth 12 feet—its shape resembles a round Hat inverted, having a brim and crown—the brim part contains about 3/5 of the whole, which deepens in going 100 feet from its exterior circumference, about 6 feet, it then acquires almost immediately its full depth, that is, 12 feet—the medium depth of the brim of the pond may therefore be estimated at 3 feet, each foot in depth of the pond contains 2,380,525 gallons of water; the whole water therefore contained in the brim of the pond amounts to 7,141,575 gallons—admitting that 400,000 gallons of water be taken from this pond daily, for 17 days for the intended purposes, the whole brim will then become bare—consequently about 3 acres of this putrifying mass will be left to the full influence of the summers sun. I have not taken into the account any supply from internal springs, because there is no evidence of there being such; at present there is not apparently any discharge at all from the Collect, of course the supply can be only adequate to the quantity daily evaporated. . . .

". . . The great object intended by introducing large quantities of water into the city, is to remove from the streets and common sewers, every species of animal and vegetable matter whilst undergoing a decomposition. . . . To uncover five acres of putrid mud, nearly in the centre of the city, with a view of scowering occasionally half an acre of common sewers, is to me an idea the most monstrous, and capable of producing effects the most pernicious. . . .

1799 Apr. 19 "I am well aware it will be said that it is not intended to take the waters immediately from the collect, but to dig one or more large wells in its vicinity, this in my opinion does not alter the principle—for the Collect must either be the source of the springs in its neighborhood or the effect of them. . . . It may possibly happen that a large well may be dug near the Collect and give 400,000 gallons of water per day and not exhaust the source. If the experiment be made I shall be glad to find it true—I am afraid, however, that there is not much rational ground for the hope. . . .

"You are placed in a very delicate situation, the powers you possess were sought for by the Corporation, but the Legislature thot them better confided to you—your decision on the Collect will determine the propriety of the appointment; or the deaths of thousands of useful citizens may arraign their peu de soin."—Com. Adv., Ap 19, 1799.

20 Samuel Osgood, John B. Coles, and John Stevens, having been appointed a committee "to report to the Corporation of the Manhattan Company the best mode of procuring a supply of Water from sources in the vicinity of the city, & the probable expence thereof" (see Ap 11), advertise that they "will very gratefully receive any information on this important subject, which any of their fellow-citizens may please to communicate to them, more particularly with respect to a proper spot of ground for digging a well, and the quality of the water, and how many gallons might probably be obtained every 24 hours."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 1, 1799. See Ap 22.

21 A fire breaks out on the west side of Washington St., between Cortlandt and Dey Slips, and consumes the whole block except three houses. A newspaper report adds: "Several buildings at a considerable distance from the conflagration, were frequently set on fire from the flakes carried by the strong westerly wind—one of them reached even to the steeple of St. Paul's Church; and in a few moments the base of the Northwest Urn was in a blaze. One of the workmen employed about the Church was immediately let down by a rope from one of the upper apertures, and cut it away, when the fire was soon extinguished."—Com. Adv., Ap 22, 1799; Conn. Courant, Ap 29, 1799. See also Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 189. The loss by the fire was estimated at $200,000. The list of the buildings destroyed was published later; it included houses in Greenwich, Dey, Washington, and Cortlandt Sts. Those in Greenwich St. were "two elegant three story houses, belonging to John Rogers, Esq., one occupied by Lady Temple [widow of the late Sir John Temple], the other by Gov. Cranford."—Daily Adv., Ap 23, 1799. See Ap 22.

22 The common council decides to exercise its option, granted in the Manhattan Company's charter (see Ap 2), of subscribing for 2,000 shares of stock in the company. At the same meeting it grants $799.67 to William Weston "for his Services & Expences in surveying & reports on supplys the City with Water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 535–36, 537.

" Christopher Colles writes to the committee of the Manhattan Company: "Being willing to comply with your request, of furnishing you with notes relative to the Water Works, I herewith lay before you such memorandums as I can recollect, and judge may be necessary, for your consideration.

"The well which was sunk in the place which I pointed out to you last Saturday, was thirty feet diameter, at the inside, and about twenty-eight feet deep, below the surface of the ground; the soil towards the bottom was a very fine running sand; I sunk this well until I had eight feet water; . . . This Water would raise a lather with Soap, and would wash well: As to the quantity, the Steam Engine (which we once worked for twenty-four hours without intermission) threw out two hundred gallons of Water, fifty feet high in a minute. In about an hour after it was set a going, it would lower the Water two feet; but by continuing pumping, we could not lower it another inch.

"The Steam Engine had a Cylinder, of twenty inches diameter, and seven feet long; the Pump was eleven inches diameter, and the stroke six feet;—the Engine made ten strokes in a minute, with a consumption of three or four loads of hickory wood, per day; many of the present inhabitants have seen it working [see Mr 1 1776].

"An idea has been proposed, of sinking a well, and erecting a Reservoir in the area, opposite the Bridewell and Poor House. I cannot think this an eligible situation, as it is doubtful whether the Water will be good, as most of the adjoining Wells are brackish; the digging in this place may also be more difficult. Apr. 22

"A small matter would sink a Well at Rutgers's; but the water which would be supplied to a Machine of any considerable power in this place, might almost as well be taken out of the East River. Moreover, there is no high ground convenient for the erection of a sufficient Reservoir.

"With respect to Bronx's River, there appears to me many difficulties. . . ." Colles also makes proposals for engineering and superintending the execution of the work. He estimates the total expense as £34,520, and if this should be the case, "expects for his services . . . eighteen dollars per week for subsistence; and the sum of three thousand pounds at the completion of the work."—Report of the Manhattan Committee (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799), 17–23. For William Weston's suggestions, see Ap 26.

" In response to the advertisement of the Manhattan Company's committee (see Ap 20), Elias Ring submits a plan for securing the water from the Collect. He urges that the reservoir be erected in the "Park," and estimates the expense of the undertaking as $100,000.—Report of the Manhattan Committee (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799), 29–37.

" Trinity vestry resolves that $150 be distributed "among the Persons who were most active in extinguishing the late Fire at the Steeple of St. Paul's Church" (see Ap 21).—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It also orders "That St Marks Church be consecrated on Thursday the ninth Day of May next" (q. v.).—Ibid.

" The common council rejects a petition of Alexander Lamb, keeper of the debtors' "goal," in which he pleads that provision be made for lighting, white-washing, and cleansing the jail, which has not been done since the removal of the criminals from this jail to the bridewell. Alterations made in the sheriff's department, under acts of the legislature, have so reduced this keeper's fees that he is unable to provide lighting, white-washing, and cleansing. He points out the consequent dangers to safety and health.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. Enclosed with the petition is a letter from one of the imprisoned debtors addressed to Mayor Varick, endorsing the petition; also "An Estimate of the present annual Disbursements for the Goal of the City & County of New York, so far as respects the lighting, white washing & cleansing the same." This amounts to $535. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 536–37.

" The common council appoints a committee to report needed improvements in the system of extinguishing fires.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 537.

" The common council orders payment to Jos. Newton of $58.10 "for removing & putting up the Portraits in the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 537.

26 William Weston, in a report to the committee of the Manhattan Company, recommends that iron pipes be used for the mains to be laid "from the Reservoir to the Government House," down Beekman St., and down Wall St., because, although more expensive than wooden ones, they would be permanent. He estimates that the "total expence of the work to be done this year, including the cleaning out of the Pump-well, rebuilding it, formation of the Reservoir, fencing round the ground occupied by the Company, building Engine house, first cost and execution of the Steam Engine, cast iron Cylinders and wooden Pipes, laying the same, opening and filling the trenches, turn-cocks and Fire Plugs, wheel-barrows, planks, picks, shovels, shears, and other necessary materials, including contingencies of all kinds, . . . will amount to not less than the sum of £24,535 exclusive of the purchase of the ground for the Reservoir, Steam Engine and Well."—Report of the Manhattan Committee (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799), 12–17.

27 Aaron Burr, Wm. Laight, and John Watts (see Ap 19) advertise that "Subscriptions to one thousand shares of the capital stock of this company, will be received at the office of the company, at the tontine city tavern, on Monday the twenty-ninth instant, from six until eight o'clock in the forenoon, and thenceforth daily, until one thousand shares shall be subscribed." No person will be allowed more than five shares, and those who have not heretofore subscribed will be given preference.—Com. Adv., Ap 27, 1799.

29 Nicholas Roosevelt writes to John B. Coles, Samuel Osgood, and John Stevens that he will undertake to build "a Steam Engine, capable of raising two million gallons of water, in 24 hours, to the height of 50 feet. . . . at the price of 15,000 Dollars; and find 1799 Apr. 29 hands, fuel, &c. for 2000 per ann, when the quantity of water required does not exceed 300,000 gallons, and so, in proportion, for any larger quantity, up to two millions. In this estimate, I include the leaver beam, guide posts, and the erecting of the Engine.

"I will engage to finish this work by the month of March, next ensuing, at farthest, and as much sooner as possible."—Report of the Manhattan Committee (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799), 11. On April 30, Roosevelt wrote that he "might engage to put up an Engine for the [Manhattan] Corporation, within the space of three or four months, capable of raising 300,000 gallons of water, to the height of 50 feet, in 24 hours, and find the pumps, pump rods, and frame for the engine, for the sum of nine thousand five hundred dollars."—Ibid., 12. On May 6 (q.v.), the committee recommended that Roosevelt's latter offer be accepted.

" The common council appoints a committee "to take charge of Belle Vue House & Land and to direct such Things to be done for its preservation as they shall judge necessary."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 539.

" The common council resolves "that it shall be the Duty of the Street Commissioners [see Ap 10] to take Charge of all the Real Estate & other Rights belonging to this Corporation from which any Revenue is or may be drawn for the purpose of improving the same and encreasing the Revenue thereof And that in order to promote this object it shall be the Duty of the Commissioners in convenient Time to furnish this Board with an accurate List of all such Real Estate & other Rights together with the amount of Revenue at present arising therefrom."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 539.

" The common council refers to the street commissioners a petition for paving South St. "from the Exchange [Slip] to Coenties Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 539. On May 6, an ordinance was passed for the purpose.—Ibid., II: 542. On June 3, a regulation of this part of the street was adopted.—Ibid., II: 551. On June 17, estimates and assessments for the paving were ratified, and a collector of the assessment money appointed.—Ibid., II: 553.

" In a letter to the common council, Abijah Hammond states that he is sending a coloured ground-plan of his lots at Greenwich adjoining the state prison ground, and desires to convey one part to the city for a market and the other parts for streets, on condition that the city will grant to him the land between high and low-water mark and the right to establish a ferry from a certain point shown on the plan.—From the original letter, in metal file No. 15, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "June 24th: 1799 [q.v.] taken into consideration (see Minutes)."

May 1 Walter Rutherfurd wrote on March 22: ". . . The Government House is to be Custom House after Mayday, what a pity."—Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 188. See also L. M. R. K., III: 974, and descrips. of Pls. 63 and 66, I: 442, 443.

" The following article addressed "To the Citizens of New York" appears in a daily newspaper: "Your attention and curiosity having been much excited, by an Act passed at the close of the late session of the Legislature, incorporating Aaron Burr, Dr. Brown, John B. Church, John Watts, and others, into a company, stiled the 'Manhattan Company' [see Ap 2]; and your interests being materially affected by this most extraordinary Law, it is important that some of the circumstances attending it should be laid before you. . . .

"The necessity of a supply of pure and wholesome Water has long been acknowledged. The Corporation of the City, anxious to comply with your wishes in this respect, employed an Engineer of great experience (Mr. Weston) to survey the River Bronx, and other streams and springs on this Island and in its vicinity; who in an able report [see Mr 14], which you must have seen decided on the practicability of obtaining a sufficiency of good water for the consumption of the City. They immediately had a petition draughted praying the Legislature to empower them to carry into effect this important object. This was sent to the Members of the Assembly from this City then at Albany, who were requested to lay it before the Legislature, and to promote by their influence its adoption—Instead of complying with this request . . . they suppressed the petition, and deputed Aaron Burr to this City to procure an application from individuals, praying to be erected into a Company, for the said purpose; He accordingly, by the address which he so well knows how to employ induced a number of professed speculators and some respectable steady men to unite in an application for this purpose—With this in his pocket our Machiavel returns to Albany and when he presented it to the Assembly declared. that it was not the wish of the Inhabitants of New York to entrust their Corporation with this business . . .; by these and similar representations, and by promising to the influential members to pay their assistance with such number of shares as they might wish to subscribe, he procured the Law in question to be passed. . . . May 1

"The manner in which this measure was promoted, corrupt and wicked as I have stated it, is not more objectionable than the measure itself—By this Law a Capital is created of Two millions of Dollars which according to the declaration of the subscribers may be invested in a Bank, an India Company, an Insurance Company, a Company for the sale and purchase of Bills of Exchange and public and private stock, and what to themselves is of the least importance—Water Works; . . . and they are not obliged to furnish a supply of water under ten years from the date of the act—Already do the subscribers declare that supplying the City with water tho apparently begun, will not really be commenced, until the profits arising from Banking, India, business, &c. are sufficient to pay the Expence.

". . . This Manhattan Company, furnishes the first instance of an unlimited Act of Incorporation—of a complete monopoly in effect—of immense powers, unnecessarily granted to a few individuals, which society at large cannot partake of—of scandalous duplicity. . . .

"That a supply of good water is essential to the welfare of this City, cannot be denied—but it was not necessary that a Company should be incorporated for this purpose—the Corporation of the City, men whom we all know who possess the public confidence, stood ready to carry into effect so desirable an object—they only asked to be employed to do it—they did not ask for the power of forming a Bank, an India Company. . . . Nothing can equal the mischievous tendency of this law, but the gross indecency of placing effectively at the head of ▪ company, whose capital is two millions of dollars, a man whose pecuniary concerns are publicly known to be in the utmost possible embarrassment."

In another article on the same subject, contributed by "A Citizen," these questions are asked: "Is this project of raising up a Bank, an India Company, an Insurance Company, a Company for Water Works, a Stock Jobbing Company, all in one, intended to benefit the Community at large, or to enrich those individuals who were in the secret? If the Community was to be benefitted, why had not all an equal chance for subscribing? Why was nearly half of the whole number of shares, engrossed by Members of the Legislature and their connections before the law passed, or previous to its being published? Do the men who were concerned in such selfish, such corrupt practices, deserve your confidence? Will you by again electing such men give a premium to villiany?—Is the masterhand, who moved at will the eight remaining puppets, again to be your representative? . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 1, 1799. "Four of the members of the assembly from the city, Messrs. Storm, Furman, Arcularius and Nexsen, . . . were opposed to this flagitious transaction."—Ibid., footnote. See F 25, My 22.

On this day and on Dec. 29, Gouverneur Morris made mention in his diary of the presence of the Chevalier d'Orleans (Louis Philippe) in New York and "Morrisania."—Diary & Letters of Gouverneur Morris (1888), II: 378. 2

John R. Cozine, president of the "Harmonical Society," publishes a notice "that the society have removed their place of meeting to Vauxhall, Broadway, nearly opposite to the Tontine City Tavern."—Daily Adv., My 2, 1799. This was Delacroix's.—Ibid., N 6, 1799. "

John B. Coles, Samuel Osgood, and John Stevens make a report to the Manhattan Company on the information they have received regarding the best mode of supplying the city with water. As it is "extremely desirable, that a part of the city, at least, be furnished with a supply of Water, during the ensuing summer," they recommend that Nicholas Roosevelt's offer to build a steam engine in three or four months (see Ap 29) be accepted, and that "the ground belonging to the Corporation of the city, on which Mr. Colles erected an Engine before the revolution, for a similar purpose, should be purchased without delay. The well which was formerly sunk thereon should be opened again, and deepened, if necessary; a reservoir formed, and the pipes procured and laid as far as is deemed expedient during this season." Contrary to Mr. Weston's report of April 26 (q.v.), they urge that wooden pipes be used 6

1799 May 6 because iron ones would be too expensive. Weston's report and Colles's letter (see Ap 22) are laid before the company, and resolutions are passed empowering Osgood, Coles, and Stevens "to treat for any ground in the vicinity of the city, suitable for a well and reservoir" and "to contract for as many pine logs as they may think necessary for pipes, and also for boring the same."—Report of the Manhattan Committee (printed by John Furman, N. Y., 1799), 3-10; Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 22, 1799. See My 8 and 10.

8 Joseph Browne advertises that he "is authorized by the Manhattan Company to receive proposals for supplying the said company with pipes, for the conveyance of water, made of yellow or white pine logs. From 500 to 2000 will be immediately wanted of from 12 to 14 feet in length. . . . The pipes must be delivered at the city of New York, on or before the 1st of August next."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 8, 1799.

9 This is the day appointed for the consecration of St. Mark's Church.—Memorial of St. Mark's Church in the Bowery (1899). See Ap 25, 1795; L. M. R. K., III: 933. See, further, Ag 19.

10 The committee appointed by the Manhattan Company on May 6 (q.v.) writes to the common council "respecting lands formerly occupied by Mr Christopher Colles for a Well & Reservoir which they are informed belong to the Corporation." The committee asks the following questions:

"First. Whether they are willing to sell the same to the Manhattan Company & the value they put them at

"second. Whether the Corporation prefer leasing them forever: If so at what rate by the Year for a Lot of one hundred by twenty five feet

"Thirdly. Whether the Corporation will permit the Manhattan Company to occupy the Grounds aforesaid until it shall be ascertained whether the Waters are pure and wholesome and also adequate to the supplying of the City and if a failure should be found in either Respect, then to give up the Grounds leaving them in the state they find them, otherwise, then to enter into a Treaty with the Corporation for those Grounds."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 543. The original letter is in metal file No. 15, city clerk's record-room.

This letter came before the common council on May 13, and it was then decided to postpone consideration of the first and second questions, but to accede to the third. The street commissioners and Alderman De la Montagnie were appointed "to examine and report to the Board the Bounds State & quantity of the Ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 544.

13 The committee of Trinity vestry, appointed April 22 to consider ways of making the several churches belonging to Trinity corporation more secure, recommends covering with lead or tin "all the Angles and Horizontal Projections of the Steeples and every Place where there is a Probability of Fire lodging;" also "the cutting of openings in such Places in the Steeples as may be thought necessary and to fit each a good Rope and Slings,—the providing of at least two axex [sic] and one or two Saws in each Section where any opening shall be made with a Lanthorn to hold two or three Lights, also to provide twelve additional leathern Buckets for each Church and to place a large capacious stone Cistern at the South west Corner of each Church to receive the Rain water from the Roof." The report is agreed to.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" Agreeable to the order of Nov. 5, 1798 (q.v.), the common council orders that a warrant be made out appointing Chas. Loss a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 542.

" The common council votes against filling up the Exchange Slip, as proposed by a petition on April 29, and orders that the street commissioners employ the "Mud Drudge" in cleaning it out "to a proper Depth of Water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 544.

" The common council orders payment of £169 "for Stone on the Outside of the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 545. See also Ap 30, 1798.

15 The president and directors of the Manhattan Company pass a resolution "That so much of the surplus capital of the company as may be deemed necessary, be employed in discounting paper securities, and that with a view to this object, an office of discount and deposit, be established at such time and place, and under such regulations as may be hereafter ordained."—*Greenleaf's N. The common council directs that the treasurer let out "the Corner House at the City Hall" (watch house—see Je 3, 1793) until May 1, 1800, deeming it inexpedient to take it down at present.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 548. "

"Socrates" publishes a series of questions on the origin, powers, and intentions of the Manhattan Company, which he calls upon Aaron Burr to answer. He declares that he "is not personally desirous of inculpating Mr. Burr, but only wishes to investigate the origin of the Manhattan Company which he considers the most outrageous insult ever offered to an afflicted city. This Company must and will be destroyed, or else confined to some justifiable object. The writer does not even know what are the true answers to some of the following questions, but as he thinks the Socratic method useful in the investigating of truth, he means to pursue his queries, and he advises the parties concerned to answer them. Socrates is one of the people, and it is his right to investigate the conduct of those who hold themselves up as candidates for public trust." Among the questions "Socrates" asks are the following: 22

"Is the Manhattan Company instituted for the purpose of bringing water into the city or of banking and speculation?"

"If it is instituted for the purposes of banking and speculation, wherefore does almost the whole of the act [see Ap 2] appear to talk of water . . . ?"

"If the Manhattan Company can now establish a bank is it not authorized to pursue for the space of ten years any speculations the most foreign to the bringing of water, without expending one cent for that purpose? If they should choose so to do, can you, as a lawyer, point out any remedy that can be pursued against them till after the ten years are past."

"Is there anything in your character or that of your associates calculated to insure the citizens against the abuse of such unheard of powers?"

"Are not the general and undefined powers under which your corporation now propose to set up banking, stock-jobbing, Jewing, &c. derived from a clause of seven lines and a half, in the eleventh page of the law, as now printed in this city?"

"What do you mean by the words 'surplus capital' in the clause aforesaid? Do you mean the remainder of the company's capital after the supply of water is compleated? If so by what authority do you commence banking at present?"—Com. Adv., My 22 and 23, 1799. Another New Yorker, under the signature of "Julius," attacked the company on May 25.—Ibid., My 25, 1799.

Aaron Burr advertises: "Richmond Hill. To Be Let, and immediate possession given, the House and Farm, adjoining Lispenward's, formerly the property of Mr. Abraham Mortier; any quantity of land, from five to fifty acres, will be let with the house. The Garden is in complete order, and great forwardness, and the Ice-house well filled."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., My 22, 1799. "

"Mr. Daniel N. Train, a young gentleman of genius and ability, late a pupil of Rush, the famous Carver, of Philadelphia, some time since arrived in this city, has lately completed the ornaments of the ship Adams, soon to be launched [see Je 8] at the Walabogh, L. I." The ornaments are thus described: "

"On the head of the ship is the figure of the President, represented in the attitude of addressing both Houses of Congress. In his left hand is a scroll, supposed to be his address—his right is raised in a spirited position, as if in the act of bidding defiance to the enemies of America—. . .

"On the stern, in the centre of the Taffrail, are the Arms of the United States, supported by Sybele and Neptune—. . ."—Gaz. of U. S. (Phila.), My 25, 1799.

7 J. B. Prevost advertises that "The Manhattan Company Intend shortly to employ a superintendant to conduct the works necessary for conveying water into the city: the salary to be paid to such superintendant will be 1500 dollars per annum. Persons properly qualified to execute this important work, will apply by letter accompanied by the best recommendations they can produce."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Je 12, 1799.

8 "Saturday last [June 8] at half past 12, the United States frigate Adams was launched from Mr. Jackson's Navy Yard, at the Wallaboght, Long-Island. She looks extremely beautiful upon the water. The Governor Jay Cutter hawled round from the North River, and fired a Federal Salute. She is one of the handsomest moddelled vessels in the United States, and will, it is supposed by judges, be an uncommonly fast sailer."—Gaz. of U. S. (Phila.), Je 11, 1799. See also My 22.

"The Adams is a ship built after the model of the Flora, English frigate, a vessel that out-sailed every thing that ever came in sight — . . . The Adams is a 32-gun frigate, her heaviest metal 12 pounders—of which she carries 24. She is 710 tons burthen, and will carry 225 men—commanded by Richard Valentine Morris, (son of the old General, of Morrissania) . . . She will sail in about two months, and it is rumored her destination is the Mediterranean and Gibraltar station; she will find enough amusement in that quarter no doubt— . . . She hauled over to town yesterday afternoon [June 10], and will fit for sea with all possible dispatch."—Ibid., Je 13, 1799.

12 "It gives us pleasure to learn that measures for supplying the city with water are going into immediate effect. A number of laborers are busily employed in clearing out the spacious well adjoining the Collect, which was dug and stoned for the same purpose previous to the revolution.

"We believe it will be a source of infinite gratification to the citizens, provided they find the current of water is made to keep pace with the current of discounts."—N. Y. Spectator, Je 12, 1799.

" The common council refers to a committee a letter from the Manhattan Company signifying "that they will want a Part of the enclosed Ground in front of the Bridewell to raise a Reservoir for supplying the City with Water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 552. See Jl 22.

" The office of the Manhattan Company "is Removed to No. 23, Wall street, in the house lately occupied by Mr. George Scriba."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., Je 12, 1799. Though it has not been possible to prove by real estate records that No. 23 Wall St. is coincident with the later No. 40 (the present site of the Manhattan Bank), on the chart made by Dr. Edward Hagaman Hall in preparing his article about the confusion of numbers on Wall St. (19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc., 1914, p. 105), No. 23 occupies the lot now No. 40. Dr. Hall consulted all the records of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. relating to Wall St. property, supplementing this research by careful inspection of the directories, and his conclusion may be accepted.

15 Dr. Edward Miller of New York writes to Noah Webster expressing fear "that, in the event of an hot and unfavourable summer, a renewal of the [yellow fever] ravages of last autumn [see S 17, 1798] will be our fate." He declares that "Philadelphians are setting us a noble example of zeal & public spirit in bringing water from the Schuylkill in large quantity. . . . Much good must unquestionably result from this enterprise. For altho' a plenty of water running thro' the streets cannot annul an epidemic constitution of the atmosphere, I am persuaded, from the attraction which water possesses for miasmata, that a great deal of local mischief may thus be washed away."—Letter of Dr. Edward Miller to Noah Webster, among Noah Webster MSS., in N. Y. P. L.

"A Citizen" writes a vigorous complaint about the lack of cleanliness in the streets.—N. Y. Spectator, Je 19, 1799.. 19

Joseph Browne advertises that "Proposals for building by contract a stone Reservoir, to be placed in the Park, capable of holding a million of gallons, will be received by the subscriber until the 1st day of July next.—The building will be oblong octagon, and consist on the outside of a stone wall, 12 feet high, built of Hell-Gate stone, laid in good mortar: of an inside stone wall of the same height, of Newark stone, neatly jointed, and laid in terrace or good cement, an interval of 18 inches must be left between the two walls to be well filled with good clay. The bottom of the Reservoir will consist of a thick layer, of good clay well rammed, then a layer of flagging stone laid in cement, on that a course of brick laid in tar and sand, and then a course of Newark flagging stone, neatly jointed and laid in terrace or good cement. The building to be compleated by the first day of June next.—The Proposals must specify the sum demanded, the times of payment, and the sureties for the performance."—N. Y. Jour., Je 22, 1799. See, however, Jl 22; and My 5, 1800. 20

The common council, acting upon Abijah Hammond's proposal of April 29 (q.v.), decides that, while it cannot accede to it at present, "he might be permitted to erect a Wharf into the River in front of Hammonds Street as a landing place for the accommodation of himself and the public"—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 554–55. 24

The first appearance of Hammond St. is on the Goerck-Mangin map, made in 1799–1800.—See L. M. R. K., III: 1001. A wharf, near this street, is shown. Other streets in this vicinity, surrounding the state prison, appear on this map, probably as projected by Hammond. No ferry was established there as he requested, however, the one at Christopher St. not being established until 1841.—Ibid., III: 942.

The "Swift-Sure," a new line of stages, is advertised to run daily between New York and Philadelphia, starting "from the house of B. Many, No. 48 Courtlandt-street, corner of Greenwich-street."—Com. Adv., Jl 1, 1799. 28

Delacroix again holds a notable celebration of the Fourth of July at his Vauxhall Garden (cf. Jl 4, 1798). "His beautiful garden was opened at 6 o'clock in the morning, and the colors were hoisted under a discharge of 16 guns. The 16 summer houses being the names of the Sixteen United States, each were decorated with the Emblematical Colors belonging to each State, and ornamented with Flowers and Garlands. At 5 o'clock in the evening, the sixteen colors of each Summer-house were carried, at the sound of the music, to the Grand Temple of Independence, which is 20 feet diameter, and 20 feet high, . . .—in the middle of which was presented, the Bust of the great Washington as large as life, and near him a Grand Gold Column, representing the Constitution, 4 1799 July 4 and below the said Column the Figure of Fame, 6 feet high, presenting to him with one hand a Crown of Laurel, and with the other holding a Trumpet, announcing to the public that she crowns Real Merit. Round the Pedestal were seen Military Trophies. The sixteen colors above-mentioned were placed round the Pedestal, at the sound of Martial Music—and at each color being placed round the Bust it was announced by the firing of cannon. . . ."—Spectator, Jl 6, 1799. 8 In response to a petition from some of the members of the congregation of St. Paul's Church, Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to enquire what will be the Expence of providing Organs for St George['s] and St. Paul's Churches."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

On the same day, Mr. Laight, a member of the committee of leases, reports to the vestry "that the South East End of the Land belonging to this Corporation in the Occupation of M^r^ Williamson would be a proper Situation for a burying Ground," and it is ordered that the committee "conclude a Bargain with M^r^ Williamson for so much of the said Ground as may be necessary and fence and prepare the same for the Purpose aforesaid."—Ibid.

" The common council orders that the mayor be requested to cause "a Precept" to be issued for summoning and returning a jury to determine what recompence is due to the land owners on whose lands a certain new road is to be opened. This road is to run "from the new Bridge over Harlem River [see Mr 30, 1797], through the Lands of John P Waldron, Joseph Mott, Peter Benson, Sampson Benson, Lawrence Benson & the Common Lands of the Township of Harlem, to a Station on the Post Road between the 6 & 7 Mile Stones so as to meet the new Road lately laid out and made, through the City Common Lands, called the middle Road." The board approves a map or survey of the proposed new road, and it is filed in the clerk's office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 557–58. A jury was named on Aug. 5 to make the appraisal.—Ibid., II: 564. For the amount of the assessments under the jury's award, see ibid., II: 565–66.

15 The common council orders that the city map committee, with Mr. Mangin (see Ap 10), arrange with Mr. Maverick or other competent engraver to have it engraved on the best terms they can.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 559. See also descrip. of Pl. 70, I: 454. Maverick engraved the Goerck-Mangin map here referred to. See Pl. 70, Vol. I. For payment for his work, see My 9, 1803.

" On reading a memorial of Dr. Nicholas Romain relative to laying out streets at Corlaers Hook, the common council orders "that the East & West Streets on Rutger's Land be continued through the Lands to the Eastward to the East River or until they intersect Grand Street, That Scammel Street be encreased to the Breadth of fifty feet And that Ferry Street be of the same breadth of And that there be no other Street between Montgomery Street & Scammel Street nor between Scammel Street & Ferry Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 559. The original petition, with street plan attached, is in metal file No. 18, city clerk's record-room. See, however, Ap 23, 1798, regarding Gouverneur St.

17 A "person" having been found in one of the docks on the North River with marks of violent death, it is suspected that he was murdered in a house of bad character on the corner of Murray and Greenwich Sts., where he was seen the previous evening. A mob of 800 or 1,000 persons assembled, and with three cheers determined to demolish the house. They were prevented by the timely interference of the mayor and some of the magistrates. The Washington Troop and a detachment of infantry were ordered under arms to disperse the mob. To them "much praise is due for their spirited exertions."—Com. Adv., Jl 18, 1799.

On July 20, the common council, at a special meeting, ordered that 2,000 copies of a handbill be printed and distributed, admonishing and cautioning the inhabitants to preserve the peace, on account of mobs which for several nights have tried to destroy the house at the south-east corner of Greenwich and Murray Sts. Thanks are expressed to the militia and others who have helped to suppress the riot.—M. C C. (1784–1831), II: 560. On July 29, the board paid a bill of £2:12 "for liquor to the Artillyrists in quelling a Riot in the Night of the 18^th^ Inst."—Ibid., II: 563. Cf. the similar incident of Oct. 14, 1793 (q.v.).

14 The following advertisement, addressed "To the Public" and signed by Daniel Ludlow, president of the Manhattan Company, appears in the newspapers: "The legislature at their last session were pleased to incorporate the Manhattan Company, for the purpose, among others, of supplying the city of New York with pure and wholesome water. . . . Notwithstanding the intervention of a malignant fever, which occasioned so great and so large a desertion of the city, the works have never been suspended: and although not more than seven months have elapsed since their first meeting, the directors are happy in announcing to their fellow citizens, that conduit pipes are laid in several of the principal streets, and that water is now ready to be furnished to many of the inhabitants and to all the shipping in the harbour. From actual experiment there is no doubt that one of the wells already opened will yield to five thousand families a daily supply of at least fifty gallons each, of a quality excellent for drinking and good for every culinary purpose.

"The following regulations have been adopted for the distribution of water among the inhabitants of the city.

"1st. Those who are desirous of being supplied from the aqueducts of the company will please to apply personally or in writing to the superintendant of the works, who will keep a register of the name of the applicant, the number and situation of his house, and of the rate which he is to pay. The superintendant will also direct a proper person to tap or pierce the main pipe opposite to his house, for the insertion of the smaller or lateral tube, by which the water is to be conveyed into the building. . . .

"2d. The lateral or small pipe must be procured and laid at the expence of the applicant, . . . The company recommend the use of leaden pipes.

"3d. although water will be continually running in the pipes, and the inhabitants will not be limited in its use, yet it will be proper to guard against any unreasonable waste which may happen from negligence or other cause. . . . To prevent in some degree any wasteful consumption of water, the pipes leading it into the houses must be compleated and fixed under the direction of the superintendant. . . . Nov. 14

"4th. No one shall supply with water received from the aqueducts any neighbour or person not living in the house furnished by the company.

"5th. The rates at which the water will be delivered are as follows:—For every house or building, containing not more than 4 fire places, there shall be paid the sum of five dollars per annum; and for every fire place exceeding four in any house or building there shall be paid an additional one dollar and twenty-five cents, provided however not more than twenty dollars shall be paid for any private house or building.

"6th. From the preceding rates are excepted buildings in which manufactures are carried on, requiring a larger supply than usual. Stables and taverns, with the proprietors of which seperate agreements will be made.

"7th. All payments for water shall be made quarterly, to wit, on the first day of February, May, August and November in every year; one quarter to be always paid in advance. . . .

"8th. Upon default in payment as aforesaid, or in case of infraction of any of the preceeding regulations, the pipe through which the water is conveyed to the house will be immediately cut off.

"9th. Ships and vessels will be supplied at the rate of 20 cents per hogshead. A fountain for the purpose is erected at the extremety of Dye-Street, where boats may conveniently lie, and casks or hogsheads be filled without the trouble of putting them on shore. Fountains for the same purpose will be raised in other parts of the city.

"10th. Works of this kind being in a great degree new in this country, it is not possible to foresee all the cases for which it may be necessary to provide. Experience will suggest many improvements in the mode of distributing the water; the directors therefore expressly reserve to themselves the right granted by the act of incorporation of making from time to time such change in those regulations and such further bye laws and ordinances for preserving the works of the company, and for conveying water through the city, as they may think proper, except only as to the rates above mentioned, which shall undergo no augmentation for the space of five years."—Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour., N 16, 1799.

18 The common council refers to the street and road commissioners petitions for establishing a public ferry from Horns Hook to Hallet's Point across the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 583. On Feb. 3, 1800, two other members of the board were added to the committee "on the Petition for establishing a Ferry across the East River at Hellgate & opening a public Road thereto."—Ibid., II: 608. See, further, S 10, 1800.

20 "A Citizen" writes to one of the newspapers: "Being unacquainted with the determination of the Directors of the Manhattan Company with respect to their progress in laying the pipes for the conveyance of water through the city, I would just suggest the propriety of immediately furnishing the ships on the east side of the town with pipes, as it is the most proper season to dig up that offensive made ground of which they are generally composed. . . . Therefore, if the pipes are laid as above mentioned, and water freely brought to the most filthy places, much benefit may be expected."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 20, 1799.

7 "Confectionary Manufactory. Joseph Delacroix, No. 112, Broad Way [see F 22, 1797], informs the public in general, that he has now in the store, a large assortment of Sugar Works, best quality. Likewise, cordials, syrops, sweet-meats in boxes ready for exportation, at a fixed price. He undertakes to provide entertainments at persons houses, so as the persons have no trouble at all: At the fixed hour the table will be extremely well furnished, at a more reasonable rate than can be provided by one's self."—Daily Adv., D 7, 1799. This is the earliest notice of a business of this kind in New York. See, further, Ja 9, 1801.

Delacroix also announces that, during the winter, his "Vauxhall Garden near Bunker Hill" (see My 1, Jl 4, 1798; Jl 4, 1799) "will be open every day for the reception of Ladies and Gentlemen. Entrance Free." He thus describes it: "There will be found a large Room, 45 feet long, well heated by two fire places, convenient for concerts, balls, and all other entertainments, able to contain 150 persons. Private companies who would wish to give balls, concerts, or repasts, will be well satisfied with the price and attention given them. Those who wish to make use of it, will agree on the price, including the carriages or stages, which J. D. will provide to go for the persons, and take them back. Near the said room there is another, where tea will be kept ready on the hour demanded, without the company's being in the least troubled. Ladies will find a room to deposit cloaks, shawls, &c. A subscription is likewise opened for balls, concerts, &c. to be filled with 66 persons, at 25 dollars for once a week. Until the end of April, carriages and stages will go for the company and take them back again. Each subscriber to bring a Lady. Price of refreshments, one shilling each glass." He adds that he has "provided himself with a proper person to attend the said place," and "flatters himself that the public will be satisfied."—Ibid., D 7, 1799. See Ap 14, 1800.

9 "Resolved, that the Committee of Repairs [of Trinity vestry] have the small Bell and its appendages in St Pauls Church taken down and the same be given to St Marks Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"It having been suggested to the Board that the Clocks in the different Churches of the City would be better regulated if they were under the direction of the City Corporation who would employ a Proper Person to regulate them. Whereupon Resolved that the Corporation of the City employ (during the pleasure of this Board) a proper Person to regulate and keep in Repair the Clocks in St. Georges and St. Pauls Churches, at the expence of the said Corporation."—Ibid.

12 The common council orders "that the subscription Monies collect[ed] for Mangins new Map of the City be paid to the Street Commiss[rs] who are authorized to advance him $100 on his Note."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 586. See also Ag 14.

14 Washington dies at Mount Vernon.—Com. Adv., D 20, 1799. See D 19.

19 The announcement of the death of Washington is published in New York.—Daily Adv., D 19; Com. Adv., D 20; Greenleaf's N. Y. Jour.,& Pat. Reg., D 21. His death occurred on the evening of Dec. 14 at Mount Vernon; the formal announcement, as given out by Tobias Lear, his private secretary, was published by Greenleaf in New York on Dec. 25. The newspapers were printed with heavy black borders until Dec. 24, inclusive. There is in the N. Y. Pub. Library an undated broadside, apparently issued at this period, entitled "A summary of the principal events of the life of the illustrious General George Washington." It was printed by L. D. Dewey, 129 Nassau St.

20 The common council passes a resolution "that it be signified to the several religious Societies in this City as the Wish of this Board, that they cause their respective Churches to be dressed in mourning," and that their bells "be muffled & tolled every Day from 12 to 1 o'clock" until Dec. 24 inclusive; that it "be recommended to the Owners & Masters of Ships & Vessels in this Harbour to hoist their Colours half Mast" until Dec. 24 inclusive; that "the Members & Officers of this Corporation do wear a black Crape on the Arm for six Weeks," and that "it be recommended to the Inhabitants of this City to do the like."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 588–89. This was published the next day.—Daily Adv., D 21, 1799. For several responses to this request, vide infra.

Dec. 20 Trinity corporation meets at the house of the rector, "the R[t] Rev[d] Bishop Provoost," and a committee is appointed for putting the several churches belonging to this corporation in mourning, on account of the death "of the Late Lieutenant General George Washington."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

21 Brigade orders for the city and county of New York and the county of Richmond regarding the death of Washington are issued by Brig.-Gen. Hughes, quoting from the division orders of Major-Gen. Clarkson, the statement that "no outward form can shew, nor any Language express, the Feelings which this melancholy Event has exercised in the bosoms of those who, by devoting themselves [to] the Military Services of their Country, have acquired the proud title of his Brethren in Arms." He recommends that the officers and soldiers of the militia, when in regimentals, wear black crepe on the left arm for six months.—Greenleaf's New Daily Adv., D 24, 1799.

" "In consequence of the afflicting intelligence of the death of General Washington, the [Park] Theatre will be closed for the ensuing week."—Com. Adv., D 21, 1799. It was reopened on Dec. 30 (q.v.).

23 Robert Troup writes from New York to Gov. Jay: ". . . We are taking measures here to pay suitable honors to the memory of this greatest and best of men [Washington]. Our whole city appears to be penetrated with the profoundest grief. Our churches are in mourning; our bells are muffled and toll every day at 12 o'clock. Our citizens wear mourning. Mr. Gouverneur Morris, at the request of the Corporation, is to pronounce an oration. Committees are forming to concert a general plan for the expression of our grief, and I have no doubt we shall transmit to our posterity the most honorable proof of the consideration in which we hold the illustrious founder of our liberties. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 259. Jay acknowledged this on Dec. 28 with approbation, saying of the proposed oration: "I hope it will not be hurried; it had better be a little delayed than not be finished."—Ibid., IV: 260.

" The Tammany Society issues the following notice: "Sachems and Warriors, our Great Cheif is no more!—Washington is dead!—Heaven's high decree forbade his longer stay! His feats of War, and deeds of Peace—compleat—He now begins to live!!—Haste—!! rally round our Council-Fire, (This Evening) to chant in Solemn Dirge his mighty deeds!!—By Order of the Grand Sachem D. " The managers of the Tontine City Hotel publish a notice to the subscribers to the "City Assembly" that the gatherings will commence on the evening of Jan. 2. "The Ladies are particularly requested to appear in white trimmed with black. The gentlemen in a full suit of mourning, as a token of respect to the memory of the father of his Country, George Washington."—Daily Adv., D 23, 1799.

24 Isaac G. Ogden, secretary of the "Philharmonic Society," publishes a notice to the members to attend "at the usual place of meeting" (cf. Ag 23, 1797 et seq.), on the evening of the 26th, to make arrangements "in concert with the other Societies towards paying suitable honours to the memory of George Washington."—Com. Adv., D 24, 1799. The present society of this name was founded in April, 1842 (q.v.).

25 At a meeting of committees from the corporation of the city, and from several societies, held at the city hall, "to make the necessary Arrangements, for paying suitable Honours to the Memory of the late General Washington," the mayor is appointed to take the chair, and resolutions are passed that the funeral procession take place on Tuesday, Dec. 31, and that a sub-committee, consisting of Brig.-Gen. Hughes, Brig. Gen.-Stevens, Col. Morton, Maj. Fairlie, and Maj. Stagg, have full power to prepare a plan and carry it out.—Greenleaf's New Daily Adv., D 26, 1799.

26 A "large and elegant collection of Wax-Work consisting of 56 figures as large as life" is exhibited by N. and E. Street at Snow's Hotel, 69 Broadway. It was removed in May, 1805.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 26, 1803; Ap 3, 1805. Snow's Hotel was formerly Corre's (see Ja 28, 1791), John Lovett's (see My 7, 1794), Hunter's (see Ap 22, 1797), and Lovett's again (see Ap 22, 1797).

29 "Regulations relative to the procession for rendering funeral honors to the deceased General Washington" is the title of a broadside of this date, published in New York, a copy of which is in N. Y. P. L. The funeral was held Dec. 31 (q.v.).

1799 Dec. 29 A sermon on the death of Washington is delivered by Samuel Miller, A.M., one of the ministers of the United Presbyterian Churches of the city. This was published by T. & J. Swords, N. Y., in 1800.—See copy in the N. Y. P. L.

30 The Park Theatre reopens with "The Robbery" and "The Ship-Wreck." The scenery is draped in black, and the words "Mourn, Washington is Dead" are painted in large letters on a black background. Before the performance Thomas Cooper delivers a Monody on the death of Washington.—Spectator, Ja 4, 1800.

" A committee on butchers' stalls reports that an hereditary right to the stalls and standings in the Fly Market does not exist, as has been believed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 593.

31 This being the day, "appointed by the Citizens of New-York to pay the most Solemn Funeral Honors to the Memory of their beloved Chief and Fellow-Citizen General George Washington," every kind of business ceased, and every thought was "employed in preparation for the melancholy solemnity." The committee of arrangements announced the plans the day before.

"The Citizens, in their Military and Civil Habilments, with the Foreigners of various Nations, all eager to join in testimonies of veneration for the Great Deceased, having assembled in their appointed order, the procession moved under the guidance of Signals, to the mournful sound of Minute-Guns and Muffled Bells, in the following order:

"Each Pall-Bearer was accompanied by a member of the Cincinatti in full mourning, with a white crepe-bow on the outward arm, and bearing a black Banner, denoting some important act of the deceased. The Pall-Bearers and members of the Committee of arrangement, wore the badges of the Cincinatta and black scarfs with white roses on the bows. The Urn, with its attendant decorations, was supported by eight Soldiers, (with others attending for relief) upon a Bier in form of a Palanquin, six feet by four. This elegant assemblage of Emblems, consisted of a funeral Urn, three feet in eight, of burnished gold, with the name of Washington in black upon the flat-band; behind which the American Eagle, four feet high, cloud-borne, with extended but drooping wings, appeared to hover over the ashes of the Hero, holding in his beak a laurel wreath; these figures were supported by a rich Pedestal and cornish of burnished gold—Underneath was a second pedestal, rising from the Bier, covered with black, on the front and rear of which, the Laurel wreath was represented, tied together by the American stripes, and crowned by the American Constellation, the whole on a ground of black.—The sides were adorned with military trophies, composed of Military Standards, Cavalry and Infantry, with the Standards of the United States, and of the Society of the Cincinnata. In the centre of the trophies was represented the Eagle, with the other emblems and mottos of the Society, surrounded by branches of laurel—the whole decorated with black drapery, fringed and festooned. This superb and appropriate ornament formed an elegant Mass of thirteen feet in height. . . .

Immediately following,

Eight Dragoons.
Officer.

"On the arrival of the procession at St. Paul's Church, the Military halted, and opening their ranks, made an avenue, through which the Bier and those immediately attendant on it, passed into the Church—The Troops leaning on their reversed arms.

"After the Funeral oration . . . the Bier was deposited in Cemetary, and the last Military Honors performed over it. . . ." —Spectator, Ja 4, 1800.

The expenses of the procession were borne by the city. On Jan. 27, 1800, the committee for arranging and directing it was paid $1,582.91.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 607. The city also paid $11.25 for "Blacksmith Work at S^{t} Pauls Church for the Eulogium on the Death of Gen^{l} Washington;" and £3:9:2 for candles, £2:10 for music, and $2 for other disbursements on this occasion.—Ibid., II: 611.

Peter Gassner, writing in 1859 regarding the Washington obsequies, said: "I saw the mock funeral . . . from a window in Broadway. The large urn, eagle, inverted boots, and girls distributing flowers, are as fresh in my mind, as if occurring yesterday."—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 588.

The funeral oration, delivered in St. Paul's Church by Gouverneur Morris, was published in 1800 under the title An Oration upon the Death of General Washington.

Robert Troup, writing on Jan. 1, 1800, to Rufus King concerning the ceremonies, said he considered the Morris oration a failure, as it had "the effect of a cold historical narrative, not that of a 1799 Dec. 31 warm, impressive address."—C. R. King, Life and Corresp. of Rufus King (1896), III: 170. See, however, Ja 6, 1800. Many other orations and sermons were delivered, in other cities, on this occasion, and pub'd in 1800. See N. Y. P. L. catalogue.

At this time the Battery and Bowling Green, where the procession gathered, was profusely set out with the Lombardy poplar trees. From 1800 to 1805, they infested the whole island, if not most of the middle, northern, and many southern states.—Francis, Old New York (1866), 23. — Probably in this year were drawn, by Archibald (?) Robertson, two interesting views within the city, one showing the Old Brick Church on Chatham Row, Beekman, and Nassau Streets; the Park Theatre, St. Paul's Chapel, etc.; and the other the north-east corner of Wall and William Streets, with the Bank of New York, the New York Insurance Co. and the Bank of the United States, Branch. These drawings are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pls. 72-a and b.

— Probably also in this year, John Wood made the sketch of "New York from Long Island" which was engraved by W. Rollinson and issued in 1801. This is one of the most artistic engraved views of the city. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 74. An impression in the author's collection printed entirely in colours must be one of the earliest engravings so printed in this country.

— An enumeration of the inhabitants of the city of New York taken by Gen. Giles during the winter of 1800–1 shows that the population numbered 60,489.—Miller Papers in N. Y. H. S. The total is given as 60,515 in the 13th U. S. Census Bull. (1910).

— In 1800, "New York had its most fashionable population in Wall and Pine streets, between Broadway and Pearl streets; and also on Pearl street from Hanover Square, (now Old slip) to John street; some along State street; and also in Broadway, from below Wall street to the Battery."—Watson's Annals, 188.

— Between 1784 and 1800, "the west side of Chatham street, between Tryon row and Duane (then Barley) street, was fully built up. One of the leading business places established was that of Peter and George Lorillard, tobacconists. . . . An establishment of more public interest than any other was the Boston Stage-house and Livery Stables, situated on the corner of Pearl (then Queen) street . . .

"The descent of Catimuts hill having been accomplished, the traveler on the old Boston road, or present Chatham street, reached a principal thoroughfare, leading from the Smiths valley, then a most important part of the city, to the interior. The roads formed a junction and thereafter followed one course to and along the Bowery lane. This road was the present Pearl street, the first street name of which in this vicinity was Queen street. It was extended to the Fresh Water pond at an early period, and several tanneries were erected along its northerly side, a block or more west of the present Chatham street. When the public magazine was erected on the island in the pond [see N 21, 1728] this was the way of access, and hence that portion became known as Magazine street; but, being a natural continuation of Pearl street, the same name was applied after the pond was filled up, the magazine removed, and the old landmarks obliterated."—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 610–11.

— Felix de Beaujour, a Frenchman, describing the United States from 1800 to 1810 made the following remarks about this city: "New York has a more smiling aspect [than Philadelphia] and appears more like a European town. . . . The esplanade called the Battery, standing on the salliant angle formed by the Hudson and the sea in their junction, presents one of the most beautiful points of view that can be imagined. . . .

"A wrong plan for the defence of New York has been adopted. This place is too much shut up in the strip of land which it occupies; it is not defended by nature, and it is impossible to do it by means of art, because it cannot be enclosed in a polygon; the most that ought to be attempted is the defence of its approaches."—Beaujour, Sketch of the U. S. of North Am., trans. by W. Walton (1814), 76, 123.

— In this year, First Light Infantry, New York, was organized.—See chronology prepared by Chas. S. Clark, in The Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

Jan. 1 According to authorities published in 1797, an adjustment in the calculation of time was supposed to take place on this day. When the Gregorian or New Style was adopted in 1752 (q. v.), it was found necessary to let eleven days lapse without reckoning them in the calendar. Agreeable to this regulation, it was said, Jan. first, 1800, was not to be reckoned in the calendar, and Jan. second was to be deemed the first of the new year. The reason given for this was as follows: "The year is commonly calculated at 365 days, 6 hours; every fourth year is called Leap Year and has 366 days. But this is not critically exact; for the revolution of the earth, in its orbit round the sun, is performed in 365 days, 5 hours, and about 48 minutes; thus nearly 12 minutes lie over for deduction each year, which at length must amount to a day. There were some hours lying over in the year 1752, which, with the minutes as already mentioned, will make up a natural day of the year 1800 [sic]. Thus, the exact time of the vernal and autumnal equinoxes, as also midsummer and midwinter, will be preserved in the Calendars and Almanacs, without changing the days of the months on which they shall in future happen."—Diary, F 16, 1797, citing "late London Papers." An examination of the Daily Adv. and the Com. Adv. for the transition period, from Dec. 31, 1799, to Jan. 1, 1800, fails to reveal any such readjustment or reference to it; but the 29th of Feb. was omitted in accordance with the regulation established in 1582 (q. v.). The same omission of Leap Year occurred in 1900.

" A foot-stove starts a blaze in Trinity Church.—Spectator, Ja 4, 1800.

6 Congress recommends that the people of the United States assemble on Feb. 22 (q. v.) "publicly to testify their grief for the death of general George Washington, by suitable eulogies, orations and discourses, or by public prayers," and that Pres. Adams issue a proclamation to this effect.—Laws of U. S., 6th cong., 1st sess., 209–10.

" Recorder Harison having obtained from Gouverneur Morris a copy of "the Oration he delivered lately at S^{t} Pauls Church, at the Request of this Board in honor of the Memory of General Washington dec^{d}," the common council orders that the recorder "get the said Oration printed under his direction and that the Copy Right be secured for charitable Purposes as the Board shall direct and that 1500 Copies be printed for the use of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 597. This having been done, the board directed, on Jan. 20, that the copyright be assigned to John Furman, printer, "on his furnishing this Board with 200 Copies gratis for the use of the Members according to his agreement with M^{r} Ten Eyck."—Ibid., II: 600.

" The auditing committee reports to the common council that it has contracted with the Daily Adv. and Com. Adv., at $75.00 each for one year from the first of this month, to publish whatever the board shall direct, except the treasurer's annual accounts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 597. From time to time, different papers were designated for this purpose.

8 The entertainment at the Park Theatre on this day is dedicated to the memory of Washington. The following programme is announced: "The house will be put in mourning. After the performance An Ode will be recited by Mr. Hodgkinson to the memory of General George Washington, accompanied by music, during which the Bier with the Urn and other emblems, preceeded by children strewing laurels, will be deposited under a Superb Canopy. The Stage will represent A Funeral Building Ornamented with trophies; under the centre arch of the building is seen a grand Canopy of black drapery, with Allegoric figures on the top, for the reception of the Bier; Two smaller arches containing skeletons with flambeaus. They will bear Medallions, with inscriptions denoting various actions of the deceased. Through the arches of the building is seen a view of a part of the city of N. York."—Greenleaf's New Daily Adv., Ja 8, 1800. The ode recited by Hodgkinson was by Samuel Low, whose poems, in two volumes (in one), 12mo, were published in New York in 1800. The second volume shows the list of subscribers, headed by John Jacob Astor.

" The city treasurer submits to the common council an "Estimate of the Expenses of the City of New York for the year 1800." Items chargeable to city and county jointly amount to $80,000; to which is added $50,000 for the city's operating expenses, making a total budget of $130,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 598.

22 Rev. Samuel Miller, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, who is writing a history of New York State (see Ja 19, 1798), petitions the legislature that "a Gentleman of highly respectable character and worthy of the most entire confidence" may be permitted to take the Dutch records in succession from the secretary's office to his home in Albany for the purpose of making translations and extracts for Dr. Miller.—Assemb. Papers, V: 107. On Feb. 6 and 7 the assembly and senate passed a joint resolution authorising James Van Ingen, clerk of the assembly, to remove the Dutch records for this purpose.—Assemb. Jour. (1800), 52; Senate Jour. (1800), 23. Dr. Miller soon found that the translations would cost too much for his private undertaking, and he submitted another memorial to the legislature (see Ja 22, 1801). See also A. J. F. van Laer's report on The Translation and Publication of the MS. Dutch Rec. of N. Neth. with an Account of previous Attempts at Translation (Albany, 1910).

27 On account of the sickness prevailing in the last few years at election time, and the consequent accumulation of law suits in "the Court of Common pleas called the Mayors Court," as well as for other reasons, the common council resolves that a petition be presented to the legislature begging leave to present the following bills at the present session:

To change the time for holding the annual election of charter officers in this city from Sept. 29 to the third Tuesday in November in every year; and that the persons elected be sworn into their respective offices on the first Monday in December;

To extend the term of the mayor's court from three to five days;

To amend, and incorporate into one statute, all the laws making alterations in the charter of this city; and also such as respect the powers and holding the mayor's court, and the court of general sessions of the peace; and which respect the city only and do not form a part of "the General Laws of the State at large;"

To make certain specified revisions respecting the powers and authority of "the Special Justices for preserving the peace."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 604–5. See Mr 21.

29 The senate concurs in an assembly resolution of Jan. 28 for honouring the memory of Washington by shrouding the speaker's chair and the clerk's desk in black, and by wearing black crepe upon the left arm during the session; also by appointing a committee to take further action on Feb. 22 (q. v.).—Assemb. Jour., 23d sess., 7–8, 11.

3 The common council orders that a petition, sealed with the common seal of the city and subscribed by the mayor on behalf of the board, be presented to the legislature, stating "that among the various other Causes which probably tend to promote Disease in this City during the Summer & Autumnal Seasons are the Buildings erected in many Parts of the City on Lots of Ground so short as not to admit of Yards of sufficient Size and in many Instances of none at all by which Means those Buildings are deprived of the benefit of a free circulating Air & the Cellars or other Parts thereof become the Receptacles of the Filth & Dirt of the Families. That the Buildings erected on the Lots on each side of Moore Street, the Lots on the West side of Broad Street in the Neighborhood of the Exchange Slip and the Lots on the West side of the Fly Market Slip (the Buildings on which are generally very Slight & in many Cases in a decayed Condition) are particularly of this Description, That to remove the Evil it is conceived that if those Lots together with the adjoining Lot could be taken, by an Agreement with the Owners or on an Appraisement by Verdict of a Jury, and formed into Lots of proper Size and disposed of to Persons who would erect proper & wholesome Buildings thereon, reserving sufficient Yards, the Health & Comfort of the City would be greatly promoted." The petition is to pray for a legislative provision "for removing the Evil & providing indemnification to the Owners."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 609.

6 The New City Tavern, at 115 Broadway, only recently completed (see summary under Ja 24, 1793), is offered for sale. It is described as follows: "The large Brick Building, situated in Broadway, commonly distinguished by the name of the Tontine City Hotel, co[n]taining the elegant Ball room, Tea room and Card rooms, made use of by the City Assembly. The premises contain the whole square, bounded on the east side by Broad-way, one [sic] the west side by Temple-street, on the south side by Thames-street, and on the north side by Little Queen-street [Cedar St.], being upwards of 100 feet in front on Broad-way, and 150 feet in depth. The House is so well known as not to need any particular description." The terms are ten percent cash; the remainder in six annual payments. Anyone interested is directed to apply to the cashier of the Bank of New York for particulars.—Com. Adv., F 6 to O 29, inclusive, 1800; descrip. of Pl. 125, III: 688; L. M. R. K., III: 977. Feb. 6

The legislature passes "An Act to cede to the United States the jurisdiction of certain islands situate in and about the harbour of New York." These are "Bedlow's island," "Oyster island" (Ellis Island), and "Governors island, on which Fort Jay is situate."—Laws of N. Y. (1800), chap. 6 (1 Webster 169). For history of Bedloe's Island, see Ap 20, 1676; for that of Ellis Island, see Ja 20, 1785. See also Smith, Governor's Island (1922). 15

This being the day recommended by congress on Jan. 6 (q. v.), and by the common council on Feb. 17 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, II: 610; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 20, 1800), to the people of the United States publicly to testify their grief for the death of Washington, all the public offices are closed, business is suspended, and the city exhibits "the appearance of respectful sorrow." Appropriate sermons are delivered in the various churches.—Spectator, F 26, 1800. The oration of Rev. John Mason at the Brick Presbyterian Church and the Funeral Eulogy of Dr. Wm. Linn to the Society of the Cincinnati at the Dutch Church were published this year.—See copies in N. Y. P. L. 22

The common council orders "that Water be taken of the Manhattan Society for the use of the Debtors Goal."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 611. Mar. 3

The Argus. Greenleaf's New Daily Advertiser and Greenleaf's New York Journal, & Patriotic Register are sold to David Denniston and discontinued with the issues of this date. Denniston established the American Citizen and General Advertiser (on Mr 10) in place of the former and the Republican Watch Tower (on Mr 12) in place of the latter.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 383, 434; Early Newspapers, II: 422. 8

"The Cap of Liberty is once more displayed at the coffee-house! [see Je 14, 1793; My 18, 1795]. Although a miniature, and an appendage to the monument of Washington, it still excites sensations unpleasant to many friends of the good old order of things. . . . It has become so offensive to many frequenters of the Tontine Coffee-House, that we should not be surprised," observes an editor, "if this waxen picture should be removed from its present situation."—Am. Cit. & Gen. Adv. (formerly Argus), Mr 17, 1800. See, further, Je 2. 17

By act of the legislature, several changes are made in the government of the city: 1. The annual election of charter officers is changed from Sept. 29 ("the feast day of Saint Michael the Archangel," as prescribed in the Dongan Charter of 1686) to the third Tuesday in November, the officers elected to be sworn on the first Monday in December thereafter. 21

2. In case any of the aldermen or other officers of the city shall "refuse to serve, or die, or remove out of the said city" before the expiration of his term, or if he shall not be "legally qualified to serve," the common council shall call a special election to fill the vacancy.

3. No person shall vote as a freeholder "unless he shall be possessed of a freehold estate, in lands or tenements in his own right or that of his wife, to the value of fifty dollars over and above all debts charged thereon . . . and shall have possessed the same (except it came to him by descent or devise) at least one month before the day of such election." Furthermore, the said freeholder may be required by the inspector of election to certify under oath as to such possession.

4. Any one voting as a freeman may be required to testify to three months' residence in the city immediately prior to the election and one month's residence in the ward.

5. The mayor and recorder may hold "the court of common pleas called the mayor's court" without the presence of aldermen.

6. Courts of general sessions, instead of being held quarterly, are to be held in alternate months beginning in June, and courts of special sessions may be held at any time the common council may

1800 Mar. 21 direct. The meeting place of such courts or of the common council may be somewhere other than at the city hall "by reason of great sickness" (yellow fever pestilences having befallen the city in 1793, 1795, and 1798), or "for any other important cause."—Laws of N. Y. (1800), chap. 35.

" A subscription is on foot to erect "an African Church" in New York. It is for the benefit of "the unfortunate African, whom the unfeeling hand of avarice has forced from his native land."—Am. Cit., Mr 21, 1800. The corner-stone was laid July 30 (q.v.).

24 The common council orders that Ald. Lenox, De La Montagnie, and Coles "be a Committee to consider of the expediency of erecting a new City Hall & to report to the Board their Opinion thereon, as also the proper Place, a Plan of the Building, an Estimate of the Expence and in what manner the present City Hall ought to be disposed of."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 616. No report of this committee is recorded in the minutes at this time. See F 20, 1802.

" A weekly entitled Forlorn Hope is established. It was conducted by William Ketelтas and was published from the prison in the interest of prison reform, and especially to bring about the repeal of the law as to imprisonment for debt. The last issue located is that of Sept. 13, 1800.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 415. Cf. Early Newspapers, II: 419.

28 The legislature passes "An Act making provision for the revision of the laws of this State." James Kent and Jacob Radcliff are named in the act to collect and reduce into proper form under certain titles all the public acts of the legislature, omitting those acts or parts of acts which have been repealed or have expired by their own limitation. They are to bring to the attention of the legislature all contradictions, omissions, or imperfections, that these may be reconciled, supplied, or amended. They are allowed two years "to complete the transcribing the laws," and until the end of the next session following such completion "to present the whole thereof to the legislature." They are allowed $1,000 each besides clerk hire and stationery.—Laws of N. Y. (1800), chap. 70.

Apr. 4 The legislature passes "An Act to enable the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York, to purchase certain houses and lots of ground which are in such a state as to endanger the health of the said city." The buildings on each side of Moore St., and on the west side of Broad St. near the Exchange, in the First Ward; and those between Front and South Sts., on the west side of the Fly Market, are of this description.—Laws of N. Y. (1800), chap. 87.

8 The "beautiful House and Garden called Mount Pitt directly back of the Belvidere" is offered for lease.—Am. Cit., Ap 9, 1800. See N 15.

10 The U. S. Ship "President" is launched from "the upper ship yards" by Mr. Cheeseman. This is a vessel of 44 guns. The launching is witnessed by "a large concourse of spectators." The Sixth Regiment, under Col. Morton; the Artillery, under Maj. Curtenius, and several other "uniform companies," marched upon the ground "in front of the ship," and "immediately on her touching the water, federal salutes were fired from the United States ship Portsmouth—from the Aspacia, Indiaman, and from the Revenue Cutter Jay, which were answered by the Artillery from the shore—after which the several uniform companies fired a feu de joye, and marched off the ground to the Battery."—Conn. Courant, Ap 14, 1800. See also Daily Adv., Ap 10, 1800, for brigade orders for the day. See also the account of the launching written by Abraham Bancker on April 21, and printed in Magazine, Daughters of the Rev. (1896), IV: 177. In description of Pl. 56, I: 420, the date of this launching is erroneously given as April 24.

14 Joseph Delacroix introduces a "Distillery of Cordials" at his "Confectionery Manufactory," 112 Broadway (see D 7, 1799). See, further, Ja 9, 1801.

At his Vauxhall Garden on the Bayard place (see My 1, 1798; D 7, 1799), he "has provided a number of lamps in Broadway, to light up the dark road to his garden."—Daily Adv., Ap 14, 1800. These were the first lamps on Broadway above Canal St.—See De Voe's Newspaper Index (MS.), in N. Y. H. S., under "N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv.," Je 3, 1800.

" The common council appoints a committee "to report on the expediency of erecting a new Market at Catharine Slip with a Plan of the Building & an Estimate of the Expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 620. See, further, Ag 25.

Apr. 21 The "beautiful Frigate New-York, pierced for 38 guns," is launched at "the lower ship-yard . . ., amidst the acclamations of thousands of surrounding citizens." Federal salutes are fired from the "Aspasia," "Indiaman," and the government cutter "Jay," which are decorated with the "colours of different nations." The "New York" is the voluntary product of New York City merchants.—Conn. Gaz., Ap 30, 1800. This vessel is highly praised for her form and workmanship. Mr. Carpenter is the builder, and Capt. Robinson is appointed to her command. It is to be loaned to the government. The statement is published that "Our little navy grows apace. May it soon be fully competent to the protection of our commerce against all insults and depredations."—Conn. Courant, Ap 28, 1800. See also Daily Adv., Ap 25, 1800, and descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 420.

24 An act of congress, "to make further provision for the removal and accommodation of the Government of the United States," gives the president power to direct the removal of "the various offices belonging to the several executive departments of the United States" from Philadelphia to Washington, after the adjournment of the present session of congress. It carries appropriations for furnishing the president's house and the capitol, and for making foot-ways in the city of Washington. Included in this is a provision of $5,000 for the purchase of books for the use of congress, and the fitting up of an apartment in the capitol to contain them.—Laws of U. S. (printed for Mathew Carey, Phila., 1804), V: 130; Acts of Congress (1800), chap. 37.

" Gov. Jay writes to the Rev. Dr. Morse: "The approaching general election in this State will be unusually animated. No arts or pains will be spared to obtain an anti-federal representation, in order to obtain an anti-federal President, etc., and through him divers other objects. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 266. See My 5.

" A dinner is given to the builders of the three ships of war, "Adams" (see Je 8, 1799), "President" (see Ap 10, 1800), and "New York" (see Ap 21, 1800). The published report of the event states: ". . . the awnings of the ship President were handsomely extended over the green in front of the Belvidere house—A table was placed under them and a very plentiful and elegant entertainment was provided. . . . Three ships of war, equal in strength of materials and perfection of workmanship to any which it is believed the world can furnish, have been launched in this port within twelve months, and the facility of constructing more increases with our exertions."—Daily Adv., Ap 26, 1800.

May 5 Theophilus Parsons writes to John Jay: "The next election of President will be an important event. . . . I believe that at this time the universal sentiment of the Federalists is, to support Mr. Adams, with all the activity and perseverance such a measure deserves. The Jacobins appear to be completely organized throughout the United States. The principals have their agents dispersed in every direction; and the whole body act with a union to be expected only from men, in whom no moral principles exist to create a difference of conduct resulting from a difference of sentiment. Their exertions are bent to introduce into every department of the State governments unprincipled tools of a daring faction, to render more certain the election to the Presidency, of the great arch priest of Jacobinism and infidelity."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 269–70. See My 7.

" Ald. Coles, on behalf of the Manhattan Co., represents to the common council that the company has "determined to erect a large Reservoir for the supplying of the City with pure Water," and that "a Piece of Ground in the highest part of the City in or near the Park" is considered as "most proper for the purpose." He requests that a committee be appointed to confer with the committee of the Manhattan Co. on the subject of "the most proper Place . . ., the quantity of Ground required and what reasonable compensation" ought to be made to the city. The subject was referred to the committee of June 12, 1799 (q.v.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 625.

7 In a letter to Gov. Jay, Alexander Hamilton says: "You have been informed of the loss of our election in this City. It is also known that we have been unfortunate throughout Long Island and in Westchester. According to the returns hitherto, it is too probable that we lose our Senator for this District.

"The moral certainty, therefore is that there will be an Anti-Federal Majority in the ensuing legislature, and the very high probability is that this will bring Jefferson into the Chief Magis-

1800 May 7 tracy, unless it be prevented by the measure which I shall now submit to your consideration, namely the immediate calling together of the existing legislature.

"In observing this, I shall not be supposed to mean that anything ought to be done which integrity will forbid, but merely that the scruples of delicacy and propriety . . . ought to yield to the extraordinary nature of the crisis. They ought not to hinder the taking of a legal and constitutional step, to prevent an atheist in Religion and a fanatic in politics from getting possession of the helm of the State. You, Sir, know in a great degree the Anti-Federal party, but I fear that you do not know them as well as I do. 'Tis a composition indeed of very incongruous materials, but all tending to mischief—some of them to the overthrow of the Government by depriving it of its due energies, others of them to a Revolution after the manner of Buonaparte. . . . The calling of the Legislature will have for object the choosing of Electors by the people in districts. This (as Pennsylvania will do nothing) will insure a majority of votes in the United States for a Federal candidate. This measure will not fail to be approved by all the Federal Party; while it will no doubt be condemned by the opposite. As to its intrinsic nature it is justified by unequivocal reasons of public safety. The reasonable part of the world will, I believe, approve it. . . ."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 270–72. Jay endorsed this letter: "Proposing a measure for party purposes, which I think it would not become me to adopt."—Ibid., IV: 272 (footnote). Gen. Schuyler writes to Jay, in behalf of "Our Federal friends in Congress," on the same day, and also suggests convening the legislature for the purpose mentioned by Hamilton.—Ibid., IV: 273.

9 John Campbell (see Ja 5, 1795) again applies to the trustees of the Lutheran Church for a lease of "the burnd Church in the Broadway," and his petition is referred to the vestry. At the same meeting it was resolved "that the Church yard in the Broadway be enclosed, partly with a stonewall and a boardfence in a decent manner."—Lutheran Min. (MS.). See Jl 8.

10 Daniel Phoenix, city treasurer, offers the American Museum for sale. His advertisement reads: "To be Sold, the collection of curiosities made by Gardiner Baker, deceased, formerly exhibited in the Exchange, and at present in the building erected for the Panorama in Greenwich-street. . . . By an agreement with some of the members of the Tammany Society [see Je 25, 1795], the late Gardiner Baker has bound himself in an obligation, under the penalty of 10 pounds each, to grant to them their wives and children priviledge of visiting the said museum [free] from expence; it will therefore be sold subject to this condition: The building in which these articles are at present, was the property of the widow, and is subject to an annual ground rent; this will be sold for the remainder of the term . . . if not previously disposed of it will be sold at auction on the premises at 11 o'clock in the forenoon."—Com. Adv., My 10, 1800; descrip. of Pl. 95-b, III: 584. The museum was sold to W. I. Waldron (see S 15).

12 On March 17, the surviving trustees of the proprietors of "the late Negro burial Ground" (see Je 27, 1796) stated in a memorial to the common council (as had previously been done on May 27, 1799) that they were ready to convey to the city "the Gore of Land at the Corner of Broad Way & Chambers Street," adjoining the northerly side of the almshouse yard, in exchange for "the Conveyance to be made by this Board to the said Trustees." It was ordered that the conveyance from this board be prepared accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 548–49, 615. The proprietors having executed to the board releases "of all the Ground to the South of Chambers Street," the board approves the draft of a release to them of "the Ground on the North side of the said Street as also of three certain Lots in the vicinity" (described in committee reports on June 27 (q. v.) and July 19, 1796), and orders that this release be sealed, and that the mayor subscribe to it on behalf of the board.—Ibid., II: 626.

" The common council permits the managers of the "State Road Lottery" to use "the Great Court Room" (common council chamber) for the drawing of the lottery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 625. See also D 10.

13 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church authorise the committee of repairs to dispose of the ground in front of the old church and the Brick Church for the purpose of building vaults at a price not less than £25 for a single vault.—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. For vaults built and sold, if any, vide ibid.

The committee on repairs of St. Mark's Church is authorised to have a fence erected around the church, which until this time has stood in the open fields.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 120–21. For a view of the church in 1799, see ibid., opp. p. 112. May 14

Joseph Corre announces that he "has erected" the "Mount Vernon Garden, In Leonard Street, two Streets above the hospital . . . which will open to-morrow evening with a grand concert. . . . "

"Large entertainments will be provided for companies or societies; he has erected a range of buildings to contain tables from thirty to two hundred feet long; and so constructed as to admit said company only, if requested. Tea, Coffee, and Relishes will also be provided every day till 6 o'clock P. M. As it is his wish to keep his garden genteel and in good order, the tickets of admittance will be 1 s 6 d and for harmony 2 s. concert night 4 s. which will entitle the bearer to the same refreshments as heretofore. To prevent any impositions from the servants, the rules and prices of the different refreshment, will be put in conspicuous places in the garden. Wanted immediately, Two waitors and a cook, who can be well recommended for their honesty and sobriety."

Corre adds: "Columbia Garden [see My 5, 1798] is opened on the same principle as above."—Am. Cit. & Gen. Adv., My 14, 1800. See Ag 10, 15, 1801.

According to Bayles, Corre's Mount Vernon Garden was formerly the White Conduit House.—Old Taverns of N. Y., 399. This, however, appears to be an error.—See L. M. R. K., III: 980 and 981. See, further, Jl 4 and 9, and Ag 29, 1800.

The common council orders that the street commissioners attend to the filling up of "the Slip at the lower end of Broad Street" to a point 40 ft. from the south side of South St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 627. 19

Longworth and Wheeler advertise an exhibition of prints at "No. 11 Park," five doors south of the theatre. The principal features are "the celebrated prints that constitute the Shakespeare Gallery." The advertisement states also that "They are in the regular receipt of the Gallery of Fashion consisting of a set of elegant coloured prints, periodically issued under this title at London;" also that "their Washington Print is completed and to be seen."—Daily Adv., My 24, 1800. "Longworth's Shakespeare Gallery," with a catalogue of the paintings shown there in 1802, was described by Henry B. Dawson in Old New York Revived, 79–88 (no date), in N. Y. P. L. By "the celebrated prints that constitute the Shakespeare Gallery" is doubtless meant the prints published between 1790 and 1804 by John and Josiah Boydell, of London, from the paintings by British artists, illustrative of Shakespearean scenes. The gallery was advertised in the N. Y. Directory, 1801–2. It is also described in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 105–8. 24

The common council adopts regulations for the better government of the watch.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 630–31. One of these provides that "No Aliens shall be employed as Watchmen;" but this was revoked on June 2 and 16.—Ibid., II: 633, 636. 26

The common council orders that Ald. Coles and the street commissioners "agree with some Person for a Contract to erect a Bridge across Bensons Creek at Harlem," and make report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 630. A payment was made by the city toward this object on June 2 (ibid., II: 633); another on Oct. 27 (ibid., II: 677), and one on Dec. 29 (ibid., II: 694). "

Leonard Parkinson purchases from William Kenyon for $750 sixteen acres of land north of the "Land late of Colonel Roger Morris" (see Ag 29, 1799). The deed was recorded on Aug. 14, 1800.—Liber Deeds, LVIII: 505 et seq. In 1810 (q. v., Mr 9 and Ap 28), Parkinson sold his property to Stephen Jumel. ".

John Byrne, keeper of the Tontine Coffee House, publishes a notice to "the gentlemen Auctioneers" that "he intends charging on Sales at Public Auction, sold before the Tontine Coffee House, either in Wall, or Water, streets, 8 s. per sale, and at the same rates on all Sales sold in the Tontine Coffee House. . . . He wishes to mention to the gentlemen, that they will not dispose of any articles opposite to the Tontine which may be the least offensive; nor placing any merchandize, or other articles so as to incommode the going in, or coming out, of the Tontine, and that all anchors, cables, and other articles, be removed as soon as possible, after the Sales are over."—Daily Adv., Je 3, 1800. Cf. Pl. 69, Vol. I. June 2

After Byrne's death (see N. Y. Spectator, S 19, 1801), James Rathwell was appointed keeper on Feb. 13, 1802; John Hyde took it again, May 3, 1804; and, on Nov. 9, 1805, after the fever, it was 1800 Je 2 opened by Thos. Vaughan.—See N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv. for these dates. See, further, S 26, 1804.

10 The mayor presents to the common council a warrant of the state auditor on the state treasurer to pay, to the order of the common council, the sum of $12,368 to defray various outstanding debts for the fortifications. An order on the state treasurer, signed by the mayor, is at once issued to pay this amount to Ald. Bogert, to be by him applied to discharge the accounts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 634.

11 "The rapidity with which the Manhattan Water works in this city go on, is worthy of remark—already six miles of pipes are laid through the principal streets—and upwards of four hundred houses are supplied with water."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 11, 1800. See, further, Jl 6, 1801.

13 "The Temple of the Sun, . . . as represented in Kotzebue's tragedy of Pizarro," with a number of other elaborate fireworks, is advertised to be shown at the Vauxhall Garden (Delacroix's) on this evening. The notice adds: "No Light on the Barn, No Exhibition."—Daily Adv., Je 11, 1800.

On June 30, a "Patent Federal Ballon, or, Vertical Aerial Coachee," was advertised at this garden by the patentee, Phineas Parker. Here, "Valetudinarians may experience a restoration of Health, the motion being highly approved of by the faculty, and persons in health may receive the pleasure of being transported in a safe and easy Carriage 1500 feet per minute, nearly 20 miles an hour, but slower if they chuse; and have a rich variety of Landscapes, equal to any in the world, and alternate views of the Waters of the East and North-Rivers, of the City of New-York, and the neighbouring Villages.—Eight persons take seats at a time. . . ." —Ibid., Jl 2, 1800.

The area covered by this Vauxhall is indicated in an ad. of a house for rent "in Mary street, opposite the east end of Mr. Delacroix's Garden," showing that the garden extended eastward as far as Mary St.—Daily Adv., Jl 17, 1800. See, further, Jl 4, 1800.

14 Napoleon defeats the Austrians at Marengo, and comes into possession of the whole of northern Italy.

18 Trinity vestry agrees to give for the support of the charity school the "Lands &c bounded on the south by Rector Street in length 172 feet—by Greenwich Street in the west 108 feet 10 inches —by Lots N° 27. and N° 3. on the North and by Lumber Street on the East, including the Charity School House and Grounds now appropriated to its use."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

23 Mayor Varick lays before the common council a letter from Dr. Sam'l Mitchill, professor of natural history, chemistry, and agriculture, at Columbia College, "in which he recommends the use of Lime Stone in the erection of Buildings & paving Streets in this City to promote the Health thereof." The board orders that it be published, and that Dr. Mitchill be thanked.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 636. See also Ag 18.

" The report of the committee on a plan for the government of the almshouse is read in the common council, and consideration of it is postponed until the second Monday of July. The original report, a lengthy document, is preserved in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. It is ordered to be printed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 639. See, further, O 6.

30 Joshua Isaacs, president of the board of trustees of the Congregation of Shearith Israel, writes to the common council requesting that, inasmuch as a recent city ordinance deprives this congregation of the privilege of burying in their own cemetery the bodies of such of their dead as die of "pestilential disorders," and as the religious customs of the Jews "forbid them to bury their dead in the same cemeteries with those of other denominations," they ask that part of the potters-field "may be separated from the rest and granted to them, so that they may fence in and partition the Same as a burying ground for the exclusive use of their own Congregation."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. In the common council the petition is "read & postponed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 641.

" A petition dated June 14 comes before the common council, signed by residents in Front St. near the Fly Market, complaining that the street is "almost continually shut by Market Women, Cookey Boys, Coffee tents, &c.," and that this injures their business. They ask their removal to the upper part of the market, or "that they may be so arranged that the avenue may at all times be open for Carts & Passingers."—From the original MS., in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. The board refers it to the committee on the Fly Market.—See endorsement on ibid.; also M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 641. The committee's report, also endorsed on the petition, dated June 30, expresses the hope "that all such persons as are commonly denominated hucsters and stand below the lower Meat Market of the Fly market be removed, and that the clerk of the Market provide them with stands opposite the Meat Market." June 30

An advertisement reads: "The American Museum Revived. " The Museum will be open for public inspection on the 4th July next at No 226 Greenwich street."—Am. Cit., Je 30, 1800. See S 15.

The royal assent is given to the act of union of Great Britain and Ireland.—Ann. Reg. (1800), 23. July 2

The city's Fourth of July expenses are $19.50 for ringing of bells, $138 for the public dinner (served by Jos. Tyler), and $157.25 for gunpowder.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 643, 644, 645. 4

At Delacroix's Vauxhall (see Je 13) the day is celebrated with cannon-firing, fireworks, and the display of an allegorical structure, in honour of Washington, called the "Temple of Memory" (80 ft. front, 40 ft. high, and 150 ft. in circumference), as well as a large model of Mount Vernon (20 ft. high, 25 ft. long, illuminated with hundreds of coloured lamps).—Daily Adv., Jl 2, 1800. "In order to keep the peace of the Congregation, and [for] other obvious reasons," the vestry and the trustees decide not to lease the burned Lutheran Church to John Campbell. They agree that "David and Philipp Grimm the present occupiers should have and occupy the said burnt Church as a Store only they puting the same in decent repair for that purpose at their own expences, and they, the said David and Philipp Grimm paying One Hundred Dollars per annum rent for the same, during the term the lease of the house adjoining the same (belonging to the united German Lutheran Churches) shall be unexpired, provided nevertheless, that if this Corporation shall want the same, for the use of the Church and its Congregation, in that case the said David and Philipp Grimm shall deliver the said burnt Church to this Corporation at any time required by them for said purpose." See Pl. 68-a, Vol. I. 8

It was asked whether the "Corporation would sell a strip of their burrying ground in Rector Street in order to widen the said Street, and what they would ask for the same." Referred to vestry.—Lutheran Min. On July 22, the vestry referred matter back to trustees.—Ibid. See also Vol. I, p. 450.

A summer theatre is to be opened on this day at Joseph Corre's Mount Vernon Garden with a performance of "Miss in Her Teens, or the Medley of Lovers." Corre "has engaged several principal performers belonging to the [Park] Theatre, and proposes to exhibit Theatrical Entertainments, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. . . ."—Daily Adv., Jl 9, 1800. Regarding Corre, see Dunlap, Hist. of Am. Theatre (1832), 277–79. See also Sonneck, Early Opera in Am., 106–7. The theatre was at the north-west corner of Broadway and Leonard St.—L. M. R. 13 The common council determines that "to continue Rector Street of it's breadth to the Broad Way [a] parcel of the Ground appertaining to the old Lutheran Church & now belonging to the United German Lutheran Church is required," and orders that street commissioners "treat with the Proprietors of the Ground so required as to the Price to be given for the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 647. See S 8.

18 The common council receives another communication from Dr. Mitchill (see Je 23), this time regarding sinks and privies, and again the board orders that it be published for the information of the citizens.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 649.

25 According to a petition of this date, the market at the foot of Catharine St. (see Ag 19, 1799, and Ap 14, 1800) was "now Building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 649. On Dec. 29, a payment of $1,621.54 was made for this market.—Ibid., II: 694.

29 Joseph Corre, "intending to retire from public business," offers the "Mount Vernon Theatrical Garden" (see Jl 9) for sale. He says: ". . . the street [Leonard] when regulated will raise the garden from 12 to 20 feet above the level of the streets, all around, which will form a proper Mount . . . the main Street [Broadway] is now paving to the very corner of the street which will render the walk much easier; there is a well of good water as good as any in the City."—Daily Adv., Ag 29, 1800. See My 28, 1801.

" On examining sealed proposals, the common council awards the care of the public slips and wharfs to Alexander Mowatt, who entered a bid (in behalf of Jotham Post) of $12,010 per annum from Sept. 1, 1800, to May 1, 1802.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 650, 651–52. Post immediately asked permission to transfer the contract to Moses and Daniel Coe, but the board voted against releasing him from his bargain, and Post gave the necessary bond (ibid., II: 652, 654). Dr. James Tillary makes a report to the public concerning the health of the city. He says: "It has been rumoured over the city, that the yellow fever exists about the Ship-Yards, particularly near George-street, . . . It is very true that the neighborhood of the Ship-yards, and in some other parts of the City, there have been several pretty severe cases of the common remitting bilious fever, which this season never fails to produce; but as far as I have heard, there has been but one death. . . . 31

"We have reached the first of September without much cause of alarm, and there is good ground to hope, that a merciful Providence intends to shield us this year, from the pestilence we have so much cause to dread."—Spectator, S 3, 1800. See also Medical Repository (1801), IV: 207. See O 30.

The street commissioners inform the common council that they have conferred with the trustees of the United German Lutheran Churches relative to their ground "at the head of Rector Street" (see Ag 13), and that "the said Trustees are willing to dispose of a sufficient quantity of their ground to widen Rector Street to the same width as below, but that they Cannot agree as to the price." The land desired is "Eleven feet in width in the rear nine feet four inches in front on Broadway and ninety seven feet six inches in length on each side." The commissioners suggest that the board "have recourse to the Law on that Subject."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 653. The original MS. report is in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. On Oct. 29, a jury awarded the Lutheran Church $1,500 for the land.—Lutheran Min. (MS.), under Mr 9, Je 30, and S 2, 1801. On May 18, 1801, the common council paid $1,500 to "The Corporation of the United German Lutheran Churches in the City of New York" for "the Ground taken of them to widen Rector Street agreable to certain Proceedings had on the 29th Oct^r last in the Mayors Court of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 738. Sept. 8

There is read to the common council a petition dated Aug. 26, and signed by 31 petitioners, beginning with Elizabeth Maunsell, and including Aug. Van Cortlandt, Alex. Macomb, Jacobus Dyckman, A. Hamilton, James Beekman, J. Schieffelin, and others, which states that they, and the public in general, "suffer great Inconvenience, and Danger, from the public Road, as it now runs between the nine & ten Mile Stones, through the Land of Doct. Samuel Bradhurst, ascending that very difficult & dangerous Hill [on Harlem Heights], being the only direct Way of Communication for the State at large to the City." They believe "there can be a more easy & safe Road made for public Convenience . . .;" that "the Road may be alter'd greatly for the better by passing up on the west Side of the Valley, where a Sufficiency of Land can be purchased for a Road, & may be made, & kept in Repair at less Expence, than the present one."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 653. 10

The street com'rs, to whom this was referred, reported on Oct. 6 in favour of the petition, stating that Dr. Bradhurst would take £100 for the ground through which the road would pass.—Original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. Cf. Ap 1, 1799.

" The committee on Sam. Blackwell's petition relative to establishing a ferry and laying out a road at Horn's Hook (see N 18, 1799), reports "that they have Caused a Survey to be made agreeable to a plan herewith presented;" also that they have interviewed proprietors concerning the purchase of the ground, and, as they cannot agree upon a price with them, they recommend submitting the question to a jury. The road description, which is entered in the minutes, shows that the road is to begin at the East River at high-water mark, 15 ft. north of Archibald Gracie's boundary line. Condemnation proceedings (to borrow the modern term for the legal proceeding) are initiated to ascertain the value of the land.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 653–54. Regarding the ferry, see ibid., II: 729, 737–38. On May 18, 1801, $375 was paid to Archibald Gracie, and $1,500 to the devisees of Nicholas Crugers for the road rights.—Ibid., II: 738. On Aug. 3 of that year, the board ordered the street com'rs to "immediately proceed to open & make the said Road."—Ibid., III: 15. On Aug. 17, the board 1800 Sept. 10 refused to consent to an alteration in the road, on Mrs. Cruger's petition; but on Sept. 14, ordered the street com'rs to determine by survey whether "the new road to Horns hook" should be altered.—Ibid., III: 18, 26.

11 Wm. C. Thompson (see D 6, 1796) offers for sale "A part of the Tea Water Pump, consisting of Ten Twelfths of the whole. The whole property consists of 3 lots of Ground, each 120 by 25 feet, with the Pump and Houses."—Am. Cit., S 11, 1800.

15 Jonathan Dayton and Aaron Ogden having requested permission to erect a wharf or pier on the west side of the Whitehall Slip for the exclusive use of the Staten Island and Elizabethtown ferry-boats, the common council agrees to a committee report which states "That this Slip from its local Situation Seems to be the natural point of Communication with Staten Island, Elizabeth Town and many other parts of New Jersey, and is the only Landing place for the Ferry Boats from those places, but from its present unimproved State Horses and Carriages cannot be taken into these Boats except at high Water, and their Numerous Passengers some old and infirm and Women and Children, are not unfrequently in bad and Windy weather obliged to Climb across the Decks of Several Vessels loaded with Hay and other Lumber to get out and into these Ferry Boats—Your Committee therefore recommend that a Peir be Built from the inner part of the White Hall Slip out into the River along side of the Battery agreeable to a plan made by Robert Valentine and now laid before the Board, which will likewise give very Considerable Accomodation, to the River Crafts and the many Boats that are Constantly Communicating with the Shiping in the lower Harbour—Mr Ryers and Mr Crane have both Offered to build this Peir at their own expence Provided the Corporation will give them a Lease thereof for twenty one years, but your Committee are of opinion that the Various Public Accommodations that this Peir will afford are too important for the Corporation to put it out of their Power and Controul.

"There are thirteen Elizabeth Town and Staten Island Ferry Boats Mr Crane who has Leased the five former for three Years, Offers thirty Dollars for each Boat per Annum for the Accommodation the proposed Peir and Stairs will afford him, and the owners of the Staten Island Boats will probably pay about half that Sum for each Boat of theirs." The board orders that the committee "take Measures for obtaining Proposals to build the said Pier on Contract."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 647, 655.

" In a petition to the common council, dated Aug. 12, Jacob Harsen, Henry Siegner, Philip Webbers, Jacob Shute, John Hopper, and Andrew Hopper make the following appeal: "That your petitioners being residents, with sundry others, in the Seventh Ward, at or near the district called Bloomingdale, finding it inconvenient to attend public worship in the City at such a distance, and observing that many, in consequence of that inconvenience, neglect such worship altogether; have a desire of erecting a Church for the accommodation of themselves and their neighbours.

"That in viewing the situation which would be eligible for this purpose, they have concluded, the spot where the cross-road over Inkelen-bergh, near the four mile stone, meets the middle road, would be most central and best meet the wishes and convenience of the neighbourhood.

"That, as this ground belongs to the Corporation and now lays in common and unimproved, your Petitioners, . . . take the liberty to request that so much of that Land as will suffice for erecting a Church and School house and laying out a Cymetry, may be granted to them as Trustees for the purpose. as it is probably an object of growing importance for the City in general to have extensive burial grounds provided at a competent distance, your petitioners humbly suggest, whether it would not be proper to have the Cymetry amply spacious and large.

"That your petitioners engage to release the ground to the Corporation of the said Church, which is intended to be of the denomination of the Dutch reformed Church, as soon as the same shall be organized, . . ."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. After reading the petition, the common council resolves "that the public Grounds which remain unsold ought to be reserved for the public City purposes & therefore that it would be inexpedient to grant the prayer of the said Petition."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 655. The first "Harsenville" church was erected in 1814 (q.v.).

" W. I. Waldron offers for sale "the American Museum consisting of a valuable collection of Natural and Artificial Curiosities, together with a great number of excellent Paintings—the lease of the lot on which the same at present stands, and also the building."—Am. Cit., S 15, 1800. Sept. 15

The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church order that "The Rail-fence in the Front of the old Church be made new. . . ."—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. 22

Hugh Gaine, in a petition to the common council, acting for a number of inhabitants of Greenwich St. in the Seventh Ward, asks permission "to erect a Market on his ground opposite Leonard Lispenard's, Esq in the said Ward, upon the same Terms, and under the same Restrictions they have done to those that have lately applied to them for the like Favour."—From the original MS., in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 656. See Jl 22 and O 27. "

Representatives of France and the United States sign at Paris a convention by which peaceful relations between the two countries are restored (see Je 13, 1798); the treaty of 1778 is annulled, and all spoliation claims of American citizens against France are postponed. On Feb. 18, 1801, the U. S. senate ratified the convention after expunging the article regarding spoliation claims and limiting the treaty to eight years. Bonaparte signed it on July 31, 1801, with the proviso that the elision of the second article should be held to mean that each country renounced the claims to which that article related. The senate also agreed to this, and the United States thus assumed France's obligations to American citizens.—Laws of U. S., 7th cong., 2nd sess., sec. IV–XLVII; Avery, Hist. of U. S., VII: 214–16. "The claims for indemnity thus devolving upon the United States, known as the French Spoliation Claims, have been from that day to this the subject of frequent report and discussion in Congress."—Winsor, VII: 367 (footnote). A pamphlet entitled Letter from Alexander Hamilton concerning the Public Conduct and Character of John Adams, Esq., President of the United States appears. This reviews Adams's public life from the beginning of the Revolution, denounces him as a man with the "unfortunate foibles of a vanity without bounds, and a jealousy capable of discoloring every object," and strongly criticizes his administration, particularly his French policy.—See copy in N. Y. P. L., and Hammond, Hist. of Political Parties in the State of N. Y. to 1840, I: 147–52. "The plan of Hamilton was to print it privately and send copies to men whose good will and influence were necessary to secure Pinckney's election to the presidential chair. But his scheme was defeated, for scarcely had the printer put the pamphlet in type when a copy was procured from the office, carried to Burr, extracts prepared, and sent off at once to the chief Democratic newspapers in the States."—McMaster, Hist. of People of the U. S., II: 504–5. Adams took no public notice of the pamphlet, but Noah Webster and a number of others issued answers to it. For a list of some of these replies, see ibid., II: 507. 22

The common council orders "that the Market House lately erected between Greenwich Street & the River in the 6th Ward [see Jl 22] be called & known by the Name of Greenwich Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 677. However, the market was generally called the "Spring Street Market."—De Voe, Market Book, 375. See, further, Ja 14, 1805. 27

The "floating Engines," long expected (see Ja 18, 1797), have arrived from England, in charge of the "gentleman [Mr. Howell] who went from this place to superintend the manufacturing of the same." Two engines, "on an entire new plan, on carriages with 28

1800 steel springs," were brought with them.—N. Y. Gaz. and Gen. Adv., O 28, 1800. The latter were to be given public inspection
Oct. 28 opposite the Tontine Coffee House on Nov. 10. The former can not be worked "till the barge is built."—Ibid., N 10, 1800. Again, on Nov. 21, the engines were to be tried, this time at Burling Slip. The firemen were to give a fair trial, "both by suction from the river, and by the leaders into Pearl-street."—Com. Adv., N 20, 1800.

30 Dr. Valentine Seaman, writing to Dr. Edward Miller concerning "the Epidemic Disease [yellow fever] which appeared in the City of New-York, in the Summer and Autumn of 1800," describes the symptoms of the disease and his treatment for it. He adds: "Of upwards of 150 persons with this disease, whom I visited, all of them, excepting one, resided (or else had stores, wherein they were occupied during the greater part of the day) either in Pearl-street, or between that and the East-River."—Medical Repository (1801), IV: 248–53.

Nov. 8 The war office at Washington is destroyed by fire, and with it "all the papers belonging to it, except the Accountants."—Com. Adv., N 12, 1800.

" Gov. Jay, writing to Richard Hatfield, declines a renomination for the state governorship, because "The period is now nearly arrived at which I have for many years intended to retire from the cares of public life, and for which I have been for more than two years preparing. Not perceiving, after mature consideration that any duties require me to postpone it, I shall retire accordingly." He adds: "On this occasion various reflections crowd into my mind, but I doubt the utility under existing circumstances of expressing them. Time and experience will correct many errors which ought not to have been introduced into public opinions. . . .

"I declare to you explicitly that in my opinion we ought to resist innovations, to adhere to our constitutions and governments, to give them a fair trial, and to amend them from time to time according to the dictates of experiences, and not according to the views of demagogues or the visions of theorists."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 278–80. See Ja 13, 1801.

" Dennis Driscol begins the publication of a weekly entitled The Temple of Reason. Although devoted to expounding the principles of deism, it contained current news and advertisements.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 500. It was suspended at New York on Feb. 7, 1801.—Ibid.

9 "Resolved That the Committee of Leases [of Trinity vestry] be authorized to purchase the House and Lot of Ground of M^r^ Jacob Le Roy in Vesey Street; and that the said Committee be further authorized to dispose of the House now occupied by the Rector in Nassau Street and the Lot at the Corner of Robinson Street and Broad-way or any other Lots they may think proper for the purpose of paying for the House contemplated to be purchased of M^r^ Jacob LeRoy."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" The new Baptist meeting-house in Fayette St. is to open on this day.—Spectator, N 8, 1800. This was evidently the church at the corner of Oliver and Henry Sts., which was erected in 1795 and rebuilt in 1800; Oliver St. was called Fayette St. prior to 1821.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 236. It was again rebuilt more permanently in 1819; and, being destroyed by fire in 1843, was rebuilt once more the following year.—Ibid.

25 The city's expenses for the Evacuation Day celebration are $50 for a public dinner (served by David King), $5.50 for "Flannel Cartridges," and $156.62 for gunpowder.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 689, 691.

Dec. 1 The common council orders that the city treasurer "pay into the Manhattan Bank towards the Shares of this Corporation in the said Bank the Sum of $10,000."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 686.

8 Robert McMennomy, secretary of the Philharmonic Society, announces that on Dec. 23 this society will have "one of their semi-annual Concerts at the Tontine Hotel [the City Tavern] in Broadway."—Daily Adv., D 8, 1800. In 1804, monthly concerts were held.

10 The common council permits the use of "the G^t^ Court room" (common council chamber) for the drawing of "the Lottery for improving the navigation of Hudson River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 687. See also My 12.

Dec. 10 In a petition to the common council, Oliver Kane states that he "has lately purchas'd . . . certain ground situate at the corner of Pearl and State Streets . . . formerly belonging to Edward Livingston Esq. and adjoining the ground now in possession of the Corporation on which the Artillery store now stands." He is "desirous and intends to erect several handsome Buildings on the ground . . . to front on State Street, provided he can procure the removal of the said Artillery store. . . ." He proposes either to purchase the ground on which the store stands, applying to the legislature for a law authorising the sale; or, secondly, if that proposal is rejected, he proposes to exchange, for that on which the store stands, a part of his ground "extending from State Street back adjoining the Garden of the Government house sufficient to erect another Artillery store on, and pay the differences in value . . .; or, thirdly, that the board will agree to remove the store and stipulate to leave the ground vacant." He invites any other proposal which the board may prefer to make.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "referred. . .;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 687. The committee to whom the petition was referred reported on Dec. 22 that "in their Opinion the Public Interest will be promoted by permitting the said Oliver Kane to occupy part of the said Ground upon Condition that he give in exchange therefor at the rate of five feet for four to remain for public Uses along the side of and adjoining the Gov^t^ House Garden agreable to a Plan now laid before the Board." The common council concurred in the report, but resolved that, by the law of March 16, 1790 (q. v.), "they are inhibited from selling or disposing of any part of that Ground."—Ibid., II: 690–91.

" The common council grants to Alexander Macomb the use of 22 "part of the Creek at Kings Bridge for a Mill."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 680, 690. Macomb built a grist-mill there shortly after this date. This was also the site of Jasper Nessepot's mill of 1700.—L. M. R. K., III: 961; descrip. of Pl. 137-b, III: 706.

" The common council pays $4,000 for the two fire-engines imported by Thomas Howell from London, and appoints a committee to confer with the engineers as to their disposition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 690. On Jan. 5, 1801, the committee's plans were adopted for placing the new and altering the situation of some of the old engines; for allocating the firemen, and applying to the legislature for power to increase the number of firemen to at least 600; also for building a boat to be placed in one of the most central slips on the East River, and allotting 30 men to it.—Ibid., II: 695–96.

" The common council orders that the clerk "negociate a purchase, on behalf of this Board, of the eight Lots of Ground belonging to Lewis Pintard & which project into the public burying Ground in the 7^th^ Ward, at the price of one thousand Dollars."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 689.

— A manuscript survey of the Collect Pond, made this year by Charles Loss, C.S., is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 58-a. This is the earliest survey of the Pond and its immediate surroundings which has been found, although Valentine's Manual for 1856 contains a reproduction of an interesting sketch, drawn from memory by David Grim, showing the Pond and its immediate vicinity in 1742. See also descrip. of Frontispiece II, Vol. III.

— During this year, the grounds of the New York Hospital were "inclosed with a brick wall and converted into gardens for the accommodation and benefit of convalescent patients."—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1804, q. v.), 3, preserved in N. Y. H. S.; descrip. of Pl. 88, III: 571.

— The congregation of the English Lutheran Church, which, in 1797 (Je 25, q. v.), built a church on Pearl St. opposite City Hall Place, having by this time outgrown the edifice, built in this year a large stone church on the corner of Mott and Park Sts. This was called the "English Lutheran Church Zion."—Kretzman, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 31. In 1802, a parsonage and schoolhouse were added.—Ibid.

— In this year, the congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, which was organized in 1797, erected a frame building on the north side of Chambers St., between Broadway and Centre St.—Greenleaf, Hist. of Churches in N. Y., 216. See also L. M. R. K., III: 931. See 1818.

— In his directory for 1801–2, D. Longworth solicited "a continu-

1801 ance of Public Patronage to the Shakspeare Gallery." He stated — that "The Prints and Paintings in this collection are already very valuable." It was at "11 Park."—N. Y. Directory, 1801–2. For description of the gallery, see My 24, 1800.

— Between this year and 1805, three hotels, of occasional local prominence in the news of the day, were Matthews Hotel, No. 34 Nassau St. (see N. Y. Eve. Post, D 5, 1801; N. Y. Herald, My 12, 1804); Coon's Tavern in John St., where the annual election of governors for the N. Y. Lying-in Hospital was held in 1803 (see N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 30, 1803); and Raper's Tavern, on the Bowery Road, where the butchers met as an organized society (see N. Y. Herald, Ja 30, 1805).

— In about this year, Wm. Charles, a Scotch engraver and publisher, came to New York. He "engraved in line, stipple, and in aquatint; but he is best known by his series of caricatures chiefly of events connected with the War of 1812 or with local politics." He removed to Philadelphia about 1816.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 45. See also Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, III: 289.

— In this year, Buffalo, N. Y. was founded by the Holland Land Co. It was at first called "New Amsterdam," but later assumed its present name.—Smith, Hist. of Buffalo and Erie Co., III: 13–23; Ketchum, Hist. of Buffalo, 143 et seq.

Jan. A committee of the Manhattan Co. applies to the common coun-
5 cil for leave to buy "the Right to the fresh Water Pond," and the board appoints a committee to confer with them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 694. See, further, Mr 25.

" The common council passes an ordinance for filling up and raising Greenwich St. with wholesome earth "from the end of the present Pavement to the Bridge at Bestavers Killetie" before March 15.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 694.

9 Jos. Delacroix, on offering his Vauxhall, at 112 (now 120) Broadway (the site of the Equitable Building), for sale or rent, describes it as having "two stores in front." The house is "37 1–2 feet front, 146 deep, and two stories high, connected with a long building that two stories more might be raised upon it with very little expense." There is "a fine garden with fruit trees—a new stone cistern, a very large ice-house; and a large new room in the rear of the garden, 26 feet deep, and 37 1–2 front." He gives terms of payment.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 9, 1805.

The place was not sold, however. Although Delacroix was carrying on his second Vauxhall, on the Bayard place, farther up Broadway (see L. M. R. K., III: 981; and My 1, Jl 4, 1798; Jl 4, D 7, 1799; Ap 14, etc., 1800), he continued in possession and operation of the one at 112 Broadway as a summer garden, candy factory, cordial distillery, and retail store (see D 7, 1799; Ap 14, 1800). On June 6, 1801, he established the firm of Jos. Delacroix & Son "in the Confectionary business" here.—Daily Adv., Je 6, 1801. The next year, he added to his stock at this address "genuine beautifying Perfumeries, the most in vogue in Europe."—Ibid., D 18, 1802.

After Delacroix had established his third Vauxhall on the Astor property, near the present Astor Place (see Ja 30, 1804; Ap 20, Je 5, 25, Jl 4, 1805), he again offered his property at 112 Broadway for sale.—See Jl 24, 1805

12 The common council adopts a committee report which recommends that the proprietors of lots on South St., between Whitehall St. and the Fly Market, be required to build fifteen piers before Nov. 1, 1802. These piers are considered "of the first importance to the Commercial Interest of this City, more especially as the Corporation have Caused the permanent Line within that Space to have been Compleated and thereby have Deprived the Shipping of the Accomodation they heretofore had at the Old Piers." The exact position of each pier is prescribed. The order requires that each shall be 180 ft. long and 30 ft. wide, "and to be formed by three Blocks or Butments of thirty feet each and three Bridges of the same Size," and that they shall be declared in the grants to be "Publick Highways and Subject to the future Ordinances of Corporation as the Public Streets of the City now are."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 698–99. On Feb. 23, the board appointed a committee to report "the most proper manner for effecting the Measure."—Ibid., II: 712. On June 1 (q. v.), an ordinance was passed for building the piers.

13 The "Committee of Federal Freeholders of the City of New York" sends a letter to Gov. Jay upon his intended retirement from public life. The letter states in part: "To attempt to retrace the variety of arduous and honorable exertions which have marked Jan.
your public career, would be an office to which we do not feel 13 ourselves equal. Neither does it require our testimony to record, what will ever find an indelible memorial in the minds and hearts of the enlightened and just, that in the great events which accomplished the American Revolution, you were among the most conspicuous. . . . The part you acted in forming the constitution of the State, and in promoting the adoption of the National Government, the important treaty which terminated the controversy for independence, and the Convention which lately preserved your Country from being involved in a pernicious war . . . are a few of the many Acts that bear witness to the truths we have mentioned."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 286–87. On Jan. 27, Jay sent an appreciative answer to the letter.—Ibid., IV: 288–89.

On reading a letter from Thomas Morris to the mayor on the 19 subject of "Compensation to Major L'Enfant for his Services in planning & rebuilding the City Hall for the accommodation of Congress agreable to the Resolution of this Board on the 12th October 1789" (q. v.), the common council determines that "on Major L'Enfant's making application himself the same would be taken into consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 701. This action was probably prompted by L'Enfant's refusal to accept, in 1790 (q. v., My 14), the 10 acres of Common Land. See, further, Ja 26.

"We learn that many Century Sermons have been lately " preached, recapitulating the principal events of the Century lately closed. These, when published, will be valuable additions to our stock of materials for a history of the United States."—Com. Adv., Ja 19, 1801.

and Ireland meets in London. The king's address was delivered on Feb. 2.—Ann. Reg. (1801), 42, 207–8.

Dr. Samuel Miller addresses a petition to the legislature asking " it to take measures for the translation of the Dutch records (see Ja 22, 1800) "at the expence of the State."—Assemb. Papers, V: 283. For the legislature's action, see Mr 23.

Five Indian chiefs, four Senecas and one Tuscorora, accom- 24 panied by their interpreter, arrive in New York on their way to Washington. They left the city on the 25th.—Com. Adv., Ja 26, 1801.

Following the board's decision of Jan. 19 (q. v.), P. Charles 26
L'Enfant presents a memorial, dated Jan. 23, to the common council in which he says that in 1789 he "planned & superintended the making of various alterations, Additions & Improvements in & to the Building call'd the City Hall . . . so as to fit it for the reception & accommodation of Congress.

"That the Edifice as so alter'd and improv'd met with the general approbation of Congress, of the then Officers of your Corporation, & of the Citizens at large, & was consider'd as a work ornamental, & reputable to the city.—That the execution of the plan requir'd great attention & exertion on the part of your Memorialist as the time for accomplishing the object was short.

"That the Corporation, besides an expression of its sense of the Services of your Memorialist, pass'd a resolution for granting him Ten Acres of the Corporation City property as a compensation for the same [see O 12, 1789].

"That your Memorialist has never receiv'd the grant intended, or any remuneration whatever for his services upon the occasion, which he has stated.

"That a change of situation which has reduc'd him to the greatest pecuniary distress obliges him to depart from his original intentions on the subject and address himself to the justice of your honorable Body for realizing to him a competent reward for his exertions.

"That if the Lotts shall have been otherwise dispos d of he is willing to accept in lieu of them such an equivalent as to your body shall appear reasonable & just.—Nor can he doubt that in your honor & liberality will be found a sure pledge to him for the success of an application founded upon the basis of unquestionable right, and recommended by a situation every way entitled to sympathy.

"For which your Memorialist will be happy to make his sincere acknowledgments."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room.

On reading the petition, the common council resolves to allow 1801 Jan. 26 Maj. L'Enfant $750 "in full discharge of all further Claims against this Board for or on Account of his said Services," and directs the mayor to issue his warrant accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 703–4. See, further, F 16.

Feb. 7 The new City Tavern, at 115 Broadway, is again offered for sale (see F 6, 1800). This time, the notice adds: "If not previously disposed of, it will be sold at public auction at the Tontine Coffee House on the first Tuesday in March next."—Com. Adv., F 7, 1801. At the same time, it was in active operation as a hotel. It was the meeting-place of the Federal Republicans (Daily Adv., F 19 and Ap 13, 1801), and the scene of concert and ball (Com. Adv., F 10, 1801).

10 A map of the Fresh Water Pond (the "Collect"), and of adjacent streets and lots, bears this date. It is filed as map No. 152 in the "Topographical Bureau" (formerly "Bureau of Design and Survey") in borough president's office, Municipal Bldg.; and is reproduced as Pl. 58-a, Vol. I. See reference to it under Mr 25.

11 The electoral votes are counted in the house of representatives, with the following result: Thomas Jefferson, 73; Aaron Burr, 73; John Adams, 65; Charles Pinckney, 64; and John Jay, 1. The house thereupon begins to ballot to determine which of the two highest candidates shall be president. The Republicans vote for Jefferson and the Federalists for Burr, with the result that eight states (including New York) are found to be for the former, six for the latter, and two divided. Nine being necessary for a choice, the voting continued, but without change for 35 times. On Feb. 17, the Federalists finally gave in, and Jefferson was elected on the thirty-sixth ballot by the votes of ten states.—Annals of Cong., 6th cong., 1022–34.

" The common council orders that the road committee take measures for the completion of the old mile stones on the Post Road from the city hall to Kingsbridge, and to set up new mile stones from the present three-mile stone up the new Middle Road and across Benson's Creek to Cole's Bridge across Harlem River.—*M. 4 Thomas Jefferson is inaugurated president of the United States at Washington. Aaron Burr becomes the new vice-president.—Com. Adv., Mr 9, 1801. See F 11.

The Republicans of New York City hold a celebration in honour of the auspicious occasion. The Federalist papers make no mention of this, but a Republican newspaper thus describes it: "The day was ushered in by the discharge of 16 cannon from the Battery, and the ringing of bells. Early in the day the colors of a principal part of the vessels in the harbor were hoisted. At ten o'clock the artillery and principal uniform companies met at the Battery, where they formed a procession, the rear of which was composed of a great number of respectable citizens, and proceeded up Broad-Way to the Presbyterian Brick Church, where the military divided and presented arms, while the citizens passed and took their seats, during the performance of a band of music. The Declaration of Independence was read by Mr. Paulding Jun. and an eloquent and well received Oration was delivered by Tunis Wortman Esq—At 12 o'clock the artillery at the Battery again fired, and was immediately followed by a salute from the fort at Governor's Island; after which the Essex frigate . . . fired 16 guns, which were succeded by the same number from the U. S. brig Richmond. After the oration, the military again formed, and proceded down Beekman street, into Pearl street, thence up Wall street, to the City Hall, down Broad street, and through Beaver street to the Battery, where they paraded, fired a feu de joi and dismissed to partake of an entertainment prepared by Messrs. Adams, Martling and Spicer; . . . Mar. 4

On a representation by the street commissioners, the common council decides to bear the expense of filling in the west side of "the Causeway opposite the Meadow Ground of Mr Anthony Lispenard," which, by the present regulation of Greenwich St., "will become in a dangerous Situation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 715. "

At the same time, the board orders that the street com'rs "enquire into the State of the Corporation property along the Hudson to the end that those who use it may be called on for compensation."—Ibid., II: 715–16.

The legislature, by an act "for the better support of the public hospital in the City of New York," appropriates to that institution the annual sum of $12,500 for five years starting from Feb. 1, 1800. —Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 26. On March 2, 1805 (q. v.), an act was passed to continue this donation for another five years. 20

The legislature passes the following resolution: "That the Secretary of this state be authorized to permit James Van Ingen to take certain volumes of the records of this state, written in the Dutch language, in succession, from the Secretary's office to his own dwelling-house, in the city of Albany, for the purpose of making such translations as in the opinion of the Comptroller, Surveyor-General, and the said James Van Ingen, shall be deemed useful in aiding the Rev. Samuel Miller in collecting materials for his history of New-York [see Ja 19, 1798, Ja 22, 1800, and Ja 22, 1801], and that legislative provision shall be hereafter made for paying the expences attending such translations; and that the same shall be entrusted to the care of the said Samuel Miller for the term of two years, in order to aid him in compleating the history aforesaid; which translations shall immediately hereafter be deposited in the Secretary's office for the use of this state."—Assemb. Jour. (1800–1), 221; Senate Jour. (1800–1), 94. This was the first legislative provision for the translation of a portion of the records at public expense. No translations, however, appear to have been made under this resolution.—Van Laer, The Translation and Publication of the MS. Dutch Rec. of N. Neth. with an Account of previous Attempts at Translation (1910), 9. For the next step, see Ap 9, 1805. 23

The common council adopts conditions for letting out "the new Ferry from Catherine Slip to Sands Wharf at Brooklyn."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 720–21, 722. See Ap 6. "

The common council orders "that the St Commissrs agree with a competent Person to take the Charge of regulating the public Clocks in this City for any Sum not to exceed $200 per Annum."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 722. 25

The committee appointed on Jan. 5 (q. v.) reports as follows on the Manhattan Co.'s application relative to the Collect Pond: The committee has "caused a Survey to be made of the Colick & the Ground around it [see F 10] & have marked out the Lines of the Ground that will be wanting for the use of the said Company as will appear by the Survey accompanying this Report;" and the committee is "of Opinion that it would be inexpedient for this Board to take any Measures on the subject; but leave it to the operation of Law." The board agrees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 722. "

The legislature passes an act "for the more effectual prevention of fires and to regulate buildings in the city of New York." There are restrictions on building houses of certain construction within certain limits, and penalties for violation of this requirement. Certain earlier acts on the subject are repealed. This act relates also to the appointment and exemption of firemen.—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 80. 27

The legislature passes a police act "more effectually to discover and apprehend offenders in the city of New York." The "police "

1801 office" of old is continued.—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 81. See Mr 27 Je 1.

" "Resolved that the Burying ground . . . be enclosed with part wall and boards in a decent manner."

"Resolved that a new vault be built at the lower end of said burying ground in lieu for the one which now will come in the Street, and of course must be taken up. Resolved that the several corps to be taken up, be carefully and in the most decent manner removed to the new vault."—Lutheran Min. (MS.).

28 One who has been absent from New York for ten years describes the changes he sees: "In 1790 the Battery was extended by docking out into the river; the old Fort was levelled, and the Government-House erected in its place: these great improvements paved the way for others—Mr. Watson built his elegant Houses in State street [see Pl. 56], and in 1792 [q. v.] Mr. Hammond built his first good House in the fields—and, with a liberality and taste that did him honor, planted, at his own particular expence the Park, which the Corporation immediately enclosed. In 1799 [q. v., Ap 2] the Manhattan Company was established for supplying the city with water. All the principal streets are now handsomely paved, and . . . kept clean and respectable. In 1790, few besides old houses were to be seen; they are now almost obscured by new ones.

"When I left London the common topic in conversation respecting America was, the great improvement, extent and prosperity of the city of New-York. . . . Beekman-street [is] not yet opened to Crane-wharf. . . . Orange-street, near the Tea-Water Pump, has been opened to accommodate a Rope Walk; Banker street . . . has been opened to Pearl-street, while Beekman-street, in the busiest part of the city, is kept a standing irregularity, inconvenient to all, and a prejudice to the value of the property it would improve by passing through.

"Cedar-street is another blind gut that would, by opening to Pearl-street, benefit the constitution and health of the city, as well as the proprietors of the ground. . . ."—Com. Adv., Mr 28, 1800.

"A Citizen" answering this communication on April 7, said: "It is a singular and striking paradox, that in proportion to the encrease of property in this city, our comforts are diminished. Our lots are become so valuable that we quarrel with our neighbours for a quarter of an inch of ground; and we build our houses so high and so close together, that we exclude light and fresh air: In a little time if we go on in this track we shall shut out ourselves. There is not one convenient thorough-fare between the North and East river, and there is hardly one merchant in New York but sees the want of it.

"The shipping of the port increases faster than we provide docks—Why not plant mooring chains in the stream for empty vessels to make fast to?"—Ibid., Ap 7, 1801.

30 The legislature passes "An Act to provide against infectious and pestilential Diseases." A "health-office," under the superintendence of three commissioners, is continued in N. Y. City, and the act regulates the health conditions of the city and harbour. In 1805, this act was published, with an appendix of extracts from the supplemental acts relating to the health of the city, dated April 2, 1803, Feb. 28, 1804, and March 9, 1805, together with the city ordinance which carried the act of March 9 into effect.—See Health Laws of N. Y. (1805), a copy of which is in the N. Y. P. L.

Apr. 2 A ferry act is passed by the legislature, again forbidding anyone except the corporation of the city of New York to erect or keep a ferry between this city and Nassau Island.—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 106. This was substantially re-enacted on April 2, 1810 (q.v.); amended June 15, 1812, and embodied in the revised law of 1813.—Revised Statutes, II: 355. For a thorough discussion of later legislation relating to ferries, see Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, 283 et seq.

3 The legislature orders that "the public building erected in the city of New-York for the reception of convicts" shall be called "the State prison."—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 121.

" The legislature passes "An Act to divide this State into counties." These are 30 in number, designated by name, with their boundaries defined.—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 123. On April 7, another act was passed, "for dividing the counties of this State into towns."—Ibid. (1801), chap. 163

" The legislature passes an act authorising the common council to "make such bye laws and orders for the better regulating and arranging with uniformity such new buildings as shall be erected for habitations or for the purposes of trade and commerce;" to regulate and alter "the streets, wharves, and slips in such manner as shall be most commodious for shipping and transportation;" to lay out "as far as the same has not already been done . . . regular streets or wharves of the width of seventy feet in front of those parts of the city which adjoin to the East river or sound and to the North or Hudsons river, and of such extent along those rivers respectively as they may think proper;" and to "direct piers to be sunk and completed at such distances . . . as they . . . shall think proper in front of the said streets or wharves so adjoining and extending along the said river and the said piers to be connected with the said streets or wharves by bridges."—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 129. Apr. 3

All "true lovers of Sport" are invited "to attend at the New Circus in the Bowery, opposite M^r Spicer's Inn, where will be exhibited a Urus and Bull feat, with dogs of the first blood, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next [Ap 6, 7, and 8], precisely at 4 o'clock, p. m. on each day. The Urus and Bull will be fought alternately with the same dogs, not only to gratify the spectators, but to convince the public, that the Urus, though far inferior to, the Bull in size, and diminutive in appearance, is greatly superior in strength, activity, mettle, and management."—Am. Cit., Ap 4, 1801. See Ap 15. 4

The state legislature expresses its belief that "certain articles of the constitution [see Ap 20, 1777] are of doubtful construction, or have been found inconvenient in practice," and plans for the election of delegates (see Ag 25) to a constitutional convention, to assemble at Albany on Oct. 13 (q.v.). It was provided that the number of delegates to be chosen "shall be the same as the number of members of assembly from the respective cities and counties of this State," and the purpose of the convention shall be to consider the parts of the constitution "respecting the number of senators and members of assembly . . . with power to reduce and limit the number of them;" also to determine "the true construction" of the article relating to appointments.—Laws of N. Y. (1801), chap. 159. 6

The common council refers to the street com'rs a petition from Sam. Stillwell and others "for opening a Road through Jacob Harsens Land & across the Commons."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 724. See L. M. R. K., III: 1002 (Harsen's Road). "

On opening sealed proposals, the common council accepts the offer of Townsend & Nostrandt of $2,600 per annum for three years for the old ferry to Brooklyn, and that of Jonathan Titus of $404 for the same term for the new ferry to Brooklyn (see Mr 23).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 724, 733; L. M. R. K., III: 942. "

The common council orders that Ald. Carmer "enclose the whole of the Piece of Land, purchased for a public burying Ground, adjoining the two Roads with a tight Board Fence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 725. This was the present Washington Sq. site.—See Ap 10, 1797; F 18, 1799. 7

"Philanthropist" writes to one of the papers: "Amongst the various amusements that have lately been offered to the public, there is none so inconsistent with the manners of the age as that of Bull or Urus baiting. . . . The owner or owners of the Urus has built a large circus in the Seventh ward of this city, for the purpose of continuing those scenes of cruelty [see Ap 4]. . . . It might be proper for the authority to interfere. . . ."—Am. Cit., Ap 15, 1801. See Jl 6. 15

The campaign for governor and lieutenant-governor of New York State commences, the following being the candidates: Republican ticket—George Clinton for governor, and Jeremiah Van Rensselaar for lieutenant-governor; Federal ticket—Stephen Van Rensselaar (the present lieutenant-governor) for governor, and James Watson for lieutenant-governor. Gen. Hamilton, in support of the Federal candidates, "has been harranguing the citizens of New York, in different Wards, in his usual style of imprecation and abuse against the character of the venerable Mr. Clinton. . . ."—Centinel of Freedom (Newark, N. J.), Ap 28, 1801. The Republican ticket won.—Ibid., My 5, 12, and 19, 1801. 28

The census of the city and county of New York, subscribed by John T. Bainbridge on this date, shows: the names of heads of families; the number of free whites, male and female, in groups of ages to 10, to 16, to 26, to 45, and over 45, years; all other persons, except Indians not taxed: and slaves,—all listed separately by May 3

1801 wards. It shows (page 273) a total population of 60,483, for all
May wards, including Blackwell's, Randall's, and Miller's Islands.—

11 The common council permits Richard Varick to make vaults and areas on the front and side "of his House he intends building on the Corner of Broad way & Robinson Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 734. (One way for the student to determine with comparative certainty when a residence was built is to find through the indexes to the volumes of minutes of the common council or proceedings of the board of aldermen the dates when permits were granted to the original owner to make vaults, areas, bow-windows, fences, etc.)

" Richard Varick is owner of a "Right of Soil" on the Hudson River shore, 188 ft. 6 in. wide, in the Fourth (formerly West) Ward, in front of Dey's Dock (which Dirick Dey received by city grant Oct. 14, 1743), and he now applies for the water lots in front of this "Right of Soil" agreeable to a committee report in his favour dated Oct. 12, 1795. Pending this grant, he petitions the common council for a permit "to sink Piers & build Bridges upon a range with the Corporation Wharf to the northward thereof and to form a Bason on & in front of his Right of Soil aforesaid for his own use & emolument." Granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 734–35.

" "A Deed from Anthony Lispenard & Effingham Embree of a parcel of Land for the purpose of a Street of fifty feet in breadth from Hudson Street to the Ground claimed by John Quackenboss" is presented to the common council, and the board orders that it be filed and recorded.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 735. The street thus established was Leonard St.—Ibid., marginal note; cf. L. M. R. K., III: 1004. On May 25, the board appointed a committee to treat with Mr. Quackenbos for so much of his ground as might be necessary to continue Leonard St. (so named here) to Broadway, at a width of 50 ft., instead of 40 ft. as in the Lispenard and Embree conveyance.—Ibid., II: 740. On June 11, when the street com'rs reported, the board determined that the sums demanded by Quackenbos were too high.—Ibid., II: 747. The board experienced difficulty and long delay in accomplishing their object.—See ibid., III: 220, 273, 321, 335, 343, 458, 512, 624, 696–97, 751. An ordinance for opening and extending Leonard St. toward its eastern extremity was passed Nov. 22, 1813.—Ibid., VII: 523, 529, 604–5, 609.

14 Tripoli declares war against the United States.—Winsor, VII: 369, 418. See F 6, 1802; Ag 8, 1805.

25 The common council orders that the recorder "take Measurers to compel the Commiss[rs] named in the Act of the Legislature for widening Bever Lane in the first Ward to the execution of the Duties required of them by the said Law."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 740.

28 Broadway has been paved as far as the Mount Vernon Garden on Leonard St.—Daily Adv., My 28, 1801. See, further, Ag 10.

" "We notice with a degree of pleasure the beautiful appearance which the Bow Windows give to the streets, designed by their situation for trade, and we hope the Corporation will not prevent the erecting of them, provided they do not project out more than 12 inches from the wall of the House. It will make the street of business appear very handsome, and preclude the necessity of exposing goods for sale over the walks."—Com. Adv., My 28, 1801.

June 1 Capt. Robert Richard Randall (see Je 5, 1790), by his will of this date, gives the principal part of his real and personal estate at the Sand Hill, near the junction of Broadway and the Bowery (see O 29, 1801), to trustees for the purpose of establishing and supporting an asylum or marine hospital, to be called the "Sailors' Snug Harbour." Before the Revolution, this estate belonged to Andrew Elliot, then collector of the port. The trustees were incorporated Feb. 6, 1806 (q.v.). The estate was estimated to be worth $50,000 in 1807.—The Picture of N. Y. (1807), 111–12.

The trustees finally decided in 1831 (q.v.) to lease the property on Manhattan Island (see 1828, and Ap 19, 1828) as a source of revenue and to purchase a tract near New Brighton, Staten Island, for the erection of necessary buildings.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 468. See also ibid. (1865), 639–40.

" Following the preliminary action of Jan. 12 (q.v.), the common council passes an ordinance which requires that owners of water lots on South St., from Whitehall Slip to Broad St. Slip, shall make a pier on the north-east side of Whitehall Slip, to range with this slip; and a pier on the south-west side of Broad St. Slip, 20 ft. from the range of this slip. It also requires that the owners of June water lots on South St., from Coenties Slip to Old Slip, shall make 1 a pier on the north-east side of Coenties Slip, to range with this slip; and a pier on the south-west side of the Old Slip, 20 ft. from the range of this slip. It further orders that owners of water lots on South St., from Wall St. Slip to the Fly Market Slip, shall make a pier on the north-east side of the Wall St. Slip, 20 ft. from the range of this slip, and a pier on the south-west side of the Fly Market Slip, 20 ft. from the range of this slip. Each of these piers shall extend 200 ft. into the East River, 30 ft. wide; and shall "be formed of three Blocks the outermost Block to be thirty feet by forty feet and the two inner block[s] to be thirty feet square with three Bridges of thirty three feet four inches each." The construction of these piers shall begin on or before July 1 next, and be completed on or before Nov. 1, 1802. The city will grant these piers to the owners of the water lots, according to law, reserving for the city the exclusive right of wharfage and slippage on the side of each pier adjoining a public slip. The piers and bridges shall be considered public streets or highways, and be kept in repair by the grantees, their heirs and assigns.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 744–45. This order, as well as that of Jan. 12 (q.v.), was interpreted by the board on June 11.—Ibid., II: 746.

" The common council declines to interfere in prosecutions that have recently commenced against several persons "for retailing Liquors in Booths on the Harlem Race Ground in violation of Law."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 742.

" The common council passes an ordinance entitled "A Law for the Appointment of a person to Attend to the due execution of the Laws touching the Police of the City of New York and to prescribe his Duties." Its full text is entered in the minutes. Under it, the board appoints John S. Delamater, the high constable of the city, to fill the office thus created, which is practically that of commissioner of police.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 743.

" John Youle advertises that at his "Air Furnace, Corlaer's-Hook, N. York," he carries on "the Cast Iron business in all its variety."—Spectator, Je 3, 1801.

8 Trinity vestry agrees to a recommendation of its committee of leases that Brannon (Spring) St. be ceded to the city, provided the city will regulate it by filling it up and digging it out without expense to the vestry.—Trin. Min. (MS.); M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 1. See N 16.

" Trinity vestry passes a resolution "that the inner doors of the Churches under the Jurisdiction of this Corporation be in no case whatever opened for the purpose of the state or City-Elections."—Trin. Min. (MS.)

The vestry also resolves "that the Charnel house belonging to Trinity Church be removed, and that the committee of repairs . . . provide a suitable vault for that purpose."—Ibid.

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to enquire as to the expediency of building another church, as also the most eligible situation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The committee reported favourably on March 8, 1802 (q.v.). The new church became St. John's Chapel.

11 The common council passes an ordinance authorising "the laying of Timber in front of the foot or side Walks, instead of Stone in all new Streets which shall hereafter be ordered to be paved."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 747.

12 Health Com'r Furman reports to the mayor that ships are landing more sick persons at the marine hospital than the "State Buildings at the Establishment" can accommodate; and that temporary sheds and tents have been provided. As funds allowed by the state are insufficient, the commissioners apply to the city for aid, and the board advances $1,500, expecting the legislature to repay it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), II: 749–50.

22 After the sale of Fraunces Tavern, by Sam. Fraunces, on April 23, 1785 (q.v.), to Geo. Powers, a Brooklyn butcher, it was bought by Dr. Nicholas Romayne on April 30, 1795, for £2,200 (then equivalent to $5,500); and, on June 24, 1800, by John S. Moore. It is now acquired of Moore by Thos. Gardner for $7,500. Gardner's granddaughter married the Count de Dion, and it was from her children, living in France, that the house was purchased, in 1904 (q.v.), by the Sons of the Revolution. It therefore remained in the Gardner family for over 100 years.—Liber Deeds, LX: 439; Drowne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 18. Asa Bird Gardiner was not of this family, as has been believed by some writers on the subject of Fraunces Tavern. Thos. Gardner (the name 1801 June 22 is spelled without the i) was ancestor of the Eugene Keteltas family, and of the Thos. Gardner McCarty family (who are French with an Irish name), etc.—From information supplied by Miss Jennie F. Macarthy, historical expert of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co.

For views of Fraunces Tavern showing its various transformations, see Reports of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. for 1901 and 1907. See also L. M. R. K., III: 978.

" John B. Coles petitions the common council for a grant of the soil from high- to low-water mark "at his Bridge over the Harlem River," as the same was promised to him at the time he undertook to build the bridge (see N 24, 1795). The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 1. On June 29, the committee recommended that the grant be made to him "opposite to his Ground & adjoining the Bridge on Haerlem River being a Distance of about six hundred feet," on condition that he convey to the city the road which runs through his land to the bridge and that he pay the quit rent of £5 agreed upon on June 13, 1796 (q. v.).—Ibid., III: 5. The engrossed grant was approved on July 20 and ordered to be signed and sealed.—Ibid., III: 10, 11.

" A concert under the direction of "Mr. Hewitt" is advertised to be held on this evening at the "United States Garden, No. 253 Broadway, near the Park (in the rear of the house formerly occupied by Mr. Snow, at present by Mr. Collett)."—Daily Adv., Je 22, 1801. This garden bore the same name in 1808, under the proprietorship of Charles Bernard.—L'Oracle, Ap 26, 1808. Hewitt appears to have been the first musical director or orchestra leader mentioned in the city's annals.—See another reference to him in Daily Adv., Ag 4, 1801. He was also a music publisher.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 30, 1801.

July 4 For the 4th of July, this year, Delacroix has erected "a grand Amphitheatre" at his Vauxhall Garden on the Bayard property, "from which the whole exhibition may bee seen." "No gentleman will be admitted without accompanied by a lady." Applications for seats are to be made at his store, 122 Broadway.—Daily Adv., Jl 4, 1801. On July 14, he said the price of admission, 4s., would "entitle the bearer [of a ticket] to a Glass of Ice Cream, or a small Glass of Punch."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 14, 1801. See, further, Jl 20, 1802.

6 Water pipes are now being laid so extensively that the common council appoints a committee "to apply to the Manhattan Co on the subject of the bad state of the Pavement in many of the Streets occasioned by their being broken up to lay the Aqueducts and since not put in the Order they were found."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 6. Cf. Je 11, 1800.

" Bull-baiting, within a high enclosure on the Bowery, is complained of as a "shocking" spectacle.—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1801. See also Ap 4 and 15.

9 The common council appropriates $1,500 to be applied toward the "opening of Belle Vue Hospital or the erection of additional Buildings on Staten Island" for the accommodation of sick immigrants.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 8–9. On July 13, the committee in charge reported that it would be most expedient "to provide additional Accommodations at the Quarantine Ground on Staten Island."—Ibid., III: 10.

13 The common council resolves "that John Jay Esquire be requested to permit his Portrait to be taken and placed in the City Hall at [as] a public Testimonial of the great personal Respect and high Regard this Board entertain of his distinguished Patriotism and eminent public Services."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 10. On Aug. 3, Gov. Jay's reply to the mayor was read, and a committee was appointed to agree with "a competent Artist" to "perform the Work."—Ibid., III: 15. On July 10, 1804 (q. v.), arrangements were again made for painting this, or possibly another, portrait of Jay, this time by Trumbull. The Trumbull portrait is the only one now in the city hall.

18 "A Panther from the Wilderness of Niagara, will be baited with eight Dogs on Thursday the 23d July, on Bunker's Hill. . . . The Panther may be seen until the time of Baiting at the Circus Greenwich-street."—Com. Adv., Jl 18, 1801. A "severe and interesting fight" between a panther and a lion was advertised to be held at the same place on Dec. 25.—Am. Cit., D 22, 1801.

21 In a letter to the press, a citizen suggests that the streets be swept in the evening, instead of in the morning, and that the Manhattan Co. provide water for wetting the streets before they are swept.—Com. Adv., Jl 21, 1801

Aug. 5 The corporation of the city has "actually begun" the plan of filling up all the slips on the East River, and carrying the wharves farther out into the river (see Je 1), "so that a space of 150 feet be left between them and the nearest buildings." The buildings are to be of brick, of uniform height, and fire-proof, and will extend from the point of the Battery to Corlaer's Hook. "The wharves are no more to be indented and broken by slips and docks—where the filth of the city accumulates and rots, and proves by its poisonous exhalations the fruitful source of pestilence and death. . . . In order to give vessels, however, a protection from ice, etc., and to enable them to load or to discharge their cargoes with greater convenience than by lighters, as in some parts of Europe, square or oblong wharves, or piers, are to be formed in front of this permanent wharf, . . . at convenient distances from each other, with bridges thrown across to the permanent wharf."—Daily Adv., Ag 5, 1801.

6 The notice of the death of Benedict Arnold in England is published in New York.—N. Y. Gaz., Ag 6, 1801. Arnold died in London on June 14, 1801, at the age of sixty.—Arnold, I. N., Life of Benedict Arnold, 393–95.

8 Isaac Newton Ralson begins to publish a weekly entitled The Ladies' Monitor.—Early Newspapers, II: 421.

11 Mount Vernon Garden (see My 14, 1800) opens its summer season, this year, with "the celebrated Comedy of the Child of Nature." Mrs. Hodgkinson plays the title-role. In the cast, besides Mr. Hodgkinson, are the Hallam family, Jefferson, and other prominent players of the time in New York. The play is followed by a "Grand Concert," an ode to Liberty spoken by Mr. Hodgkinson, etc.—Daily Adv., Ag 10, 1801. See Ag 12 and 15.

12 "Audience" addresses the following communication to the press: "The Summer Amusement at Mount Vernon Garden, commenced on Tuesday evening [Ag 11]. . . . The Comedy of the Child of Nature, was represented. . . . We were sorry that Mr Delacroix manifested a resentment certainly unbecoming; and his Horn Blower presumingly stopt many of us, even in the very avenue to Mount Vernon. Mr. D. should recollect that a large body of performers cannot be maintained by one or two nights acting in a week, and that their postponement in consequence of bad weather from one night to the following, is not an additional monopoly, but a continuation of the usual number, necessary for their support. Mr D. should also recollect, that in this country we have no monopolies—if he should please to give Fireworks every evening, he has an unquestionable right, and so have the performers to act at Mount Vernon. The public in America are not to be told, on Monday you must go here, and on Tuesday you shall go there; they must be the judges of when they chuse to receive their amusements and where they chuse to visit it."—Spectator, Ag 15, 1801. See Ag 15, 1801; Ja 2, 1802.

" The common council orders payment of $1,000 to the street com'rs for "a new Mud Machine to clear out the Slips;" $222.50 for "filling Greenwich Street at the outlet of Lispenards Swamp;" and $3,000 "for the New Pier at White Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 16–17.

15 From the newspaper controversy between Joseph Delacroix and Joseph Corre, regarding their holding entertainments on the same evening (see Ag 12), it appears that Delacroix "was the first to establish a Vauxhall in this city in Broadway" (see F 22, 1797). He says that "It is now six years [?] since the Tuesday's, Thursday's and Saturday's were the days mentioned for the amusement of the public in his Garden, which days he has always kept, and never intruded upon any other. Mr. Corre then established his Columbia Garden [see My 5, 1798] near the Battery, and gave Concerts like wise the other three days, without ever taking away any of Mr. D.'s days. At all times the New-York Theatre [Park Theatre] days were fixed, and never when the weather proved bad was it given the next night, but always the second day after. . . ."—Spectator, Ag 15, 1801; see also references to this controversy in Com. Adv., Ag 13 and 14; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 13, 1801. See Jl 4, 1805.

24 Gov. Jay, by advice of the council of appointment, having appointed Edward Livingston mayor, Livingston "came into the Common Council & produced his Commission which was read, and after taking & subscribing the Oaths prescribed & directed by Law & the Charter of this City Mr Varick the late Mayor left the Chamber & Mr Livingston took the Chair and then with the Members of the Board proceeded in to the Common Hall where his Commission of Mayor &c was with the usual solemnities again read & published. [The "Common Hall" is shown on Pl. 32, Vol. I.]

Aug. 24 "Mr Mayor & the Board being returned to the Chamber proceeded to Business."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 19; Hammond, Hist. of Political Parties in the State of N. Y., I: 180. It should be observed that this proceeding was evidently derived directly from that in vogue in the British colonial period. Livingston was succeeded by DeWitt Clinton in 1803 (q. v., O 29).

After debate as to the language of a resolution commending Varick, the board passes the following: "Resolved as the Sense of this Board that Richard Varick Esquire late Mayor of this City Deserves the Gratitude and Thanks of his Fellow Citizens for his Conduct in that important Office; which he has executed for near twelve years with the highest, Ability Vigilance Zeal and Integrity."—M. C. C. (1784-1831), III: 21–22.

25 At a special election 12 delegates are elected to the state constitutional convention (see Ap 6) due to assemble at Albany on the second Tuesday of October (see O 13).—Spectator, Ag 22 and 29, 1801.

Sept. 2 "Mr. John Habermehl reported from the Committee . . . that they have had the Churchyard in Rector Street enclosed with a stone wall and pale fence, and also have hada new vault built in said Churchyard agreeable to the resolve then [see Mr 27, 1801] made and that they now render their account with the several vouchers for the same amounting to the sum of [$] 947 34/100.

"Mr. John Habermehl having supplied the workmen at the above with liquor, Mr. Cheesman the Master-workman refusing paying for the same, on motion of Mr. Camman it was ordered that the Treasurer pay him [$] 13 25/100 the amount of his bill."—Lutheran Min. (MS.).

14 The common council appoints a committee "to consider of the propriety of taking the signal poles at Staten Island under the management of the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 27. See Ag 12, 1802.

22 The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the Manhattan Company relative to a Compensation for the injury done the Streets of this City by laying their pipes. . . ."—M. C. C (1784–1831), III: 29, 34.

28 The common council orders that the committee of repairs be directed "to build an Engine House in the Lot adjoining the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 30. See, further, My 13, 1805.

" The common council orders "that the Mayor be requested to report to this Board a plan for the improvement of the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 30. See, further, N 2.

Oct. 7 Since the middle of September, cases of yellow fever have appeared, and since Oct. 1, 35 persons have died of it. Some of the patients have been sent to the lazaretto on Staten Island.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 8, 1801.

8 The United States frigate "Boston," in leaving East River at high tide, goes on "the reef at the Battery." She was floated after removing her guns.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 9 and 12; Boston Gaz., O 15, 1801.

13 In accordance with the act of the legislature of April 6 (q. v.), delegates to the constitutional convention meet in Albany and elect Aaron Burr as president.—Spectator, O 14 and 21, 1801; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 19 and 20, 1801. For the results of their deliberations, see O 27.

19 Persons residing in the vicinity of the Tea Water Pump petition the common council that the butchers be allowed "to erect Stalls there during the prevalence of the present sickness." The board orders that the mayor take such measures as he shall think proper.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 42.

26 The common council passes "A Law for procuring regular Bills of Mortality in the City of New York." It provides for the keeping of accounts by "the sexton or other person, having charge of the several burial places in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 43–44.

27 The constitutional convention, which assembled at Albany on Oct. 13 (q. v.), concludes its deliberations, having agreed upon several changes in the constitution, the first changes made since its adoption, Ap 20, 1777 (q. v.). It is decided that the assembly shall hereafter number 100, and "shall never exceed one hundred and fifty." (Heretofore, it had consisted of "at least seventy members" and never was to exceed 300). The number of senators is fixed at 32; whereas, previously, the number was to increase with the population to a limit of 100. Appointing power is "vested concurrently in the person administering the government of the state for the time being and in each of the members of the council of appointment." (Heretofore the senate had a hand in appointments, and the governor presided over the council without a vote except in case of a tie.)—Clark's Manual (1816), 54–56. See also *N. Y. Gaz. and Gen. The common council resolves "that Ordinances do pass for continuing Broadway through the Lands formerly belonging to Robert Randall deceased [see Je 1], and also to continue Broadway until it meets the Bowery lane, agreeably to the present Map of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 46. 29

The common council authorises the mayor to expend a sum not exceeding £200 for improvements at the Battery (see S 28).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 46. Nov. 2

Aaron Burr writing from New York to his daughter Theodosia says: "Richmond Hill will probably be sold within ten days for one hundred and forty thousand dollars, which, though not half the worth, is enough and more."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, II: 156. On Nov. 9, he added: "The sale of Richmond Hill goes on, and will, I believe, be completed within eight days. The price and terms are agreed; some little under works retard the conclusion."—Ibid., II: 157. However, on Nov. 20, he wrote: "The sale of Richmond Hill is all off; blown up at the moment of counting the money, partly by whim and partly by accident."—Ibid., II: 160. 5

"On Tuesday next the 10th inst. there will be an interesting and severe fight between a Panther and a Bear, at the New Circus in George-street, corner of Bedloe-street, where the spectators will be accommodated without being in any danger whatever. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 9, 1801. "

A count of the vessels in the harbour shows 83 ships, 2 barques, 62 brigs, 126 schooners, and 388 sloops; total 661.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 14, 1801. 13

An example of "Expeditious travelling," at this time, is that of a merchant who left New York at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and arrived at Boston (a distance of 286 miles) the evening of the next day.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 14, 1801. 14

The common council appoints a committee "to procure and report plans for a publick building to be erected contiguous to the Bridewell and Alms house, and to expend such sum, not exceeding $500, as they shall think necessary for that purpose."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 51. 16

The common council refers to a committee a petition "for opening and levelling Branner Street, from Greenwich Street to the broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 52. This appears to be Brannon (the present Spring) St.—See Je 8; and L. M. R. K., III: 994. On Aug. 5, 1802, the street had not yet been ceded to the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 100. The Bank of New York sells to Ezra Weeks the block on which the new City Tavern on Broadway stands, extending west to Temple St., between Thames and Cedar Sts. (see Ja 24, 1793; F 6, 1800).—Liber Deeds, LXI: 250. A prior deed to the bank is not of record (memorandum in Title Guarantee and Trust Co.). The bank may have acquired the property from a master in chancery on foreclosure; or at a sale in the Tontine Coffee House, such as that which, it was said (see F 7, 1801), might be held on March 1, 1801; or the bank may have acquired it directly from the trustees of the N. Y. Tontine Hotel. The following report of the purchase is published: "We are informed that Mr. Weeks, the builder, has purchased the Tontine City Hotel in Broad Way. This immense pile, which in its unfinished state, cost upwards of 100,000 dollars, was sold for 48,000! It is said Mr. Weeks intends to convert the lower part of this building into stores, and finish the upper part for dwellings."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 20, 20

1801 Nov. 20 1801; descrip. of Pl. 125, III: 688–89. From this statement it appears that the hotel was never completed under the "Tontine" proprietors. It is possible that only the assembly-room was in condition for public use prior to its purchase by Weeks. See, further, Mr 30, 1802.

23 The common council orders "that the different Piers in this City be hereafter known and designated by numbers progressively beginning at the Battery and that the same be numbered under the direction of the Street Commissioner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 57. The order was repeated on Sept. 25, 1815 (q.v.).

30 On account of the inconvenience arising from there being several streets of the same names, the common council orders "that the Street Commissioner be directed to attend to the completion of the New Map of the City, and that he be authorized to employ Mr Richard Furman to assist him in the execution of that duty."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 62. This evidently refers to the Goerck-Mangin Map.—See Ap 10 and Jl 15, 1799.

Dec. 4 Several cases of contested votes, based on property qualification, are the subject of inquiry and determination by the common council. The board disallows the votes of 36 persons who, by combination, occupied one piece of property of insufficient value to qualify them to vote. This decision secured the election of James Roosevelt as alderman, and John P. Ritter as assistant, of the Fifth Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 65–72. Other contested votes were considered on Dec. 7 and 8.—Ibid., III: 73–82.

5 Robert Troup writes from New York to Rufus King in London: "For twelve days past the city has been much agitated with a duel between Hamilton's oldest son Philip and a Mr Eacher—a brother lawyer of mine and a violent and bitter democrat. . . . Young Hamilton was mortally wounded and soon after died. Never did I see a man so completely overwhelmed with grief as Hamilton has been. The scene I was present at when Mrs Hamilton came to see her son on his deathbed (he died about a mile out of the city) and when she met her husband and son in one room beggars all description. Young Hamilton was very promising in genius and acquirements and Hamilton formed high expectations of his future greatness. . . . At present Hamilton is more composed and is able again to attend to business; but his countenance is strongly stamped with grief. Eacher has not since made his appearance at the bar. There is a general current of opinion agt. him except among the violent democrats."—Life and Correspondence of Rufus King, ed. by Charles R. King (N. Y., 1897), IV: 28.

22 John Minchul, author of a new comedy, "The Gig," having read and sung the first two acts to audiences, is to read the rest of the comedy on this day at "Tyler's Gardens."—Daily Adv., D 22 and 24, 1801. These newspaper references to Minchul and his comedy, appear to be entirely jocular. "We ought in justice to crown him Poet Laureat of America." Dr. Francis said in 1857 that Tyler's was "still held in remembrance, by some few surviving graduates of Columbia College, as a resort for commencement suppers."—N. Y. during the last Half Century (1857), 15. For other references to this tea-garden, see Ap 9, 1795; Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 414. It was formerly Brannon's Garden.—L. M. R. K., III: 977. — In this year, the Regents granted to Columbia, jointly with Union College, certain lands in northern New York, at Lake George, Ticonderoga, and Crown Point. With the revenue of these lands, building operations on the new wing of Columbia (see Je 1797) were resumed, and the hall and recitation-rooms on the north end were completed.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 83; Moore, Hist. Sketch of Columbia College, 76. In 1805, the trustees of the college applied to the legislature for aid in finishing the new wing and repairing the old, but no grant was made.—Assemb. Jour., 28th sess., 134; Senate Jour., 28th sess., 62. See also D 14, 1805.

— In this year, Peter Maverick, the son of Peter Rushton Maverick (see Mr 16, 1786), was in business in New York as an engraver. He later moved to Newark, N. J., where he became the teacher of Asher B. Durand. He finally returned to New York and conducted an extensive establishment as a general engraver, copperplate printer, and later, lithographer. He was one of the founders of the National Academy of Design in 1820.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 176–77. For examples of his work see Pl. 70, Vol. I, and Pls. 80-b and 82, Vol. III.

— In this year, John H. Contoit, previously a confectioner in the lower part of Greenwich St., took charge of Montagnie's garden; he conducted it until 1805 (q.v.), and was succeeded by Augustus Parise. In after years, a building called the Parthenon was erected upon these premises, which, in 1825, was occupied as a museum under the auspices of Reuben Peale.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 548.

— In this year, the Quaker meeting-house on Liberty St., which was erected in 1755 (q.v.), was taken down, and a new one was built on the adjoining property purchased in 1790 (q.v.).—L. M. R. K., III: 928. Cf. Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102, and Thorburn's Reminiscences, 137–39.

2 The New-York Herald, a semi-weekly edition of the New-York Evening Post (see N 16, 1801), is established. It was published by Michael Burnham and edited by William Coleman.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 437; Early Newspapers, II: 420.

" The summer theatre at Mount Vernon Garden is offered for lease. "The theatre will be forty two feet in length, and forty feet in breadth, with dressing rooms, and a cellar underneath. There will be, for the present, six wings on each side, twelve wood, twelve street, and twelve palace wings; two wood, one street, one palace, and one horizon scene. The theatre and the front part is entirely altered, for the better accommodation of the audience, at a very great expence; it will be divided into boxes, pit and gallery."—Daily Adv., Ja 12, 1802.

9 The inspectors of the state prison make a report to the legislature in which they say in part: ". . . the number of convicts sent to the Prison has considerably increased. This must be, in general, ascribed to the increase of our population, commerce, wealth and luxury—but the examination of the annexed and former tables, by which it will appear that three-fourths of the whole number of convicts are from the city of New-York, will lead to some particular sources of crimes, which may deserve the attention of the Legislature. The great number of petty-taverns and grog-shops, amounting to near twelve hundred, by holding out temptations to vicious indulgences . . . tend to promote habits of idleness, vice and dissipation. . . . This growing evil might be, in some degree, corrected, by a law prohibiting the granting of licences for taverns to grocers, and to none but such persons as should prove to the satisfaction of the Mayor, that he had a room and two spare beds at least to accommodate boarders, and by limiting number of tavern licences to one-fourth of the present number. —Other causes of the depreciation of morals among the people, which may with propriety be submitted to the cognizance of the Legislature, are Horse Racing, and the savage practice, lately introduced, of baiting animals with dogs, and the immoral, unchristian and barbarous custom of Duelling, which has increased of late years in this city, to a degree perhaps unparalleled in the history of any civilized people. If persons, principals and seconds, concerned in duels, were by law disfranchised, and declared incapable of holding any office of honor or profit, and otherwise legally disabled, it would tend to discourage this practice, and give great satisfaction to the moral and religious, the most numerous and solid part of the community. . . . In the year 1800, seventy nine convicts were sent to the State prison for petty offences, for one and two years, and of that number five-sixths were from the city of New York.—In the year 1801, ninty five convicts for petty offences were 1802 Feb. 9 sent to the State-prison, under Sentence from one to two years, of whom five-sixths were from the city of New-York. In the Bridewell prison are confined vagrants and disorderly persons, as well as such as are convicted of petty offences: these are all mixed together, without any discrimination of Character; and by associating so many vicious persons . . . they corrupt each other, and render the prison a mere sink of depravity; after remaining some time in dirt and the most vitiating society, they are sent forth, fit candidates for the state-prison. To remedy this most serious evil, the inspectors beg leave to suggest . . . that a law be passed to enable the corporation of the city to erect a building, to be attached to the bridewell or state-prison, to contain about sixty solitary cells; that the police magistrates be empowered to try in a summary way, and sentence to solitary confinement, for a time not exceeding thirty days, vagrants, drunkards, riotous and disorderly persons, etc. . . . The nett profit of their (convicts') labor, for the years 1799 and 1800, amounted to 6599 dollars and 70 cents; and in the year 1801, to 7941 dollars and 83 cents. Considering that the manufactures have been established only three years, and the ignorance and inexperience of the persons engaged in them . . . such a profit may be regarded as considerable to be produced from a capital employed of about 20,000 dollars, for the purchase of raw materials and to defray all the necessary expences for the support of the prison and maintenance of the convicts. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 3, 1802.

18 One of the papers publishes a petition of certain inhabitants of New York and Long Island to the legislature, which states: "That the peculiar attention and patronage which have been afforded by the Honorable the Legislature, for many years past, to all undertakings which have had in view to facilitate the intercourse between different parts of the state, by the improvement of roads and bridges, have induced your petitioners to ask the same boon for an important part of the southern district.

"The insular situation of Long Island and the city of New-York, renders an intercourse between them at all times uncertain, and sometimes impracticable, as the only communication between them is by means of a ferry, near a mile in length across an impetuous tide. The great and increasing population of the city of New York renders a daily supply from the country of the necessaries of life, almost indespensable, it has therefore become an object of great importance to the interest and welfare of those adjacent islands, that a Bridge should be established between them, which may be so constructed as to answer all the purposes of intercourse, and at the same time be beneficial to the port and harbour of New York.

"Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray they may be incorporated for the said purpose, subject to such restrictions and entitled to such immunities as are usual in similar cases. As your Petitioners are actuated only by motives which embrace public utility, they humbly pray that the kind of Bridge to be built, and the place where it ought to be located, shall be determined by the Governor, the Surveyor-General of the State, Secretary of State, the Mayor and Recorder of the city of N. York." The petition is unsigned.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 18, 1802. There is no reference to such a petition in the minutes of the legislature in this year.—Assemb. Jour., 25th sess.; Senate Jour., 25th sess. The project, however, created much comment (see F 19 and 20).

19 "With a view to invite a public discussion" of the subject, "Hydraulicus" publishes a projet for connecting New York with Long Island, by means of a bridge. He says: "In a military point of view . . . a communication between the city and L. Island, by means of a Bridge, may be of no small importance in case of war—The exposed situation of the city to the attack of an enemy's fleet, may in some measure be protected by the fortifications already in the harbour; but if the fleet should have on board but a small number of troops to be landed on the Long Island shore, below the fortifications, they might without interruption, march to Brooklyn; from whose heights they may command the city, and lay it under contribution, or burn it. The Navy-yard and Arsenal contemplated to be established at the Wallabout, is in a similar way exposed to destruction; although there may be in the city, ten times the number of troops to the invading enemy. If a Bridge would be erected from Long Island to the city, it seems as if it could have nothing more to desire to render its position perfect—But in the construction of it, the commercial advantages of the city must primarily be attended to; and therefore it must not impede or injure the navigation—it must always Feb. be ready to accommodate and facilitate the passage of vessels of 19 any burthen, either by means of arches or locks, a stone or iron Bridge may easily, altho' expensively, be made to render the passage of vessels easy; but it must necessarily contract by its Butments and Piers, the space at present occupied exclusively for the passage of the water.—Now as a given quantity must be discharged in a given time, if the passage be contracted, its velocity must necessarily be increased in proportion as the passage is narrowed—whereby the anchorage of vessels on either side of the Bridge, must be rendered extremely unsafe. I need only to cite Hell-gate, where in consequence of the nearness of the banks to each other, the passage has always been the terror of navigators. A Bridge built of wood on wooden piles, in some measure obviates the difficulties attending stone piers; but the destructibility of the material, both from the worm and its natural decay, the great length of pile . . . must forbid an attempt of this kind.—There is fortunately another mode unembarrassed with any of those difficulties, that is both cheaper in the construction, and almost as durable as time itself. Few who have thought on this subject, have probably recollected, that the water dividing the Islands is not a river; but an arm of the sea whose current is formed by the influx and reflux of the tide—that being the case it is evident, that if a Dam could be extended from one island to the other, the current would be destroyed, . . .—and for the communication between the Sound and the North River, it would only be necessary to construct a lock in the dam for the free passage of all vessels of burthen. This Lock . . . should be placed on the New York side. . . . This dam should be constructed of sufficient breadth for a handsome road to be made on its top. . . ."—Daily Adv., F 19, 1802. This suggestion was adversely criticized on Feb. 22.—Ibid., F 22, 1802. See also F 20 and 23.

"Common Sense" writes to one of the daily papers: "If a " bridge from New York to Brooklyn was built on piers, there would be an impetuous current between each of them, so that nothing but small row boats could pass with safety, except at slack tide or still water. . . . The intercourse between New-York and Brooklyn has been, and at present is, carried on by means of twelve boats and 24 men. These have done and still do all that is necessary. The men are paid each 10 dollars per month. Their board ten dollars more. . . . The whole expence is about twenty dollars per day or six hundred dollars per month. It is supposed to be the cheapest ferry in the world."—Mercantile Adv., F 19, 1802.

The next step toward building the new city hall is found in 20 an advertisement published in the Daily Advertiser and the American Citizen and General Advertiser, of this date:

"PREMIUM OF 350 DOLLARS.

"The Corporation of the City of New York having it in contemplation to build a new Court House and City Hall, the undersigned, a committee appointed for the purpose, hereby offer a premium of three hundred and fifty dollars for such plan, to be presented to either of the subscribers prior to the first day of April next, as may afterwards be adopted by the board. The scite on which it is to be erected is insulated [sic], covering an area of three hundred by two hundred feet. The plan must shew the elevation of the four facades. The interior arrangement of the building must comprize four court rooms, two large and two small, six rooms for jurors, eight for public offices, one for the common council, and appropriate rooms for the city watch, and the housekeeper, in the vestibule or wings. Occasional purposes may require other apartments, which may also be designated. A calculation of the expense requisite for its construction must accompany the plan.

"New York, Feb. 17, 1802."—Daily Adv., F 20, 1802.

The Daily Adv. of Feb. 20 observed editorially: "The projector will undoubtedly regard as well the embellishment of the City, as the purposes of accommodating the Courts, Common Council and Public Offices. Buildings designed for posterity ought to be on a scale commensurate with their object." See Jl 26.

A New Yorker addresses the following communication to the " press: "It appears that a petition is now before the public, for the purpose of obtaining permission to build a Bridge over the East River [see F 18]; it is a subject of so much consequence to the 1802 Feb. 20 city of New York and the State in general, that it requires the most serious consideration. There are but few who know the immense and growing trade of this place to the Eastward, and perhaps no person can tell the very great injury it will be to that intercourse, when we consider there must be several foundations sunk in the river for a Bridge to rest upon. From the amazing quantities of ice generally floating during the winter season in the East River, it is seriously apprehended that the obstruction occasioned by a Bridge will materially injure the harbour. . . ."—Daily Adv., F 20, 1802. See F 23, Mr 10.

23 "Caligula," commenting on the remarks of "Hydraulicus" (see F 19) in regard to the projected bridge across the East River, asks: "Would it not be a greater convenience to the public, and extend the field of speculation, to erect a bridge from the Battery to Elizabethtown, as we should connect Boston with Philadelphia, and it would be pleasant crossing for strawberries."—Daily Adv., F 23, 1802. See Mr 10.

Mar. 6 Nassau Hall, Princeton, is gutted by fire. Only the walls are left standing. The original plans, with few alterations, were followed in rebuilding.—Maclean, Hist. of the College of N. J., II: 32–34.

8 The committee of Trinity vestry appointed to decide on the expediency of building another church (see Je 8, 1801) reports favourably, and it is ordered to "enquire for a proper situation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See F 10, 1803.

10 "Hydraulicus" again discusses the projected bridge. He says: "I am not at all surprised or disappointed at finding great opposition made to the project of building a Bridge from this city to Long-Island [see F 19, 20, and 23]; it arises principally from an idea, that it might injure the harbor— . . . For my own part, the only motives that have induced me to an interest in this pursuit, arise from a conviction, that it would not injure the navigation, and that it would greatly promote the convenience and advantage of both Islands, and save the lives of many valuable citizens. It appears to me, that all the inducements to bridge-building that can possibly exist in any part of the world, are applicable here. Is it to accommodate passengers that bridges are built? Then at least two hundred thousand annually will be grateful for the facility afforded them. Is it that an outlet and opening from a city situated on a barren island, to a fine country extending 150 miles in length, is a desirable thing? Then is a bridge essential to enjoy these advantages. A stranger would suppose, on hearing the outcry made against this proposal, that the signers to the petition were about to ask the Legislature to build a bridge at the expense of the state, and to give them the toll of it; whereas on the contrary, they not only ask for leave to build one at their own cost but they pray the Legislature would appoint men, who have no interest in the bridge or the adjoining lands, to determine how it shall be built, and where it shall be placed for the accommodation of the public—for whose interest it is impossible for a petition to be couched in more liberal terms.—There can be no reason why the Legislature should withhold from the petitioners the prayer of their petition, except from the idea, that it might injure the navigation of the harbor, or endanger the health of the city.—If such be their conviction, it ought not to be granted; and if such can be demonstrated to be even the probable result of it, I would instantly abandon it, and I believe the same from all the gentlemen who are at present desirous of it. . . ."—Daily Adv., Mr 10, 1802. "Hydraulicus" continued the discussion on March 12, dilating upon the numerous advantages of a dam.—Ibid., Mr 12, 1802. See Mr 15.

11 "The well known and justly admired Mansion, called The Belvedere House, with its appurtenances" is to be sold at auction on March 22. "The situation and prospect cannot be surpassed in the neighborhood of New-York. The house is modern, elegant, and commodious, well calculated for a large genteel family, or for public entertainment. It has every useful accomodation of stabling, coach-houses, &c &c. with a large ice-house in the best state and well filled. The ground, about an acre, is laid out with acknowledged taste and ornamented with beautiful trees and shrubs, in a flourishing condition."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 11, 1802. It was offered for sale again on Feb. 19, 1803.—Ibid., F 19, 1803. On Feb. 1, 1806, John Glover offered it for lease.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 1, 1806.

15 "Philo-Hydraulicus" writes to one of the papers: "Hydraulicus [see F 19 and Mr 10] and his confederates in bridge-making in the modern language of approbation, certainly deserve well for their persevering assiduity in theories and calculations. I shall leave their practical energies to operate without comment. If they produce a work of public utility, the convenience and gratitude of society will reward them—If they blunder, they are still secure. For the events of the last year have afforded convincing testimony, that the most sublime theory, and the most absurd practice, when united, form the perfection of human virtue and talents."—Daily Adv., Mr 15, 1802. 22 Lazarus Beach and Samuel Mallory establish a weekly paper entitled New-York Journal.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 452. See June.

June — In this month the title of the New-York Journal (see My 22) was changed to New-York Journal and Weekly Monitor, the publishers having bought out a magazine called The Lady's Monitor (see Ag 8, 1801). In October, the paper was sold to Ming & Young who established The Weekly Visitor (see O 9).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 452.

1 "Several Booksellers have arrived in this city, from Philadelphia and the eastward, to attend the first Literary Fair ever held in the United States. A large assortment of Books has been forwarded as samples, to be exhibited to the trade. The Fair is to commence this morning, we understand at Bardin's Long room in the Old Coffee House; which has been engaged for the purpose by the society of Booksellers in this city."—Daily Adv., Je 1, 1802.

"The proceedings of the meeting were opened by chosing Mr. Hugh Gaine, of this city, Chairman, and Mr. M. Carey, of Philadelphia, Secretary—after which Committees were appointed to report rules for the future management of the business of the Fair. Considerable numbers of other Booksellers from different parts of the Union, are expected to arrive in town in the course of this week."—Ibid., Je 2, 1802. See Je 7.

7 The booksellers attending the literary fair (see Je 1) adopt a report of a committee "appointed to arrange the business of the Literary Fair," which recommends: "That a committee be appointed to consist of six gentlemen, two from Philadelphia, two from New-York, and two from Boston, to take the subject of the Fair under consideration, and prepare rules and regulations for its future government.

"That, as the object of the Fair is to benefit regular booksellers only, no person be admitted to do business at the Fair, during the hours fixed for exchanging books, who does not keep a book store, and make bookselling his regular business.

"That the booksellers who may assemble at the Fair in October next, shall form themselves into a company or association, and subscribe such rules and regulations as may be agreed on; after which no person shall do business at the Fair, unless duly admitted by ballot; the vote of two thirds of the members present being necessary to admission." The New Yorkers chosen for the committee suggested in the first paragraph were Isaac Collins and James Swords. The delegates at the fair also adopted an address "To the Booksellers of the United States" and passed five resolutions.

"The project had to struggle with many disadvantages. Its novelty—the want of previously fixed regulations—the remoteness of the persons concerned from each other—the expense of travelling. . . . The success of the enterprise has been equal to all other efforts, founded on a deliberate study of society in the United States; and already indicates how advantageous the plan must become, when it obtains extension and maturity. . . .

"By the simple operation of exchange, many thousand volumes are brought into circulation which might otherwise have lain on the shelves for years. . . ." The resolutions were as follows: June

"1. Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to the printers 7 and booksellers throughout the United States, to use their utmost endeavours to improve the quality of the books they publish in order to establish and support the reputation of the American manufacture of books and to render it deserving of the patronage of the friends of their country.

"2. Resolved, That it be likewise recommended to our brethren, to avoid, as much as may be, any interference with the interests of each other, by the republication of books already printed in the United States. . . .

"3. Resolved, That it be recommended to the importers of books, to discontinue the importation of all books, of which good and correct editions are printed in this country. . . .

"4. Resolved, That the continuation of the Literary Fair be strongly recommended to all persons interested in the publication of Books in this country; and that it be held twice a year—on the first Tuesday of April in New-York, and on the first Tuesday of October in Philadelphia.

"5. Resolved, That it be recommended to the Booksellers in the principal towns of the United States, to form themselves into associations, for the purpose of corresponding with each other, in order to promote the general interest. . . ."—Am. Cit., Jl 12, 1802; Independent Chron., Jl 19, 1802. See Je 11.

An article on the "First American Literary Fair" states: ". . . 11
The meeting on the 1st of June [q. v.] amounted to 46 booksellers. . . . The next day it was found that the accommodation for business was not sufficiently spacious, for numbers of booksellers thronged in every day afterwards even until Saturday the 5th, on the noon of which day, the number of volumes, large and small disposed of, was estimated at considerably more than half a million!

"The transactions of the Literary Fair did not terminate even on Saturday, and it is certain that had the booksellers remained another week, a vast quantity of additional business might have been done. The success of the Fair has, however caused measures to be already taken for its extension, and for this purpose another Fair will be held in Philadelphia on the first Tuesday in October, and the next Fair at New-York on the first Tuesday in April, 1803—and so continued semi-annually."—Am. Cit., Je 11, 1802.

"A subscription is circulating in this city, for the purpose of 30 importing from Paris, exact models in Statuary, of the Venus de Medicis, the Apollo Belvidere, the Hercules Farnese, and the Group of the Laocoon, which are intended as exemplars for American Artists. . . . The sum of 5000 dollars it is presumed, will accomplish these objects. Should this subscription succeed, . . . it is proposed to extend it to procure other copies of the great remains of Antiquity. Were a society instituted, of sufficient spirit, to establish an adequate fund, the interest of which only to be applied, for the purpose of procuring from Europe, Models of Architecture, Sculpture and Painting; the beneficial effects would be progressive and infinite."—Daily Adv., Je 30, 1802. This was the beginning of the Academy of Arts. See O 27.

James Rivington dies at the age of 78.—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1802. July
His body was buried in the cemetery of "the New Dutch Church." 4
—Daily Adv., Jl 7, 1802.

At the Park Theatre, the 4th of July is celebrated (on this day, 5
Monday) by the performance of a tragedy—"Bunker Hill, or, the Death of Warren;" followed by "a Drama, never before performed, called, The Retrospect, Or, American Revolution. With Scenery and Machinery entirely new. In Course of this Piece will be represented, the Principal Events in the Revolution. . . ." The advertisement describes the scenes. "The last Scene will exhibit an elegant Perspective View of the lower Part of Broadway, with the Fort, Barracks, &c. as they stood at the time commemorated when just evacuated by the British, the English Flag flying. The Bay is seen, and the English Fleet departing. General Washington enters attended by the Citizens of New York, who had been in voluntary Exile, while it was in Possession of the Enemy. The American army follows. During the Procession, is seen the well known Action of the Sailor, who, when it was found that the Lines of the Flag Staff on the Fort were destroyed [cf. N 25, 1783], climbed to the Top, and striking the English Colors, displayed the American Flag triumphant." The Hodgkinsons and Hallams are among the players.

1802 July 5 Very remarkable programmes are also announced for this day at Delacroix's Vauxhall Garden, and Corre's Mount Vernon Garden. At the Mount Vernon Garden, the proprietor announces, "having found, from last year's experience, that the Audience, particularly the Ladies, were exposed to the evening's dews, he has erected a new and much more spacious and convenient Theatre, the part allotted for the audience, being at a very considerable expence, rendered as commodious and agreeable as any winter Theatre." July 5 being the closing date of the Park Theatre, Mr. Hodgkinson has undertaken the management of the Mount Vernon Theatre. The programme for July 5 at this theatre includes a comedy ("All the World's a Stage"); a "Grand Pastichio, Consisting of Songs, Recitations, &c." (the list of which is published, as usual); a pantomime; transparent paintings, and fireworks.—Daily Adv., Jl 3, 1802.

" 12 "The present enmity of Vice-President Burr, to General Hamilton, arose from the circumstance of the General's having used all his influence with the Members of the House of Representatives, to induce them to prefer Mr. Jefferson—when the votes for President were found to be equal between Jefferson and Burr [see F 11, 1801]. This preference the Vice-President never has forgiven."—Daily Adv., Jl 12, 1802. See Jl 11, 1804.

" 17 "Much discussion has taken place concerning the Navy Yard, purchased for Government at the Wallabout, on Long Island [see F 7, 1801]. Some said, the purchase was very injudicious, others that it was very proper. . . .

"Ships may be built here with great advantages. . . . Labourers of all sorts . . . can always be got. . . . Adjoining the Navy Yard, is one of the best places in the world for Securing and Seasoning Timber. The Live Oak materials now there, are in an admirable state of perfection. They are so judiciously disposed by the Naval Constructor, Mr. Wm. Sheffield, that while they are water-Seasoning, they are at once secure from the worms, and even from the incendiary attempts of an enemy. . . ."—Daily Adv., Jl 17, 1802.

" 20 Delacroix introduces another new idea in summer-garden entertainments. This is the employment of an equestrian performer, "Mr. Robertson," who began a successful season at Vauxhall Garden on this day.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 19, 24, 1802. This was the Vauxhall on the Bayard place. See, further, S 18.

" 22 The common council hears the reading of letters that have passed between the mayors of New York and Philadelphia regarding a "pestilential fever in that City." The board appoints a committee "to ascertain and report such arrangements as they shall deem necessary to preserve the health of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 91. Their report was made on July 26, when a committee was appointed to carry it into effect.—Ibid., III: 94–97. See, further, Ag 9.

" " The common council inquires if it is proper for the city to fill in the "two Lots belonging to the Corporation of Trinity Church and intended for Streets to be called Vestry and Laight Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 91.

" " Rinier Skaats resigns his office of doorkeeper and messenger of the common council. The board appoints Bartholomew Skaats (see D 29, 1794) in his place, and also as keeper of the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 92. Together, they held these posts for more than a decade, and were among the notables of the time.—See Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 424; N. Y. Mirror, IX: 154.

" " The common council orders that the laws, ordinances, and public resolutions, of the board of aldermen hereafter be published in the American Citizen and the Evening Post; the contract with the Commercial Advertiser to be discontinued at its expiration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 93. The choice of a paper in which to publish the city's announcements changed from time to time until the establishment of the City Record by the Charter of 1873.

" " The common council orders that the street com'r "be directed to procure a survey of the middle road [Broadway] from the arch bridge to Dr Livingstons house and present the same to this board with all convenient speed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 94. See, further, Ag 9.

" 26 The common council permits the "Kine pock institution" to inoculate the paupers of the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 98. See Ag 14 and 19.

" " On July 26, 1802, the common council pays $10 to J. B. Prevost to reimburse him for the cost of "surveying the Lot of ground on which it is intended to build a City hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 99. See O 4.

" 28 Two representatives of De Witt Clinton and Col. John Swartwout meet at Fraunces Tavern to make arrangements for a duel between their principals.—Drowne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 19. The duel took place at Hoboken on July 31, and Swartwout was wounded.—Merc. Adv., Ag 2; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 2; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 2, 1802. At this time duels were frequent.—See De Voe's Newspaper Index, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See, further, Jl 4, 1804.

Aug. 2 The corner-stone of mechanics' hall is laid, at the north-west corner of Broadway and Robinson St. (now Park Place), by the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen, which was organized in 1785 and incorporated in 1792.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1802; Annals of the society (1882), 40–42. The ground had been purchased from Richard Varick.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 20, 1802. See also a sketch of lots on Broadway, between Robinson and Murray Sts., showing the proposed location of "Mechanick Hall," dated 1798, in the Bancker coll. (folder "Broadway"), N. Y. P. L. The building is intended for a public hotel, in which the society will reserve the large room for their hall.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 7, 1802. The building was so near completion as to enable the society to hold their annual dinner there on Jan. 4, 1803.—Ibid., Ja 5, 1803. It was opened "for the reception of company and Boarders," under the management of Michael Little, on May 13, 1803.—Ibid., My 13, 1803. The building was erected by membership loans.—Ibid., Ja 4, 1804. Extensive alterations were made in the hall in 1850. In 1870, the society leased the premises to the Security Insurance Co., and erected there a handsome new building.—Annals of the society (1882), 22, 40–46, 67–68, 77, 116, 167–68. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985.

" The committee, appointed to let the docks, slips, and ferries, reports that the docks and slips have been leased to Charles Smith for 2 years from May 1st last at $16,500 a year; the Powles Hook ferry to John Holdron for 3 years at $2,125 a year; Hoboken ferry to Garret Covenhoven for $250 a year; Weehawk ferry to Charles and Philip Earl at $50 a year, and Horn's Hook ferry to Richard Smith at $30 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 100.

5 The common council passes an ordinance to prohibit the use of fire-arms "on the Island of New York" within four miles of the city hall, excepting by military companies and state prison guards.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 101.

9 The common council orders "that an Ordinance pass for digging and filling in Broadway [cf. Jl 22] to the level of the Line, marked A, in a map or profile made by Joseph Mangin and Charles Loss, City Surveyors." Assessors are appointed for the improvement.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 103.

" The mayor having issued a proclamation prohibiting intercourse with Philadelphia (see Jl 22), the common council allows 12 shillings a day to the persons appointed to enforce it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 104.

" The board allows $15 to four special officers "for their attendance at the late races at Harlaem to prevent gambling."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 104.

10 The corner-stone of the Greenwich Reformed Dutch Church is laid "in Greenwich Street near Poplarville,"—that is, at Greenwich midway between Amos and Charles Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 11, 1802; L. M. R. K., III: 935. It was a wooden building, and the first Dutch Church on Manhatten Island not connected with the Collegiate Church. It was enlarged in 1807.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 29. In 1826 (q. v.), it was sold to the Reformed Presbyterians and removed entire to Waverly Place near Grove St.

12 The selectmen of Boston recently recommended to the public that hearses be used "as a mode of conveyance for the dead, peculiarly decent, and preferable to that by Porters. . . ." On publication of this news in New York, the following editorial comment is made: "It would be well, perhaps, were this mode of conveying the dead to their long homes adopted, likewise, in this city; especially during the summer season. It is not incompatible with the usual respect paid to the remains of humanity. The pall that shrouds the coffin may equally as well cover the hearse. The custom, once introduced, would soon appear full as decent and respectable, and prove much more convenient than the present practice of employing carriers. The subject merits the consideration of our police."—Daily Adv., Ag. 12, 1802.

" The common council decides to take under its management

1802 Aug. 12 (cf. My 21) the signal staffs on Staten Island (see S 14, 1801) after applying to the governor for permission, the purpose being "to render the same a respectable and useful establishment," which shall be "always ready when the State requires it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 105. See N 3.

" The common council orders "That the Bowery road from Bullock [Broome] Street to the forks of the Kings bridge road and Bloomingdale road [23d St.] be turnpiked to the breadth of forty feet. . . . And also that side walks of the breadth of ten feet be paved or gravelled and sufficiently planted with a double row of Trees. . . ."

The board also orders "That the Middle road, from the Arch bridge to its uniting with the Bowery be turnpiked, and side walks made and planted with Trees in the same manner and under the same regulations." This "Middle road" was Broadway.—L. M. R. K., III: 994–95.

It orders "that the Canal be immediately opened from the North river to the Arch bridge," and appoints a committee "to report the plan of such Canal and to confer with the proprietors of the ground through which the same must pass."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 106–7. See O 18.

" The recorder reports to the common council the following resolution of the president and directors of the Manhattan Co.: "Resolved that the Superintendant under the direction and at the expence of the Corporation of this City take measures to furnish as much of the water of the Company during the present Season as may be required for the cleansing of the gutters, daily, in the several streets in this City." The board thereupon appropriates $500 "for the experiment," directing the street com'r to act for the city in collaboration with the Manhattan Co.'s superintendent.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 107. On Aug. 19, $750 was voted.—Ibid., III: 111. See, further, S 13.

14 The Kine-Pock Institution is erecting a building in the rear of the Brick Church.—Proc. of the Trustees, First Presby. Ch., Vol. II. The building was on Park Row, near Beekman St.—L. M. R. K., III: 954. See Ag 19.

17 By this date, the old Vauxhall at the foot of Warren near Greenwich St., so long a tavern, bowling green, garden, and place of public resort, had become the "Cupola Iron Furnace."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 17, 1802. See also L. M. R. K., III: 981.

19 The common council permits James Scott to plant trees in Beaver Lane.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 109.

" The common council permits the "Kine pock institution" (see Jl 26) to occupy "the ground on which they have lately erected a building for the purpose of preserving their Vaccine matter for inoculation [see Ag 14]—for the space of one year from the date hereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 110.

" The common council appoints a committee "to report on the propriety of Erecting Cells for the improvement of certain Convicts," in conformity with "an act for erecting in the City of New York a prison for solitary confinement;" also to consider "the place best adapted to that purpose, together with the probable expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 110.

" An ordinance is passed for the better regulation of the city watch. The mayor is authorised to appoint six captains or commanders, and the number of watchmen shall not exceed 120. The city is to be divided into three watch districts, and a new watch-house is to be erected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 111–12. On Aug. 23, a committee reported on the bounds of the three districts. The second district, for example, was to have one section of its boundary running "through William Street to the Broadway. thence down Broadway to the Arch bridge to the place of intended Canal, thence up the line of the Canal aforesaid to the head of the same. . . ." The committee also reports that "the most proper place for the erection of a Watch house for the third District appears to be on a certain gore of Ground owned by this board at the intersection of Hudson Barley and Duane Streets."—Ibid., III: 114.

23 The common council grants permission to the "Market women" to have awnings erected in the Fly, Oswego, and Hudson Markets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 115.

30 The recorder and street com'r report that a deed was received from Trinity Church on Aug. 23 "for Land intended to form Harrison, Provost [Franklin], Moore [later known as North Moore], Bache [Beach], Hubert, Laight, Vestry, Desbrosses, Watts, and Brannon [Spring] Streets, or parts thereof." The board orders that it be preserved among the conveyances to the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 115, 119. Regarding the incumbrances existing on these lands, see ibid., III: 140. Aug. 30

Desbrosses St. was laid out prior to 1797 (Pl. 64, Vol. I); see also description of Pl. 175, III: 224–25.

Further cessions were made by Trinity to the city on Jan. 11, 1808 (q. v.), and Aug. 2, 1813 (q. v.).

" The common council adopts "Rules & Orders" to govern the board's proceedings.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 119–22.

Sept. 6 The common council adopts a committee report proposing the abolition of "the present establishment of Street Commissioners," and the appointment of a single commissioner at a salary of $1,250 a year. His duties are outlined.

The board also adopts the committee's proposal for the appointment of a "Superintendent of Scavengers" at a salary of $750 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 123–24. See S 13.

" The common council adopts an ordinance for the appointment of a comptroller. His duties shall be "to examine and to liquidate all claims, and to audit all accounts against this Corporation in all cases whatever, and to report the same to the board at each subsequent meeting for its order in the premises, and also to countersign all Warrants to be drawn on the Chamberlain or Treasurer of the City for the payment of all monies, directed by the board," etc. Several other details respecting his duties are specified. His salary is to be $1,500.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 124–26.

13 The common council grants to Dr. Hosack, professor in Columbia College, in fee, lot No. 55, and leases to him lots Nos. 60 and 61 of the Common Lands (see the Goerck Map of 1796, A. Pl. 9-a, Vol. III) for 21 years, to be used as a "public Botanic Garden."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 129; N. Y. Herald, Jl 2, 1803. It is called Elgin Garden, and appears on the Commissioners' Map of 1811 as situated between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, 47th and 51st Streets, and consists of 14 acres. See also L. M. R. K., III: 946. In a Statement of Facts relative to the Estab. and Prog. of the Elgin Botanic Garden, etc., issued by Hosack in 1811, he gave the date of his purchase erroneously as 1801. The deed was executed on Aug 6, 1804 (q. v.).

" The common council appoints a committee to treat with the proprietors of land "through which it is intended the Broadway shall pass in its continuation to the Bowery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 130.

" The common council orders that the recorder issue a warrant on the treasurer to pay J. F. Mangin, "in advance for his map of the City," $100; and to Dr. Joseph Browne (the new street commissioner), "towards supplying Manhattan Water for cleansing the Streets," $500 (see also Ag 12).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 132.

18 "Mr. Robertson," the equestrian performer (see Jl 20), has erected a temporary circus at Delacroix's Vauxhall Garden, and announces his first exhibition in it on Sept. 21, his feats being "in the same stile as at Ashley's in London."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 18, 28, 1802; Daily Adv., S 18, 1802; Com. Adv., S 29, 1802. "The troop with which he had been connected was probably one of the first that traveled about the country, . . ."—Greenwood, The Circus (2d ed., 1909), 103. See, further, Ap 28, 1803.

Oct. 1 Publication of a new daily paper called the Morning Chronicle is begun. It was printed by William A. Davis for the proprietor, Peter Irving.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 462; Early Newspapers, II: 422. Washington Irving made his first appearance as a writer in the columns of this paper, with the signature "Jonathan Oldstyle."—Annals of N. Am., 487.

" Archibald Robertson (see My 4, 1795), of the "Columbian Academy of Painting, No. 79, Liberty-Street," advertises

"All kinds of painting on silk and ivory executed.

"Likenesses in Portrait and Miniature, painted as usual.

"Private tuition as before."—Morn. Chron., O 1, 1802.

4 On Oct. 4, the minutes show that "The board having proceeded to ballot for the plan of a Court house And that of Mr Joseph F Mangin and John McComb. Junr. having a large majority of votes was accordingly adopted. Ordered that the Recorder be authorized to draw a Warrant on the Treasurer in favor of Mangin & McComb as a premium for their plan being the successful one, for $350."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 133–34. For announcement of the award, see Morning Chronicle, O 6; Com. Adv., O 6; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 6; Daily Adv., O 7; and Am. Citizen, O 8, 1802. Each of these publications states that the hall is "to be erected between the Bridewell and Jail, fronting the Park;" that "A variety of plans were submitted for their [the corporation's] approbation;" that

1802 Oct. 4 "The expense of completing it is estimated at $160,000;" and that "The elevation is elegant, and does no less credit to the taste and talents of the architects, than it reflects honor on the judgment of the Corporation." The announcement in the Daily Adv. of Oct. 7 is supplemented by the following editorial:

"The removal of the Courts of Justice, and public offices from their present situation almost to the extremity of the city, to one, which, under all circumstances of a rapidly increasing population, will always continue nearly central, is certainly, taking into consideration public convenience only, a wise and laudable measure. A further benefit will result. Property in the heart of the city will acquire a relative value with that along the borders of the rivers. Gentlemen of the long robe, and those whose duties are connected with public offices, will naturally fix their residence in the vicinity of the New City Hall; the lower part of the city will be left for the mercantile part of the community: the advantages arising from the different orders of society will, thus, be more equally diffused. The site, facing the Park, is the most eligible our city affords. The design of the Architect can lose none of its effect, for want of an open area and a commanding point of view. The Park ought to be connected with the building, which should be advanced to the front of the public grounds, so as not to interfere with the Alms House in the rear. The present street can conveniently be closed, and a new and more commodious avenue be opened, connecting Beekman and Barclay streets. The Courts during their sittings will, then, be relieved from that intolerable noise of carts and carriages, with which at present they are so much annoyed. It will be an object worthy consideration, when the contemplated improvement is completed, whether the present building should be taken down, or be converted to the purposes of the Custom-house and Post-office, which would greatly accommodate our merchants, being in the neighborhood of the Coffee House, Banks, Insurance and other offices, appendant to Commerce. The present Custom-house, though otherwise airy and spacious, is certainly too remote from the centre of business for convenience."

Besides Mangin and McComb, the names of only two other competitors for the reward have been found after extensive research. One is Archibald Robertson, as we know from Dunlap and Bryan, who both say he "was among those who presented designs for the city hall of New York."—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, II: 88; Bryan, Dict. of Painters and Engravers, IV: 254. The other is a "Dr. Smith," as appears by the following "Communication" in the Daily Adv. of O 25, 1802: "In the erection of a new City Hall, the three following objects ought to be sedulously attended to: 1st Utility. 2dly Elegance. 3dly œconomy [sic], as far as they accord with the Corporation Funds, without burthening the people with additional taxes. A considerable degree of taste and ingenuity, has been displayed on this occasion by the different architects. Out of twenty-six plans, delivered in, five or six are pre-eminently distinguished.—If originality of design has any merit, that delivered by Dr. Smith claims attention, and may be seen at the City Tavern, Lovet's Hotel, and it is conceived, Elegance, Utility, and œconomy [sic] have been consulted with a scrupulous attention. The author does not presume to claim the character of either an architect or draftsman, this being his first attempt in one of the most useful of the fine arts; neither does he present it to public inspection, but as a sketch of what his mind had conceived, as most suitable to answer the objects in view, which might have appeared to more advantage had the drawing been executed, or more correctly finished and on a larger scale, whereby the minutiae of the different orders would be distinctly discerned and therefore more forcibly engage the attention of gentlemen, who have not made architecture the objects of their contemplation."

The Mangin & McComb, and the McComb, original drawings of the city hall, or some of them (95 in number, to which others have been added from McComb's miscellaneous sketches), are preserved in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., having been purchased on March 1, 1898, from Mrs. Edward S. Wilde, the granddaughter of McComb. Fifteen of the more important of these drawings bear the signature of McComb alone; none of them that of Mangin or Mangin & McComb, although two of them (the front and rear elevations) show signs of erasure where Mangin's name may originally have stood. Three of the drawings—the original front and rear elevations and the cross-section (two of which are reproduced on Plate 75, Vol. I)—are inscribed by Mr. Wilde "Original design prize." The others are floor plans and sections, sketches for alterations, working drawings, and details of construction and ornament. Ten of the drawings were reproduced in The American Architect, F 5, 1908, and five others in the same magazine, Ag 19, 1908. One of these is a plan of the Park, showing the proposed location of the city hall; others are drawings of the cupola, as first conceived, and as afterwards executed; two of a proposed foil (never executed) at the base of the cupola; three of the statue of Justice to surmount the cupola, etc. For fuller account of the drawings and their authorship, see Pl 75, Vol. I. See O 11. Oct. 4

Hoboken, "the fashionable place of resort for gentlemen," has lately been used by some of "the lower classes of society" to settle their disputes "with the fist." Immense crowds gather there to witness bouts between these "sons of Mendoza."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 5, 1802. 5

Alexander Ming and William Young begin to publish The Weekly Visitor, or, Ladies' Miscellany. Although a magazine in appearance, it contained current news, death notices, and advertisements. It was suspended in 1805.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 512. 9

Robert Fulton and Chancellor Robert R. Livingston enter into an agreement to make steamboat experiments. A boat was built at their joint expense and tried out on the river Seine in 1803. —Dickinson, Robert Fulton Engineer and Artist (1913), 134–36, 149. Regarding Fulton's early experiments on steamboats, submarines, and canal engineering, and his negotiations in France and England, see ibid., 24–126. See also catalogue of Fulton MSS. and documents sold at Anderson's, April 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe. 10

A fire, which began in some stables in New St., causes damage amounting to $10,000. The long-room of Little's Hotel, at 42 Broad St. (see My 23, 1797), was destroyed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 12, 1802. 11

On Oct. 11, 1802, it is ordered "that a new City hall be erected conformable to the plan of Messieurs Mangin and Macomb lately adopted by this board that the Recorder Alderman Lenox. Alderman Barker. Mr Gilbert and Mr Brasher be appointed a Committee to carry this resolution into effect and that the sum of $25,000 be appropriated towards erecting the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 134. On Oct. 25, the building plans were on exhibition at Lovet's City Tavern (as shown in the "Communication" quoted above from the Daily Adv.). On Dec. 13, Mr. Crolius and Mr. LeRoy were made members of the building committee in place of Alderman Lenox and Mr. Gilbert, who were no longer members of the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 160. See D 20. "

The foundation-stone is laid of the second "Masonic Hall" erected in this city. For the first, see My 22, 1790. The building is in Frankfort St., near the Park. It is to be erected with funds obtained by a subscription opened and procured by Philip Becanon. —N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 15, 1802. It was consecrated on Je 8, 1803 (q. v.). 13

Joseph Browne, street commissioner, makes a long report to the common council on the subject of "the permanent regulation of Broadway and relative to the formation of a Canal." In this he says: "it is impossible for a Street Commissioner to perform his duty to the Corporation or do Justice to himself, when called on to report the permanent Regulation of a Street unless he has an opportunity of examining and knowing the relative situation of the adjoining Streets, and particularly of the ultimate arrangements intended to be adopted for their disembougement [sic] to the River whether through Canals or otherwise, these canals are subjects of infinite importance, and will materially influence at a future day the health and comfort of the City—it cannot but be regretted that an idea has ever been entertained that such a medium is a proper receptacle and Conveyance to the River of all the water and filth that must descend to it from so large a portion of the City; it is probably now too late to alter the principle but no time should be lost in determining and adopting that mode which may be least injurious; it is evident that all the streets leading to a canal must be more or less affected in their elevations in proportion as the level of the canal itself shall be regulated. . . . 18

"The principal canal is intended to extend from the east side of the Fresh Water pond on [to] the north River a distance of 5000 feet a branch also is intended to intersect it at about 1500 feet

1802 Oct. 18 from the River and will be near 1500 feet in length, that is from the angle of Leonard and Chapple Streets—the heads of those canals are to be four feet only above high Water mark, houses have been built and Streets laid out and paved conformably to this project—from thence it appears that the descent from the bank at the head of the Canal to low water mark is only nine feet which is a descent of one inch to about 50 feet the motion of Water over Ground so nearly approaching to a level must be extremely slow, and all the filth and Mud carried from the adjacent Streets must necessarily be deposited in the Canal there to be acted on by the Summers Sun, which must generate disgust, desease and death—an erroneous opinion seems to have been intertained that by communicating the Canal with the north River the tide will enter it, and in its descent carry out all the Dirt, that might have been accumulated, with it we need only see the State of the Docks in the City to be convinced of the fallacy of such reasoning—it has also been supposed that one or more sluices, constructed in the Canal, and occasionally to be opened at low Water would remedy the evil—but where is the head of water to be procured for this purpose—a sluice can only operate on the Canal below the Gate—it may be said that the fresh Water Pond would furnish Water enough now and then to scour out the Ditch—and what is to scour out the pond, in a very little time it must itself be full of mud, it is at present more than 15 feet Deep in it—there is no doubt the health of the City, in [a] few Years will require it to be filled up with pure earth, it probably ought to be done immediately while there are high Ground enough to be got in its neighbourhood; The width of the Canal has been variously spoken of—from four feet to one sufficiently wide for the admission of small vessels—it is not easy to conceive that it would be of much advantage for vessels of any sort or for any purpose to enter this Muddy ditch, as no part of the Canal will be made more than half [a] mile from the navigation of the East or North River, but it is obvious that a large ditch would have an infinite disadvantage over a small one—for in proportion to its size would be the distructive influence of the Sun on the putrefying mass contained in it—for this reason the smaller the ditch the better but a small Canal would not be adequate to the reception of the quantity of Water that occasionally would rush in torrents to this devoted spot about four hundred acres of the City are intended to be drained into the Canal—it is not unreasonable to suppose that during a very heavy rain one half of it would run off through the Streets to its natural outlet the River, we have frequently rains that in the Course of two hours amount to 1½ inches of water over the surface of the Ground—1½ inches of water therefore over a surface of 400 Acres Amounts to 17,424000 Gall^{s} the half of which or 8.712.000 Gall^{s} must descend to the Canal—the two Canals taken together amount to 6500 feet in length. supposing it to be made with a regular slope the medium depth of it will be four feet. and if four feet wide only—it cannot contain more than 830.000 Gall^{s} or about 1/10 of the Water that has to pass through it in 2 hours—if the Canal were empty at the commencement of the rain, and the egress of Water from it was not to be interrupted by the flood from the river then a Canal of this size might answer the purpose, but if this rain should happen at high water near it, it is evident the Canal could not contain the water but it must of necessity overflow its banks and carry destruction to its neighbourhood. We may conceive what would be the loss of property from such a cause, but it is impossible to foresee what might be the influence of such an inundation on the health of the inhabitants

"The Street Commissioner has viewed this subject in a variety of shapes and endeavor'd to acquire information attainable, from all which he is induced to represent to the board that there is but one measure left to be adopted with any probable hope of avoiding the impending evils, and that is by causing the principle Canal to extend from the north to the East River through Roosevelt Street —but that part of the Canal eastward of the fresh Water pond, should be a circular brick Tunnel of six feet diameter carried nearly on a level with low water the open Canal may be of the same diameter and laid on the same level to the North river—Owing to a difference of the time of high Water in those two rivers an alternate current would be almost constantly passing from one River to the other under a pressure of two feet head—by which means the mud carried into the Canal from the Streets would be immediately removed to the Rivers and as the bottom of the Canal would be always covered with water the Sun could not exert any pernicious influence on it as the bottom of the Canal on the principle would be lower than it could be constructed on any other plan the descent of the Streets leading to it would be increased thereby—by this mode also a double facility will be given to the discharge of rain Water—and the risk of overflowing almost to a certainty prevented

Oct. 18

"A difference of expence of probably 50.000 Dollars would attend this project but how far this ought to be brought into competition with the evils that must result from any other plan is for the Corporation to determine

"The Street Commissioner therefore begs leave to recommend that any further proceedings for the ultimate regulation of Broad Way be suspended untill that of the Canal be determined—but that a temporary improvement in that Street should be immediately adopted. that is to say take oft about ten feet from the crown of the Hill near Mooneys and to fill up the hollow about 10 feet near the Starch Manufactory this will for the present answer every purpose for the accomodation of Travellers." The board discharges the committee appointed on Aug. 12 (q.v.) from further consideration of the canal, and refers that part of Browne's report which relates to canals to another committee. A temporary regulation of upper Broadway is adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 136–39. On Jan. 3, 1803, the street commissioner's report was referred to another committee.—Ibid., III: 172. See Mr 6, 1803.

The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the Committee of the Cincinnati Society relative to the erection of an Equestrian Statue in honor of the memory of General Washington."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 139. This was the first of many unsuccessful efforts to erect a public statue to Washington in New York.—See Vol. I, p. 396. See, further, D 15. "

On the evening of this day a "smart gust of wind" blew down many trees in different parts of the city and did damage to several buildings. "The cupola of the City Hall was much shaken by it, and the windows blown to pieces, to the extreme discomfiture of the watchman, who was just in the act of crying 'all's well.'"—Morn. Chron., O 29, 1802. 27

"A subscription was some months ago set on foot, for the purpose of procuring at Paris casts of all the finest antique statues [see Je 30]. This is designed as the foundation of a gallery and school of sculpture; which, being the first established in the United States, will, it is expected, be held honorable to our city. About 3000 dollars was soon raised, in shares of 50 each. We have the pleasure of announcing to the gentlemen who compose that association, that one of the most celebrated groupes, the Laocoon, and two of the finest statues, the Apollo and the Dying Gladiator, are already cast, and their arrival may be looked for daily [see Je 7, 1803]. . . . "

"It would be unjust to omit mentioning, that the plan originated with Edward Livingston, esq. the mayor of the city. . . .

"From the spirit and liberality lately evinced by our corporation, we presume that an apartment in the new city-hall will be appropriated to this purpose."—Morn. Chron., O 27, 1802. The association here referred to became the Academy of Arts (see D 3).

Nov. 2 A fire breaks out in a stable in Bridge St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts.; the flames make their way through Bridge St. into Stone St., and the whole square of about fifty buildings, mostly dwelling-houses, is destroyed, the buildings being either burned, pulled down, or gutted.—Ind. Chron. (Boston), N 8, 1802.

3 The common council adopts the following report of a committee "respecting the estalishment of Signal Staffs," and directs that an ordinance be prepared to conform to it: "The Governor having returned a favorable answer to the application of this Board [see Ag 12] for the Public ground on Staten Island where the signal staffs are erected," it is resolved "That the Comptroller of this Corporation take the Institution of the Flag or Signal staffs under his management & direction. That this board will pay a Suitable person to have charge of the same and that he be paid 330 dollars p annum as a Salary. That the Superintendant Select a proper person for this purpose and that he collect from every person who has a flag staff there the sum of 12 50/100 Dollars p annum to be paid in advance, and that where two persons hoist their signals on the same pole that they then pay 7 50/100 dollars p annum and that where three [persons hoist their signals on the same pole] such sum in proportion as the Comptroller shall deem proper. That the salary & collection commence from the 1st day of November last. That in future no pole shall be erected but by the per-

1802 mission of the Comptroller."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 142–43.

Nov. 3 The function of these "Signal Staffs" on Staten Island was to notify merchants and others in N. Y. of the arrival of ships, and, by hoisting coloured balls, to convey other intelligence of interest and value to the public. See also Goodrich's guide (1828).

6 The Society for the Relief of Distressed Prisoners announces "that the alterations they have lately adopted in providing for the prisoners . . ., and the establishment of a Soup House for the benefit of the Poor, promise to be extensively useful." Soup is supplied at four pence a quart, "each quart to contain a portion of beef not less than 4 ounces, and a due proportion of vegetables." Printed tickets are given to persons soliciting alms, each entitling the bearer to a quart of soup. John Rodgers is president.—Com. Adv., N 6, 1802. See also the account of the Humane Society in Picture of N. Y. (1807), 124.

8 The common council advances $85.03 for erecting "a new stone bridge near Potters field."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 144.

19 "The spirited exertions of the Mayor and Corporation to improve and embellish this city merit the highest applause: every hint tending to promote these views will doubtless, receive candid notice. Bunker-Hill, or more correctly Bayard's Mount, appears to have been destined by nature for a more valuable purpose, than merely to fill up the valley beneath. This commanding elevation is, nearly, in the centre of the ground-plot of the city, overlooking, in every direction, the whole extent from the Battery and Corlear's Hook to Inclenbergh heights. It affords a noble site for an Observatory for Astronomical and Municipal purposes, from whence the whole expanse of the Heavens may be surveyed, and signals, in cases of Fire, or Hostile Invasions, be conspicuously displayed. Being in the centre of Grand-street, the great direct avenue between the Hudson and East Rivers, and nearly equidistant from each, much taste may be exhibited in laying out the intersecting streets, to form a spacious Promenade around this central point. The Mount by being judiciously disposed, would admit of elegant arcades rising in successive stories, that might be rented for the purposes of shops or places of refreshment, the terraced roofs of which would afford an enchanting view of the whole city, embosomed by its ample waters and the circumjacent country—a perspective, rich and diversified beyond description. Above the whole the proposed Edifice should pre-eminently tower—the turrets of which might contain the awful tocsin for alarm, and the merry peals for public rejoicings. Imagination can freely conceive the brilliant effect of an universal illumination of such an edifice, with transparent paintings and variegated lights, the refulgence of which would be distinguished from every quarter. This part of the city, although traced out, lies still unimproved: it is not too late therefore, for the Corporation to avail themselves of its present state, to purchase so much ground, as properly improved, would certainly reimburse the first cost of Bayard's Mount, to be reserved till fit time and opportunity would justify the erecting an Observatory."—Daily Adv., N 19, 1802. The hill was, however, levelled, and the earth was used to fill up the Collect Pond.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 471. See also Cozzens, Geol. Hist. of Manhattan or N. Y. Island, 22–23; and L. M. R. 22 The common council orders that the engine house at Hanover Square be removed to the Old Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 150.

25 The Chronicle Express is established as a semi-weekly edition of the Morning Chronicle. The paper was printed by William A. Davis for the proprietor, Peter Irving. The last issue located is that of May 17, 1804.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 386; Early Newspapers, II: 418.

29 The common council confirms an estimate and assessment "for digging and filling in the upper part of Broadway from the Arch bridge to Prince Street." The board orders "that the proposal of James McGowan for performing the work be accepted."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 155. The original assessment roll for this work is preserved in the N. Y. H. S. among "N. Y. MSS., 1761–1800." It gives the names of owners and tenants of property assessed, the Bayards, Beekmans, Kips, Van Rensselaers, Van Cortlandts, etc. The whole assessment amounted to £692.

" The comptroller of the city is authorised "to contract with the proprietors of the Elizabeth Town and Staten Island ferry boats for the rent or monies to be paid by them for the use of public slips."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 155.

D 3 The members of the "New York Academy of Fine Arts," organized to import from France casts of celebrated statues (see Je 30 and O 27), hold a meeting to elect officers, and Mayor Edward Livingston is chosen president. Resolutions are passed directing the president and the directors to "meet at an early day to digest and form the necessary bye laws for the Society," and to apply to the legislature for an act of incorporation for the society "under the denomination and title of 'The New-York Academy of Fine Arts.'"—Morn. Chron., D 4, 1802. See also Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 7–35. An act of incorporation was applied for in 1803 (q. v., Mr. 2), but it was not granted until Feb. 12, 1808 (q. v.). By Nov. 19, 1804 (q. v.), the name of the society had been changed to the "American Academy of Arts."

Dec. 3 The common council appoints a committee "to consider and " report what alterations and amendments are proper to be made in the Charter of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 157.

5 While in the act of ringing, the large bell in St. Paul's Church steeple falls and breaks. "This bell which was the largest in the city, was imported from England [see Ja 31, 1799] at a considerable expense, and it is presumable, from the manner in which it is broken, that there was originally a flaw in the crown, or top."—Com. Adv., D 10, 1802. See D 13.

9 "The Society of Tammany or Columbian Order, has ever been preeminently distinguished for their attachment to those principles, which tend to unite, in the bands of Friendship, the great family of Man, and on which in a considerable degree rest our Liberty and Independence. To perpetuate those principles, is the primary object of the Institution, and nothing can be more conducive to that end than the establishment of the Society on a permanent basis. It has been considered, that the present and future welfare of the society will be considerably secured by the erection of a Wigwam, wherein the Sons of Tammany may, when assembled at the Council Fire, talk over the deeds of their ancestors . . . we learn, that at a meeting of the Society on Monday evening last [Dec. 6], . . . near one thousand dollars were subscribed for the erection of a Wigwam, and is confidently expected, that a very liberal subscription will be made. . . ."—Daily Adv., D 9, 1802. Tammany Hall was not erected until 1811.—L. M. R. K., III: 939. The society was incorporated in 1805 (q. v., Ap 9).

" A new ferry has lately been established by Mr. N. Budd between Powles Hooks and New York. The landing on the Jersey shore is "somewhat to the northward of the old ferry kept by Major Hunt."—Daily Adv., D 9, 1802.

13 The committee of leases and repairs is directed by the vestry of Trinity Church to "provide three large suitable Chandeliers for Trinity Church and a set of Chandeliers for S^{t} George's and S^{t} Paul's Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). It is also resolved "that the Committee . . . take measures to have recast the Bell of S^{t} Pauls lately broken" (see D 5).—Ibid. See O 15, 1803.

15 The New York State Society of the Cincinnati decides to erect a bronze equestrian statue to Washington in the Park, and opens a subscription book for the purpose.—See original subscription-list in N. Y. P. L.; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 17, 1802. On Dec. 20, the common council approved of the undertaking and resolved to furnish "a suitable place within the Park for the aforesaid purpose."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 163. See Ja 8, 1803.

20 On Dec. 20, the common council rejects a proposal that a committee be appointed to report on "the propriety of granting a Lottery towards the Expence of erecting a New City hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 163. See, however, the later proposal of Feb. 20, 1809. See, further, D 27.

22 Col. David Humphreys writes to John Trumbull: "Efforts are making in this city to patronize and encourage the Fine Arts [see D 3]. . . . They propose erecting an Edifice in the Park where a magnificent State House is to be built. . . ."—From the original MS., sold at the Anderson Galleries, New York, My 6, 1920.

27 "We are happy to learn that the necessity of an application to the legislature for a revision of the city charter has been taken into consideration by the common council. The charter of this city has for a long time been a source of complaint to our fellow citizens, and occasionally attracted the attention of our state legislature. Many of the regulations and provisions it contains for the government of the city, have, by lapse of time, and a total change of circumstances, become useless; others improper, and some oppressive. It has been an opinion propagated with some 1802 Dec. 27 zeal, and more generally received than a just consideration of the subject will warrant; that legislative interference would be improper, unless formally solicited by members of the corporation. This is a position which, if admitted, is calculated to involve us in endless inconveniencies, and tending in its consequences to perpetuate the mischiefs under which we labor. . . . Hitherto the gentlemen who have successively composed the common council, do not appear to have been impressed with the necessity of amendment, and have withheld their consent to an alteration of such parts of the charter as have been found oppressive by experience, because they contend that its most objectionable provisions have not been enforced for many years. . . . The design that the charter should be revised, has not its origin in the wild spirit of innovation, but arises from evils and inconvenience daily felt. From a conviction that, in its present form, it is incompetent to ensure to the inhabitants of this city a useful and efficient government. . . . The legislature, it is to be hoped, will view the subject in a proper light, and we are inclined to believe that a respectful petition from our fellow citizens will meet with suitable attention, particularly if sanctioned by the approbation of the present members of the Common Council. In viewing this subject, we are far from believing that the charter should be hastily prostrated; but we do believe that it is susceptible of salutary amendments. It is not for us to dictate, but we would suggest the propriety of the early adoption of some measures by our citizens for the accomplishment of so desirable an object, either by a general meeting of the citizens, or by meetings in the respective wards, to appoint a general committee to pursue such measures as may be thought adviseable, and best calculated to produce the desired effect."—Morn. Chron., D 27, 1802. See D 28.

" City hall operations in 1802 closed with the following resolution of Dec. 27 which was laid before the board and held for future consideration: That the committee, appointed to superintend the building of the hall, be required to report what materials the walls ought to be built of, and to indicate the parts of the building where the different materials are to be used; also where the hall ought to be erected; also what its height should be from the ground to the first floor; the style and manner in which it ought to be finished, particularly the exterior ornamental parts; and to procure estimates of the materials and labor; the necessary time in which to complete the building; the best manner of raising the money to cover the expense; and, in case the plan at present adopted shall be deemed too extensive and expensive, to ascertain if the plan cannot be reduced in size and expense without materially injuring the appearance and utility of the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 166. The resolution passed Feb. 24, 1803 (ibid., III: 211); although the complaint was made, in a letter to the Daily Adv. on Feb. 3, 1803, that the minimum cost of the building ($250,000) was too great, and could not be raised without resorting to taxation. This writer states that "other objects of far greater importance demand the attention of the Corporation." "Our streets without exception," he explains, "require new paving—compared with those of Philadelphia, they are execrable—our city is badly lighted—the improvements projected on the East River are incomplete—we are very insecure against fire—arrangements are to be made for keeping our streets clean, and for removing every kind of filth that is injurious to the health of our citizens: These and various other objects of essential use and accommodation, call for immediate attention, and will absorb all the spare funds at the disposal of the corporation."—See also ibid., F 17 and 19.

" For the accommodation, particularly, of the inhabitants in "the Outward parts of the City" and those of "King and Queen Counties," the common council orders "that a ferry be established from the land of Mr Stuyvesant in the Seventh Ward to the land of John A Meserole at Bushwick in Kings County," and also "another Ferry from the land of Marinus Willett Esqr in the Seventh Ward to the land of Samuel Titus at Bushwick aforesaid, subject to such rates and regulations as shall from time to time be made by this Board." This is done with the condition "that suitable Lots on both sides of the River be granted to this Board for the purpose of erecting Ferry houses and other necessary buildings for the use of the said Ferry."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 168.

28 "One of the People" addresses a communication to the press concerning "the propriety of adopting measures to obtain a revision and alteration of the charter of this city" (see D 27). He says: "Several applications have been made to the legislature for redress; but the difference of political sentiment which prevailed in the senate and house of assembly, has hitherto rendered abortive every effort to make the charter (which was obtained while America was under the dominion of the king of Great Britain) more congenial to the principles of republicanism, & consistent with the laws and constitution of our country." Three chief grievances are discussed. First, by a construction given to one clause of the charter, "none but freemen and freeholders have a right to interfere in the election of charter officers; and if one man owns a freehold of the value of fifty dollars in every ward, his right to vote is extended to all the wards. This is unequal and unjust. . . . Dec. 28

"Secondly. As far as it relates to freemen—

"By the charter, the mayor and four or more of the aldermen, have the power of making free citizens, and the charter expressly interdicts all persons, excepting free citizens, from using any art, trade, mystery or occupation, within the city. Thus a power is vested in the mayor and the corporation (if capriciously disposed) to prevent all persons, let their character and standing in society be ever so exalted, from obtaining the freedom of the city. . . .

"Thirdly—By the charter, the city is divided into seven wards, and those so to remain.

"At the time it was granted, in the year 1730, as appears from the bounds of the respective wards, it is evident the probable increase of population, in what now forms the sixth and seventh wards, never was truly estimated by the framers of the charter. Since that period . . . the increase in population in those wards has nearly if not quite overbalanced that of all the other five wards. This population is daily increasing in the sixth and seventh wards in the same proportion, and although either of these wards contains more than double the number of inhabitants of the largest of the other wards, still they are by the charter entitled to no greater share in the councils of the city than the smallest ward in it. . . ."—Morn. Chron., D 30, 1802. See Ja 3, 1803.

A number of citizens meet at Adams' Hotel in William St. "to take into consideration what measures should be adopted in order to obtain an extension of the rights of suffrage in the election of Charter Officers of this City." A committee of three is chosen to call a general meeting on the subject.—Morn. Chron., Ja 1, 1803. See Ja 7. 30

In this year, there were 1,930 deaths in the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 502. 31

In this year, the painter Vanderlyn was sent to France for the purpose of copying for the Am. Acad. of the Fine Arts (which was founded in 1802, q.v. Je 30, O 27, and D 3) some of the finest pictures by the great masters, and to collect casts from antique statues. With the additions afterwards made, the Academy's collection of sculpture became the most valuable in the United States.—N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 65–66. —

In this year, Petrus Stuyvesant conveyed to St. Mark's Church the cemetery lying between First and Second Aves., 11th and 12th Sts. A condition of the gift was that the slaves of Petrus and their descendants were to be buried there free of charge.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 690. —

A plan and three elevations of St. John's Chapel, drawn by John McComb, Jr., probably date from this year. They are reproduced and described in Vol. III, Pl. 11-c. —

In this year, Coleman, editor of the Post, killed Thompson, a Democrat, in a duel.—Payne, Journalism in the U. S. (1920), 193. —

"A Transparancy of the Design that the Corporation have accepted for the New City Hall, painted by Messrs Margin & Macoube [sic] may be seen at the store of Aug. Lannuier, Confectioner."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 1, 1803. See F 21. Jan. 1

"A Citizen" criticizes the letter of "One of the People" (see D 28, 1802) concerning the people's grievances under the present charter. He says: "If a citizen is possessed of a freehold in each ward, he has a right to take care that no person is elected in those wards that might affect his interest.—He is more interested than another who is his inferior in that particular.—The more property he possesses, the more he is attached to the Government—the more he has to protect, and consequently has a greater right to interfere in those elections." In regard to the suggestion that the freedom of the city should be more extensively granted, "A Citi- 3

1803 Jan. 3 zen" declares that this would result in "an addition to our present stock of Irish freeman, an insult to our citizens, and an injury to our Country, the whole host of Africans that now deluge our City (already too impertinent to be borne) would be placed upon an equal with the citizens," and the plea for an increase in the number of wards he calls a "democratic manœvre . . . to elect a Common Council composed of a majority of their own Set."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 3, 1803. See Ja 7 and 10.

" The common council orders "that the Comptroller be authorized to rent Bellvue to such persons, and upon such terms for the period of one year as he may deem most advantageous, provided always that the same be reserved to the board in case the premises should be wanted as a Public Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 170.

" The street commissioner reports to the common council information regarding the ownership of land through which an extension of Brannon (Spring) St. must run to Broadway. He says: "There is at present no Street or Highway communicating from Broadway to Greenwich Street between Catherine Street near the Hospital and the New Prison [Christopher St.] a distance so great as to render it extremely inconvenient to the Inhabitants of those Streets." The board orders that the com'r cause a survey to be made and other necessary steps taken to open Brannon St. to the width of 65 ft. as far as Broadway with all convenient speed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 171. On Jan. 17, however, this order was rescinded, and he was required to "continue his endeavours to procure a cession of the said Street to the Corporation."—Ibid., III: 180.

" The common council appoints a committee "to look into the situation of the records and Public Papers in the office of the Clerk of this City and take such steps for the preservation thereof as in there opinion shall be necessary."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 173. On Jan. 10 the committee reported their opinion "that the Clerk with the Advice and Assistance of Mr Carmer," should procure "a sufficient number of Boxes of suitable size and have them tined or otherwise secured in order to preserve the Records and papers."—Ibid., III: 174.

6 John M'Lean, commissary of military stores, makes a report in which he says in part: "Old Potter's field, which was ceded by the corporation of the city of New-York, to the people of this State, for the use of a magazine, gun house and laboratory, some years ago, has also been lying dormant; but I have now taken possession of it on the part of the State, and have let it at the rate of thirty pounds a year. It will be requisite to have a small magazine erected immediately, in order to make a division between the public and private property. . . .

"The 28 pieces of 32 and 24 pounders, mounted on north battery, No. 1 and 2, and 2 large 13½ inch mortars, the houses and carriages of which are distroyed by ill disposed persons—the reason is obvious; the corporation of the city, after the State going to the expence of 950 dollars, for caulking and laying the tops of both parapets with Spanish brown, tar and sand, have erected pleasure seats and places of accommodation for company; although they serve as places of resort for evil disposed people to destroy the property of the State.—The heavy ordnance, from the redoubts at Rutgers' and Rhynelander's wharf, which were subject to yard and dock hire, are all collected in the ordnance yard. . . .

"Total at different places of 32 and 24 pounders, of iron, 81 pieces fit for service, and 44 carriages, belonging to the pieces in the ordnance yard, are now placed in the old gun-house in State-street. . . .

"The one side of State-street from the Bowling-green round the corner of Pearl-street, belonging to the State, the timber has rotted away, and the walks broken up; it is therefore necessary they should be repaired. . . ."—Assemb. Jour., 26th sess., Appendix, iii–vii. See Ja 14, 1805.

" "John Gardiner of this city, has obtained a patent for erecting Dry Docks (where there is little or no ebb and flow of tide) to repair ships in. On his construction a steam Engine that costs 4000 dollars will dry eight docks in twenty four hours and may be applied to any number of docks.—The fuel consumed by the engine is 90 lbs weight of coals per hour whilst at work." . . .—Chronicle Express, Ja 6, 1803.

7 A general meeting on the revision of the city charter (see D 30, 1802) is held at "Adams's assembly room," and the following resolutions are unanimously adopted:

Jan. 7 "Resolved, As the sense of this meeting, that every citizen who is of lawful age, has a fixed residence in our city, and pays taxes, ought to be duly represented in the government of the same.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the citizens here assembled, that the charter of the said city ought to be altered so as to extend the right of suffrage for charter officers, to all citizens having a right to vote for the most numerous branch of the state legislature, that the said election for charter officers should be by ballot, and be holden at the time and places, as the election for members of the legislature, and that no person be permitted to vote out of the ward in which he resides.

"Resolved, That a committee of five persons for the first six wards, and a committee of eight for the seventh ward, be appointed with full power from this meeting, to take every measure which they may deem expedient and proper to carry the foregoing resolutions into effect." The said committees are chosen.—Morn. Chron., Ja 11, 1803. See Ja 10 and 14.

8 "The subscriptions for the Equestrian Statue of Washington [see D 15, 1802] meet, we are informed, with the most flattering encouragement. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ja 8, 1803. See Mr 15.

" "A Citizen" addresses the following communication "To the Citizens of New-York:" ". . . While patriotism and virtue lives, Washington's well earned fame can never die; it is engraven on this fair tablet too deep, to be effaced by time—it is immortal. If this be so, what do we want of inanimate monuments erected to his memory; . . . An attempt was made in Congress under the former administration to erect in the federal city, at a great expence, a Mausoleum to his memory. It very properly failed, for if a monument of stone is to be erected, there is one already begun on the largest scale, that City bears his name. . . .

"What led to these remarks, is an attempt of the society of Cincinnati of this State to erect a monument in this city to the memory of our never to be forgotten Washington [see D 15, 1802]. But in this city in particular, before we as citizens, who profess to be republicans, aid in the erection of a monument of this kind, let us first bury the relicks of our brethren, who gloriously fell in arms in defence of their country, lying within our view above ground, a reproach to humanity, to say nothing of our patriotism. Go, fellow citizens, to the Wallabout, where perished by British cruelty, thousands of your countrymen, and view the remains of the patriot, the hero and friend, who nobly died to save his country, exposed to every indignity, for the want of a common grave. Gather his bones together and bury them, with that respect due to sacred worth; after which, if you must, and will have a monument, over their grave, I suggest the propriety of erecting this monument to the memory of their chief. . . . To erect a monument to their chief, before they have a common grave, you would deservedly draw on yourselves, a reproach never to be wiped away. Therefore, except this respect is first paid to those relicks of the soldier (being called upon) I beg leave to inform the society of Cincinnati, I deem it improper to subscribe to their proposals for erecting a monument in this city to the memory of their chief."—Am. Cit., Ja 8, 1803. The relics of the prison-ship martyrs were buried in 1808 (q.v., My 26). No public monument to Washington was erected in New York until 1856, although several futile attempts were made (see I: 396; Pl 100 and A. Pls. 26-b and c, Vol. III). An equestrian statue was exhibited by Joseph Delacroix on July 4, 1803 (q.v.), but thereafter the matter was dropped until 1806 (q.v., Ja 20).

10 "Caius" writes to one of the newspapers: "I have lately seen a proposition to petition the Legislature of this state for a revision (as it is called) of the Charter of this city.

"It is much to be lamented, that those demagogues who at present possess the reins of Government, should be permitted thus gradually to subvert every remnant of liberty in this Country, and our citizens remain silent spectators of the truly alarming and affecting scene.—The proposition is another example of the destructive tendency of democratic principles, and is an additional proof of the paltry schemes to which the vicious and unprincipled will resort to support their tottering credit or sustain the falling ruins of lawless ambition.—We have beheld the overthrow of our Judiciary, and the subversion of our Constitution, and must yet witness the sacrifice of an additional victim.—Covered, as usual, under the pleasing garb of patriotism and zeal for the country—a garb that inevitably draws forth the honest support of the virtuous; a combination has been formed to assassinate the 1803 Jan. 10 Charter of the City, for the purpose of promoting the cause of ruin, anarchy and confusion." He adds that "One of the People" (see D 28, 1802) might better be called "An enemy to the nation and a subverter of its liberties."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 10, 1803.

" The common council refers to a committee a petition from several inhabitants residing in the vicinity of the "State Prison" who desire "that Lamps may be extended to that neighbourhood." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 175. On Jan. 17, the committee, to whom this petition was referred, reported adversely. They explained that "the present line of demarcation from the North to the East River for laying the taxes . . . for the Support of Night watch, for the expence of Wells and pumps and . . . putting up and lighting Lamps," does not extend farther "on the North River side than the out let of the Meadow of Anthony Lispenard;" whereas the desired extension is "wholly without the said Limits."—Ibid., III: 177.

" The city still owns the lot on the corner of Pearl and State Sts.,—the same place, apparently, where, in 1794 (q.v., S 29), Baker kept a "menage" of wild animals. Jos. Corre now seeks a lease of it, but without success.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 174–75, 214. See also F 3, 1800.

14 The committees from the several wards, appointed agreeable to the citizens' resolution of Jan. 7 (q.v.), having met on Jan. 13 and named a sub-committee of one of their number from each ward, this sub-committee now addresses a letter to the common council asking its cooperation in a petition to the legislature "for the purpose of procuring the extension of the right of suffrage, a measure which we have good reason to believe has long been the wish of many of our Fellow Citizens." A copy of the resolutions adopted on Jan. 7 is enclosed. In this letter the sub-committee requests the board to inform them "whether it will be agreeable to unite with your Fellow Citizens" in such application to the legislature at its next session, and, if so, "how far it will be agreeable to you, to have that right [of suffrage] extended." The letter was presented to the board on Jan. 17, but consideration was postponed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 177–78. See Ja 27.

" "A correspondent expresses his hope that if the Legislature take up the charter of incorporation of this city, they will make a thorough reformation, by extending the elective franchise to every man, woman, and child. It is feared by some, that though the matter will be discussed, to please the sixth and seventh wards, yet that it will be so contrived as in the end to fail, and thus monarchy and slavery be entailed upon this great and populous city."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 14, 1803.

" During the progress of work on the new city hall (see Mr 24, 1800), rooms in the old hall were appropriated, by permission of the common council, as the meeting-place of various societies, etc. For example, on Jan. 17, 1803, by the "N. Y. Union Law Society;" on March 19, by the managers of a lottery "for the promotion of Literature;" on Nov. 29, by a law society; on Dec. 16, 1805, by the managers of a lottery; and, on Jan. 6, 1806, by the city militia for military lectures.—See M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 180, 478, 637; IV: 111, 122.

26 In a letter to De Witt Clinton, George Clinton says he has heard that "the Faction in N York will endeavour to acquire popularity by exclaming against the defenceless situation of the Port of New York and the Conduct of the Administration as well of the General as State Governments in suspending Measures for fortifying it—This will be a popular Theme especially at a moment when there is some small Appearance of War however remote."—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), II: 18, in Columbia Univ. Library.

27 The comptroller's budget of city expenses for the year 1803 shows estimates amounting to $103,491.12. It is confirmed by the common council, which orders that the clerk prepare "the draft of a petition to the Legislature to raise the said sum by a tax upon the Citizens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 187.

" The common council orders that a fire-bell be erected on the Exchange Slip Market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 188. On May 23, it was "lately erected."—Ibid., III: 288.

" A committee of the common council, appointed to examine a suitable place for engine No. 4, reports "that they have obtained from the Proprietors of the play house [Park Theatre], a room at the North East Corner of the same and are of opinion that it is a proper situation for placing the said Engine [and] that the expence for compleating the room will cost about twenty dollars." The board orders that the com'r of public repairs carry the report into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 188. Jan. 27

" The common council passes an ordinance for the appointment of a street commissioner and a superintendent of scavengers, revoking former ordinances. The duties of each are defined. The former shall be a city surveyor, and his salary $1,250 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 189–91.

" By a vote of 10 to 4, the common council resolves that having "maturely reflected upon" the citizens' resolutions of Jan. 7. (q.v.) and their application to the corporation (see Ja 14), and "having further attentively considered the question at large whether it is necessary or expedient at present to have the charter of this City altered by the Legislature," the board does "not perceive any reason has been, or can with propriety be offered for any alteration now taking place, founded on, or supported by considerations of public utility, or from the lawful exercise of the present chartered rights and franchises of the Citizens." As "experience sufficiently evinces not only the inutility but real danger to be apprehended from frequent and important changes in Constitutions, laws and charters and the evils will be incalculable whenever such changes are the offspring of political party differences or dictated by the ambition of individuals," the corporation deems it "inexpedient at present to take any steps or to concur in any measures for the purpose of procuring any alterations in the charter of this City." By the same vote a petition to the legislature is approved mentioning the intention of "certain persons in the City of New York" to ask for a revision of the charter and declaring: "The Common Council cannot but flatter themselves with a hope that the Legislature will not only discern the danger but impropriety of taking away the chartered rights and priveleges of the City of New York without the Concurrence of the Common Council who represent the body corporate and are charged with the preservation of its rights and privileges. . . .

". . . It is more than half a century since the charter of the City of New York was granted, and under the provisions therein contained the City has not only encreased in size and population but under the fostering care of the Magistrates improvements both useful and ornamental have been made from time to time, and are still progressing. The revenues of the Corporation have been increased, and the rising Commerce of the City so interesting to the State at large, and which equals or perhaps surpasses that of any City in America may be ascribed in some degree to the Salutary regulations contained in, and authorized by the present Charter.

"The Common Council beg leave further to state that as often as they shall discover important defects in the Charter they shall deem it their duty to Communicate the Same to the Legislature and ask their aid in providing a remedy for the same. But the Common Council are of opinion that at present legislative interference with the Charter is unnecessary, and therefore hope that in the opinion of the Legislature it will be deemed altogether improper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 192–94. See Ja 31.

A map of the ground at Corlear's Hook between the estate of Henry Rutgers and the East River, made in order to lay out a street system, bears this date.—See the original (map No. 115), in bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Bldg. 30

The Tammany Society and other citizens draw up and sign the following petition to congress: "Your memorialists, citizens of the United States, and inhabitants of the city of New-York, beg leave to recall to the memory of your honourable body an event which you cannot but have noticed; an event famous in history, melancholy in its circumstances, and which, while it awakens the tear of sympathy and regret, seems also, in the opinion of your Memorialists, to claim some attention from the political fathers of our country, the supreme legislature of the United States of America. 31

"The lapse of years is gradually drawing the veil of oblivion over the memories of those unfortunate men, our once esteemed fellow-citizens, who, when our country struggled for her rights and liberties, gallantly faced the most powerful maritime nation of Europe on her own element, and were doomed, by the ill fortune of war, to languish out their lives in extreme misery and distress on board the Prison-ships of our enemies in the harbour of New-York. . . .

"Adjacent to the mooring-places of these floating prisons where our brave seamen yielded their lives to the merciless policy, or native barbarity of a foreign foe, is the scite of the present navy

1803 Jan. 31 yard. In levelling the ground for its improvement, the earthly remains of thousands of these gallant men have been, and still are daily seen, scarce earthed in the falling banks, or exposed on the naked shores. These bones—these skeletons—these relics of departed man, the hand of individual humanity has carefully collected for a decent interment, as the last sad testimony of regard and affection which can now be given to the memories of those men, whose constancy and patriotism has endeared them to their country. The liberality of John Jackson, esq. has induced the offer to appropriate an eligible piece of land, as the place of this solemn depository. . . . we would briefly suggest, that after preparing a decent tomb, where the precious relics of these victims for the nation may rest undisturbed and sacred, until the Great Spirit has decreed the resuscitation of the dead, and the final consummation of all things; we would wish to see erected some monument that may endure the rage of Time; neither lofty nor sumptuous, nor magnificent, but which may, nevertheless, inform future ages, 'Here lie the remains of an immense multitude of men, who, preferring death to the sacrifice of their honour and the fidelity they owed to their country, perished in the British Prison-ships at New-York.'

"If in the estimation of your honourable body, this be an object worthy of your attention, we would solicit such an appropriation toward the prosecution of this design, as your wisdom may deem requisite and just." The memorial was presented to the house of representatives on Feb. 10 by Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill and referred to a committee of the whole, but nothing further was done about it at this time.—Account of the Interment of the remains of 11,500 Am. Seamen, Soldiers and Citizens, who fell victims to the cruelties of the British, on board their Prison Ships at the Wallabout, during the Am. Rev., etc. (1808), 6–11. See D 10, 1804, and F 1, 1808.

" Alderman Barker, one of the minority against the resolutions and the petition adopted on Jan. 27 (q.v.), moves that the memorial to the legislature be reconsidered. The motion is lost, and it is ordered that the petition "pass the Common seal," and that one copy be delivered to the president of the senate, another to the speaker of the assembly, and at least one to the city members of the assembly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 198. See F 14.

Feb. 1 The governors of the New York Hospital, according to their annual report, "have long lamented, that an Hospital otherwise so well adopted to the alleviation of human misery, should not furnish an asylum, convenient and inviting, for the reception of that class of our fellow-creatures who are deprived of the use of their reason . . . none are more entitled to pity and compassion, or have a more powerful claim on us as professors of Christianity. Under this impression of the subject, connected with the idea of the necessity of putting a new roof on the house, the governors have concluded, either to erect a wing [see F 3, 1807] to the present building, or to raise another story in order to provide for the comfortable reception, of those poor, unhappy and deeply afflicted people."—Assemb. Jour. (1803), 120. Before the end of the year a third storey was "added to the edifice;" the governors were thereby enabled "to provide more convenient accommodations for maniacs."—Account of the N. Y. Hosp. (1804), 3; descrip. of Pl. 88, III: 571. See, also, Ja 1, 1805.

5 "The Public are respectfully informed, that after This Evening the Theatre must necessarily be closed for some weeks."—Am. Cit., F 5, 1803. It was reopened on Feb. 21 (see F 11). The temporary closing was due to the inadequacy of the receipts.—Dunlap, Hist. of Am. Theatre (1832), 298.

7 "A correspondent has read with great pleasure the memorial from the Corporation of this city to the Legislature, against the necessity and propriety of altering the charter [see Ja 27]. It may have the intended effect; but if it should not, the corporation have done their duty, and they will be seconded by every reflecting man, in making a stand against those wretched democratic and disorganizing principles which have brought us into disgrace and confusion, and to the very brink of ruin."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 7, 1803.

10 "Resolved, That the square at the Corner of Duane, Hudson and Jay Street be reserved for a Church. And that the Committee of Leases report ways and means for the purpose of building a Church in the said square."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, however, Je 20 and Jl 14. See also Mr 10.

11 "The Public are respectfully informed, that on Monday, the 21st of February, 1803, the Theatre will be opened with a Drama, in three acts, (interspersed with Music) called, The Voice of Nature. Feb. 11

"During the cessation of the Theatrical Exhibitions [see F 5], every exertion, which the time will admit of, is making to clean and repair the internal part of the house, in particular by covering the seats, and new coloring the backs of the boxes."—Am. Cit., F 11, 1803. The theatre was sold on Feb. 10, 1804 (q.v.).

" "John P. McCombs" (as he signs himself) petitions the common council "for the employment of keeping in repair the pavements of this City." He says he "has followed the Business of a Paver in this City for ten years." The petition is also signed by 19 citizens who recommend him. Among them are John Mc Comb, Jr., Joseph Fr. Mangin, and Charles Loss.—From the original petition (MS.), in metal file No 28, city clerk's record-room.

The common council authorises the street commissioner "to 14 treat with the proprietors of ground through which Broadway is intended to pass until it unite with the main road near the three mile stone."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 199.

The board also orders "that the street commissioner direct that all the Streets on the ground commonly known by the name of Delancey's ground be opened as soon as possible."—Ibid., III: 199. "Delancey's Square" appears on the Ratzer Map, Pl. 41, Vol. I, which depicts New York in 1766–7. For De Lancey St., one of the streets laid out on this ground, see L. M. R. K., III: 997.

" The common council refers to the mayor a petition of several citizens against "the pernicious tendency of blending Grocers and Tavern licenses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 200. This was not acted upon by the board until Nov. 7 (q.v.).

" The common council appoints a committee to examine, in conjunction with the comptroller and street commissioner, "the new map of this City now nearly ready to be published and to take such measures as will be the most proper to indemnify this Board and the persons who have executed the same for the Expence that has been incurred."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 200. This was the Goerck-Mangin Map.—See Pl. 70, Vol. I; and D 11, 1797. See, further, F 14, infra.

" Alderman Barker lays before the common council "the reasons of the minority . . . for dissenting from the resolution and petition adopted in relation to altering the Charter of this City as it respects the qualifications of the electors of Charter Officers" (see Ja 27 and 31), but by a vote of 8 to 4 the board resolves that the reasons shall not be entered in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 202. A "Protest of the Minority in the Corporation," bearing this date, was printed in the Morn. Chron., F 19, 1803.

" The neglect of the clerks of the markets to execute the law against "forestallers" has caused scarcity of provisions in the markets and a consequent increase in prices, and this is seriously felt by the public, especially the poor. The common council orders that the clerks be more vigilant in the execution of their duty in this particular.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 202.

" In consequence of a memorial from Dr. Nicholas Romayne, on Jan. 10, requesting the common council "to take possession of the Ground near Corlaers Hook ceded by him for the purpose of Streets," the street commissioner reports that he has caused a survey of the streets from Montgomery St. to Corlaers Hook to be made. The ground in question was formerly part of the De Lancey estate and was sold by the commissioners of forfeitures conformably to a map made by Mr. Bancker. "The General Map of the City as lately made by Messrs Goerck and Mangin [see D 11, 1797; F 14, 1803, supra] does not correspond with that of Banker and in consequence a question now arises which of the two ought to be adopted: The red lines in the Survey are the Streets as laid down in the general Map which make the Blocks and house Lots nearly square an arrangement certainly to be desired, but unfortunately it deviates so much from the Streets as laid down by Banker that the adoption of it would create great difficulties from its total derangement of a great number of the Lots as sold by the Commissioners which are now owned by a variety of proprietors." Under these circumstances the street commissioner recommends, and the board adopts, alteration in the proposed directions of Cherry, Lombard, Bedlow, Harman, and Henry Sts. The board orders that the street commissioner "take measures to procure a cession of the Ground according to the plan thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 174, 203–4. See, further, N 28.

Under this date, the board made three payments for surveying, two to Mangin & Loss, and one to Charles Loss.—Ibid. (1784– 1803 Feb. 14 1831), III: 207. The original vouchers, the bills, of Mangin & Loss are in Mangin's handwriting, as determined by that of his individual bill of May 16, 1803 (q.v.). The former (paid by warrant No. 388) is for examining "the ground of Dr Romaine along the East river to Grand Street;" "for the Survey of the said ground;" "for protracting," and "for a figurative map," total $22.

The other (warrant No. 390), dated Sept. 1802, is for surveying and levelling Hudson St., between Barley and Moore Sts.; for regulating Duane St., between Greenwich and Hudson Sts.; and for regulating Barley St. between Duane and Chapel Sts., —total $38.50.

Loss's individual bill (paid by warrant 389) is for the following services in Sept. and Oct., 1802: "to attend the Street Commissioner, and made a Survey & Level of Pine Street—Pearl Street—Water Front & South Street, to find out the best mode of Regulating those Streets properly;" and "made three different Maps or Profiles of those Streets with the regulations of Pine Street to the East river," at a total charge of $22.50.—From the originals in record-room, dept. of finance, Hall of Records, in bundle labelled "Vouchers of Sundry Bills Paid, 1803."

15 A petition of Anthony Lispenard and other inhabitants of New York City "praying for certain alterations in the Charter of said city," and a remonstrance of the common council against any changes (see Ja 27), are read in the assembly, and consideration postponed. At the same meeting a bill is introduced by William Few "for the better regulation of the election of Charter officers in the city of New York, and designating the qualifications of Electors."—Assemb. Jour., 26th sess., 78. On Feb. 16, the bill was referred to the committee of the whole house, and the petition and remonstrance were ordered to be taken up when the bill was considered.—Ibid., 26th sess., 83. The bill was passed under a different title by the assembly on March 16 (q.v.). See also F 17.

16 The establishment of a "Penny-post, on the footing of that in London as distinguished from the General-post," is advocated. A writer to the press, who makes this proposal, points out that: "Our improvements are now extending with a rapidity that exceeds all calculation. Along the Greenwich road and the State Prison—and on the Bowery for above two miles, houses are erecting and lots improving. To walk from either of these places to the Coffee-House or City-Hall and back again is the journey of half a day. Yet to both of these places, to the auctions, the merchants' ware-houses, along the East River, etc. multitudes often resort daily from the remotest parts of the city. But often, very often, they could transact their business by a note if there were any mode of prompt conveyance of a line which would produce an answer on the same day . . . there is no regular stage for the conveyance of persons to the heart of the city.—Under these circumstances the establishment of a Penny-post would be a material accommodation to persons of this description. It could be conducted with a very small expence by fixing certain stands at which letters could be left; and employing two or three active lads. . . . An arrangement of this kind, by facilitating the intercourse between the different parts of the city, would afford a new inducement for persons of small incomes to settle at a short distance from the scene of business, and would thus enhance the value of the vacant lots between the Bowery and Greenwich-street." It is further stated that, while congress has power to establish post-offices and post-roads, this power is "not exclusive," and does not prevent the establishment of "an interior post" for the accommodation of a town or city.—Daily Adv., F 16, 1803.

17 A petition of John Broome and a number of other citizens of New York "praying for the extension of the elective franchise in relation to the choice of charter officers in the said city" is read in the assembly and referred to the committee of the whole.—Assemb. Jour., 26th sess., 86. This was the memorial drawn up by the committee appointed at the general meeting on Jan. 7 (q.v.). It stated in part that "a great proportion of the citizens who are affected by the laws and ordinances of the . . . common council, and who contribute to the support of the said city have not any share in the representation in the councils of the same.

"That inasmuch as on the one hand the freeholders of the said city by voting in every ward, if they have freeholds in the same, have elective rights far beyond what is consistent with the principles of a government founded upon the basis of equal liberty, so on the other the number of freemen is so very inconsiderable, that the great body of the people cannot under the charter be represented in the corporation of the same. It is too obvious to be denied, that the refusal of the freedom of the city to its regular inhabitants, is a source of great grievance, and invests the common council with full power, if so disposed, to convert the valuable objects of the charter into engines for promoting political views. . . .

Feb. 17

"Your petitioners beg leave further to state . . . that the elections for charter officers in this city have hitherto been conducted not by ballot, but viva voce. The restraint which this mode of electing must produce upon the elector in exercising his privilege, is too obvious for us to use argument or shew the necessity of adopting the mode of election by ballot. . . .

"Your petitioners do further respectfully represent . . . that although by the constitution and laws of this state and the United States, the qualifications of electors for members of the house of assembly of this state, and the house of representatives of the United States, is extended to every citizen who rents a tenement of the yearly value of five dollars, and who has contributed, by a regular assessment to the exigencies of the public—And although your memorialists have reason to believe that it is the wish of many of their fellow citizens that the elective franchise of the citizens of New York may be extended thus far, (still) your petitioners with confidence submit to the wisdom of the legislature for such an extension of the elective franchise as the local situation of this city may be found to require." The committee also asked that the wards "be so equalized or increased in numbers, as that the inhabitants of each ward may be as nearly equal as the plan of the city will admit."—Morn. Chron., F 23, 1803. See Mr 16.

The board confirms a plan of assessment for filling in "Cortland" Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 207. 21

A committee, appointed on Feb. 14 "to enquire into the propriety of establishing a New Work house" in this city reports favourably, and the common council directs that it prepare a bill to be presented with a petition to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 206, 209. "

The common council orders "that the Clerk prepare a conveyance from the heirs and Representatives of the late Alderman Bayard to this board of such parts of his Estate as are intended for Streets And that the Street Commissioner procure a proper map to be attached to such Deed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 209. "

On Feb. 21, the chairman of the building committee presents to the board an estimate of the prices of marble and stone of various qualities for the front of the city hall, but consideration of it is deferred.—M. C. C., III: 209, 211. See D 27, 1802. See, further, Mr 7.

The common council appoints a committee "for the purpose of making such reservations for public slips and Basons as will be necessary for accommodating the river boats."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 213. See Ap 11. 28

The common council passes an ordinance "to prevent Dogs from running at large." It prescribes a fine of $25 to be paid by the owner of a dog found at large in any street, lane, road, or highway in the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 214. It was repealed Dec. 1 (q.v.). "

The comptroller lays before the common council a long report on the history of grants of water lots in both the East and North Rivers, showing the terms of lease, etc. The first grants on which rents were reserved on the East River were made in 1734. It appears that there has been "inequality in the prices of the quit rent," which "gives dissatisfaction to the proprietors;" and that "some uniform price should be fixed upon to be the guide on all future grants." In 1796, the board determined that in all future grants on the East River certain quit rents should be reserved; but this has never been acted upon, "as there has no new grants been made on the East River since 1792 and only 12 grants since 1775." "

In consequence of "the great increase of the value of property on the East side of the town," it seems reasonable "that the Corporation also should derive some benefit therefrom." The value of the city's improvements along the East River in recent years is referred to, and certain amounts for quit-rents proposed.

A similar review of the grants of water lots on the North River is presented in the report, with recommendations as to the amounts to be charged for quit-rents.

"There is a great deficiency," the report states, "of public Slips and Basons for the accommodation of market boats, and 1803 Feb. 28 river and coasting vessels, [there] being only two public Basons on the North River and no room for any other, southward of Chambers Street on account of private docks being made out nearly to the permanent line." It is recommended that, "previous to any new grants being made it would be proper that a Committee be appointed to make such reservations for public Slips and Basons as would be necessary for the accommodation of the River Boats."

The comptroller, in conclusion, proposes a resolution that certain quit-rents be reserved in all future grants of the soil between high- and low-water mark, and others for grants of the soil beyond low-water mark, along different sections of the water-front. The board adopts all his proposals.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 214–17. See also ibid., III: 231–33.

" The supt. of the almshouse is allowed $1,000 for relief of "the Out-door poor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 218.

Mar. 1 The common council contemplates opening a street "from Cliff to Pearl-street, leading from Fair-street, so as nearly to meet Beekman slip. The premises have already been surveyed by the street commissioners."—Chron. Express, Mr 3, 1803. This is an extension of Fair (Fulton) St. from Cliff to Pearl St. The map of 1797 (see Pl. 64, Vol. I) shows Fair St. stopping at Cliff St. When it was cut through to Pearl St., it nearly met Beekman's Slip.

2 The committee of the assembly to which was referred the petition of Edward Livingston and others, who desired that an act be passed to incorporate "an academy instituted in the city of New York, for the promotion of the arts" (see D 3, 1802), reports "That it is the proposed intention of this association to procure from Europe approved specimens of sculpture, painting and architecture, with a view of opening a gallery for their exhibition, and of establishing a school for the improvement of American artists." The committee recommends that the petition be granted.—Assemb. Jour., 26th sess., 150. The academy, however, was not incorporated until Feb. 12, 1808 (q.v.).

6 The committee to which was referred the report of the street commissioner "on the subject of the Canal" (see O 18, 1802) draws up the following report to the common council: "That having maturely considered the same they are of opinion that under all the circumstances of the case the Canal or Tunnel as in the said report recommended is the only practicable method that can be adopted to produce the desired effect without injuring the health of the City; a Survey has been taken of the ground through which the Tunnel ought to be carried [see Mr 14] and is herewith transmitted by which it appears that the distance between the two rivers is 104 Chains 40 Links or 6830 feet, and the greatest elevation of the ground above low water is 12 feet 9 inches, that difference of the time of high water in the two rivers will give a head of water of about 16 Inches every tide to carry off such filth as might have entered the Tunnel.

"The Committee have not been able to procure a very accurate estimate of the expence of the Tunnel but it probably will not exceed Eight Dollars per foot on an average or about 54,000 Dollars exclusive of the purchase of some Lots for the purpose of making the Tunnel as short and streight as possible and they recommend that the same extend on a level from the East to the North River one foot above low water mark and whose Internal Diameter shall be six feet in the clear. The Committee therefore beg leave to propose that the plan recommended in this Report be adopted but in order to make such progress as will best comport with a convenience to the expenditure necessary, they suggest to the Board, the propriety of making an open Canal from the Fresh water pond to the North River so constructed as at a future period when that part of the City becomes more settled it may be arched over and form a tunnel. The Committee are in some measure impressed with an idea that it will soon become necessary to fill up the fresh water pond with good wholesome Earth whatever may be the determination of the board on this head the Committee strongly recommend that all the Meadows and low marshy places or Edges of this pond be filled in, and that a bank or mound of Earth be erected around the main Body of this Pond in Order to take off the immense bodies of stagnant Water which at present surround it.

"The Committee further beg leave to state to the board that the grounds near to where the Canal must pass from the Fresh water pond to the North River are fast improving no time ought therefore to be lost in order to obtain a Session or to purchase the necessary soil for the Canal. The Committee entertain strong hopes that whatever steps may be partially undertaken in this business they will embrace and be directed to the full completion of the whole plan." No action was taken on March 7 when the report was presented to the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 218–20. See, however, Mr 21. Mar. 6

A petition of the proprietors of water lots between the Old Slip and Coffee House Slip, asking that the permanent line may be completed, is referred to the street com'r.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 220. On March 21, he recommended that an ordinance be passed "directing the filling up and compleating the permanent line from the Old Slip to the Coffee House slip on or before the 1st day of May 1804 under the usual penalty. And also for the erecting of all or any of the Piers that have been directed to be run out between the said Slips." The board adopted the report as respects filling up to the permanent line, and referred to the street com'r "to ascertain whether the Proprietors are willing to contribute towards the expence of extending a pier, or piers beyond that permanent line. . . ."—Ibid., III: 241–42. 7

The common council passes a new ordinance for the better regulation of the city watch, and the division of the city into proper districts for that purpose. It provides for the appointment of six captains of the night watch, and not over 140 watchmen. The pay of a captain is fixed at $1.50 and that of a watchman at 75 cents for every night's actual service. There are to be three districts, the bounds of which are defined, and to each of which are assigned two captains and a specified number of watchmen. Their duties are defined.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 224–28. For the list of appointees, showing the companies and districts to which they are assigned, see ibid., III: 256–57. "

The records concerning the new city hall continue thus: On March 7, the building com. reported "That they have procured different samples of Marble, that is—from Philadelphia—Stockbridge—Verplanks point—and from Morrisania, and that the highest possible cost is annexed to each to be delivered in this City. The Committee have further instructed Mr John McComb Junr their particular agent in obtaining the samples aforesaid to obtain an Estimate on as general a principle as possible of the expense in working the said marble fit for use, also the highest probable cost of brownstone which said Estimates have been heretofore put in possession of the Board for their Instruction on the same, and it has appeared to the Committee that several members of the Board who having expressed their opinions to that effect, had a particular wish if possible that the plan of Messieurs Mangin and Macomb heretofore agreed on for the new City hall might be in some degree Curtailed in its size and form. The Committee therefrom [sic] in Order to satisfy themselves and the Board generally having consulted the Gentlemen who drew the said Plan, and the several artists whom the Committee have appointed to execute the same who give it as their unanimous opinion the original plan and design may be carried into effect on something of a smaller scale than was at first contemplated, and that the projecting wings of the same may be curtailed near 20 feet and the order preserved. But the totally taking the said wings away would defeat the whole plan and would require almost an entire new one to be made and submitted for the adoption of the Common Council. The Committee are therefore unanimously of opinion that the said City hall ought to be built on the plan heretofore approved by the Common Council, drawn and presented by Mess. Mangin & Macomb—for which the said Common Council paid the premium agreeable to the advertisement of the Committee for that purpose—but so curtailed in its size in the projecting wings of the same as to bring the Court rooms to the front of the said wings and also to curtail the several rooms in size as much as the Committee after consulting the original drawers of the plan and the several artists who are to be particularly employed in erecting the same shall deem proper and the original design shall particularly require. "

"And the Committee are further unanimously of opinion that the front of the said Building ought to be built of the Stockbridge Marble and that the side or end view be built of Morrisania or Verplancks Marble at the discretion of the Board or Committee and the Back view or side be built of Brownstone and that the board ought to determine the exact scite where the same shall be erected without delay or give the Committee power to do the same." The report was rejected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 222–23.

After the appointment of McComb as the committee's "particular agent," the name of Mangin does not again appear in any 1803 Mar. 7 transactions relating to the building. McComb, as supervising architect and builder, now begins a daily record of his transactions, which he keeps in a diary or "common-place book" (now in the N. Y. H. S. archives), his first entry (p. 4) being under date of March 10, 1803, as follows: "I was directed to make out a Plan on a reduced scale by taking away two windows of the Projections in front, & to shorten the length of the front by taking out two windows, also to cut off the depth of the Building one window." On the inside of the front cover of the diary is pasted the printed offer of the "Premium of 350 Dollars," clipped from the Daily Adv. of Feb. 20, 1802. See, further, Mr 14.

8 The legislature passes an act increasing the number of wards in the City of New York from seven to nine, and describing their boundaries.—Laws of N. Y. (1803), chap. 29.

" James Monroe sails from New York for Havre de Grace. A company of artillery on the Battery fire a national salute, which is answered by the fort on Governor's Island.—True American (Trenton), Mr 21, 1803.

10 The committee of Trinity vestry which was appointed to consider a situation for building another church (see Mr 8, 1802 and F 10, 1803) is directed "to consider of the Plan of a Church to be built in Hudson Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Ap 7.

"Ordered that the Committee of Leases and repairs have the Governor's Pew in S^{t} Pauls made into three and that M^{r} Vandenheuvel, Judge Lewis and M^{r} Priest occupy each of them one."—Ibid.

14 Comptroller Selah Strong reports to the common council "that there is a piece of ground near the Collect where the Old Powder House stood. that belongs to the Corporation. there is no map of it, nor any description of its boundaries to be found, it lays now in Common and adjoins to George Janeway's land which is also in common." There have been several applications for a lease of this ground for 21 years. It is supposed to be one lot, 25 by 100 ft., and can be let for 21 years at $50 a year. The comptroller recommends that, to bring out private claims of title to any part of it and ascertain its true boundary, it be enclosed by a fence at the expense of the city. It is so ordered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 234–35.

" The city having formerly granted to the state "certain ground for the express purpose that a public Arsenal should be erected thereon," and the ground not having been "applied towards that purpose," the common council orders "that the Comptroller be authorized to transmit an application for the Reconveyance of the said ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 235–36. See D 1.

" The common council appoints a committee "for the purpose of taking such measures as may be necessary for the preservation of health in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 236.

" A warrant is issued to pay an account of Charles Loss of $33 "for Surveying Canal" (see Mr 6).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 236; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 561. The original voucher, audited and filed on this day, shows the following items: "Surveyed & levelled from the East River to the Collect—also from the North river to the Collect, to find out the proper distance and the Exact levells."—From bill in bundle marked "Vouchers for Sundry Bills Paid," in record-room, dep't of finance, Hall of Records.

" The present city hall building committee is discharged by the common council, and a new one appointed, consisting of one member from each of the seven wards,—namely, Aldermen Van Zandt, Oothout, Brasher, Barker and Minthorne, and Messrs. LeRoy and Bogardus.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 234–35. On March 16, McComb entered in his diary his report to the committee on his estimated expense, thus: "If built on the reduced Plan, & of Brown stone—exclusive of the Statuary or Bass Reliefs, . . . not exceeding 200,000 Dollars as I have made a large allowance" (in which estimate he acknowledges assistance from Mr. Geo. Knox, "who made a Callculation Stone Cutter work"); and, on March 18, he quoted from the minutes of the committee, "Resolved, that the reduced Plan for Building the New City Hall presented by M^{r} Jn^{o} M Comb, Jun^{r}—be adopted & that the Front Rear & ends be Built of Brown free stone," etc. (the entry being placed out of chronological order, on the first page of the diary). The committee accordingly prepared their report to the common council; it was read on March 21, and contained the following recommendations: "that the reduced plan presented to the board by Mr. John McComb Jun^{r} be adopted, that the vacant space of ground between the goal and bridewell be determined on as a proper site for the same. That the wings in front range with Murray Street, on a parallel line with the fence in front of the Alms house & the Cupola range in a Line with the Cupola of the Alms house; Mar. 14

"That the Front, rear and sides be built with brown free stone, and the residue of the materials as shall be directed hereafter.

"The Committee feel impressed with the magnitude of this undertaking, and they assure the Board that in all their determinations, they have endeavored to combine durability, convenience, and elegance with as much economy as the importance of the object will possibly admit.

"Contemplating the materials as mentioned in that report the costs of the building as computed by Mr. John McComb will amount to $200,000. but when it is Considered that estimates for public buildings cannot be made perfectly correct the Committee are of opinion that $250,000 will cover every Expenditure." This report was accepted by the board; $25,000 was appropriated (warrant No. 423); the committee was authorised "to proceed in the erection of the Hall with all expedition according to the plan adopted at this meeting;" and all new questions were to be decided by the committee or referred by them to the board for their direction.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 244–45. See, further, Mr 22.

A writer signing himself "Public" suggests that "the committee appointed to solicit subscriptions for, and to superintend the erecting of, a Monument to the memory of General Washington" (see D 15, 1802), might advisedly "commence the pedestal part immediately;" for which "a plan, or design should be fixed upon directly, and a copy of it sent to some proper person in Europe—(perhaps our Ambassador in London . . .) to engage an artist to make the Equestrian part."—Daily Adv., Mr 15, 1803. 15

The assembly passes "An Act to extend the qualifications of electors for Charter Officers in the city of New York, and for other purposes" (see F 15).—Assemb. Jour., 26th sess., 197. This bill provided that all persons who possessed a freehold worth $50 or a seven-year lease worth $50 or paid a yearly rent of $25, and who had been resident in the city for one year and had paid taxes, might vote for civil officers, that all elections should be by ballot, and that no one might vote out of the ward in which he resided.—Morn. Chron., Mr 23, 1803. The bill was read in the senate twice, and, on March 17, referred to a committee of the whole. Thereafter, it was not acted upon.—Senate Jour., 26th sess., 87–88, 90. See also N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 297–364. The subject was renewed the next year (see Ja 10, 1804). 16

Although Hugh Gaine has not paid the city the consideration of £400 on which a grant of water lots was made to him on Jan. 30, 1797, he has "wharfed out, and made considerable improvements and received the rents thereon and now wishes to compleat his wharf to the permanent line." The board confirms the comptroller's recommendation that the extended grant be made "upon Condition of his paying the interest of the £400 from the time it was promised, and laying the amount of principal and interest as a quit rent on the premises, and also reserving the quit rent from low water mark to the permanent line and reserving the proper Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 239. For the plan of quit-rent reservations, see F 28. 21

" The common council confirms a report of the comptroller that the corporation is bound by agreements made in 1789 and 1792 to grant to Henry Rutgers "the soil between high and low water marks opposite his ground between Rutgers Slip and Washington Streets," and "from Washington Street to Warren Street," leaving Rutgers Slip 120 ft. wide, a slip at the foot of Montgomery St. 90 ft. wide, and a public slip at the foot of Warren (Clinton) St. 100 ft. wide; reserving also "the necessary public Streets, and the right of Wharfage in front and inside of the Slips."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 239–40.

" Comptroller Strong brings to the attention of the common council the fact that docks at the foot of George and Charlotte Sts. on the East River, and streets on each side of them (200 ft. into the river), have not been completed as required by the terms of grants to the late Hendrick Rutgers in 1772. There is now "great Want of Accommodations for Market boats and coasting vessels on that part of the Town," there being "no public Slips between Catharine & Rutgers Slips. the distance of near half a mile." The common council adopts the comptroller's recommendation that the present owners of the property be required to complete the wharves by Nov. 1, or that the grants be forfeited according to the original covenants.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 240.

1803 Mar. 21 The place selected by the street com'r and accepted by the common council as "a proper place for depositing occasionally the Street dirt" is "near the Battery on the North River in the rear of Mr Rhinelanders House," this being "a large unoccupied space, contiguous to the River, and at considerable distance from any dwelling houses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 243. On April 11, several inhabitants petitioned "against depositing manure in the vicinity of Mr Rhinelanders wharf."—Ibid., III: 261.

" The common council orders that the superintendent of the almshouse be directed "to have two stables standing in the Alms House yard removed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 245, 258.

" The common council appoints a committee "to inquire into the expediency of opening Chamber Street, to Chatham Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 246. On June 27, the committee reported that it "would not at this time be proper to open the said Chamber Street as is contemplated."—Ibid., III: 324. It was not extended to Chatham St. until 1811.—See L. M. R. K., III: 995–96.

" The common council resolves "that an Ordinance pass for the formation of a Tunnel from the East to the North River agreeably to the report and profile presented by the Committee appointed to consider and report upon that subject [see Mr 6] And that the Street Comr endeavour to obtain cessions of such ground as is necessary for that purpose."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 246. See My 23.

22 On March 22, McComb, quoting from the minutes of the committee, enters in his diary: "Resd that an Architect be appointed to superintend Building the New City Hall who shall have complete control over every department. Resd That Mr Jno M Comb Junr be appointed as Architect agreeable to the foregoing Resolution and that he receive for his Services the Sum of Six dollars per day for each and every day he may be engaged at the New Hall." On March 29, quoting from the same minutes, he stated that the committee appointed Joseph Newton head carpenter at $4 a day; John E. West and Ezra Weeks master carpenters, and Anthony Stunback and Arthur Smith master masons.

During this month, also, McComb began to make a record of his examination of stone-quarries. On March 16, he recorded, "By orders I went to Newark to try to procure one of the Quarries;" March 22, "I recd an order from the Building Committee to purchase one or more of the Newark Quarries, on such terms as I might think most reasonable;" March 27, "I went up to look at a Blue Stone Quarry of Mr Underhills at New Rochell—good stone may be got there;" March 29, "Mr Knox & myself took another look at the Stone at Morrisina [sic]—we still thought good Stone might be got thin [or there] & best to open the Quarry."—McComb's Diary, at N. Y. H. S. See, further, Ap 2.

23 A meeting is called of a committee "for the New Exchange to be erected in the neighbourhood of Peck-slip."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 28, 1803.

28 The "New York bread company" petitions the common council "to be relieved from the forfeitures incurred by neglecting to mark their bread." Rejected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 247–48, 251. On May 23, this company's store was destroyed by fire.—Ibid., III: 288.

" The common council refers to the alderman and assistant of the Fifth Ward a petition from inhabitants living near "the new market" (Catherine Slip Market) "that a Market for Fish may be erected contiguous to the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 247.

" The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the Directors of the Manhattan Company or any Committee they may appoint to agree and fix on some general principle for defraying the expence of repairing or new paving the street or streets through which their Water has been led."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 248. See My 16.

" A committee of "the New york Society for improving the fine arts" petitions the common council "that a Lot of ground may be leased, or conferred to them for the use of the said Society." Referred to the comptroller and street com'r.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 248. Such a lease is not indexed in the register's office, nor is it found in the volume of City Grants.

" The common council allows the city clerk $600 a year for his services and stationery. The incumbent is Tunis Wortman.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 249.

" A new ordinance is passed for the better regulation of public porters. Each is to be assigned a certain stand or station, where it shall be his duty to attend. They are required to supply themselves "with good and convenient wheelbarrows and one hand barrow for every two of the said Porters for the better carriage of goods and articles." Mar. 28

Each porter "shall be known and distinguished by numbers from One progressively, and that each of them respectively shall wear a badge on which shall be engraved and specified in legible characters the name of such Porter and the number of his Licence." He shall "cause his own name the number of his licence, and the name of the place where he is stationed to be painted in legible letters and figures on his wheel and hand barrow on pain of forfeiting his Licence to the end that if any such Porter shall be guilty of embezzlement or other improper conduct he may be the more readily detected."

The charges for his work are prescribed. He shall forfeit his licence for overcharging, and shall not direct or permit another person to carry goods for him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 249–50.

" The common council orders that the clerk prepare and publish an order "for removing the Horse market to the space in front of the new watch house at the corner of Division and Chatham Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 250. This ordinance is made "In pursuance of the 'Law to regulate the sale of horses, to prevent their running loose in the streets or highways in the city of New York'." It directs "That no horse shall in future be shewn or exposed for sale at or near the gate in front of the Alms House," but, instead, at the place designated.—Com. Adv., Mr 31, 1803.

30 The Bunch of Grapes tavern, No. 11 Nassau St., between Cedar and Pine Sts., is designated for the meeting-place of the "New York Cricket Club on March 31."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 30, 1803. For other references to this tavern, see Jl 5, 1800; O 22, 1806.

Apr. 1 The First Presbyterian Church purchases from Abraham K. Beekman 24 lots for a cemetery, situated "between the Dutch & Quaker Burial ground" in the Bowery, paying £100 for each lot. The First Baptist Church in Gold St. acquires title to 8 of these lots from the Presbyterians at the original cost.—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II.

2 McComb records: "I reported That agreable to their directions that I had purchased a lease of one of the Quarries, belonging to the Presbyterian Church of Newark" (that is, a quarry leased to John Hawthorn, from whom he leased it), for $500, paying $250 down and giving a note for the balance payable Jan. 1, 1804. He added: "I have engaged this Quarry in my Own Name & would wish it could not be known otherwise abroad as I am certain I can work it much more economical." (The diary does not state here what kind of stone was taken from this quarry, but it was presumably brown-stone, as that was the kind used later in the foundation before it was decided to use marble for the superstructure, and this conclusion is confirmed by an entry a year later, March 28, 1804, as follows: "As we shall not want many more Brown Stone this Season I think it best to give up working the quarry at N-ark.")

Another entry of April 2 (out of chronological order with other entries at the opening of his diary), is that, at a meeting of the building com., it was "Resolved, That a report be made to the Corporation informing them that it would be proper to retain the length in front of the N. C. Hall agreeable to the Plan originally made by Mr J. M Comb. Say 215 feet;" and in accordance therewith, on April 4, they made the following statement to the common council: "The Building Committee beg leave to state that on the 21st of March last they made a report to the Board on the subject of the new City Hall, in which report they recommended the adoption of Mr. John McComb's reduced plan; since which doubts have arisen in the minds of the Committee as to the propriety of diminishing the length and thereby to leave out two windows in Front. The Committee have seriously deliberated on this measure and after consultation with the Chief Architect and Chief Master Carpenter they are of opinion that the full length of the Building ought to be preserved agreeable to the original plan as being more conformable to the strict rules of Architecture, which in a building of such magnitude is of primary importance. (Signed) John Oothout, Chairman." This was confirmed by the common council.—M. C. C., III: 253–54. See, further, Ap 5.

4 The common council orders that the corporation counsel examine the city's title to "the Lands upon the margin and in the vicinity of the Collect claimed by John R. Livingston, Edward Livingston, Dominick Lynch, and others."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 252–53. Title Company records do not show just what 1803 Apr. 4 course the city took to establish its title. The map of the Sixth Ward, 1814, by Ludlam (filed in the topographical bureau) seems to be the map by which a compromise agreement was established. The lands of the corporation and also of Lynch and the other owners in the neighbourhood of the Collect are shown on this plan. See, further, My 28, 1804.

" "The Comptroller, agreeable to a resolution of the Corporation respecting a piece of ground on the Broadway, that was purchased some years since for the erecting of works to supply the City with Water [see Ag 8, 1774; L. M. R. K., III: 976]—Reports—That, the piece of ground in Question contains about One acre and three quarters, is a high hill, and cannot be applied to any profitable use in its present State—the Corporation owns the Collect, and a quantity of low marsh adjoining to it to the amount of between 5 & 6 acres. It is a desirable thing that this low ground should be filled up both for the health of that part of the Town, and also that the ground be applied to some beneficial purpose. It is Recommended that Contracts be made with Suitable persons for digging out this Hill and filling up the Meadows with the Earth to a suitable heighth; there is also a piece of ground adjoining the ground of the Corporation that belongs to Frederick and Augustus Van Cortlandt, the Earth on which was offered to the Corporation a few years since gratis, provided they would remove it—This ground being very handy to fill up the Collect It is Recommended that application be immediately made to Messrs Van Cortland and if it can be obtained that Contracts be made with proper persons to remove it into the Collect. [Signed] Selah Strong."

The common council confirms the report, and orders "That the Comptroller apply to Messieurs Van Cortlandt for permission to use the earth mentioned in the said report, and that the Street Commissioner issue the proposals to have the same carried into the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 253. See, further, My 12.

With this order, the filling in of the Collect Pond may be said to have begun. It was completed about 1811.—See descrip. of Frontispiece II, Vol. III, p. 540. The boundaries of the Pond, as defined by the present street plan, are thus described: "The site of the Collect Pond is enclosed within an irregular line, beginning at the intersection of Lafayette, Center and Park Streets, and following approximately Park Street to Baxter Street, Baxter to White, White to Lafayette, and Lafayette to the point of beginning. The bend in the line of Baxter Street near Leonard Street, and in Mulberry and Mott Streets parallel with Baxter on the East is due to following the old Collect Pond shore line. Hence the origin of the name "Mulberry Bend." Just north of the present Pearl Street the pond was contracted by a tongue of land dividing the pond into two unequal parts. The portion south of Pearl Street was sometimes called the Little Collect Pond. The principal outlet of the pond began near the Junction of Worth Street, Park Street and Baxter Street, and flowed southeastward approximately along the line of Baxter Street and Roosevelt Street to the East River. It was called Old Wreck Brook. Another outlet flowed northwestward from near White and Lafayette Streets to Canal Street and followed the line of Canal Street to the Hudson River. The pond and both outlets were bordered by marshes. Those to the westward of the pond and northern outlet were very extensive and were long known as the "Lispenard Meadows."—17th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1912), 119–20 (illustrated by drawing of street plan—plate 16).

5 The legislature enacts "That the rights, privileges and advantages granted to Robert R. Livingston, in and by the act entitled 'An act repealing an act for granting and securing to John Fitch the sole right and advantage of making and employing the steamboat by him lately invented, and for other purposes,' passed the 27th day of March, 1798 [q.v.], be extended to Robert R. Livingston and Robert Fulton, for the term of twenty years from the passing of this act; and that the term for giving the necessary proof of the practicability of a boat of 20 tons capacity, being propelled by steam through the water, with and against the ordinary current of Hudson river, taken together, four miles an hour, be and the same is extended to two years from the passing of this act."—Laws of N. Y. (1803), chap. 94. On April 6, 1807, the act was revived and extended for another two years.—Ibid., 1807, chap. 165.

" On April 5, McComb's city hall record reads: "I marked out the Ground for the Building and the Cartmen began to dig for the foundation. Previous to this [April 4] the Corporation Resolved to have the lenght [sic] of the building agreeable to the original design of 215'—9 but insisted on the building being reduced in depth as they had directed in March. Reducing the projections in front I readily agree to, but cutting off the depth of the building I contended was a very bad Plan, as it spoils the proportion of the large Court Rooms & will cramp the whole of work—but no arguments could prevail. Several wished to cut off the projection in the Rear, & two of the Committee insisted that the North Front had better be built of Blue Stone.—The foundation is all on Maiden Ground except the N. W. corner which stands on one of the Bridewell sinks, which was well cleand out, and filled in for about 4 feet with fresh earth well rammed & wet. There was another old sink about 50 feet farther to the East along the North front and one about the center of the east front both of which was filled up with good earth & well rammed—as was all the Principal trenches.—Mr. Stunback & myself found a decent from the Center of Building to Broadway to be 3'–5" distance 305'–0"—to Chatham Street 4' 2" distance 308' 0".—McComb's Diary. See, further, Ap 11. Apr. 5

Alexander Hamilton draws up articles of agreement for the Merchants' Bank; these were later signed by 391 subscribers to the capital stock.—Hubert, The Merchants' National Bank, 1803–1903, 1–8. The bank was chartered on Mr 26, 1805 (q.v.). 7

Trinity vestry resolves that they will "immediately commence the building of a Church [St. John's] on the ground selected for that purpose in Hudson Street [see F 10] agreeable to a plan to be decided on at the next meeting," and a building committee is appointed.—Trin. Min. (MS.). See My 12. "

The vestry also orders "that the Committee of Leases sell at public auction thirteen Lots on Hudson Square reserving the Corner Lots on a Lease for 99 years. . . ."—Ibid. Hudson Square is shown on Pls. 64 and 70, Vol. I. Although this was its official designation, it was usually called St. John's Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 971. See also Pl. 106-a, Vol. III. See Ap 27.

An invoice of two boxes containing weights and measures, shipped from Philip Sansom of London to Robert Boune, New York (intended probably to fix standards for the city), is audited by Selah Strong, comptroller.—It is filed in the record-room, dept. of finance, Hall of Records. 9

The common council again considers questions relating to the grant of water lots and the extension of wharves. It appears that "the shore from Chambers Street to Bestevers Killitie from high to low water mark is principally occupied by persons that have built docks thereon or erected sawpits or make use of it to deposit Timber. These persons pay no Rent to the public who is the sole proprietor of the soil." Plans are adopted to correct this condition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 260–61. 11

On April 11, the common council orders "that the Building Committee be authorized to remove the ground which shall be taken out of the Cellar of the New City hall, under the direction of the Street Commissioner and at the expence of this Board."—M. C. C., III: 264. See, further, Ap 18. "

The committee appointed on Feb. 28 (q.v.) "to make proper reservations for public slips and Basons" reports: that they have examined the North and East Rivers and agreed that there should be reserved for public slips a space of 260 feet at the foot of Read and Jay Sts.; and 200 feet each at the foot of Moore, Laight, Watts, and Brannon Sts.; and that there should be reserved on the East River 100 ft. at the foot of Clinton St., 120 ft. at the foot of Scammel St., and 100 ft. at the foot of the street next to Corlaers Hook. Approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 261–62. "

The common council adopts a resolution for laying "the first Stone" of the city hall, and for having an inscription placed upon it, the text of which is entered in the minutes of this date (see May 26, 1803, regarding the ceremony and inscription); and it was resolved that this inscription "be Engraved on Marble & that the Board attend the Mayor in laying it in the South East corner," and that the mayor "draw on the City Treasurer for the Sum of Fifty Dollars and present it to John McComb when the Ceremony is performed, as a Compliment to the workmen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 268. The board made an additional donation of $50 to the workmen on May 30.—Ibid., III: 297. 18

At the bottom of page 682 of the minutes, immediately following the text of the inscription—which was to be placed on the corner-stone—someone has added this significant comment: "Jos. F. Mangin drew the plan which done credit to this superstructure."

1803 Apr. 18 It is only partly legible in the original volume, but in the volume used by the public, which is a copy made about 1885, it reads in full as stated. When and by whom it was written in the original is unknown. More direct intimations of this character appeared in the newspapers after the laying of the corner-stone. See summary under May 26, 1803, and descrip. of Pl. 75, Vol. I, where are recorded the sporadic activities of a group of French artisans and sympathizers, which, due perhaps to the spirit of the times, eventually gave the situation the character of an international struggle for prestige, while it placed on record important facts relating to the history of the city hall. See, further, My 16

25 The common council refers to the building committee a report from the street com'r "that Water from the Manhattan Company can be procured for the use of building the New City hall at the rate of $100 per Annum."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 271–72.

" The common council orders "that the Academic Society be in future prohibited from holding their meetings at the City hall on account of improper conduct."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 273. On May 9, the society petitioned for a renewal of their permit, but this was not acted upon.—Ibid., III: 275.

" The common council appoints a committee to report the draft of an ordinance "for regulating the sale of Sea coal in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 273. See My 23.

" An application from Mr. Longworth, editor of the New York Directory, for permission "to use the New Map of the City to Correct his reduced one" is referred to "the Committee appointed to publish the new map."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 273. Evidently, the Goerck-Mangin Plan is referred to.—See Pl. 70, Vol. I.

" The board also directs the street com'r to take measures "for straightening and extending Fair Street to Pearl Street, and for opening Beekman Street to Water Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 273. See, for Beekman St., Ag 16, 1750. See, further, My 12.

27 "The number of new buildings erecting and to be erected in the course of the present year exceed, according to the best observation, those of any former period. The improvements in Broadway, Greenwich and the intersecting streets, are unparalled in the most flourishing period of our city—a certain evidence of the wealth and prosperity of its inhabitants. A number of Lots in Hudson square [see Ap 7] the most elegant building spot without exception in the whole city, are to be sold tomorrow. It were to be wished that some condition of sale could restrict purchasers from reducing the size of Lots in this part of the town. The Corporation of Trinity Church has manifested a laudable spirit, in laying out wide streets and generous dimensions throughout their property; but the original lots have been most shamefully subdivided and curtailed, by which means this new portion of the city will in process of time, experience all the inconveniences and evils arising from the cramped and circumscribed proportions of the most ancient part. . . . Every building lot ought to contain such dimensions as will secure a free circulation of air in rear as well as front."—Daily Adv., Ap 27, 1803. On May 12 (q. v.), restrictions were placed upon the erection of buildings around Hudson Square.

28 In opening his Vauxhall Garden for this season, Delacroix explains his reasons for making a charge for admission: "1st. [When free], Many persons enter with the only intent of walking in the garden, without any benefit to the house. 2d. All persons genteely dressed had free right to enter, many persons answering that description were not genteel in character, therefore not suited to the chief part of the company. . . . 3d. No public place of resort can be supported in a genteel and expensive style, when every person has an indistinct right of entrance. 4th. The receipts were not adequate to the expenses and support of the place. . . .—All persons entering the garden will take a ticket for two shillings, which entitles them to a glass of any refreshment . . . the entrance on Sunday will remain as heretofore—Free."—Daily Adv., Ap 28, 1803. See My 27.

30 The United States purchases Louisiana from France. The treaty was ratified by Napoleon in May, and by the United States in October.—Laws of U. S., 8th cong., 1st. sess., 174–203; Winsor, VII: 165, 479, 543, 547, 556.

May 7 James Hardie advertises the removal of his "Literary Office" from No. 7 Church St. to 305 Greenwich St. He appears to have been the first in New York to advertise this profession, which was "to write petitions, memorials, letters, advertisements, etc.," and to "revise and prepare for the press such articles of a literary nature as may for that purpose be submitted to his inspection."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 7, 1803.

May 9 The common council receives a representation from Richard Varick and Nicholas Evertson stating that they have been appointed "to treat in behalf of the Dutch Church in this City for the materials of the clock in the New Dutch Church Steeple and the use of the said Steeple to keep the clock in." The board appoints a committee to treat with them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 276. According to the committee's report, on May 30, the consistory proposed to give the city the clock and the use of the steeple and bell provided the city would keep the clock "in repair and well regulated." The common council adopted the report and accepted the offer; and, dismissing Peter Field, the supt. of public clocks, authorised the comptroller to employ "a suitable person" in that office, his duties being to regulate not only this but also other church clocks, "Provided the Corporation of Trinity Church and of the Presbyterian Church will entrust the regulation of them to the direction of this Board."—Ibid., III: 295.

" The common council pays Peter R. Maverick $480 as "balance of his Acct for engraving New Map of the City" (the Goerck-Mangin Plan—see Jl 15, 1799).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 277. The Goerck-Mangin Plan, however, is signed "Peter Maverick."—See Pl. 70, Vol. I. See also D 5.

" The common council orders "that a Lottery be directed for raising the sum of $15,000, for the benefit of the Widows Society in pursuance of the powers vested in this Board by the Act of the Legislature at the last Session," and appoints managers to report a lottery scheme.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 276. See My 23.

12 "Several Plans of Churches were laid before the Board [Trinity vestry] for their approbation, whereupon the one recommended by the committee drawn by John and Isaac McComb was approved of.

"The following resolutions restricting the buildings to be erected on Hudson square were agreed to—viz—

"'That the Lots shall be sold . . . for the term of 99 years, at the expiration of which the buildings to be taken at a fair valuation or the Leases renewed on equitable Terms.

"'That every Lot shall have a brick dwelling house erected on it the width of the Lot in front on the square, to be covered with Tile and slate, not less than thirty feet high, and no wooden building shall be erected on any Part of the Lots.

"'That every House shall be uniform to the Water Table, which shall run on a straight line throughout, the height to the lower part of the Water Table shall be four feet from the ground.

"'That every corner house on the square shall be three stories high, and of an uniform appearance on the out side.

"'The two fist [sic] stories to be twelve feet and the third story nine feet between the beams.'"—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Je 9 and 20, and Jl 14. A plan and three elevations of St. John's Chapel, drawn by John McComb, are reproduced as A. Pl. 11–c, Vol. III.

" In response to the order of April 4 (q. v.), the street commissioner reports that he has advertised for proposals for carrying into the adjacent lowlands the ground mentioned in the comptroller's report of that date, and has received estimates. From these it appears that the lowest bid is that of Philip Ruckel, who offers to do the work for $3,975. The common council accepts the offer.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 278–79, 473.

The board also orders that whenever the street com'r "shall have the offer of any dirt for filling in the Collect," and can obtain it "for a Sum not exceeding 5 Cents for a Cart Load," he be authorised "to purchase the same and when received in the proper place to Certify the same to the Comptroller who is hereby authorized to pay the same on the part of this Board."—Ibid., III: 280. See infra, each year, while the work was in progress, a summary of payments made by the city in that year for filling in the Collect, and for dirt to be carted there. See Jl 11.

" The common council directs that lots on Pearl and Water Sts. be purchased with a view to extend Beekman St. to Water St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 281–82. The subject was reopened on July 18.—Ibid., III: 350. On Aug. 1, the comptroller reported the lowest valuation of the property necessary to be taken to open and extend this street.—Ibid., III: 364.

16 The common council orders that an ordinance be prepared to prohibit ferries from New York to the opposite shores unless authorised by the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 283–84. See My 23 and Jl 18.

1803 May 16 The proprietors of lots between the Coffee House Slip and the Old Slip agree to construct four piers between these slips in compliance with an act of the legislature, and in accordance with stated specifications.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 284–85.

" The next group of records concerning the new city hall is this: the common council pays Jos. F. Mangin $17.85 "for Surveying and laying out the Limits."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 286. The original voucher, audited this day by the comptroller, shows the following items: "for the Survey of the liberties of the prisoners;" "for protracting and calculations;" "for a figurative map;" "for an other Survey to fix the Liberties after an other direction;" "for a Second plan and Calculations;" "for a Second figurative map;" "for the fixations of the Liberties on the ground;" "for Survey of the ground of Alms house the Goal & Bredwel for the fixation of the new cort house [city hall] ground;" "for the Map." The bill is endorsed by Mayor Livingston on May 14 as follows: "The services stated in the within account were performed by order of the Court of Com pleas called the Mayor's Court of the City of New York for the alteration of the limits rendered necessary by building the New City Hall."—From bill in bundle marked "Vouchers for Sundry Bills Paid," in record-room, dep't of finance, Hall of Records. See, further, My 23.

" The common council authorises the street com'r to employ an inspector to "report to him from time to time all infractions of the Laws and Ordinances of this board to prevent incumbrances in the several streets wharves and Slips," at $1.50 for each day he is so employed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 286.

" The common council directs the recorder "to endeavour to procure from the Manhattan Company as soon as possible a declaration or offer on their part as to the proportion of the Expences the said Company will bear in repairing or re-paving the Streets through which they have conducted the Water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 286. See Jl 1.

17 War again breaks out between England and France. This lasted until Napoleon's banishment to St. Helena in 1815.—Hazen, Modern European Hist., 199–200.

23 The common council receives, and orders to be filed, a bond from the managers of the lottery for the benefit of the Widows Society (see My 9).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 287. The lottery was advertised on May 24.—Daily Adv., My 24, 1803. See N 28.

" A committee on regulating the Bowery Road reports that at certain seasons it is almost impassible owing to the sunken state of parts of it. Plans are adopted to regulate it, and make sidewalks, the latter at the expense of the proprietors exclusively.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 287–88, 303.

" The common council passes "A law for procuring regular bills of mortality in the City of New York" (see also Jl 30, 1804); "A law to regulate the sales at auction in the City of New York;" and "A law to regulate Ferries between the City of New York and the opposite shores" (see My 16). The text of these laws is not entered in the minutes. The draft of a law to regulate the sale of coal (see Ap 25) is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 289. On June 14, the law to regulate sales at auction was amended, and its text recorded.—Ibid., III: 308.

" The street com'r reports to the common council that "all the proprietors of the Land in the direction of the Tunnel [see Mr 21] from the North River to the Angle near Mr Linchs Rope Walk, have offered to cede a Street for this purpose to be 60 feet wide, and are desirous that the same should be carried into effect as soon as possible.

"The proprietors of the Land between the Angle above named and Chatham Street are not at present disposed to cede the same without some compensation therefor.

"The Street commissioner begs leave to recommend that he be directed to procure forthwith deeds of Cession from the proprietors who are willing to grant the same for the purpose aforesaid—and that the Tunnel be commenced at the North River as soon as a Contract can be made for the same." The report is confirmed, and the street commissioner is ordered to "pursue legal steps to obtain such ground as cannot be obtained by voluntary grant the whole extent to Chatham Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 290. See Ag 8.

" On May 23, the common council receives and files a contract with Jaques Rudan "to supply timber for the New City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 276, 287.

On the same day, the board fixed May 26 for the ceremony of laying the corner-stone; the resolution being "that this Board, the Chief Architect & Master Workmen assemble on Thursday next at 3 oclock to attend the Mayor in laying the Corner Stone of the New City hall and that the Ex-Members be invited to attend the ceremony and that the Superintendant be requested to provide a Collation for them accordingly." A committee was appointed to arrange the ceremonies.—Ibid., III: 291. The day before the ceremony, orders were issued by Lieut. Col. Morton for six companies of the Sixth Regiment to assemble "on the regimental Parade" at 2 o'clock the following day, march thence to Broad St., and form in front of the city hall (on Wall St.) to assist in the proceedings.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 25, 1803. For an account of the laying of the corner-stone, and the events which followed to the completion of the building, see My 26. May 23

26 The corner-stone of the city hall is laid. The Commercial Advertiser of this morning, in announcing the event for the afternoon, adds: "If justice be done to the original design of the Architect, this Edifice will vie, in taste and magnificence, with any public Structure in the United States." John McComb, Jr., who had been appointed by the building committee on March 22 the supervising architect and master builder (see extract from the committee's minutes in McComb's diary of that date), thus records the event: "On thirsday [sic] the 26 May, agreeable to Previous arrangement the Corner Stone was laid—under the discharge of seventeen Cannon—from Gen[l] Stevens Regiment of artillery." He records in full the inscription on the stone, adding: "Cut on a White Marble Slab;" also "The Mayor on Laying the stone gave the workmen One Hundred Dollars—on which we had a handsom [sic] Collation provided for the workmen, and plenty of drink given them. All the Builders suped [sic] with a part of the Corporation at the Alms House—had an excelent [sic] Supper plenty of good wine we staid till one Oclock A. M."

For newspaper accounts of the ceremony, see Daily Adv., My 26, 27 and 28; Morn. Chron., My 27 and 28; Com. Adv., and N. Y. Eve. Post, My 27; and Am. Cit., My 28, 1803. That in the Morn. Chron. is as follows (My 27):

"New City Hall.—Yesterday the foundation stone of the New City Hall was laid by his honor, the Mayor, at the head of a procession, composed of the Common Council, Public Officers, Mechanic Society, &c. &c. Gen. Steven's regiment of artillery, under Major Curtenius, and a detachment from Col. Morton's infantry, under command of Maj Loomis, formed the escort. The procession commenced at the City Hall, and proceeded through Broad-street, Beaver-st. and Broadway, to the Park, where the military formed and saluted the Mayor and Recorder, as they passed along the line. The stone being laid at the discharge of a signal gun, a national salute was fired from the field pieces, and a feu-de-joye of three rounds from the musketry. The military then proceeded to the Park, where they formed a hollow square, were regaled with a supply of wine from the corporation, and dismissed." On May 28, the same paper continues: "We find that only the President and Vice President of the Mechanic Society walked in the Procession, and not the whole body." The "Order of Procession" follows, printed in a column, those marching being "The Military, Citizens, Master Builders, High Constable and Marshal, Door Keeper and Messenger, Deputy Sheriffs, President and Vice President of Mechanic Society, Chamberlain and Clerk, Comptroller and Superintendent of Alms-House, Street Commissioner and Surveyor of the Customs, Police Magistrates;" then, with "Constables" as escort on either side, there followed "Ex-Members of the Board," including "Mayor and Recorder;" then "Clerks of Supreme and Circuit Courts, Gentlemen of the Bar, Grand Master and Spanish Consul, Judges of the Supreme Court & Members of Congress, Mayor of Albany and Chancellor of State;" next, with a lateral escort of "Marshals," are "High Sheriff of City and County," and the "Alderman and Assistant" of each of the seven Wards; and, lastly, the "Mayor and Recorder."

The account of the event in the Com'l Adv. gives the additional information that the stone was laid "precisely at 6 o'clock," by "his honour the Mayor, assisted by Mr. McComb, the architect, . . . at the southeast corner of the edifice;" also that "The artillery fired a federal salute and the band of music performed a military air;" after which "the Mayor delivered a short appropriate address, which was received with the acclamations of a vast concourse of citizens." The Eve. Post account adds this: "The length of the New Hall will be 216 feet, and the average 1803 May 26 depth about 100; to be built of cut-stone, the basement rusticated; the first story to be of the Ionic order, with columns and pilasters; and the upper story of the Corinthian order. The ends and rear to be ornamented in an elegant manner."

On June 27, the board paid John Bogert, chairman of the committee on the day's ceremonies, $150 for the expenses of laying the corner-stone.—Ibid., III: 325.

The inscription to be placed on the corner-stone, as prescribed by the common council on April 18 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, III: 268), was as follows:

"The Corner Stone of the Hall of the City of New York

The inscription was entered by McComb in his diary under date of May 26 (the day the corner-stone was laid). It was published in the Eve. Post on May 27, and in the Morn. Chron. on May 28. All of the inscription before the names of the building committee was on the "upper-side" of the stone, the Post stated; while the names of the committee, architect, etc., were on the "other" side. McComb referred to this latter part of the inscription as on "the reverse side." The names of the members of the building committee, as published in the Morn. Chron., do not include Alderman Brasher and Minthorn. The "slab," thus cut on the "upper" and on the "reverse" sides, must have been entirely surrounded and covered by the foundation, as it does not now appear on the surface of the wall. See, further, My 27.

27 Information respecting the building of the city hall has been gathered in much detail and so fully, that, in presenting it in these pages, the material has been summarized and placed under the dates of outstanding events. In 1804, however, and thereafter, these summaries will be found at the beginning of the year.

McComb's diary throughout reveals the character and talents of the man,—his constant faithfulness, his executive ability in the management of the work in every department, his business skill in treating with the owners of various stone-quarries, his professional ability in designing and directing the execution of the details of construction, his encouraging compliments regarding notable work done by the sculptor or workmen, his patience, and his self-reliance.

On May 27, 1803, he recorded: "This day the Masons began to work regularly;" June 4, "Visited the Quarries at N-ark & second river, & gave the directions for stone;" June 23, The "Foundation of all the walls was finished & began to raise on the first offset;" July 5, "the work going on very steady, only trouble is to make the Masons make firm walls—Got one of the Stone broke that was for a Pilaster;" July 6, "I visited the N-ark and Second River Quarries . . . find it of advantage to Visit Hawthorn now and then;" Aug. 2, "Setting the Basement Sills;" Aug. 3, "Mr. Knox returned from the Country, was much pleased to See him in better health—an experienced Stone Cutter is of great advantage;" Aug. 9, "Visited the Quarries at Newark & Second River. They were breaking out Columns, 2d River," and "The fever began to spread fast. Several of our workmen left us—& the citizens removing out of the City." May 27

For the records of work done by the carpenters during the progress of the construction of the city hall, see description of record-book under date of May 30, 1803. The last date of entry in this book is Nov. 11, 1820. See, further, My 28.

In announcing "a display of Grand Fire-Works" for May 31 " at his Vauxhall Garden, Delacroix says that "A new road has been made to the Garden, from Broadway, commencing at the foot of the Hill now digging out." He adds: "The road will be lighted." —Daily Adv., My 27, 1803. This was the opening of the season, this year, at Vauxhall. In a later ad., he describes the new road as "of easy ascent, beginning at the Furnace."—Ibid., My 31, 1803. See, further, Jl 4.

The first certain date of record, when Mangin's share in the 28 authorship of the design of the city hall was called into question, was May 28, 1803 (but see Ap 18, 1803). On this day The Daily Adv. published the following: "A spectator of the Ceremonial of laying the foundation Stone of the New City Hall, expresses surprise and mortification at the absence of Mr. Mangin, whose plan of the Edifice was adopted in preference to every other offered to the Corporation; and asks, whether it was owing to an oversight in the arrangements of the day, or whether it is to be attributed to the Ancient Custom of the Manor?"

On June 2, there appeared in the Evening Post the following editorial paragraph: "It would be much to be lamented that in the erection of this magnificent edifice, any difference among the members of the Corporation, or any private partialities or prejudices should be permitted to obtain, which should have an unfavorable effect on the building itself. We hope we shall not incur the imputation of impertinence to a very great degree, if we venture to say, that in an edifice of this magnitude and importance, it requires the constant superintendance of an architect of science from the laying of the corner stone to the turning of the Key." The full significance of this allusion is not appreciated until, farther on in the same column, one reads the continuation of the subject, as follows:

"It is with extreme regret that we have to record a transaction so illiberal as the one which forms the subject of the following communication. We should have given it place sooner, but we wished first to make some inquiries into the correctness of the facts, and we should now have suppressed it, had we not satisfactory reasons to believe it is founded in too much truth.

"FOR THE EVENING POST

"Mr. Editor,

"As one of the spectators of the procession of last Thursday, I had observed that the French architect, Mr. Mangin, the real author of the plan of the New City Hall, did not appear, and that Mr. Macomb, alone, was carrying it in ceremony. The embarrassment in his countenance, which indeed was not unbecoming, reminded me of that charming line of Virgil . . .

"Miratur . . . novas frondes et non sua poma.

"All this, however, I explained in my own way: The real author, said I, should be here; but he may be sick, or absent, and I thought no more of the matter. However, when afterwards on reading the Inscription on the corner-stone I saw that the name of the architect was not to be found among the large list of persons concerned in the planning and erection of the edifice, who are thus to be handed down to posterity, I grew a little out of humor—Now said I to myself, it is strange that the name of him who invented the plan should be the only one missing: surely this must be a mistake; the stone is large enough, and such an injustice to a man of talents can never have been designed. The modesty of Mr. Macomb himself must, I think, be put to a severe test, thus to be held up as the only projector of the edifice. Thus reasoning, I walked along, reflecting how this omission could be repaired. The stone was laid down. There was no altering the inscription. I then 1803 May 28 recollected the famous distich of Virgil, on an occasion somewhat similar, when Barthyllus, a very indifferent poet of that age, attributed to himself certain verses of the Mantuan Bard. I immediately went home and set to work, and on a strong sheet of brass I engraved the following lines, with some alterations, and contrived the next day to have it laid in the foundation of the building, not far from the cornerstone:—

"VII. I D. MAI. A.D. MDCCCIII.
"Justis Nepotibus.
"Hanc Œdem invenit Mangin, tulir alter honores.
"Sic vos non vobis nidificatis aves
"Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes
"Sic vos non vobis vellera fertis oves
"Sic vos non vobis fertis aratra boves.

And when the resistless hand of time shall have laid low the immense fabric, our descendants, in finding the stone, will also find the brass, and thus render to the artist who planned it, the justice he had a right to expect from his contemporaries. An old Italian proverb says, é meglio tardo chè mai.

"Justice."

The letter was copied in the Am. Citizen of June 3, and in the Herald of June 4. McComb made no published answer; but in his diary, under date of June 2, he dismissed the subject, without comment, thus: "Another communication was published in the evening Post—about the Manner Mr. Mangin was treated in not having his name published as the Principal Architect." The word "Another" does not refer to any former communication in the Post on this subject, but either to The Daily Adv.'s mention of it on May 28, or to a memorandum he had previously made (on May 27) about the Post's mention of the laying of the corner-stone. See, also descrip. of Pl. 75, Vol. I; see, further, My 30 and Ag 11.

30 The "French Church Du Saint Esprit" having been repaired and altered, is consecrated as an Episcopal church by Bishop Moore. —N. Y. Herald, Je 1, 1803; Wittmeyer, Hist. Sketch of the Eglise Française, lxxvii. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932. "It was originally a Calvinist church, and continued so until Mr. Elias Desbrosses, a member of the church, left it a rich legacy, on condition of its joining the Protestant Episcopal communion, since which it has been Episcopal."—Hone's Diary, I: 113.

" About this time, a record-book was opened, and continued to be kept (possibly by Joseph Newton, the master carpenter), to contain the weekly accounts of carpenters' time in connection with the construction of the new city hall. The book now lacks a title, the front cover, and possibly a few front pages. A detached page, badly torn, gives the account of two earlier weeks (the weeks beginning May 16). The first of the bound pages has this heading: "Account of Mens time at the New [city hall] from Monday May 30th to Saturday June the [4th 1803] both Days Included." A tabulation then follows which contains, in the first column, the names of five carpenters; then six columns of check-marks showing whether, on a given day, a given carpenter worked a whole day or a fraction of a day; then a column totaling the days' work for each man; with three additional columns, for, respectively, the wages per day, total wages for the week, and the workmen's signatures in receipt of wages. The same five carpenters were employed through July 16; after that, for five weeks, nine were employed; for the rest of the year the number varied, averaging five.

In 1804, a smaller number was employed, three being the average, and all were laid off between Jan. 16 and Apr. 16.

During the next five years, the number of carpenters employed was very small, averaging not more than two; but as spring approached, in 1810, the number increased, and there were as many on the payroll as 30 during the week of Sept. 3.

The maximum number appears during the summer season of 1811 (for the first meeting of the common council in the building, see Aug. 12), when there were between 40 and 50 at work every week, with a pay-roll totalling, in some weeks, more than £150. The wages of the carpenters varied from 7s. to 16s. per day.

On Jan. 31, 1812, several entries appear of this nature: "Recd New York Jany 31, 1812 of the Building Committee by Thomas Whitchurch [the one carpenter who was continuously employed] Fifty six dollars twenty five cents for finishing room No 3 in Basement Story as pr Contract by Joseph Newton," followed by some carpenters' names. Other contracts are: for "finis[h]ing the Corner Back Room N 2 in basement Story;" for "N 1 and N 4 in Basement Story;" for "two East Corner rooms on first floor Ready for Plastering;" for "South East Corner Room on the Second floor of New City Hall ready for plastering;" for "Finis[h]ing two Stairs Which is Seventy four steps at nine Shillings pr Step;" for "finis[h]ing ready for plastering the three Rooms distinguished as Supreme Court Clarks office." A number of other receipted contracts bear a later date, F 17, 1812; they include work done in "Kitchin Pantries," in "Police office," in "District Court Room," in "Marine Court Jury Room," in "Water Closet in Larg Court Room," in "Surrogate's office," for "Pillasters in Lower Corridor," for "Pillasters in upper Corridor," for "four Frontes Pieces Making and puting up." May 30

After Mar. 20, 1813, a number of blank pages appear, implying that the building was completed so far as the work of the carpenters was concerned. In later pages, however, the tabulations begin again (the chronological sequence being imperfect) with July 6, 1815, the final record being that of Nov. 11, 1820. Many of these later accounts are for work done at other places than the city hall ("Back of Bridewell" is one place mentioned); but all appear to relate to the construction or upkeep of the buildings of the Corporation.—From the original record-book (MS.), now in the custody of the city clerk. See, further, Ag 11.

" The city pays John McComb $147.37 "for paving Streets." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 297. The original bill, dated May 23, and audited by the comptroller on this day, shows it is for paving stone and labour "at the Brick Church & Around the Fields." It is now filed in the record-room, dept. of finance, Hall of Records.

" The city pays David King $30.62 "for Beer."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 297. The original bill, audited by the comptroller, shows it is for 147 quarts of beer, 1 quart of brandy, 2 bowls of punch, 5 bottles of Madeira, and 1 bottle of sherry, furnished by King for the use of "The Corporation of the City of New York . . . in the Council Chamber," from Nov. 29, 1802, to May 26, 1803. It is filed in bundle marked "Vouchers for Sundry Bills Paid, 1803," in record-room, dept. of finance, Hall of Records.

"We understand that the statues received from Paris [by the Academy of Fine Arts] are found to be in the most admirable order. The rotunda of the Pantheon [in Greenwich St.] is preparing for their reception, and will be open for exhibition in a few weeks in a manner worthy of an institution which will, we trust, be an ornament to the city, and an honor to its founders."—Com. Adv., Je 7, 1803; Columbian Centinel, Je 25, 1803. On June 15, "A Member" wrote that among the newly arrived statues was "a beautiful Cast of a Dying Gladiator, which, for elegance of figure, masterly workmanship, and richness of hue, surpasses any, either in London or Paris. By the diligence of Mr. Livingston, our Minister at Paris, the society has received upwards of one hundred and fifty rare casts, which will be exhibited at the building (formerly the Pantheon) in a few days, which has been fitted up for their reception."—Ibid., Je 15, 1803. See Ag 12. June 7

8 The new Masonic Hall in Frankfort St. (see O 13, 1802) is consecrated and named St. John's Hall.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 13, 1803. The building was four storeys high. The ground floor contained a reading-room, saloon, and living apartments. The second and third floors were arranged and fitted for lodge purposes. The fourth floor contained the chapter and encampment rooms, these being highly ornate. Political meetings and festivals were held on the second floor.—Proc. of the Grand Lodge of N. Y. (1908), 74. The building was demolished in 1847.—L. M. R. K., III: 986.

9 It being suggested to Trinity vestry "that a part of the ground upon which it is intended to build the new Church [St. John's], may require the driving of Piles to render it sufficient," the corporation orders the building committee to "begin to dig for the foundation in such place as most probably may be of the description above mentioned, and if they find the above suggestion to be well founded, they desist from work until the sense of the Board shall be taken, but if otherwise then that they proceed to complete the foundation, as far as the sills of the windows."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Je 20.

13 Nicholas De Peyster, signing his letter "1st Captn Artillery," writes to Mayor Livingston that, as the officers of artillery have been informed that the common council "have it in contemplation to present the Regiment with a stand of Colours," he has been requested to furnish the board with the following information: "The Colours may be had at an expence of about two hundred Dollars, and if order'd immediately will be finished by Mr Savage

1803 (an artist of considerable merit) by the fourth of July . . .;" also June "The Colours at present attached to the Regiment are highly 13 valued from the circumstance of having been unfurled at the Installation of our late beloved President General Washington, and . . . it is contemplated by the Officers to place the colours under the protection of the corporation. . . ."—From the original letter in metal file No. 20, city clerk's record-room. The letter was read in common council on June 14, but the corporation then decided not to grant the new colours.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 306. See, however, Je 20.

14 The common council amends the ordinance "for the appointment of a Street Commissioner and to regulate the paving and keeping in repair and to prevent obstructions in the Streets of the City of New York," by adding a provision prohibiting the building of a bow window more than a foot beyond the front of a house.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 310.

" The common council orders that an ordinance be drawn for digging out and regulating Grand St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 310. See My 14, 1804.

" The city pays $96 for "24 Leather Hats" (doubtless firemen's hats).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 313. The original bill, dated May 18, and audited by the comptroller, is filed in the record-room of the dept. of finance, Hall of Records. As early as 1762 (q. v., D 21), they wore "leather caps."

" Evert Bancker makes a "Return of Proprietors and Occupants names and measurement of the South Side of Pearl and north side of Water Street."—From original in Bancker Coll. (box R–W, folder V–W), N. Y. P. L.

20 The committee in charge of the new church reports to Trinity vestry "that it would be improper to erect a Church on the spot contemplated [see F 10 and Je 9] from the nature of the ground." The report is approved.—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Jl 14.

" The common council orders that the street com'r "take the proper steps to affix the names to all the Streets that require it: And also the numbers to such of the houses as may be thought necessary." Mr. Carmen "has already procured a number of boards painted for this object."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 318.

" The common council orders that Ebenezer Stevens be authorised "to procure a stand of colours to be presented [on July 4, at the city hall] to the New York Regiment of Artillery in Exchange for the colours used by them at the inauguration of the late General Washington as the first President of the United States" (see Je 13).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 320. It became necessary, on May 20, 1805, for the board to again order that this resolution be carried into effect.—Ibid., IV: 2.

25 "E. Savage" advertises his "Phisiognotrace," a "curious and useful machine" which "is now compleated" and added to his "Museum, 80 Greenwich-street." He explains that "by the Phiseognotrace, profile likenesses are correctly taken in half a minute. Mr. S. has added such improvements, as justify him in asserting, that this machine is decidedly superior to any thing of the kind in the United States.—Visitors to the Museum may have their profiles traced on paper for a single cent: they will be executed, for a short time, on glass, at 50 cents. The price will soon be raised. Portraits painted in oil from 40 to 300 dolls. Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock in the morning to 9 in the evening."—Daily Adv., Je 25, 1803.

27 In an address at Columbia College, Dr. Hosack mentions that he has "at a very considerable expence, purchased from the Corporation about twenty acres of ground for the purposes of a Botanic Garden [see S 13, 1802]. . . . The Ground selected . . . is situate on the Middle Road, within four short miles of the city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 29, 1803. This "Middle Road" became Fifth Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 1005. For the Garden, see ibid., III: 946.

" The common council orders that the market committee report whether it would not be proper to introduce the Manhattan water into the Fly Market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 322.

" The common council refers to a committee a communication from the com'r of the almshouse regarding "the propriety of building a school house for the children and separating them from the adults."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 322. On July 11, the committee reported favourably, and the board appointed a committee to report a proper site, with a plan of the building.—Ibid., III: 337–38. On Nov. 12, 1804, a report from the com'rs of the almshouse "relative to the establishment of a School for the poor children" was referred to a committee.—Ibid., III: 626.

The common council orders that an application be made to July Supreme Court Justice Kent "to appoint three persons to estimate 1 the Damages sustained by this Board in consequence of the digging trenches by the Manhattan Company in the Streets of this City. And that a copy of the said Application be served by the clerk on the Manhattan Company. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 326. See Jl 6 and 18.

The ordinance for Sunday observance is amended by repealing " that part which permits "the sale of small meats on Sunday until nine o'clock in the Morning."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 328.

The common council appoints a committee, including the street "
com'r "to enquire and report tothis Board on the expediency of extending Broadway across Bowery road and in what direction and to what extent;" also "whether the owners of the ground through which the said Street is to run if extended or which of them are willing to cede to the Corporation the ground necessary to extend the said Street as far as they may think the same ought to be extended."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 329. On July 11, the committee reported the names and properties of the owners of the land and the probable value of each parcel; and the board confirmed a resolution "that it is expedient and proper to extent Broadway across the Bowery road in a direct line to the land of the heirs of Nicholas Cruger deceased and from thence through the Lands, in a direct line with the new or Middle road," provided the various owners will make concessions necessary to make the road 80 ft. wide.—Ibid., III: 338–39. This "Middle road" became Fifth Ave. —L. M R. K., III: 1005.

The "Corporation" gives "an elegant Dinner" in the city hall 4 to the vice-president of the United States (Aaron Burr). It is attended by the "late Minister at the Court of St. James" (Mr. King), by the French, Spanish, and Swedish consuls, and by a number of notable private citizens.—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1803. The dinner cost $230.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 359.

Among the elaborate celebrations planned for this day was the " following, announced in a full column advertisement: "Joseph Delacroix informs the public that the anniversary of this memorable epoch will be celebrated at Vauxhall Garden in a style superior in taste and magnificence to any thing hitherto exhibited in this city. . . .

"At six o'clock in the evening, a military company, attended by a numerous band of music, will enter the garden, and after marching through the principal avenues, will arrange themselves around the railings which inclose the statue, when artists, decorated with white and blue ribbands, provided with the necessary implements, will remove the scaffolding, and disclose the Equestrian statue of Gen. Washington, appropriately erected in a section of the garden called the Field of Mars, decorated with military trophies gilded, garlands of white roses, and sketches of the principal events of his military life. The company of volunteers will instantly fire a feu de joie, the band of music performing military airs.

"At sun-set, sixteen standards, emblematic of the United States, will be erected in the Field of Mars, the sumit of which will be illuminated by flambeaux, the band performing Yankey Doodle; when a general illumination of the garden will take place, and an elegant display of Fire-Works, far superior to any hitherto exhibited. . . .

"To describe each particular part of this extraordinary spectacle, would baffle the most able pen—and would in itself occupy a column. Suffice it to say, that the Coup de Feu will occupy a space of nearly 500 feet square—and that for Magnificence and Grandeur, 'twas never equalled in America, and (perhaps) not exceeded elsewhere; and may, without doubt, be brought forwards as the grandest Pyrotechnical Exhibition, ever presented to an American Assembly. It will be composed of 16 Radials, each 40 feet in circumference, placed in a Semi-circular form, and in perspective view, each Radial bearing the name of a State—in its centre—In the back ground a Grand Radial of Double Glory, sixty feet in circumference, with the American Eagle in full splendour—the Radial supports the Tomb of Gen. Washington, which is itself 18 feet high, and ornamented with the 16 fixed Stars. Want of room has prevented us from giving a more particular description of the 15 first Emblems—the 16th only, is alluded to in the above sketch.

"Description of the Equestrian Statue.

"This Monument, made by an able artist, is 18 feet in height, by 14 feet in length, and 10 feet base. The figure of General Wash-

1803 July 4 ington, bronzed, is as large as life, as is also the horse that bears him.

"The Pedestal is composed of sixteen columns, four at each corner, representing the several American States; in the centre is a large column seven feet in circumference, emblematic of the Constitution, which supports the Hero, pointing his sword towards the Narrows, the passage through which the British retired at the final evacuation of the United States."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1803.

This equestrian statue of Gen. Washington was the first statue of Washington erected in New York. For the next, see O 13, 1823.

A New Yorker commenting on Delacroix's entertainment, wrote to one of the papers: "Among the various public exhibitions in honour of the 4th of July, the Garden of Mr. De la Croix attracted an immense company to witness his superb Fire-works, which, according to his pompous advertisement, were to be the most wonderful of all the wonderful spectacles that ever this western world wondered at, and beyond the power of the ablest pen to describe. . . . The illuminated walks on every side were irresistibly inviting, and the lofty statue of Washington standing elegantly conspicuous in a brilliant area drew the general gaze, and reflected much credit both on the artist and his employer. The raptures of admiration were, however, reserved by all for the expected Fire-works, and every eye was turn'd, with aching vigilance, to catch the first glare of those hidden lightnings. . . . At length the signal rocket (which by the bye, was almost the only one) whizzed through the air, and lo! the Fire-works began:—A most terrible crackling was heard by every ear, a great light was seen by every eye, and, above all, mighty puffs of brimstone smoke were snuff'd up by every nostril; this however was very patiently endured, because every thing that had yet been displayed was considered as a mere prelude and foil to the astonishing spectacle alluded to in Mr. De la Croix's monstrous advertisement. But alas! it was soon pretty evident that all was over; and now, instead of the bursts of applause, nothing was to be heard but the exclamations of disappointment.

"Thus concluded these stupendous emblematic spectacles, which, in the opinion of four thousand good natured spectators, composed altogether one ludicrous emblem of puerile conceit and insignificant contrivance, the like of which, was, truly enough 'never before seen on this side of the Atlantic'."—Ibid., Jl 8, 1803.

On Aug. 8, Delacroix announced that the Washington statue would be exhibited a second time on Aug. 11.—Ibid., Ag 8, 1803. The statue was evidently similar to the one proposed by the Society of the Cincinnati (see D 15, 1802). As described on Aug. 8, both horse and rider were bronzed.—Ibid., Ag 8, 1803. The place of exhibit was Delacroix's Vauxhall on the Bayard place (see My 1, 1798, etc.); not his third Vauxhall, on the Astor property, as stated in L. M. R. K., III: 981, and in Bayles' Old Taverns of N. Y., 401. See Ja 30, 1804.

6 The street com'r reports on the subject of the streets which have been injured "by the carrying of pure and wholesome water through them." He says that "the greater part of the Streets in the City require repaving," but those extending in a direction with the North and East Rivers require immediate attention. "There can be no doubt many parts of those streets have been materially injured by laying the aqueducts of the Manhattan Company." Some could not be injured by that operation. "The lateral pipes have in general done more injury to the Streets than the mains, but for which the company have never considered themselves responsible, as they were laid at the expence and risk of the person taking the water." The com'r recommends a certain division of the expense for repairing the streets, to be paid by the company, and the rest by the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 333–34. See Jl 18.

" The common council refers to the health committee a petition of James Quackenbush and others "that their works for the manufactory of Morocco Leather may be permitted to stand."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 336.

11 Mr. Boyle, in a letter to the common council, requests the board to purchase his painting of John Jay.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 339. Cf. Mr 19, 1804.

" In a report of the street com'r regarding the regulation of the Bowery Lane and Grand St., he recommends that the surplus earth that is removed "be carried to the most convenient low grounds belonging to the Corporation in or near the Collect," and that for this removal the city be charged in the assessment at the rate of five cents a load (cf. My 12).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 341. See D 12. July 11

" The common council amends the law for Sunday observance, due to "the practice of swimming or playing and sporting in the water of the North or Hudson and East River by vast numbers of the youth and many of those of more advanced age." This has become so prevalent a custom on Sunday at all hours, "to the great annoyance and detestation of all decent persons who reside in the neighbourhood of said Rivers or pass through the streets near the same," that "so indecent a practice ought not to be suffered to prevail." The amendment prohibits this custom between 6 a. m. and 8 p. m. anywhere in the water or on the shore between "Bestavers Killitie" and Corlaers Hook, with penalties and regulations to enforce it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 341–42. This apparently refers only to naked bathing; although Sunday observance was strictly regulated.

" The common council pays $105.38 for a standard of weights and a yard measure, recently imported.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 343.

12 The common council advertises the "Goerck"-Mangin map for sale at $4 through John Reynolds, copper-plate printer, 13 Nassau St.—Daily Adv., Jl 12, 1803.

14 Trinity vestry resumes "the Consideration of the proper spot for building a new Church" (see Je 9 and 20), and resolves "that the same be built on the East side of Hudson square in the Center of the Lots belonging to the Board and that the Committee proceed to lay the foundation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The corner-stone of the new church was laid on Sept. 8 (q.v.).

The vestry also approves of the sale of a lot to Aaron Burr at the corner of Church and Murray Sts.—Ibid.

18 The president and directors of the Manhattan Co. communicate to the common council resolutions passed by them on Sept. 24 and Oct. 1, 1801, regarding the repair of injuries done to streets in laying pipes and conduits; also a resolution of July 11, 1803, expressing their willingness to meet a committee of the common council on the subject.

At the same time the board receives Justice Kent's warrant appointing three persons to estimate the damages sustained by the city, requiring that they report their findings to him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 345. On July 25, the board resolved to send to the president and directors a copy of Justice Kent's appointment of these persons, with a notice that they had consented to serve and would "proceed therein without delay."—Ibid., III: 355. See Jl 25, and N 24.

" Nathaniel Budd (as on My 9) having again petitioned the common council on July 11 "that a new Ferry may be established across the North River to New Jersey," the committee appointed to consider the subject reports that Budd already has secured a New Jersey legislative act enabling him to establish a ferry from his wharf between Powles Hook and Hobuck on that shore, and that he has expended about $2,000 or $2,500 for wharf and boats, and contemplates other improvements; and that he is willing to run two sail boats to one run by Mr. Holdron, the lessee of the present ferry to Powles Hook. Other details of the arrangement are suggested by the committee, and the common council adopts the entire proposal to establish the new ferry, the place of landing in New York being the Cortlandt St. slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 274, 347–49, 355.

20 Jerome Bonaparte, youngest brother of Napoleon, arrives at Norfolk, Va.,, from Martinique.—Sergeant, Jerome Bonaparte. The Burlesque Napoleon, 55. See Jl 29.

21 A correspondent writes to one of the papers: "Not long since I discharged my tea-water man, and had a Manhattan Cock introduced into my cellar, and for the first ten days I was highly pleased with it, as it afforded me good water—But, alas! for the last fourteen days, I have turned my cock repeatedly, but nothing comes from it—I have therefore been obliged to use the water which comes from the pump opposite the Marshall's door in Pearl street. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 21, 1803.

25 The common council appoints a committee to attend the persons appointed by Justice Kent (see Jl 18) to estimate the damages caused by laying water pipes, and to provide suitable accommodations for them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 355–56. See N 24.

29 Thomas Barclay, British consul-general in New York, writes to Lord Howkesbury in London advising him of the movements of 1803 July 29 Jerome Bonaparte (see Jl 20), who is endeavouring to evade the British naval ships and get home to France from the West Indies by way of the United States. As a guide to the officers of the British navy in apprehending him, Barclay gives a careful description of Bonaparte, who "appears to be from twenty to twenty three years of age [he was really not quite nineteen years old], of a slender make and sallow complexion, about 5 feet 6 or 7 Inches in height,—His hair is cropped, black and smooth, but at times he adds a que, and powder." Two companions and a servant of Bonaparte are also described as to their personal appearances.—Rives, Selections From the Corresp. of Thomas Barclay (N. Y., 1894), 149. Thomas Barclay was a notable personage in New York in the Revolutionary and post-Revolutionary periods. He was the eldest child of the Rev. Henry Barclay, rector of Trinity Church and a graduate of Kings (Columbia) College. In both the Revolution and the war of 1812, he took the British side. From 1799 to 1812 he was British consul-general at New York, and from 1823 until his death in 1830, he lived here as a private citizen.—Ibid., 410. Bonaparte came to New York on Nov. 19 (q. v.).

30 Aaron Burr, writing to his daughter Theodosia, says: "I am negotiating for the possession of Richmond Hill, by exchanging with Colonel F. for my house in town. . . . In the sale of this estate I reserve the house and a due portion of the ground about it; yet a good price will tempt me to part with it."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, II: 237.

Aug. 8 The common council receives a committee report on a proposed regulation of Vesey St. slip, and orders that it be filled in, and that when this is done "the Corporation will take measures to have a handsome market house erected thereon in a Line with the other Market house between that and Greenwich Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 368–69. On Feb. 20, 1804, the board ordered that the street com'r "report upon the propriety of filling in Vesey Street Slip and also on the propriety of having a Market for Fish established at the end of the said Street."—Ibid., III: 468.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council "a diagram of the ground necessary for a Street to be sixty feet wide from Chatham Street to the angle near the Stone Bridge in Broadway through which the projected Tunnel is intended to pass from the East to the North River" (see My 23). In his report on the subject, he says: "The proprietors of this ground are in general averse to fix a price for the same but it may probably be estimated at about 30,000 dollars. The proprietors of the ground between the angle above named and the North river do not appear to have any objection to cede to the Corporation a Street 60 feet wide for this purpose, with a proviso they be exonerated from any part of the expence attending the extension of the Street to Chatham Street. It would probably be most equitable and advisable not to accept of a gratuitous cession of land from any of the proprietors but to let the whole be taken and valued according to law, and the expence thereof made a joint charge on the proprietors of the immediate adjoining Lots from Chatham Street to the North river

"The expence of the tunnel including three gates for the purpose occasionally of scowering it out, may be estimated at $75,000. This expence might with propriety be charged on all that part of the City from whence the water descends to the tunnel, which will comprise about 500 acres, admitting an average of 15 lots to the acre. the expence will fall on 7500 lots, which will average ten dollars p. lot—a very moderate Sum considering the indispensable nature of the object." The commissioner recommends the following resolutions: "Resolved that a Street Sixty feet wide be laid out and opened from Chatham Street to the North River according to a map thereof made by Charles Loss City Surveyor, for the purpose of extending a Tunnel through the same for the draining that part of the City, and that the expence thereof be assessed and levied on the proprietors of the adjacent Lots Except so much thereof as shall be charged to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City for the removal of buildings according to Law.

"Resolved that the Street Commissioner pursue the proper measures to carry the same into immediate effect.

"Resolved, as soon as the title for the said Street shall be vested in the Corporation, that a Tunnel to be built of brick, and to be Six feet in diameter in the inside, shall be extended from the North to the East River through the said Street and Rosevelt Street, and that the expence thereof (to be paid in two annual instalments) shall be charged on the proprietors of all the Lots in such Streets as may be drained in the said Tunnel, and in such ratios as the assessors may deem equitable." Consideration of the report is postponed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 369–71. See Ap 16, 1804.

Aug. 8 "It having been represented to this board by the Health Committee that the House and grounds at Bellevue have become necessary as a Hospital for the Sick during the present season [because of an epidemic of yellow fever], and that it is proper immediately to organize such establishment," the common council orders "that M^r Seton be requested to remove from that place without delay in order that immediate arrangements may be made to establish the Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 371, 372.

" The common council orders payments of $10,000 to the supt. of the almshouse, and $1,000 for the use of the health committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 371.

9 Mayor Livingston recommends that the inhabitants residing between the Old Slip and Fly-Market, and south of Pearl St., evacuate their homes immediately.—Boston Gaz., Ag 18, 1803.

11 Among the lots which the common council orders be filled in is "The Alley commonly called Stoughtons Alley to the Eastward of Coenties Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 372–73.

" The common council orders "that any of the Citizens who think proper to remove on acc't of the Malignant fever may make use of any of the Common Lands for the purpose of erecting temporary habitations until the 1^st December next under the direction of the Health Committee."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 373. See S 13.

" The common council advances $10,000 for the use of the health committee from time to time as needed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 373.

" The common council authorises the mayor to issue his warrant for $10,000 in favour of the building committee of the new city hall (warrant No. 607).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 373. From time to time other advances were made until the work was finished. On Aug. 26, McComb wrote in his diary: "Removed my family to Bloomfield, as the City was getting very sickly;" Sept. 3, "Gave a Note to Alderman Barker stating that the difference between Marble and brown stone would not exceed $43,000;" Sept. 17, "Ald^n Oothout call'd on me at the Building & expressed his fears that they had done wrong in reducing the depth of the Building, & wished to know wither [sic] it could not be easily altered, as on reflection he thought the Rooms would be too Narrow. I told him it was to [sic] late, without making a vast alteration in foundation, & that I had always regretted that he among the rest had insisted on reducing the Plan." See, further, S 29.

12 "The Rotunda of the Circus, containing the collection of Statues imported from Paris [see Je 7], is now opened for exhibition. . . . We understand that the occurrence of the prevailing epidemic has prevented the academy from being opened in the manner contemplated."—Com. Adv., Ag 12, 1803. See D 21.

13 A proclamation has been issued by the mayor in a handbill, "ordering all the inhabitants, residing South East of Pine street, to quit their habitations as speedily as possible." The measure is made necessary by the fever which is spreading fast in that quarter.—Boston Gaz., Ag 15, 1803.

15 The whole city of New York is alarmed by the extent of the yellow fever. It is considered due to impure air. Nevertheless, little attention is paid "to the dead cats which lie in swarms in every part of the city." There is neglect in keeping the city clean, although the corporation has exerted itself to effect it.—Boston Gaz., Ag 18, 1803.

" The common council offers extra compensation to watchmen of the districts where they are exposed to "extraordinary hazard" during the malignant fever.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 374.

The meetings of the board are suspended on account of the fever.—Ibid., III: 375. See, further, S 29.

16 Bellevue Hospital is opened for the reception of fever patients.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 17, 1803.

24 The New York Gazette temporarily discontinues publication on account of an attack of yellow fever among the employees and in the family of Mr. Lang.—Eve. Post, Ag 24, 1803.

25 The fever "is rapidly encreasing," and the inhabitants are "flying in every direction." One third of the city is evacuated, "and where, a few weeks since, the din of labour and commerce was loudest, is now as solitary as a desert."—Boston Gaz., Ag 25, 1803. The Board of Health report shows that, on Aug. 22, there were 7 deaths and 21 new cases; Aug. 23, 6 deaths and 28 new cases; Aug. 24, 6 deaths and 12 new cases.—Ibid., Ag 29, 1803. See, further, S 11.

1803 Aug. 26 It is resolved to fence in the burial ground of St. Mark's Church "with neat palings in front and boards in their original state on the sides and rear."—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 124.

29 "The number of inhabitants who have removed from the city, since the fever broke out, is supposed to be about 40,000."—Boston Gaz., Ag 29, 1803.

Sept. 1 D. Fleischman begins running a line of stages between New York, Hellgate, and "Haerlem," starting on four days of the week from Mechanic Hall, and stopping enroute at Smith's tavern, "The Sign of the Swan," six miles out, for the Hellgate passengers. On the same days, stages start from his stage-house at "Haerlem," next to Marrener's Tavern, and stop at Smith's on the way to town.—N. Y. Herald, S 3, 1803.

8 The corner-stone of St. John's Church is laid, "on the east side of Hudson's Square," by Bishop Moore.—N. Y. Herald, S 10, 1803. The site was on the east side of Varick St. between Beach and Laight Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 933. The church was completed in 1807 (q. v., My 14 and Je 7). See also F 9, 1804.

11 An official report shows that, on Sept. 8, there were 9 deaths from the fever and 20 new cases; on Sept. 9, 10 deaths and 26 new cases; Sept. 10, 3 deaths and 22 new cases; Sept. 11, 8 deaths and 31 new cases.—Boston Gaz., S 15, 1803.

13 " . . . the temporary buildings erected on the Commons, about three and a half miles from the city, for the accommodation of the poorer class of citizens who inhabit those parts of the town where the fever is most prevalent, are now ready for their reception, where they will be accommodated at the public expense."—Daily Adv., S 13, 1803.

16 The custom-house is removed to Greenwich opposite the state prison.—Com. Adv., S 16, 1803.

20 A New York doctor writes: "Our city has received greater damage this year than in any former season of Yellow Fever; the wealthy early abandoned the city, and the poor are daily falling victims to its ravages. The corporation early opened Bellevue, erected commodious sheds four miles from the city, to accommodate the poor who were still free from the disease, and appointed four physicians to attend the sick poor of the city . . . Better than one half of the citizens . . . have removed to the country." —Aurora Gen. Adv., S 29, 1803.

29 On Sept. 29, McComb's statement "concerning the difference of expense between Stone and Philadelphia marble for the front and sides" of the city hall is received by the common council and referred to the building committee with directions to enquire "whether the marble can be procured and the probable expense." —M. C. C., 1784–1831, III: 376. On the following day McComb was directed to go at once to the quarry where "good White Marble" was "expected to be had," etc.—McComb's Diary. He visited the White Marble quarries at White Marsh, about 13 miles from Philadelphia, and reported to the committee on Oct. 10. The next day he wrote to Johnson & Stevens, owners of the white marble quarry at West Stockbridge, asking the same terms as had been offered at Philadelphia ("88/100 per foot in Blocks"). The building committee reported to the common council on Oct. 24 McComb's former findings, that the difference of expense between marble and brownstone would not exceed $43,750, including contingent charges; they "rest satisfied the same is the result of the most scrupulous correctness," and add: "When it is considered that the City of New York from its inviting situation and increasing opulence stands unrivalled, when we reflect that as a commercial City we claim a superior standing, our imports and exports exceeding any other in the United States, We certainly ought in this pleasing state of things to possess at least one public edifice which shall vie with the many now erected in Philadelphia, and elsewhere. It should be remembered that this Building is intended to endure for ages, that it is to be narrowly inspected not only by the scrutinizing eyes of our own Citizens, but of every scientific stranger, and in an architectural point of view it in fact is to give a character to our City. The additional expense of marble will be fully counterbalanced when we recollect that from the Elegance and situation of this Building the public property on the Broadway and Collect will much increase in value, and that the same influence will be extended to property far beyond these limits and that in the course of a very few Years it is destined to be in the center of the wealth and population of this City. a Building so constructed will do honour to its founders and be commensurate with our flourishing situation. Under these impressions the Building Committee strongly recommend that the front and two end views of the new hall be built with marble." (Signed) "Wynant Van Zandt, Jr." A resolution was passed, accordingly, that the committee take steps to construct the front and two ends with marble.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 379–80. On Oct. 24, a warrant was issued by the mayor to the chairman of the building committee for $5,000.—Ibid., III: 383. For a summary of expense for erecting the building, vide infra.

Sept. 29

They decided on Oct. 27 (see McComb's Diary), that McComb should go to West Stockbridge and "try to procure the marble at the price of the Philadelphia." On Oct. 29, he recorded: "This day the Hon^{e} Dewit Clinton was Sworn into the Mayors Office— I went down to the City Hall to receive my instructions relative to my Journey & had the pleasure to take a Glass of Wine with the Members of the Corporation, after that walked up with some of the Gentlemen of the Building [Committee] & received directions from the B. Committee to have the walls covered for this season as soon as possible—The New Mayor took no notice of any of us concerned about the Building. I gave directions to M^{r} Newton M^{r} Smith & M^{r} Stunback to level up the walls, to lay on the Bond timber all round on the outside walls & then to begin on Monday morning to cover in as speedily as possible." McComb saw "Mr. Stevens of West Stockbridge" and reported that he had agreed with him for the quantity of marble required at 106 cents pr. foot delivered here, if the committee should like the sample he had brought down." To make their choice the committee met on Nov. 2 "at M^{r} Knoxes Shop to see worked Samples of Phil^{a} of Newele Hooks white Marble & the Sample of Johnson & Stevens—the last they preferred." They agreed with Mr. Stevens for a quantity of the marble at $1.06 a cubic foot delivered, and directed McComb to go to Stockbridge to close the contract.

McComb then opened a record-book which he labelled Orders for Marble, New City-Hall (in the N. Y. H. S.). On the first page is his signature and the date "First November, 1803." It begins with "First Bill—Copy of a Bill [or order] for Marble for the New City Hall—sent to Mess^{rs} Johnson & Stevens at West Stockbridge on 3^{d} November, 1803." It gives the number and sizes of blocks of marble ordered, and "Remarks" indicating for what part of the building each block is intended. "Second Bill," "Third Bill," etc., follow to July 10, 1807. For further progress on the city hall, see N 14.

Oct. 15 "A large bell to supply the place of that which fell and broke in St. Paul's Chapel last winter [see D 5, 1802], has been received by the Jupiter, from London, and suspended in the steeple of that Church during the last week.—It is from the celebrated foundery of Thomas Mears, (late Lester, Pack and Chapman) White Chapel, London, and weighs 2500 lbs."—N. Y. Herald, O 19, 1803.

19 Edward Livingston resigns as mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 378. On Oct. 24, the common council presented him an address of approbation for his conduct in that office. It appears that he contracted a "dangerous illness" in administering to the relief of the citizens, but recovered.—Ibid., III: 381–82. He replied on Oct. 29.—Ibid., III: 383. For his successor, see O 29.

29 The governor, with the consent of the council of appointment, names De Witt Clinton mayor in place of Edward Livingston, resigned. He takes the oath of office; and his commission is proclaimed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 384. Clinton held the office until March 16, 1807 (q. v.).

" There were 606 deaths from the malignant fever in this city from July 29 to Oct. 29.—Daily Adv., O 31, 1803. Cf. Nov. 1.

Nov. 1 The board of health announces that the citizens can safely return to their homes, but recommends that the houses be cleaned and aired before being reoccupied.—Columbian Centinel, N 2, 1803. The number of cases during the epidemic was 1,628, and of deaths, 596.—Ibid., N 5, 1803.

5 The publishers of the daily newspapers published in New York form a combination to raise the price of the papers. The papers are The Daily Advertiser, Mercantile Advertiser, Daily Gazette, American Citizen, Commercial Advertiser, and Evening Post. It is unanimously agreed, at a meeting at Lovett's Hotel, that $8.00 per annum, now paid as the price of subscription for a daily paper, is inadequate to meet the expenses of paper, printing, and publication, and that it shall be increased to $10.00 after Jan. 1, 1804; also that the price of papers issued twice a week for country circulation shall be $4.00 per annum on and after that date.—True American (Trenton), D 5, 1803.

1803 Nov. 7 The common council appoints a committee "to inquire and report to this Board what applications if any are necessary to be made to the Legislature . . . for the enacting or amendment of Laws relative to the rights of the Mayor, Aldermen & Commonalty of the City of New York and for enabling this board better to govern this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 387. The committee made its report on Nov. 14 (text not entered in minutes), but consideration of it was postponed.—Ibid., III: 388.

On Nov. 21, when the report was entered in full and acted upon, it appeared that two questions were considered. One was whether the city is proprietor "of so much of the Slips both on the East and North river as are formed by extending Piers and bridges into the Rivers beyond the permanent line, or Seventy feet street, and entitled to the slipage or wharfage arising from the sides of such piers as adjoin and form a continuation of the public slips." The report explains this difficulty in detail. The committee recommends that application be made to the legislature to explain and amend the "Act to regulate the buildings streets wharves and Slips in the City of New York."

The other question related to the blending of tavern and grocers' licenses for the sale of liquors, which was complained of on Feb. 14 (q. v.). It appeared that the practice "of granting to the same person at the same time the excise or licence to retail strong or spirituous liquors under five gallons to be drank out of the House of the vendor and a licence as a Tavern keeper or to retail Liquors to be drank in the house of the vendor is attended with evil consequences;" as "thereby the small grocers become dram shops where servants and the lower orders of the community are supplied with strong drink at a cheap rate and they are brought into habits of intoxication and their morals corrupted. And the practice is considered by the respectable grocers of this City who retail under five gallons to be drank out of their houses as improper and degrading to their characters. . . ." The committee recommends that application be made to the legislature for a law "to prevent any person at the same time from having a licence to retail strong or spirituous liquors under five gallons to be drank out of the house of the vendor and to keep a tavern or to retail strong or spirituous liquors to be drank in the house of the vendor."

The board confirmed the entire report and directed Richard Harison, the board's counsel, to draw the necessary petition to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 397–99. On Jan. 30, 1804, petitions with drafts of the proposed acts were approved and ordered to be transmitted to the legislature.—Ibid., III: 453–54. On Feb. 6, however, the application to the legislature on these subjects was ordered expunged by the board.—Ibid., III: 459.

14 A committee reports regarding "the situation of the lot on which the barracks are erected." On the committee's recommendation, the board orders "that the Superintendant of the Alms house take immediate measures for the removal and sale of the buildings lately erected on the said Lot by the health Committee and that the Comptroller thereupon cause the Counterpart of the said lease to be executed in conformity to his [the lessee's] agreement."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 389.

" Jos. F. Mangin having petitioned the common council on Oct. 24, the comptroller reports that there is due him a balance of $100 "for making the large map of the City." This is paid.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 391. See also ibid., III: 403; Journal B and Ledger B, 1794–1809, in record-room, finance dept., Hall of Records. For earlier payments, see S 26, 1802.

" The common council orders payment of Geo. Hallock's bill of $385 for "building & painting a boat for floating Engine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 392. By Feb. 15, 1804 (q. v.), the floating engine was ready for use.

" The common council accepts and confirms the contract with Johnson & Stevens for marble (see S 29), and requests the mayor to affix his seal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 388. McComb went to Stockbridge on Nov. 18, and found the quarry could be bought for $5,000. On his return he learned that the workmen on the building were all discharged, "and the Master Workmen a little out of temper," and he tried to have the stone-cutters employed again, as they might soon be dispersed and unavailable when wanted. He reported Johnson & Stevens' desire for certain necessary advance payments, and explained also about the poor condition of the roads until the middle of April, the need of "333 [sic] four-horse teams," etc.—McComb's Diary. On Dec. 5, the building committee reported to the common council the progress of the work: That every department was organized soon after their appointment; that at the present season of the year all the workmen that could be dispensed with had been paid off and discharged, only the stone-cutters being retained through the winter; that the basement storey was now built up eight feet above the level of the street and was ready to receive "the first floor of Timber," and "the walls are all covered to resist the weather;" and that the amount expended to date was £18,730:12:4 (but that only £18,644:3:1 had been received).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 409–11; and the same in Daily Adv., D 17, 1803. This report being in pounds, shillings, and pence is difficult to tabulate and check with the records of payments in dollars and cents voted for the use of the building committee from time to time. In 1803, these payments through Dec. 12, were: Aug. 11, $10,000; Oct. 24, $5,000; Nov. 28, $1,500; Dec. 5, $796.46, and $216.15, and, Dec. 12, $3,000, making a total of $20,512.61.—Ibid., III: 373, 383, 403–4, 409–11, 414, 419. On Dec. 13, McComb advanced (to Johnson & Stevens) $500 of his own money.—McComb's Diary. See, further, D 19. Nov. 14

The ship "Confederacy," of between 400 and 500 tons burden, is ready to be launched "from the yard of Messrs. Adam and Noah Brown, Corlaers-Hook."—Daily Adv., N 17, 1803. 17

Part of the Richmond Hill property is sold to John Jacob Astor. —Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix II, pp. 8–9. See also descrip. of Pl. 55-a, I: 417. 18

Jerome Bonaparte (see Jl 20 and 29) arrives in New York from Baltimore.—Letter from Thos. Barclay to Vice-Admiral Sir Andrew Mitchell, in Rives's Selections from the Corresp. of Thos. Barclay (N. Y., 1894), 154. Bonaparte left on Nov. 30.—Ibid., 155. See also N 22, 1803 and My 4, 1804. 19

The comptroller's account "for monies expended during the late Epidemic" shows $14,986.83 spent by him to meet that emergency, out of an allowance of $15,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 393–94. 21

The account of the supt. of the almshouse shows that he spent, in consequence of the epidemic, $16,534.47, of which the corporation advanced $11,500. Deducting his receipts from all sources, the board owes him a balance of $3,378.45. A warrant is issued to pay him.—Ibid., III: 396.

" A number of inhabitants of East Georges St. having stated in a petition to the common council that they "are incommoded by a number of Houses of ill fame," the board directs the mayor "to take such order thereon as the Law directs."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 393. See L. M. R. K., III: 1000.

" As in earlier years, the common council elects a representative to vote on the part of the board at the next election for twelve directors of the Manhattan Co.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 399.

Aaron Burr writes from New York to Theodosia: "Roger Morris's place, the large handsome house on the height beyond Mrs. Watkins, is for sale. I can get it for Richmond Hill with four acres. Shall I exchange? R. M.'s has one hundred and thirty acres. . . . 22

"Jerome Bonaparte [see N 19] is here, and he will keep me three days to dine him. We have exchanged visits, but have not yet met."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, II: 246.

Justice Kent's appointees of July 18 (q. v.) assess at $6,881.14 the damages done by the Manhattan Co. to the streets in laying "conduit pipes." The common council orders that the board's counsel present this report to the supreme court for confirmation; that the commissioners be allowed $100 each for services and expenses, and the masons who assisted them the same amount, and that the mayor issue his warrants for payment.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 400. 24

The common council, on Nov. 14, appointed a committee for the celebration on this day of the anniversary of the evacuation of the city by the British forces.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 390, 404, 414. 25

The committee to whom was referred certain reports of the street commissioner on the subject of a plan for the future streets in the vicinity of the city reports that the map of the city, "lately printed and ready for sale [the Goerck-Mangin map—see Pl. 70, Vol. I], contains many inaccuracies and designates streets which have not been agreed to by the Corporation and which it would be improper to adopt, and which might tend to lead the proprietors of Land adjacent to such streets so laid down into error." It is resolved "that the Street Commissioner be authorized to return the money paid by each subscriber for the said map who shall 28

1803 Nov. 28 apply for the same in conformity to the above report, and to repay to any person who may have already purchased the said map whether he subscribed for the same or not his purchase money and receive back the Map so purchased; and that the Street Commissioner be requested to endeavour to recall as many of the said maps as have been sold, and either return the person the purchase money and keep the map or return him two dollars thereof and deliver him back the map with such explanation upon it as is before contemplated; and that the Street Commissioner report to this board at the next meeting thereof what shall be proper to be printed and pasted on the face of such copies of the said map as may hereafter be sold or distributed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 404.

"A number of these Maps were sold by the Corporation with the Title of 'A Plan and Regulation of the City of New York made from Actual Survey by Casmer Th. Goerck and Josep Fr Mangin City Surveyor by order of the Common Council and Protracted by Joseph Fr Mangin, Anno Domini 1800.'

"Some alterations were afterwards made on the Map and instead of the above Title a label was substituted in these Words 'Plan of the City of New York, drawn from actual Survey by Carmer Th Goerck and Joseph F. Mangin City Surveyors. This Plan shows the Wards of the City as lately altered by the Legislature, and designated with Accuracy most of the Streets and Wharves and Slips &c a lying to the South Ward of a line beginning at the North River at Watts Street, thence extending thro' said Street to Hudson Street, thence to Leonard Street thence to Broad Way, from thence in a line to Bayard Street, thro this Street to Bowery Road, thence to Bullock Street, and thro' this Street to the East River. Except Brannon and Spring Streets, none of the Streets to the North Ward of the line above mentioned have been ceded to the Corporation or have been approved and opened under their authority; they are therefore to be considered, subject to such future Arrangements as the Corporation may deem best calculated to promote health, introduce Regularity and conduce to the conveniency of the City. New York Nov^{r} 1803'."—From the opinion of counsel, ibid., IV: 399–400. See also Pl. 70, Vol. I. See, further, Ja 3, 1804.

Dec. 1 The common council repeals the law for restraining dogs from running at large, which was passed on April 18.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 406. It was originally passed on Feb. 28 (q.v.).

" The land adjoining the old pottersfield (near the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads) which was granted to the state in 1797 (q.v., Jl 3) for an arsenal not having been used for that purpose, the common council directs the comptroller "to prepare the draft of a proper application to the Legislature for the reconveyance of said ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 406. See Ja 23, 1804.

3 The Presbyterian Church in E. Rutgers St. was appointed on Nov. 1 as the place in the Seventh Ward for the election of charter officers. On election day, Col. Rutgers refused to permit "his Church" to be used as a polling-place, claiming the common council had no right to order the election held there. He provided, instead, a near-by tenement. The board now holds that the election held in this tenement is void.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 385, 406, 407–8. A new election was ordered to be held on Dec. 13 at the house of Dan. Tier, innkeeper, in the Bowery.—Ibid., III: 409.

5 The common council pays Peter R. Maverick $69 for "printing copies of City Map."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 414. See also My 9.

6 The common council appoints a committee "to draw and report rules for the government of the board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 415. On Dec. 3, 1804, a committee was appointed to amend the rules, and the board ordered that the clerk have 100 copies of the new rules printed for the use of the members.—Ibid., III: 646.

8 Trinity vestry orders "that with respect to the Lots adjoining Hudson Square agreed to be leased for ninety nine years the Clerk be at Liberty to leave out the clause usually inserted in the Leases of the Corporation to restrain alienations or that he give a general licence of Alienation to the Tenants as he may deem most adviseable."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

9 The clergymen of different denominations having agreed to recommend to their congregations the observance of Wed., Dec. 21, as a day of humiliation, thanksgiving, and prayer, in view of "the dispensations of Divine Providence towards the City during the late season," and having communicated this purpose to the common council (by a letter signed "John H. Livingston. Chairman"), the board passes a resolution recommending the inhabitants to observe that day in the manner stated, and to abstain from all employments inconsistent therewith.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 415–16. Dec. 9

" The freeholders of Harlem petition the common council "that the public roads may be properly laid out and opened through the Commons belonging to them." Referred to the street com'r.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 416. On Jan. 30, 1804, the street com'r reported that the petition (made by Samuel Bradhurst in behalf of himself and others) said that they contemplated dividing the Commons into small allotments, and desired that the public highways "should be run in as straight lines as the ground will admit of." For the com'r's report and the board's action thereon, see Ja 30, 1804.

10 In answer to her father's letter of Nov. 22 (q.v.) regarding the advisability of exchanging the Richmond Hill House for that of Roger Morris, Theodosia Burr Alston writes: "Richmond Hill will, for a few years to come, be more valuable than Morris's, and to you, who are so fond of town, a place so far from it would be useless. So much for my reasoning on one side; now for the other. Richmond Hill has lost many of its beauties, and is daily losing more. If you mean it for a residence, what avails its intrinsic value? If you sell part, you deprive it of every beauty save the mere view. Morris's has the most commanding view on the island. It is reputed to be indescribably beautiful. The grounds, are pretty. How many delightful walks can be made on one hundred and thirty acres! How much of your taste displayed! In ten or twenty years hence, one hundred and thirty acres on New-York Island will be a principality; and there is to me something stylish, elegant, respectable, and suitable to you in having a handsome country-seat. So that upon the whole, I vote for Morris's."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, II: 252–53.

12 The common council appoints a committee of health to report plans and recommendations for preserving the health of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 418.

" The comptroller presents to the common council "his account of receipts and expenditures for earth carted into the Collect." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 418. The figures of this report are not entered in the minutes for this first year's expenses in this important work; but we are able to make a summary of warrants issued in 1803 to pay for it, as follows: May 23, $22.14 (to various cartmen); May 30, $15.95 (to other cartmen); June 7, $250 (to Street Com'r Jos Browne), and $300 (on Ruckel contract); June 14, $500 (to Comptroller Strong); July 21, $500 (to Strong); Aug. 11, $300 (to Ruckel); Sept. 29, $1,000 (to Strong); Oct. 24, $1,000 (to Strong); Nov. 14, $300 (to Ruckel); Dec. 12, $1,167.35 (to Strong), and $300 (to Ruckel); total, $5,655.44.—Ibid., III: 292, 297, 305, 313, 359, 373, 377, 383, 392, 419. See also My 12, 1803. For further advances and payments made by authorisation of the common council, see D 31, 1804. For the next mention of the subject of filling the Collect, see Ap 3, 1804.

19 The common council refers to the street com'r a petition of Rem Rapalje and others requesting the board "to accept of a grant of the road leading from the Abingdon road to the house of John L Norton, and to widen the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 423–24.

" The common council extends the time for filling in "Republican Alley."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 424.

" The common council appoints a committee "to inquire and report to the Board the present state of the public grounds near the government house which were reserved by the Legislature for public purposes, particularly whether any, and if any what individuals have taken possession thereof or any part thereof, and by what authority, and to what use the same is now appropriated and whether any and what application is necessary to be made to the Legislature respecting the said ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 425. See D 23. The committee made a report on Jan. 30, 1804, and was directed to draft a petition to the legislature asking for a lease in perpetuity of the whole property including the government house.—Ibid., III: 456. See F 6, 1804.

" The year closes with the appointment, on Dec. 19, of a new building committee, on the retirement of Aldermen Oothout (chair-1803 Dec. 19 man) and Barker, who was appointed on March 14 (q. v.), the new members being Aldermen De La Montagnie and Morton; while Alderman Van Zandt is made the new chairman.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 424. Payments for the use of the building committee were hereafter recorded as given to John Bogert, who was chairman of the standing committee of public repairs (ibid., III: 438). See, further, 1804.

21 "The New York Academy of Arts is now open. . . . In the rotunda of the Pantheon [see Ag 12], the young student may pass his hours in uninterrupted study, . . . In addition to the statues and busts which at present adorn the Pantheon, will be shortly added, correct copies of those works of art which formerly adorned the Italian galleries."—Daily Adv., D 21, 1803. See N 19, 1804.

23 Clinton writes to Simeon De Witt, the surveyor-general:

"By an Act passed 16th March 1790 [q. v.]. It is declared That Fort George and the Lands adjoining thereto shall never be sold or appropriated for any private purpose whatever

"In violation of this Act a Pot ash store has been erected from Street to Street in the rear of the Government House and as it is alledged under color of an act passed last Session authorizing the Surveyor General to Lease certain Lands of the State contiguous to Arsenals and Military Stores

"This erection has excited a considerable sensation in this City and it would afford me great pleasure if you would put it in my power to represent to the Corporation the proceedings (if any) in relation thereto that have really taken place under your direction as they talk of an application to the Legislature on the subject" (see D 19).—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 238. See F 6, 1804.

26 The street com'r reports to the common council "a plan of the Common Sewers of the City of London, communicated by Rufus King Esquire our late Minister at the Court of Saint James." The board orders that it be referred to the com. of health, and that the mayor be requested "to express the thanks of the board to Mr. King for his communication."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 426.

31 "The lovers of Natural History will find a rich repast by visiting Mr Savage's Museum in Greenwich-street, where a large collection of quadrupeds, birds . . . and the natural production of Cayenne on the coast of Guiana, is just opened for exhibition. . . ."—Daily Adv., D 31, 1803. See My 26, 1810.

" A report of the patients "admitted into and discharged from the New-York Hospital" from Jan. 31, 1795, to date—nine years lacking one month—shows a total of 4,760. The "Discharged" are tabulated thus: "Cured . . . 3212, Relieved . . . 455, Sent to Almshouse . . . 71, Disorderly . . . 123, Eloped . . . 275, Died . . . 608." Far the largest number (1,154) were afflicted with syphilis, 616 with ulcers, 464 with fevers.—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1804), 62–64.

— From this year until 1806, the Lewis and Clarke expedition explored the United States from the Mississippi to the mouth of the Columbia.—Winsor, VII: 556–58, and authorities there cited.

— In this year, John Trumbull returned to New York from a trip abroad, and established himself in "a large house, corner of Pine Street and Broadway." At this time he stood at the head of his profession in the United States. He painted many prominent citizens of the period and most of the contemporary governors and mayors of New York.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), II: 50. In 1808 (q. v.), he left the city again for Europe.

— About this time, the first Congregational church in New York was formed. The services were established by Rev. John Townly "in an old frame building then standing on Warren street, just out of Broadway." About 1809, this congregation moved to a building which they had erected on Elizabeth St. between Walker and Hester Sts. Within four or five years, the church was sold to the Asbury coloured Methodists, and the congregation disbanded.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 352–53.

— About this year, Archibald Gracie erected his house at the corner of Bridge and State Sts., on ground which in 1644 belonged to Tryntie Jonas, the midwife.—Liber Deeds, CXX: 200; Liber GG: 90 (Albany); L. M. R. K., III: 949. For history of this site see Key to Castello Plan, II: 269–70, and descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 426–27.

— In this year, Rev. George Strebeck, minister of the English Lutheran Church of Zion (see Je 25, 1797), applied for admission into the Episcopal church, and, a year later, with some of the members of his congregation, organized St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.—Kretzmann, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 31. Its church was built in 1805 at the cor. of Broome and Christie Sts.—Daily Adv., My 9, 1805; Greenleaf, 73. 1804 —

— The chronological record of progress in building the city hall, for 1804 and for each year thereafter, is summarized at the beginning of each year in succession.

The record for 1804 shows steady progress in construction. On March 28, McComb reported that he thought it best to give up the quarry at Newark, and on May 2 the committee gave him an order to dispose of it, which he proceeded to execute. On May 14, by direction of the committee, he went again to Stockbridge, to facilitate getting the marble down. He recorded in his diary that he "found there was a new quarry discovered on the Columbia turnpike about 25 miles from Hudson of a good, white, durable stone, and they are now working a new State Quarry at Noble Town 14 miles from Hudson on the Columbia Turnpike." There was no effort to buy, however, his object in noting it being evidently in view of possible future need. He found that Johnson & Stevens had 3 teams of their own and had engaged 17 others to cart the marble to the landing (evidently at Hudson), and they began with them the day after he arrived.

On June 9, the first consignment of marble for the city hall reached New York, about 40 or 50 tons, and was delivered on the 11th at the city hall. On July 12, McComb wrote Johnson & Stevens: "Several stone have come which does [sic] not suit us as to color, being much to [sic] dark for the sample."

In September, he went to Stockbridge to oversee the work there, and recorded in his diary, "The Bridges on the Road & turnpike are very bad, & the Directors of the Turnpike threaten to prosecute them [Johnson & Stevens] if they damage their bridges—to encourage them I gave Ten dolls toward strengthening them." On his return he made note of a possible supply of marble "near Alford Burying ground," and at "Sheffield 26 miles from Hudson," but, again, no plan developed to buy marble there.

On Sept. 24, the common council received and referred to the building committee a communication from a Mr. La Carriere "respecting defects in the building of the new City hall."—M. C. C. 1784–1831), III: 607. On Oct. 2, this appeared in the N. Y. Eve. Post. It was the second pointed criticism of McComb and his methods, a communication a column long, addressed "To the Citizens of New York," and headed "Extract of sundry observations respecting the building of the new City Hall, made by a French architect, the 22d of September, 1804." Signed "La Carriere, Ingineer and Architect," it was an essay on correct building methods, beginning: "In the execution of large Public Buildings, the most important and most difficult task is their solidity," and, referring to the city hall, "That edifice is constructing contrary to all the rules of architecture and masonry; and to whomsoever the blame may be imputed, the fact is, that the building is entirely deficient in the quality as well as in the choice and working of the materials; in their use and application." This general criticism was elaborated in detail; the composition of the mortar and the binding together of the walls, he said would threaten disaster. "The veneering in front of these pieces of marble, may be considered as inlaid pieces of cabinet work, which one day or other must detach themselves from the incoherent pebbles and mortar behind," etc. "The back pieces of the walls are not better bound than those of marble above mentioned, though upon their being a great deal cheaper it was not to be expected that their dimensions would partake of the same ill-judged parsimony. . . . It is highly absurd to use timber in the ground floor of such a large edifice, instead of brick vaults, for reasons too long to be here enumerated," etc. And "It appears to me upon the whole that the direction of the works does not exhibit that competent knowledge of stereotomy, so indispensable to carry on the constructing of such an edifice, but merely the common routine followed in erecting cellar walls and ordinary brick houses," etc.; "the Corporation ought to have the works inspected by impartial and thoroughbred artists, to stop the present evil, if the same be found to exist, and then give proper directions for the future, and thereby save immense sums of money, as well as the disgrace to the city, which cannot fail to attend a continuance of so many defects."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 2, 1804. There is a copy of these "observations" among the Van Zandt Papers in N. Y. P. L.

1804 — The building committee made the following reference to the communication in its report to the common council on Nov. 29 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, III: 634–36, which was published in the Daily Adv. of Dec. 7, and the Herald of Dec. 8): "Before closing this report, the Committee beg leave to state, that they have perused a communication in relation to the new hall, made to the board by a Mr. La Carriere and which has lately made its appearance in the public papers the Committee hope that this person has been actuated by upright motives and not been led astray by any Sinister views, in discovering so much apparent Zeal for the public interest but unfortunately for Mr. La Carriere the Committee have been able to obtain correct information on all the important objections he has thought proper to advance and they fully assure the board they are founded in Error and are totally groundless."

In a "defence against the report," published in the Am. Citizen of Dec. 14, Mr. "A. Lacarriere" addressed the chairman of the committee, aiming to justify his motives. He asked, "How has it happened that you have not thought proper also to insinuate that Mr. Nicholas Chester was 'actuated by sinister views' when he appeared in the papers in a communication on the same subject and not only enforced all my objections, but added others of his own? Mr. Chester treated those concerned in superintending the building far more cavalierly than I, yet has he been permitted entirely to escape mention, while I am held up to the public as a man whose motives are suspicious . . . the defects I have pointed out have been found to exist by many impartsal [sic] persons both previous and after my publication. . . . my governing motives in making the communication I did, was my love for the arts and a reluctance to behold the injurious consequences of committing them to the hands of the unskillful," etc.

No further official notice was taken of these criticisms, the committee evidently resting satisfied with its report of Nov. 29 (already mentioned), which the common council had ordered to be published, and in which they had made the statement that "The persons acting under their appointment, have performed the various duties assigned them with full satisfaction to the Committee, and with fidelity to the public." This report, in the main, had reference to the condition of the work, including the financial status, throughout the season just closed. Heavy snowfalls and bad roads had prevented for a time the working of the quarry and the transportation of marble; there was difficulty in procuring a sufficient number of stone-cutters, and "in anticipation of the coming winter a large quantity of marble is on hand sufficient to employ 25 to 30 stone-cutters until Spring, which will enable the masons to carry up the building to the head of the first windows," etc.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 634. The masons had been discharged and the walls covered for the winter on Nov. 17.—McComb's Diary.

On Nov. 19 (q. v.), the first appeal came to the common council from an outside body for use of a room in the new city hall on the completion of the building. This was made by the Am. Academy of Arts. The request was granted.

On Dec. 3, the board ordered that the city inspector be directed to procure "a Carpet and two large grates for the Court room in the City hall and also a Carpet for the Common Council chamber."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 640.

During 1804, the common council ordered the following advances made to the building committee: Feb. 6, $2,000; Mar. 19, $2,000; Apr. 30, $2,000; May 28, $2,000; June 25, $2,000; July 10, $1,500; July 23, $3,000; Aug. 20, $3,000; Oct. 8, $3,000; Nov. 5, $3,000; Nov. 29, $768.95 and $4,000; total, $27,768.95.—Ibid., III: 460, 478, 507, 532, 554, 568, 574, 593, 616, 626, 635, 639.

Jan. 2 Gen. Theodorus Bailey is appointed postmaster of New York, succeeding Josias Ten Eyck, who held the office for a year. Bailey removed the post-office from Broadway to a house which he had purchased at 29 William St.—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix IV, p. 20; Liber Deeds, C 11: 451 (New York). See also Booth, Hist. of N. Y. City, 655. The post-office remained here until 1825. The site is now covered by the Lord's Court Building—L. M. R. K., III: 974.

3 The common council resolves that the street com'r report "a plan on paper for new streets hereafter to be laid out and opened," in lieu of such as have been laid out by individuals without the board's consent; also "what grounds ought to be retained or procured by the Common Council for military parades pleasure grounds or other public uses or for ornamenting the City in its future growth and extension. To the end that the Common Council may adopt the same for their future government and for the direction of individuals in laying out and disposing of the property." Jan. 3

Also, "that the Counsel of the Board be requested to give his advice and instructions to the Street Commissioner in relation to the foregoing matters, and how far Legislative aid, or interference may be necessary in the accomplishment thereof and in drafting the necessary petitions and acts to be presented to the Legislature relative thereto."

Additional resolutions require the street com'r to report what streets have been opened without consent and ought to be shut up, what buildings on such streets ought to be removed, and what streets may be improved by straightening, widening, or extending. These improvements may be made as provided by the first section of the act of the legislature for regulating the buildings, streets, wharves, and slips in the city of New York, passed April 3, 1801.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 434–36. This resulted in the Commissioners' Plan of 1811 (q. v.), which marked the beginning of the modern city. See Mr 19. See also infra.

" The common council directs the street com'r to apply to Jos. F. Mangin for "the field book which by his contract he was to furnish to the Common Council with the map of the City made by him" (see N 13 and D 11, 1797); also that Mangin be required "to insert as far as is practicable on the large map made for and furnished to the Common Council the descriptions and specifications which he contracted to do by his agreement" of Dec. 11, 1797 (q. v.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 436.

" The common council appoints a committee "to determine upon the propriety of ordering a new map to be made of the ground bordering on the East & North rivers, of laying out Streets, and regulating the permanent line of the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 437.

9 An anonymous writer, signing himself "Non quis sed quid," urges De Witt Clinton to promote the following improvements:

"a Society, consisting of Shopkeepers, Mechanics, Tavern and Boarding house keepers, for the prevention—or rather the detection & prosecution of Swindlers and cheats . . .

"Stands of Hackney Coaches, numbered and regulated as they are in London, Dublin & the principal towns in Britain.—Boston, greatly inferior in population and extent, to this City, has long proved their great conveniency.

"Direction Boards at the Corner of every Street, of their names, for the assistance of Strangers &c."—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), II: 57, in Columbia Univ. Library.

10 In accordance with notice previously given, a general meeting of Republicans is held at the Union Hotel to "take into consideration measures to promote their political and social interests," and "a pretty numerous collection, both of Clintonians and Burrites" is present. The Clintonians submit the following resolutions:

"1st. That every person qualified to vote for the most popular branch of the legislature should be entitled to vote for charter officers.

"2d. That the election should be by ballot.

"3d. That the election for charter officers should be held at the same time and place with the election of members of the legislature.

"4th. That no elector should vote out of the ward in which he resided.

"5th. That there should be two inspectors of the election appointed, who should be sworn, whose return should be final and conclusive.

"6th. That after receiving the return of the inspectors, the common council should not, under any pretext whatever, interfere to set aside the election." The first five resolutions were approved, but the last was "struck out." After this, the Burrites proposed that the three following resolutions be added:

"1. That the office of mayor of the city of New York should be elective annually, in the same manner as that of alderman, and that he should have a fixed salary in lieu of all perquisites.

"2. That the offices of clerk of the common council and clerk of the city and county of New-York, should be separate and distinct offices, and that the common council should have the power of appointing their own clerk.

"3. That the licensing of carmen, grocers, &c. should be appointed by the common council, and not by the mayor alone."

1804 Jan. 10 After an animated debate these were referred to a committee of 63.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 11 and 12, 1804. See also Morn. Chron., Ja 12, 1804. See Ja 31.

12 With the issue of this date, the title of the Commercial Advertiser is changed to New-York Commercial Advertiser.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 392. See O 2, 1809.

" Members of Trinity Church submit a memorial to the vestry, requesting that a new church be built south and west of St. Paul's Church. Consideration is deferred.—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, however, F 9, and Je 22.

It is also resolved "that the building Committee take measures for roofing the New Church [St. John's] with such materials as they may think proper."—Ibid.

16 The common council passes a resolution offering extended terms to purchasers of lots in the Common Lands. A committee report shows: "That in the year 1796 the Corporation ordered a sale of part of their Common Lands, the condition of sale was, that each purchaser should be entitled to the Lease of the adjoining Lot for 21 years at the price of £4 on the middle road and £6 per annum on the post road. These Leases have none of them been executed, and many of the Lots remain uncultivated owing principally to the shortness of the unexpired term. As it is desirable that all vacant ground in the vicinity of the City should be under improvement, and in a state of cultivation both for use, ornament, and health, and, for the encouragement of the purchasers to improve the leased Lots, your Committee are of opinion it would be proper to extend the Leases." In conformity to this opinion, they offered the resolution which the board passed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 447.

" On May 16, 1803, the common council directed the city chamberlain to keep city funds in the Bank of New York and not elsewhere. Now the proposal is made that, as the city owns one twentieth of the stock of the Manhattan Co., the transfer of the city's deposits to the Bank of the Manhattan Co. "will much enhance the dividends of the said Company, and consequently increase the revenues" of the city. A resolution to this effect was voted down.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 447–48. See, however, D 3.

The common council authorises the city chamberlain to receive "the dividends already declared and now payable" on the stock in that company owned by the city.—Ibid., III: 449.

A resolution was likewise voted down that a committee be appointed to enquire and report "on the expediency of selling the stock" owned by the city in the Manhattan Co., and that such appointment "be kept secret."—Ibid., III: 449.

18 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church resolve "That no Grave in future be opened in the Cemetry [sic] of the Brick Church till the farther order of this Board."—Proc. of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II.

23 An assessment for regulating the upper part of Broadway is presented to the common council, and recommitted to the assessors for their review.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 451.

" The common council approves and orders transmitted to the legislature the draft of a petition (prepared in response to the order of Dec. 1, 1803, q.v.) "to reconvey to this board a piece of ground being part of the Commons and situate near the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale roads which had been granted to the State for the purpose of erecting buildings thereon for the reception of arms and military stores and has never been applied to that use."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 451.

" The common council orders that the comptroller be directed to apply to the legislature "for the payment of the sum of $3000 expended by this board for the Marine Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 451–52.

30 The recorder informs the common council that, at a meeting of the president and directors of the Manhattan Co., he moved a resolution that the president be directed to pay the $6,800 reported to be proper compensation for injuries done to the streets by laying conduit pipes, but that the resolution was rejected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 453.

" The common council orders that the clerk make an affidavit "of the Service of Papers upon the Manhattan Company respecting the application to the Supreme Court to compensate the injury sustained by laying the conduit pipes of that Company through the public streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 454.

" The street com'r reports, in response to the order of Dec. 9, 1803 (q.v.), that the highways through the Harlem Commons "may be considerably shortened and improved," and he recommends the following regulation for that purpose, which is adopted by the common council: "Beginning on the road that leads to Hellgate Ferry at the distance of 7 chains and 25 links west from the East boundary line of Haerlem Commons, at which point the present great post road to the City should be made to intersect; that from this point the post road should be extended northwardly paralel with the said boundary line until it intersects the post road near the Seven mile stone. Jan. 30

"That the Bloomingdale road should begin at the place where the new road will intersect the old one, and from thence be extended westwardly until it intersects the present Bloomingdale road at a place about three chains east from the boundary line between the New York and Harlaem Commons."

He further recommends "that the post road should be of the width of 100 feet and that the Bloomingdale road should be of the width of 66 feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 455.

" The common council orders that the committee, appointed on Dec. 19, 1803, respecting the public property near the Battery, prepare and report the draft of a petition to the legislature "to lease the whole of the said property including the Government House in perpetuity."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 455–56. On Feb. 6, the draft was approved and ordered to be transmitted, bearing the seal of the city, to the legislature.—Ibid., III: 459. On Mar. 19, the board resolved that the mayor be requested "to write to the Members of the Legislature from this City respecting the memorial sent to the Legislature . . . urging them to have a Law passed to authorize the Comptroller to grant to this board a Lease for the same in perpetuity."—Ibid., III: 478. See, further, D 17.

" In spite of the "inaccuracies" found in the Goerck-Mangin map (see N 28, 1803), Mangin is retained in the city's employ. On this day he is paid $51.04 for surveying.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 457. On June 25, $100.50.—Ibid., 554. On Oct. 29, $184.—Ibid., 623. See, further, Ja 14, 1805.

" John Jacob Astor advertises: "To be let, For 1 or more years, that beautiful and highly improved piece of land, with the house and other improvements thereon, situated in the Bowery-lane, at present occupied by Mr. Jacob Sperry. The land contains about 3 acres, on which is a great variety of fruit of the best quality, a hot-house, etc. and is in every respect well calculated for a gardener, or a summer residence."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 30, 1804. This advertisement, which ran through the issue of March 15, shows that an error was made in L. M. R. K., III: 981, which states that Delacroix opened his third Vauxhall here in 1803. Cf. Jl 4, 1803. According to Valentine, Astor acquired this property of Jacob Sperry in 1803 for £9,000 ($45,000).—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 470; ibid. (1866), 586. Sperry had owned the place as early as 1782, and conducted it for the cultivation and sale of "Garden-Seeds, Flower-Seeds and garden peas, flower plants, green house plants, and bolbos roots . . ."—Royal Gaz., Mr 2, 1782; N. Y. Gas. & Gen. Adv., Ja 20, 1800. For further information regarding Sperry, see the Manuals, above cited.

This garden was situated "near the 2-mile stone," or, on the modern map, south of Astor Place, between Fourth Ave. and Broadway. Astor gave a 21-year lease to Joseph Delacroix, and "Mr. Delacroix moved the green house broad side on the Bowery, and converted it into a saloon. . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 470. On the grounds, on Je 25, 1805 (q.v.), he opened his third Vauxhall. For many years thereafter, it was a famous summer garden. Lafayette Place, in 1825, was cut through it; and, on its site, in 1854, the Astor Library was erected. See L. M. R. K., III: 981, 956. See, further, Ap 20, 1805.

31 The Republicans hold another meeting (see Ja 10) to discuss the need of revising the city charter. The committee appointed on Jan. 10 (q.v.) reports that it has transmitted a petition to the legislature, omitting the suggested resolutions regarding the mayor. This causes considerable debate, in which "those who opposed these resolutions were heard by their adversaries with silence and attention; but when any person rose to advocate the principles contained in these resolutions, there was a constant noise and tumultuous opposition made by their opponents." Finally, a resolution that the office of mayor be elective was offered, but the Clintonians, by means of trickery it is said, declared it lost.—Morn. Chron., Ja 31 and F 2, 1804. Another paper describes this 1804 Jan. 31 as a meeting of the "Democratic Mob," and says that it "exhibited the discord, the tumult, the zeal and the fury of a Parisian mob."—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 1, 1804.

Feb. 6 "The memorial of the general committee, in behalf of the citizens of the city of New-York, praying for the extension of the elective franchise, in relation to the choice of charter officers, and for other improvements in the charter of the said city" (see Ja 10 and 31) is read in the assembly and referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 27th sess., 39. On Feb. 8, the committee reported "that the grievances therein complained of call for legislative redress," and a bill was introduced "relative to the election of charter officers in the city of New-York."—Ibid., 27th sess., 47. The common council presented a remonstrance against the proposed amendments on Feb. 13 (ibid., 27th sess., 64), but in spite of this the bill was passed by the legislature (see Ap 5).

" By a vote of ten to seven, the common council resolves that the remonstrance against alterations in the city charter adopted on Jan. 27, 1803 (q.v.) be renewed and transmitted to the legislature. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 459.

" The common council adopts a petition to the legislature asking for a lease in perpetuity of the government house and the adjoining grounds (see D 19 and 23, 1803).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 459. This petition reviews the history of the government house—the law authorising its erection (see Mr 16, 1790), its use by state governors until the removal of the capital to Albany, and its later occupancy as a tavern (see My 5, 1798) and a custom-house (see My 1, 1799). The board also states "that certain individuals, during the late epidemic have not only caused a large building to be erected on the grounds adjoining which they now occupy, but actually claim the same to their private use for a term of years under the authority of the commissary of military stores. . . . that your petitioners cannot conceive upon what principle the commissary of military stores has undertaken this agency, unless it be because he has chosen to appropriate the term arsenal or military store, to a small frame building, on the edge of the premises, in which a few pieces of ordnance are kept as convenient to the battery, the usual place of parade . . .

"That considering the latter disposition of the said grounds as a violation of the said first mentioned act, as injurious to the health of the city, by impeding a free current of air through a part of the town in which the streets are narrow and liable to an epidemical influence, and as interfering much with these improvements which the common council had adopted to ornament that part of the city which is appointed as a public walk for the recreation of its inhabitants—your petitioners pray the aid of your honorable body in the premises, and that the attorney general may be directed to take measures for the removal of the said incumbrances.

"And your petitioners beg leave further to represent that the house, while occupied as a custom-house must rapidly go to ruin and waste and thus diminish the public revenue. And as your petitioners are solicitous that those grounds should be ornamented and opened, so as to form an additional public walk, and that the Mayor, as its first Magistrate, should have a public residence suited to the dignity of his offiec [sic].—Your petitioners pray that the Comptroller or such officer as your honorable body may appoint for that purpose, be directed to lease the house and ground to your petitioners in perpetuity, subject to an annual rent equal in value to the sum now paid for the house and stable, and subject to such restrictions as are contained in the first above-mentioned act."—Chronicle Express, F 23, 1804 (in the archives of the Am. Institute, New York). See Mr 19.

9 Trinity vestry directs its committee of leases to dispose of "the Lots on Hudson square North and South of S[t] Johns Church [see S 8, 1803] at public auction on Lease for 99 years on the same terms as the last lots were sold in the said square; also that they sell in fee simple four Lots in Beech [sic] and Hubert Street under restrictions that any buildings to be erected thereon must be of Brick or stone and covered with tile or slate and not to be made use of for carrying on the business of a Tallow Chandler, Starch-maker, or Blacksmith."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Ag 27.

"Resolved that M[r] Watts, M[r] LeRoy and M[r] Bayard be a Committee to purchase a proper situation for building a new Church."—Ibid. See, further, F 18. The church here projected became Grace Church.

10 The Park Theatre is sold at public auction, agreeably to an order of the Court of Chancery. "The original cost of this building was 130,500 dollars, and amounted with interest to the first of May 1803, to 173,792 dolls. 90 cts. When the plan of erecting the theatre was originated, a subscription was opened to carry it into effect, 100 shares of 375 dollars each, were accordingly subscribed, which were subsequently extended to 120 shares.—But in the progress of the building the whole amount was consumed, and further sums loaned to the committee of stock holders by gentlemen who were desirous to see it completed. Feb. 10

"The Theatre was purchased yesterday [Feb. 10] by a company of thirty one gentlemen, for 43,000 dollars.

"The amount of sale, we understand, goes in the first instance, to discharge a mortgage given for the ground on which it is erected, which with interest to the 1[st] of May 1803 amounted to 13,265 dollars. The surplus money, after satisfying the mortgage, is to be deposited in the Bank of New-york, subject to the Chancellor's decision. It is conjectured, that it will be appropriated to discharge the voluntary loans above mentioned—though many of the original stockholders questioned that priority of claim. The purchase will doubtless be a very advantageous speculation for the gentlemen concerned as the Theatre in its present unfinished state brings in an average rent of 3500 dollars. We trust that the comparatively trifling sum necessary to finish the building in a style of suitable elegance and accommodation will now be supplied and that the present manager [William Dunlap] who in defiance of many difficulties, has conducted the affairs of the theatre so respectably, will be placed in a situation that will enable him to meet the wishes of the public, and to derive from his efforts, satisfaction and emolument."—N. Y. Eve. Post., F 11, 1804. "The new proprietors appointed a committee to manage the property, with full powers to lease."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1832), 322–23. The theatre was sold again in 1806 (q.v., Ap 23). See also My 30, 1804.

15 Thos. Browne, the chief engineer, makes a report to the common council which shows, in part, that there are 1,767 public buckets deposited in the different engine-houses; that "the floating Engine [see N 14, 1803] is now ready for use," that it is "necessary for a Company to be appointed to take charge of her," and "a proper house Should be built to keep her in as she now lies exposed to all kinds of weather," the "most proper place" being "at the foot of Roosevelt Street, it being vacant property belonging to the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 466. On Feb. 20, the board directed that Mr. Carmer "cause a suitable House to be erected on piles for the safe keeping of the floating Engines" at such place as the committee of repairs and the chief engineer shall deem most proper, and that the chief engineer report to the board such suitable men and the number necessary "to form a Company of Firemen to manage the said Engine."—Ibid., III: 467. See also ibid., III: 549, 562, 588; and, regarding the utility of floating engines, see D 24.

" The common council adopts an alteration in sec. 20 of the ordinance respecting nuisances, on the subject of burying the dead. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 462–63.

" The common council passes an ordinance to prevent goats "running at large."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 464. Cf. 1633; Mr 10, 1648; N 5, 1655; and see Index under "Hogs and Goats." The prohibition heretofore has been principally against hogs.

18 "The Committee appointed to procure a Lot for the purpose of building a Church, reported that a Committee from the Lutheran Congregation had made them an offer of their property in Broad way, upon a perpetual lease, the consideration of which report was postponed."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, My 10 and Je 14.

27 Col. Willett having proposed that a ferry be established from his wharf at Corlaer's Hook to the opposite shore on Long Island, as a means of improving property in his neighbourhood, the common council directs the comptroller to make a lease to him of such ferry "for six years without rent upon Condition of his making the necessary wharves and ferry stairs on both sides of the river and restoring them to the Corporation in good order at the end of that period." It is believed "that two large boats to carry horses cattle and bulky articles and two smaller ones for passengers would be sufficient at present, . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 470–71.

This was the beginning of the Corlaer's Hook Ferry.—L. M. R. K., III: 942. It appears to have been put into operation soon, as, on May 14, payment of $300 was made for "two large ferry-boats," and, on July 2, $500 "for two boats made for the new Ferry."—Ibid., III: 517, 563. See, further, ibid., III: 594, 599–

1804 F 27 600, 681; and, regarding boats, etc., see ibid., III: 568, 574, 581, 616, 620, 623.

Mar. 5 The common council refers to the street com'r a petition of Geo. Schmeltzel and others "that the course of Bestavens Killitie may be directed to run through Village Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 472.

9 The Grove Theatre in Bedlow (Madison) St. is opened.—Daily Adv., Mr 9, 1804. For notices of other entertainments at this theatre, see ibid., Ap 4, 7, 12, My 17, 1804; Com. Adv., Ap 19, 1804. The theatre closed about July 1, 1805.—Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, I: 70.

13 "A Clintonian" writes: "I am a great Friend to the old Clinton Family, and I do now believe that you are all going wrong. If the Charter of the City and the Merchants Bank are destroyd I do believe the ferment it will occasion will turn the election.—the old Gov^r ought not to have declind. little Aaron will undoubtedly get in without much good management, and the destruction of the Bank is a very impolitic measure."—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), II: 64.

" "Ordered that the Committee of Leases ascertain the probable expence of putting a brick wall round S^t Paul's Church yard and a brick wall on the south side of Trinity Church yard and of flaging [sic] the walk along the whole front of said Church yard."—Trin. Min. (MS.); descrip. of A. Pl. 12-a, III: 871–72. See My 10.

19 The common council refers to a committee a petition of Caleb Boyle (see Jl 11, 1803) "to be employed to paint a portrait of Governor Jay."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 476. On March 26, the board confirmed the committee's report that "it would be proper to procure a likeness of M^r Jay to be executed by M^r Boyle provided it shall prove a good likeness and the Common Council shall be satisfied with the painting."—Ibid., III: 480. (See also Jl 10.) On Nov. 29, however, the board decided "that the portrait of the late Governor Jay made by M^r Boyle is not such as meets the ideas of the Board, and therefore that they will not purchase it." The board ordered "that the Clerk furnish M^r Boyle with a copy of this resolution and present him the sum of $50 for his trouble."—Ibid., III: 632. In an undated letter addressed to the common council, Boyle said that he "as he presumes Compleatly Succeeded in preserving the likeness and finishing the head equal to the Original by Stewart." The "background Scenery being altogether fanciful can readily be altered Should faults Susceptible of amendment be pointed out." He asks for "Moderate Compensation," and adds, "that the bad light in which the painting is at present placed, the want of a frame while Standing So nigh those very Elegantly framed Cause it to appear Comparatively to a very great disadvantage."—From the original letter in metal file No. 22, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council refers to a committee a communication from Dr. Hosack "respecting a Botanic Garden."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 476. The committee reported on June 25 (q. v.).

" The common council receives and refers "to the Aldermen of the several wards" a communication from the street commissioner together with a plan of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 477. This report was probably one of the steps which led finally to the laying out a street plan for the whole of Manhattan Island. See, further, Ja 14, 1805.
